Tenancy Laws — Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Sec. 6 — Ceiling area which a family can hold under — Determination of — Number of members in the family as existing on the appointed day and not on the date of enquiry has to be taken into account — Neither births nor deaths in family subsequent to appointed day will affect the determination.

For the purpose of determining the ceiling area, which a family can hold under Section 6 of the Act, the number of members of the family as existing on appointed day, that is, 26th January 1962, alone has to be taken into account. It cannot be said that as the sub-clause (g) of Section 18 speaks of determination of the entitlement of the person after the enquiry the entitlement of land-holder or the family has to be determined with reference to the date of enquiry. The provision requiring the Collector or Enquiry Officer to determine the total land possessed by the family on the date enquiry is made has no relevance in determining the date with reference to which the entitlement, that is, the quantity of the land that the family can retain, or the limit of ceiling area upto which it can hold land is to be found. The right to land and the limit to which it can be held can be never made to depend on the exigencies of time when enquiries are held or orders are passed. Neither births nor deaths during enquiry but subsequent to the appointed date, i.e. 26th January 1962, will affect the determination of the Ceiling Area in a family. Just as land-holder cannot claim more land because there are additions to the family, the State also cannot deprive land-holder or a family of land on the basis of members existing on the date of enquiry or order, merely because there has been diminution in the members of the family after the appointed day. C. S. Dharmadhikari, Asst. Govt. Pleader, for Petitioner; C. G. Madkholkar, for Respondent (No. 1).

JUDGMENT: The petitioner is the State of Maharashtra in this petition under Article 227 of the Constitution. The State challenges an order of the second respondent, the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, in proceedings arising under the Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act, 1961.

2. On 26-7-1962 the first respondent Dinkarrao furnished a return in respect of the land held by his family under Section 12 of the Ceiling Act. The return was in prescribed form I under Rule 4(1)(a) of the Rules framed under the Ceiling Act. In this return he showed himself, his wife, two daughters, Vinabai and Rewati Rama, and two sons, Prakash and Umashankar. In all six persons comprised as members of his family. A daughter was born to the first respondent on 21-1-1964. In calculating the ceiling area available to this family out of the total area of 115 acres 16 gunthas situated at two villages Warud and Temburkheda, the Sub-Divisional Officer determined the average ceiling limit to be 92 acres 22 gunthas. He allowed that much for the family of 5 members and added to it 1/6th on account of the sixth member in the family and declared 8 acres as surplus.

3. Against this order the first respondent preferred an appeal before the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal. A Full Bench of the Tribunal took the view that if during the enquiry, which Collector holds, a member is born in the family, a landholder is entitled to additional area on account of birth of such a member even if it takes place after appointed day. On this basis the appeal preferred by the respondent No. 1 was allowed and it was held that respondent No. 1 did not hold any surplus land. This decision is challenged in this Court on behalf of the State.

4. In support of the petition it is urged that the number of members in the family to be taken into account for the purpose of determining the ceiling area, which a family can hold under Section 6 of the Ceiling Act, the size and members of the family as existing on appointed day, that is, 26th January 1962, alone has to be taken into account. It was not permissible for the Sub-Divisional Officer to take cognizance of the fact of birth of another daughter subsequently and thus to add to the membership of the family for determining the total area which could be kept by the family. The State relies on a decision of this Court in Special Civil Appln. No. 767 of 1968, D/-18-4-1968 at Bombay. Apart from the position that I am bound by the decision, I do not think the view taken by the Tribunal is sustainable.

5. Section 3 of the Ceiling Act makes a provision for imposing a maximum limit of ceiling on the holding of Agricultural Lands in the manner thereafter provided. The section speaks of "on the commencement of this Act" the duty to impose limit of the maximum extent or ceiling upto which land may be held. This reference to the commencement of the Act, which, it is admitted, synchronises with the appointed day, namely, 26th January 1962, indicates in no uncertain terms the date with respect to which the ceiling limit or maximum limit of the land which can be held is to be found. The duty to file a return under Section 12 is cast among other persons on a person, who (a) has at any time after the 4th day of August 1959 but before the appointed day, that is, before 26th January 1962, held land causing his holding to exceed the ceiling area; and (b) any person who on or after the appointed day acquires, holds or comes into possession of any land in excess of the ceiling area to file a return in the first case within 6 months from the appointed day and in the second case within 3 months from the date of taking possession of any land in excess of the ceiling area. Thus so far as the requirement of sub-clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 12 is concerned, the duty imposed to file a return will always be enforceable so long as the Act remains in force. A perusal of the form prescribed for making such a return shows that the return maker has to indicate the number of members in his family. The purpose of furnishing this information is to enable the Collector to find out what will be the extent of ceiling area available to the family if the claim is on behalf of the family. Section 8 restricts transfers in respect of persons who held land in excess of the ceiling area either on the appointed day or after the appointed day from transferring any portion of the land until determination of the land in excess of the ceiling area is determined. If Section 8 imposes this restriction it must be with respect to the persons who are to be found to hold land in excess of ceiling area on the appointed day. Thus the number of members in the family which is relevant for determining the ceiling area, will be the members in the family as on the appointed day. I fail to see how with reference to any other date the infraction of Section 8 can be brought home on a landholder unless the ceiling area is to be determined with reference to the number of members in the family on the appointed day. Similarly Section 9 prohibits a person, that is, a family, from acquiring any land if already it has land in excess of the ceiling area. The prohibition is to be operative on or after the appointed day. Here again the injunction will operate only in respect of that family or person, who, with reference to the appointed day, can be said to have land in excess of ceiling area on the basis of calculation of members in the family on the appointed day.

6. Reference was made during argument to clauses (f) and (g) of Section 18 which lay down the procedure and the findings required to be recorded by the Collector in determining the ceiling area. Under clause (f) the Collector has to find out whether any land has been acquired on or after the appointed day by testamentary disposition, devolution on death or by operation of law. This is necessary because there is a statutory prohibition in Section 9 on acquiring land by transaction inter vivos, that is, by purchase etc. But if a family has its land increased on account of any these modes of acquisition, namely, testamentary disposition, devolution on death or by operation of law, then the Collector is bound to take that fact into account. Under clause (g) the Collector is also required to find the total area of the land held at the time of enquiry and what is the area of land which the person is entitled to hold. Much reliance was placed on this sub-clause (g) in support of the contention that the entitlement of the landholder or the family has to be determined with reference to the date of enquiry because the sub-clauses speak of determination of the entitlement to the person after the enquiry. I do not think this interpretation is sustainable.

7. The scheme of the ceiling Act is that a person or a family is allowed to keep land upto the ceiling limit with respect to the state of affairs as on the appointed day, that is, 26th January 1962. With respect to transactions which took place voluntarily between 4-8-1959 and the appointed day, certain rules of evidence have been prescribed to determine whether those transactions or transfers are bona fide so as to affect the total area of land held by the family on the appointed day. If there are any transfers effected after the appointed day, but before determining of the ceiling limit under the Act, that is, under Section 18, those transfers are declared invalid and ineffective and in spite of the transfers the area so alienated are required to be taken into account. On the other hand, if any land is acquired by any of the involuntary process like testamentary disposition, or devolution or by operation of law, then that fact has also to be taken into account. But I do not understand how this provision requiring the Collector or Enquiry Officer to determine the total land possessed by the family on the date enquiry is made has any relevance in determining the date with reference to which the entitlement, that is, the quantity of the land that the family can retain, or the limit of ceiling area upto which it can hold land is to be found. If the interpretation urged on behalf of the respondent were to be accepted, it will lead to nothing short of chaotic condition. The right to land and the limit to which it can be held can be never made to depend on the exigencies of time when enquiries were held or orders were passed. That also is not the intention of this Legislation. It was suggested that if there is a diminution in the members of the family between the appointed day, that is, 26th January 1962, and the date on which enquiry is held and order comes to be passed, whether that would affect the right of the family to claim ceiling area or limit on the basis of the members in existence on the appointed day. In my opinion neither subsequent deaths nor subsequent births affect the determination of the ceiling area in a family, that is, births or deaths subsequent to 26th January 1962. Just as a landholder cannot claim more land because there are additions to the family, the State also cannot deprive landholder or a family of land on the basis of members existing on the date of enquiry or order, merely because there has been diminution in the members of the family after the appointed day. The ceiling limit has been fixed with reference to a fixed point of time and it is with reference to that point of time, that is, 26th January 1962, that the number of members in the family while the family was a unit of ownership has to be determined. I, therefore, do not think that the view taken by the Tribunal correctly interprets the scheme of the provisions of the Ceiling Act and cannot be upheld.

8. The result is the petition is allowed. The order of the Tribunal is set aside and that of the Sub-Divisional Officer is restored. The petitioner will be entitled to costs from the first respondent.

(AT NAGPUR)

PADHYE AND VIMADALAL, JJ.

Shankar Jayaram and another, Petitioners v. State of Maharashtra and another, Respondents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 1121 of 1966, D/-14-1-1969.

States Reorganisation Act (1956), Sections 86, 2 (m) (o) and Sch. 5 — "Principal successor State" and "Successor State" — Liability of existing States — Petitioner retired in 1939 from service in the then State of M. P. — Reorganisation of States in 1956 and 1960 — Petitioner settled down in Nagpur and drawing pension from Nagpur Treasury even now — Place from where he retired still in State of new M. P. — Both Maharashtra and M. P. State Governments granted certain increases in pensions of pensioners on different occasions — State of Bombay which is successor State to existing State of M. P. would not be liable to the increase in pension granted by present State of M. P. — Further, no claim against State of M. P. can be granted even after amendment of Article 226 — (Constitution of India, Art. 226 (as amended by Constitution Fifteenth Amendment) Act (1963)).

The petitioner retired in 1939 while he was serving at Umri in the then State of M. P. as a result of reorganisation of States in 1956 and 1960 areas from the then existing State of Madhya Pradesh went to two States, viz., the State of Bombay which from the 1st May of 1960 became the State of Maharashtra and the present new State of M. P. The petitioner, after retirement, settled down in Nagpur and had been drawing his pension from Nagpur Treasury. Both Maharashtra and M. P. State Governments from time to time granted certain increases in the pensions of the pensioners on different occasions. The petitioner claimed increases in pension as granted by M. P. Government from the Maharashtra Government.

Held that the State of Bombay (now Maharashtra) which was the successor State to the then existing State of Madhya Pradesh would not be liable to give the increase in the pension which had been granted by the present State of Madhya Pradesh to its pensioners and the petitioner could not lay a claim for such increase in the pension as had been made by the present State of Madhya Pradesh. (Para 11)

By virtue of definitions in Section 2 (m) and (o) the present State of M. P. was the "Principal Successor State" of the old or the then existing State of M. P. and the State of Bombay and now the State of Maharashtra would be the 'successor State' of the then existing State of M. P. From the scheme of the States Reorganisation Act, including the Fifth Schedule, it is clear that for the purpose of transferring the liability of the existing State to the successor States, the material point of time that had to be taken into consideration was the appointed day, namely, 1st of November 1956, on which the liability existed. There is no provision with respect to the future liabilities of the State. Thus with respect to those pensioners who had retired prior to 1-11-1956 the liability of the successor State would be on the basis of the liability existing on 1-11-1956 and subsequent to 1-11-1956, by any unilateral act of one of the successor States, the other successor State could not be bound. Section 86 of the Act deals with the liability of the existing State and any liability which is incurred after 1-11-1956 by a successor State could not be said to be a liability of the existing State and as such, one successor State will not be bound by the liability which has been created by another successor State. (Paras 6, 11)

Held, further that the High Court of Bombay could not grant any claim against the State of M. P. even after the amendment of Art. 226 by Constitution (Fifteenth Amendment) Act inasmuch as no cause of action to claim increase given by M. P. State arose in any part of State of Maharashtra.

C. G. Madkholkar, and R. T. Kolhekar, for Petitioners; C. S. Dharmadhikari, Asstt. Govt. Pleader, for Respondent (No. 1); W. K. Sheorey, for Respondent (No. 2).

PADHYE J.: Original petitioners in this petition were two (1) Shankar Jayaram Ambardekar in his individual capacity and (2) Nagpur District Pensioners' Association, Nagpur, through its Honorary Secretary Mr. R. N. Gadre. After the petition was admitted the petitioners were required to give the names of the pensioners of the petitioner No. 2 Association who had retired prior to 1-11-1956, but in spite of several opportunities being given, no names were supplied and the orders passed by this Court from time to time were not complied with. We are, therefore, not required to consider in this petition the case of those pensioners said to have been represented by the petitioner No. 2 and the decision of this case will be confined only so far as the petitioner No. 1 Shankar Jayaram Ambardekar is concerned.

2. The petitioner No. 1 in the original petition will hereinafter be described as the petitioner only. The petitioner was employed in the year 1912 as an Overseer in the Agricultural Department as a probationer in the then Central Provinces. He was then transferred as probationer to Hoshangabad and thereafter to Seoni as an Agricultural Assistant and was confirmed as an Agricultural Assistant in the year 1930. The Central Provinces and Berar was thereafter named as Madhya Pradesh and the petitioner continued in the service of the State of Madhya Pradesh, as it then was as an Agricultural Assistant. He retired on 31-10-1939 while he was serving at Umri in tahsil Bhainsdehi of Betul district in the then State of Madhya Pradesh. At the time of his retirement the last pay drawn by him was Rs. 190 per month and his pension, therefore, came to Rs. 95 per month. Out of his pension, an amount of Rs. 23-75 was commuted on 23rd of December 1942 since when he has been getting Rs. 71.25 P. per month towards his pension. The former State of Madhya Pradesh had granted an increase of Rs. 6 per month to the pensioners prior to 31-10-1956 as a temporary grant which, however, seems to be continued even now. With this increase the petitioner was getting Rs. 77.25 P. per month towards his pension after commutation on 1st of November 1956. As from 1st of November 1956, there was reorganisation of States and some portions of the former Madhya Pradesh were added to the former State of Bombay and the new State of Madhya Pradesh was formed of the remaining districts excluding those which were included in the Bombay State and adding to it the State of Madhya Bharat, Vindhya Pradesh and other portions. There was a second reorganisation in the year 1960 and from 1st of May 1960 the present State of Maharashtra has been constituted.

3. The petitioner has been residing at Nagpur and has been drawing his pension from the Nagpur District Treasury. The case of the pensioners has been under consideration of the State Governments, both Maharashtra and Madhya Pradesh and both the Governments from time to time granted certain increases in the pension of the pensioners on different occasions. So far as the Maharashtra Government is concerned by the Government Resolution No. TIP-1063/9611-X, dated 13th April 1964, the pension of the pensioners of two categories was increased. The pensioners whose monthly pension did not exceed Rs. 60 were given an additional temporary increase per month of 10 per cent. of the basic pension and existing temporary increase together; whereas the pensioners whose pension exceeded Rs. 60 but did not exceed Rs. 65.50 were given an increase of Rs. 6 or such increase as will bring the total pension (including present temporary increase) upto Rs. 71.50 P. These orders were made applicable to pensioners drawing pensions granted by the former Madhya Pradesh State which were drawn from treasuries in former Bilingual Bombay State on 1st November 1956 and from treasuries in Maharashtra State on 1st May 1960 and some other categories. However, the pension of the petitioners being more than Rs. 65.50 per month, the petitioner did not get any advantage from this resolution.

4. The present Madhya Pradesh Government also, in its turn, granted relief to the Madhya Pradesh State pensioners who were in receipt of small pensions. By resolution No. 1200-F-1760-IV-R. II (60), dated 17th March 1961, the State of Madhya Pradesh granted a temporary rise in the pension and according to this order pensioners getting pension above Rs. 60 but below Rs. 100 per month would be getting an increase of Rs. 12 per month. This temporary increase took effect from 1st March 1961. This increase was followed by another increase by Memorandum letter No. 1294-R-1508-IV-R-II, dated 31st May 1965. In addition to the increase already granted in 1961, persons drawing pensions upto Rs. 100 were further granted an ad hoc increase in the pension of Rs. 5 per month. Paragraph 2 of this memorandum states that this increase will apply to all existing pensioners of the State Government and those Government servants who will retire hereafter and will take effect from the 1st of March 1965. Paragraph 4 further states that the pensioners who are already in receipt of or will be eligible for temporary increase in pension in terms of this Department Memorandum No. 1200-IV-R-II, dated 17-3-1961 will receive the benefit mentioned in Paragraph 1 above in addition. Apparently the increases granted by the Madhya Pradesh Government are more beneficial than those granted by the State of Maharashtra and it is because of this that the petitioner claims that he should be given the increase in his pension as per the memoranda issued by the Madhya Pradesh Government on these two occasions.

The petitioner contends that he has retired from the service of the then State of Madhya Pradesh in the year 1939 and the liability to pay the pension is on the State of Madhya Pradesh and whoever may be its successor after the reorganisation of States. According to the petitioner, it is immaterial where he has settled down or resides because under the Pension Rules, he is entitled to draw the pension from any treasury throughout India and the place of drawing the pension will not determine the liability of the Government. It has not been disputed that the petitioner retired in the year 1939 while he was serving at Umri in Tahsil Bhainsdehi, District Betul which was in the State of the then Madhya Pradesh. It is still in the new State of Madhya Pradesh. It has also not been disputed that the petitioner has settled down in Nagpur and was drawing his pension from the Nagpur District Treasury upto 1st of November 1956 and has been drawing the same from the said treasury even now.

5. In the year 1956 the States in India were reorganised and the original State of Madhya Pradesh was split up and the eight districts of the old Madhya Pradesh which are now comprised in what is known as the Vidarbha Region were added to the then State of Bombay which was an existing State. The remaining districts of the existing State of Madhya Pradesh along with other areas, for example, Madhya Bharat, Vindhya Pradesh and other areas, formed a new State going by the name State of Madhya Pradesh. Thus, areas from the existing State of Madhya Pradesh have now gone to two States, namely, the State of Bombay, which from the 1st of May 1960 became the State of Maharashtra and the present State of Madhya Pradesh. In order to bring about this reorganisation, the Central Legislature passed Act No. 37 of 1956, called the States Reorganisation Act, 1956, by which 1st of November 1956 has been named as the appointed day. It will be necessary to deal with some of the provisions of this Act in order to appreciate the controversy raised in the present proceedings. Section 2 (g) defines "existing State" to mean a State specified in the First Schedule to the Constitution at the commencement of this Act. It may be stated that in the First Schedule to the Constitution, the State of Bombay and the State of Madhya Pradesh, with which we are concerned in the present case, were specified and they were thus the "existing States" within the meaning of Section 2 (g) of the Act. Section 2 (i) defines "new State" to mean a Part A State formed by the provisions of Part II. Then Section 2 (k) defines "population ratio" and "population ratio" in relation to the successor States of an existing State, means such ratio as the Central Government may by notified order specify to be the ratio in which the population of that existing State as ascertained at the last census is distributed territorially among the several successor States by virtue of the provisions of Part II. Under Section 2 (m), "Principal successor State" means (i) in relation to the existing State of Bombay, Madhya Pradesh, Madras or Rajasthan, the State with the same name. Thus, the present State of Madhya Pradesh would be the "principal successor State" of the then existing State of Madhya Pradesh. Section 2 (o) then defines the term "successor State" and "successor State" in relation to an existing State means any State to which the whole or any part of the territories of that existing State is transferred by the provisions of Part II.

6. Part II of the Act then gives the territorial changes and formation of new States. Section 8 deals with the formation of a new Bombay State by which certain territories have been excluded from the existing State of Bombay and certain other territories which were not then part of the Bombay State have been added to the existing State of Bombay. One of the territories so added to the existing State of Bombay was the Vidarbha Region comprising of the eight districts in the existing State of Madhya Pradesh. Section 9 deals with the formation of the new State of Madhya Pradesh. By this provision the whole of the existing State of Madhya Pradesh excepting the eight districts of the Vidarbha Region was retained and to it were added certain other territories such as the existing State of Madhya Bharat, some portion of Rajasthan, existing State of Bhopal and the existing State of Vindhya Pradesh and it retained the same old name of Madhya Pradesh. This new Madhya Pradesh is thus the "principal successor State" of the old or the existing State of Madhya Pradesh and under the definition of Section 2 (o) the State of Bombay and now the State of Maharashtra would be the "successor State" of the existing State of Madhya Pradesh.

7. We are not concerned in this petition with the subsequent parts of the Act excepting Part VII which deals with apportionment of assets and liabilities of certain Part A and Part B States. Both Bombay and Madhya Pradesh States were Part A States. Section 75 of the Act makes the remaining provisions of this Part applicable in relation to the apportionment of the assets and liabilities immediately before the appointed day of every Part A or Part B State the whole or any part of whose territories is transferred to another State. Section 76 deals with the division of land and goods. Section 77 deals with the division of the treasury and bank balances. Section 78 deals with arrears of taxes, Section 79 with the right to recover loans and advances, Section 80 with credits in certain funds, S. 81 with assets and liabilities of State undertakings and S. 82 with the public debts. From these various provisions, it will be apparent that the assets of the existing State of Madhya Pradesh as on 1st November 1956 were divided between the successor Bombay State and the principal successor State of Madhya Pradesh and the lands and goods, treasury and bank balances and other assets which remained in the eight districts of Vidarbha which were transferred to the State of Bombay were transferred to the State of Bombay and the other property of similar nature which was in the districts which formed part of the new State of Madhya Pradesh were given to the new State of Madhya Pradesh.

8. Similarly, Sections 83 and 84 are with regard to liabilities of the successor States with regard to the liabilities of the existing State. Section 85 deals with the liability of the existing State in respect of the provident fund account of a Government servant. Section 86 which deals with pensions reads thus:

"The liability of the existing States in respect of pensions shall pass to, or be apportioned between the successor States in accordance with the provisions contained in the Fifth Schedule."

From the reading of the various sections of Part VII, it is clear that the liability in respect of the pensions under Section 86 of the Act as on the appointed day, namely, 1st November 1956, either passes to a successor State if there is only one successor State, or is to be apportioned between successor States, if there are more than one successor States, in accordance with the provisions contained in the Fifth Schedule. According to the definitions which we have referred to already, the State of Bombay after 1st November 1956 would be the successor State to the existing State of Madhya Pradesh on the definition of "successor State" given in Section 2 (o), because it is the State of Bombay to which part of the territories of the existing State of Madhya Pradesh has been transferred by the provisions of Part II. So far as the new State of Madhya Pradesh is concerned, it was not an existing State. The existing State was the old Madhya Pradesh State, as it stood before 1st November 1956, and the new State of Madhya Pradesh cannot squarely fall within the definition of "successor State" as given in Section 2 (o) of the Act. The new Madhya Pradesh State, however, can be the "principal successor State" within the meaning of Section 2 (m) (i) of the Act as the name of the new State is the same as the existing State of Madhya Pradesh.

9. The question whether in relation to the existing State of Madhya Pradesh, both the State of Bombay and the new State of Madhya Pradesh are successor States or not, has not been pointedly considered in any reported decisions, but some reference is to be found in W. W. Joshi v. State of Bombay, AIR 1959 Bom 363, where the State of Bombay as well as the new State of Madhya Pradesh have been taken to be the successor States of the former State of Madhya Pradesh and out of the two successor States the State of Madhya Pradesh is the principal successor State of the former State of Madhya Pradesh. Similar observations are to be found in a Full Bench decision of this Court in State v. Dr. Sarjooprasad Gumasta, First Appeal No. 101 of 1959, decided on 14th June 1966 (Bom) (FB), and in the Division Bench decision thereafter in the same case decided on 6th of March 1967 (Bom). Nothing, however turns in the present case on the question whether both the Bombay State or the new Madhya Pradesh State are the successor States of the former State of Madhya Pradesh or only the State of Bombay, and now the State of Maharashtra, is the successor State and the State of Madhya Pradesh is the principal successor State.

10. As said earlier the scheme of Part VII of the States Reorganisation Act shows that the assets as on 1-11-1956 were to be divided between the two new States which are successors of the old State of Madhya Pradesh on the principles laid down in the several provisions of Part VII of the Act. Similarly, the successor States were to be fastened with the liabilities of the existing State of Madhya Pradesh as on 1st of November 1956 and the liability with respect to pensions under Section 86 was the liability which was on the existing State on 1st of November 1956. It appears that just as in the case of other assets, namely, the treasury, cash balances, public debts and such other matters, the said property was to remain where it was, namely, that these cash balances etc., were not to be disturbed, but were to go to the State to which those districts have been attached, similarly, with respect to pensions, it appears that those pensioners who used to draw pensions from the treasuries of the eight districts of Vidarbha which were transferred to the State of Bombay were a liability on the new State of Bombay and those pensioners who used to draw their pensions on 1-11-1956 from the then districts which now formed part of the new Madhya Pradesh State were to be a liability of the new State of Madhya Pradesh or the principal successor State. In order to make an equitable division, an apportionment had to be made between the two States and that was to be done by the Central Government and on such apportionment being made if it was found that one State paid more to the pensioners in its area than what was due under the apportionment, then the other State was to reimburse the former State to that extent and vice versa. This is worked out by means of the Fifth Schedule to the Act. Paragraph 1 of the Fifth Schedule provides that subject to the adjustments mentioned in paragraph 3, the successor State or each of the successor States shall, in respect of pensions granted before the appointed day by an existing State, pay the pensions drawn in its treasuries. Paragraph 1, therefore, has clearly reference to a liability of the new State in respect of pensions as it existed immediately before the appointed day and it were to continue to pay the pensions to those pensioners who were being paid from the treasuries immediately before the appointed day. Paragraph 2 has no application to the present case as it applies to officers or employees who retired or proceeded on leave preparatory to retirement before the appointed day, but whose claims for pensions are outstanding immediately before that day. In paragraph 3, a method is given as to how the liability is to be apportioned between the successor States. We reproduce Para. 3 below:

"In any case where there are two or more successor States, there shall be computed, in respect of the period commencing on the appointed day and ending on the 31st day of March 1957, and in respect of each subsequent financial year, the total payments made in all the successor States in respect of the pensions referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2. The total representing the liability of the existing State in respect of pensions shall be apportioned between the successor States in the population ratio and any successor State paying more than its due share shall be reimbursed the excess amount by the successor State or States paying less."

This will show that the payments made in the successor States have relation to the pensions referred to in paragraph 1 which would mean the pension payable in that successor State as on 1-11-1956 and it is on that basis that the apportionment has to be made in the population ratio and the consequent reimbursement by one successor State to the other. The other paragraphs of the Schedule have no reference to the present case.

11. It thus appears from the scheme of the States Reorganisation Act, including the Fifth Schedule, that for the purpose of transferring the liability of the existing States to the successor States, the material point of time that has to be taken into consideration is the appointed day, namely, 1st of November 1956, on which the liability existed. There is no provision with respect to the future liabilities of the State. It will thus appear that with respect to those pensioners who have retired prior to 1-11-1956 the liability of the successor State would be on the basis of the liability existing on 1-11-1956 with respect to such pensioners and it seems to us that subsequent to 1-11-1956, by any unilateral act of one of the successor States, the other successor State cannot be bound. Section 86 of the Act deals with the liability of the existing State and any liability which is incurred after 1-11-1956 by a successor State could not be said to be a liability of the existing State and as such, one successor State will not be bound by the liability which has been created by another successor State. This, however, proceeds on the footing that there are two successor States to the existing State. In this view, therefore, the State of Bombay which is the successor State to the existing State of Madhya Pradesh would not be liable to give the increase in the pension which has been granted by the present State of Madhya Pradesh to its pensioners and the petitioner cannot lay a claim for such increase in the pension as has been made by the present State of Madhya Pradesh. The petitioner's claim against the State of Maharashtra for the increase in pension which has been granted by the State of Madhya Pradesh must, therefore, be rejected. It is stated by the learned Assistant Government Pleader that some of the pensioners who have settled down in the Vidarbha Region have accepted the increase in the pension which has been granted by the State of Maharashtra. The petitioner, however, has not accepted the said increase given by the State of Maharashtra because of the dispute which he has raised.

12. As regards the State of Madhya Pradesh, the learned counsel for the State Mr. W. K. Sheorey urges that the State of Madhya Pradesh is not liable for the claim of the present petitioner. We are not deciding in this case whether the State of Madhya Pradesh is liable to give the amount to the petitioner by which the pension has been increased by that Government from time to time. The Full Bench of this Court in Misc. Petn. No. 335 of 1956, D/-23-7-1958 = (AIR 1959 Bom 122), Dr. Sarjuprasad Gumasta v. State of Madhya Pradesh, has held that this Court would have no jurisdiction to issue a writ against the State of Madhya Pradesh as the jurisdiction of this Court extends only to the territorial limits of the State of Bombay and now the Maharashtra State. It is true that Article 226 of the Constitution has subsequently been amended and given jurisdiction to the High Court to issue a writ to any Government Authority or person even though the seat of the Government or authority or the residence of such person is not within those territories, provided however that the cause of action wholly or in part arises for the exercise of such power within the territorial jurisdiction of the High Court. Such is not the case here. It cannot be said that any part of the cause of action to claim the increase given by the Madhya Pradesh State, as in existence to-day, arises in any part of the State of Maharashtra. We are, therefore, not in a position to grant any relief to the petitioner so far as the Madhya Pradesh Government is concerned. The petitioner, therefore, is not entitled to any relief claimed by him, either against the State of Maharashtra or against the State of Madhya Pradesh, in the present petition.

13. The petition, therefore, fails and is accordingly dismissed, but in the circumstances, we make no order as to costs.

14. VIMADALAL J.: I have heard the judgment of the Court just delivered by my brother Padiye. I would like to add that, as a matter of plain language, as well as, as a matter of legislative intentment, the words "the liability of the existing States" in Section 36 of the States Reorganisation Act, 1956, must be read as, "the existing liability of the existing States". If an existing State chooses to create a higher or an additional liability in future, the provisions of Sec. 86 of the said Act would not be attracted, and there is no other statutory provision which would pass on such higher or additional liability, or even an apportioned part of it, to the successor State.

Petition dismissed.

ABHYANKAR, J.

Jagpalsingh Sajjansingh, Petitioner v. Digambar Tulsiram and others, Respondents. Special Civil Appln. No. 1022 of 1966, D/-13-9-1968.

(A) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958) Ss. 114 and 111 — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Bombay Revenue Tribunal Procedure Rules, 1959, Rr. 9 and 11 — Revision filed in time returned on ground that documents were not enclosed — Application refiled with necessary enclosures — Application cannot be rejected as being filed beyond time prescribed by S. 114.

Where a revision application filed under Section 114 of the Act to the Tribunal within the time prescribed under that Section is returned on the ground that it did not accompany the documents required by R. 11 framed under the Act, and the application is refiled after due compliance thereof, it cannot be rejected on the ground that the application so refiled was beyond the time prescribed under Section 114 of the Act. AIR 1966 Bom 194, Foll. (Para 22)

The Legislature itself having fixed the limitation within which a revision application has to be filed under Section 114 of the Act, the rules made under Section 111 (2) cannot possibly be interpreted in any manner restricting that right by requiring the applicant to file some documents on the peril of his application being considered beyond time if such filing comes to be made after the period of limitation fixed by the statute. If the rules framed under Section 111 (2) do not in any way affect the period of limitation fixed and if a revision application is filed within the period of limitation fixed by the statute, then the failure of the applicant to comply with the provisions of any of the rules with the initial application presented within time will not entail rejection of the application on the ground of limitation because the compliance with the rules comes to be made at a later stage. (Paras 16, 20)

(B) Constitution of India, Article 227 — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), Ss. 114 and 111 — Dismissal of revision application by Revenue Tribunal erroneously treating it to be time-barred — It amounts to failure to exercise jurisdiction vested in it — Jurisdiction of High Court is not restricted in any manner from considering validity of order of Tribunal. (Nos. 1 to 3.)

ORDER: The petitioner, who is the landholder, invokes the jurisdiction of this Court under Article 227 of the Constitution, challenging an order of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal holding that his revision application against the order of the Special Deputy Collector in appeal, which order in its turn reversed the order of the Naib Tahsildar in favour of the petitioner, was barred by limitation and therefore rejected.

2. The petitioner claims to be landholder of field survey No. 18/2, area 24 acres 30 gunthas of Koltek, tahsil Amravati. He filed an application on 27-3-1961 for possession of land having previously given a notice under Section 38 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958. The petitioner wanted the land for personal cultivation. The respondent Tulsiram who was originally impleaded as the respondent died on 17-10-1961 and in his place the present respondents, Digambar and Ambadas sons of Tulsiram and Deokabai wife of Tulsiram, were brought on record at their instance. The respondents resisted the application on several grounds, one of the grounds being that the petitioner had claimed the right to terminate the lease of the field on the ground that the field had been allotted to him in a family partition on 26-6-1959. The Naib Tahsildar, on a consideration of the material before him, held that the petitioner was entitled to possession of one-half area of land from survey No. 18/2. The application to that extent was therefore allowed.

3. Against this order which was passed on 9-9-1963, the respondents preferred an appeal. It seems to have been argued before the appellate authority that the claim of the petitioner was hit by the provisions of Section 38 (7) of the new Tenancy Act and the application was therefore not tenable. The appellate authority, in a short order, disposed of the appeal on its view of the effect of sub-section (7) of Section 38 of the new Tenancy Act. It was held that inasmuch as the petitioner had acquired the field as a result of the partition dated 26-6-1959, he had no right to terminate the tenancy of the respondents. The order of the Naib Tahsildar was set aside and the application of the petitioner was dismissed. This order was passed on 30-6-1964.

4. Against this order, the petitioner preferred a revision application under Sec. 111 of the new Tenancy Act. The application was presented through counsel on 22-9-1964. It is common ground that this application was accompanied by a certified copy of the order of the appellate authority but not also with a certified copy of the order of the Naib Tahsildar.

5. The Deputy Registrar of the Revenue Tribunal issued a notice to the counsel for the petitioner who had presented the revision application calling upon him to appear before him on 9-10-1964. There is a printed pro forma on record under the signature of the Deputy Registrar dated 9-10-1964 showing that the Deputy Registrar found certain defects and one of the defects was that a certified copy of the Naib Tahsildar's order was not filed along with the revision application. The order states that the revision application involves defects and the revision application was therefore to be returned. It however appears that the actual order directing the petitioner through his counsel that the revision application may be re-filed within a period of 15 days from the date of the receipt of this letter after curing the defects which have been pointed out was passed on 23-9-1964. The revision papers however seem to have been actually returned on 28-10-1964.

6. It is the case of the petitioner that he had applied for a certified copy of the order of the Naib Tahsildar as far back on 9-12-1963 through his counsel at Amravati. But the copy was not received till the revision papers were returned to his counsel at Nagpur. He waited for some more time for the receipt of the copy of the order of the Naib Tahsildar but ultimately made a fresh application on 26-3-1965 through post for a certified copy of the order of the Naib Tahsildar again. The copy was despatched on 30-10-65 and purports to be received on 1-11-1965 at Nagpur and the revision was represented along with the certified copy on 9-11-1965.

7. On 17-11-1965 the Deputy Registrar of the Tribunal has noted in the order-sheet that the revision application should be put up before the Bench for orders on admission on 9-12-1965. The counsel for the petitioner was informed of this date also. On 9-12-1965 it appears the respondents were also represented by their counsel and opposed the admission of the revision application on the ground that it was time-barred. To this objection, it was urged on behalf of the petitioner through his counsel that the delay in re-filing the revision application was due to the fact that the petitioner had twice applied for a certified copy of the order of the Naib Tahsildar and that while on his first application he was informed that the record was not traceable, a copy was supplied on his second application late. The petitioner was directed to file an application with affidavit, stating the grounds for delay within a month with necessary documents and the respondents were to file a reply, and subject to consideration of limitation, the revision application which was already admitted was fixed for hearing parties on 16-2-1966.

8. On this date, the counsel for the petitioner filed a certified copy of the application dated 9-12-1963 which his counsel Mr. Kadu had made at Amravati. The respondents filed a reply to the application for condoning the delay. The matter was ultimately heard on 29-7-1966 and the Tribunal dismissed the revision application as time-barred. It is this order which is under challenge in this petition.

9. The Tribunal has found that the revision application, when originally filed on 22-9-1964, was within limitation. But the papers were returned on 28-10-1964 and the revision application was re-filed on 9-11-1965 and the question that was posed for decision was whether this period from 28-10-1964 to 9-11-1965 should be condoned. The Tribunal has observed that the petitioner should have filed an application for a copy of the Naib Tahsildar's order about the same time when he applied for a copy of the order of the Deputy Collector for filing the revision application before the Tribunal. It is also observed that the petitioner did not file the application till long after 28-10-1964 when the papers were returned by the Deputy Registrar of the Tribunal. When the copy was received by the petitioner on 30-10-1965, the Tribunal has observed that the revision papers were not filed till 9-11-1965, and this delay of nine days has also not been explained.

10. In paragraph 6 of its order, the Tribunal has observed:

"It is thus clear that the revision application was re-filed after the inordinate delay. Part of it is not properly explained in the applicant's affidavit. An instance of this is the period from 30-10-65 to 9-11-65. Another instance is when the revision application had been returned to the applicant on 28-10-64, a copy of the Naib Tahsildar's order had not been applied for till 26-3-65."

The Tribunal has further observed that the petitioner could not claim to have been diligent throughout the period from 28-10-1964 till 9-11-1965 when the revision application was re-filed.

11. In support of this petition, it is contended that the Tribunal has acted in excess of its jurisdiction in rejecting the revision application as barred by limitation. It is contended that the period of limitation within which the revision application has to be filed before the Tribunal under the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958, is fixed by statute under Section 114 of the Act, and that period is 60 days from the date of the order of the Tahsildar or the Collector as the case may be. In this case, it is the order of the Collector which is revisable by the Tribunal in exercise of its powers under S. 111 (1) of the Tenancy Act. There is no specific provision in the Act enabling the Tribunal directly to exercise its revisional powers over the orders of the Tahsildar or the Mamlatdar in the first instance. The revisional powers are so provided that they operate only on the orders of the Collector though that order may itself come to be passed in exercise of its appellate jurisdiction under Section 107 of the Tenancy Act. It is further pointed out that Section 114 does not require a copy of the order sought to be revised to be filed. In contradistinction with this, attention was invited to sub-section (2) of Section 107, which speaks of appeals against the order of the Tahsildar or the Tribunal to be filed before the Collector. That sub-section says that every petition for an appeal under sub-section (1) shall be in the prescribed form and shall be accompanied by a certified copy of the order to which objection is made unless the production of such copy is dispensed with. It is therefore contended that the statute providing for revision, not having made it incumbent on the applicant to file a certified copy, or, for the matter of that, a copy of any order, the Tribunal was not justified in making the right of revision given to the petitioner more onerous on account of the rules framed under Section 111(2) of the Tenancy Act prescribing the procedure to be followed by the Revenue Tribunal in deciding applications under Section 111. Alternatively, it is contended that even under the rules so framed, there is no provision entitling the Tribunal or any authority to dismiss an application for revision if it is otherwise filed in time to reject it on the ground that any other documents or papers which are required to accompany the revision application by virtue of these rules came to be filed at a later date, that is, beyond the period of limitation prescribed by Section 114 of the Tenancy Act.

12. The learned counsel for the respondents has generally supported the order of the Tribunal. His contention is that if the rules require an application for revision to be filed in the prescribed form containing the prescribed details and to be accompanied by prescribed documents, failure to file the application in conformity with the rules amounts to failure to file the revision application at all. It is therefore urged that the revision should be treated to be filed only when all the papers required to accompany the revision application came to be filed, and if such filing is beyond the period of limitation fixed by law, then unless the applicant satisfied the Court that there was sufficient cause for not filing the revision application in accordance with the rules, the revision application must fail on the ground of limitation.

13. Before examining the rival contentions, it is necessary to notice what the rules made by the State Government in exercise of the powers under Section 111(2) of the new Tenancy Act actually require a litigant to do when he has to file a revision application under Section 114 of that Act. It appears that the existence of these rules framed as far back as January 1960 and published in the Bombay Government Gazette Extraordinary 19-1-1960 is not known sufficiently even to the counsel practising before the Tribunal or this Court, much less to the litigants. Arguments proceeded up to a stage on the footing that there are no such rules and that the Tribunal purported to follow the Regulations made under the Bombay Revenue Tribunals Act. The learned Standing Counsel appointed to appear before the Tribunal however assisted in finding out the relevant rules and a copy of the Gazette containing the rules was made available at the hearing at a later stage. These rules are called the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Bombay Revenue Tribunal Procedure Rules, 1959. Chapter III of these rules makes provision for presentation, registration and admission of applications. The Rules relevant for our consideration are rules 9 and 11. Under Rule 9 an application for revision may be presented in person by the applicant or by his duly appointed agent or lawyer to the Registrar or sent to him by post. There are certain requirements of sub-rule (2) of Rule 9 which are prescribed to be observed, such as writing of the application in ink in legible hand, specification of the name and address of the applicant and the opponent, specification of the provisions of law under which it is filed, the grounds of application and the relief claimed. Under clause (f) of sub-rule (2) of Rule 9, if the application is filed after the expiry of the period of limitation, then the applicant has to state how the applicant claims that it is in time. The Registrar is enjoined not to accept any application unless it complies with the requirements laid down in clauses (a) to (g) of sub-rule (2) of Rule 9. Then follows sub-rule (4) which is as follows:

"Every application presented under sub-rule (1) shall be accompanied by

(a) the decision or order (either in original or a certified copy thereof) in respect of which such application is made;

(b) If the decision or order referred to in clause (a) is itself made in appeal against any decision or order, then also such latter decision or order either in original or a certified copy thereof; and

(c) as many copies thereof legibly written in ink or typewritten as there are opponents.

14. The original Rule 11 of these Rules was substituted by a new Rule 11 by an amendment effective from 29-7-1963 and it is this substituted rule which would govern the petitioner's application for revision in this case. It may be mentioned that these Rules have again been substituted by a fresh Rule 11 effective from 16-2-1968, but we are not concerned with this latter Rule in this petition. Rule 11 is divided into seven sub-rules. Under sub-rule (1) the Registrar receiving the application has to fix a date on which the applicant, or his agent or lawyer is required to appear. Under sub-rule (2) the Registrar has to examine the application within seven days and to satisfy himself that the persons presenting it had authority to do so and that it conformed to the provisions of the Act, the Tenancy Rules and these Rules. Thus, the Registrar has to satisfy himself, among other things, that the provisions of Rule 9(4) have been complied with. Then follows sub-rules (4), (5) and (6) which require consideration and they are in the following terms:

"(4) Where the registrar is of opinion that the application does not conform to any of the conditions specified in sub-rule (2), he shall, on the date on which the applicant is required to attend before him, return the application to the applicant or his duly authorised agent or lawyer with an endorsement specifically pointing out the defects on account of which the application could not be registered. If the defects are such as can be remedied, the endorsement shall also state the period not exceeding fifteen days within which the application may be refiled after curing the defects.

(5) If the party concerned or his duly authorised agent or lawyer refiles the application within the period prescribed under sub-rule (4) and cures all the defects pointed out, the application shall on payment of the fee provided by sub-rule (4) of Rule 47 be registered.

(6) If the party concerned or his duly authorised agent or lawyer refiles the application after the period prescribed under sub-rule (4) or fails to remedy or explain any of the defects pointed out while refiled the application, the Registrar shall, after registering the application, proceed under Rule 13".

Under sub-rule (7), if it appears to the Registrar that the application conforms to all the conditions specified in sub-rule (2) and with the provisions of the Act, but has been presented after the expiry of the limitation prescribed therefor by or under any law, the Registrar shall, after giving notice to the opponent, place it before the Tribunal for orders.

15. The contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner in the first instance is that Rule 11, or Rule 9, or for the matter of that, any of the rules framed under Section 111(2) of the new Tenancy Act, does not contain any provision that failure to observe these rules will entail dismissal of the revision application if it is otherwise tenable, that is, made within the time prescribed by Section 114 and otherwise maintainable. It is further contended that the defect in the instant case of the petitioner was his failure to file a certified copy of the order of the Naib Tahsildar. It was not possible for the Deputy Registrar to fix a period of 15 days only for obtaining such a copy and in view of the previous experience of the petitioner, he could not have obtained a copy within 15 days. In this connection, it is pointed out that an application for a copy made to the Naib Tahsildar as far back as 9-12-1963 was not disposed of nor rejected nor a copy supplied for almost over a year till the revision application came to be filed. The petitioner also points out that even when the fresh application for a copy was made to the Naib Tahsildar on 26-3-1965, no copy was available till as late as 30-10-1965, i.e. after a period of seven months. In other words, what is complained of is the fact of inordinate delay and gross carelessness in the matter of delivering copies in the Offices of subordinate authorities — it could not be said that the petitioner could have by normal procedure obtained a copy within 15 days and been able to file it. But apart from this aspect, it is contended that sub-rule (6) of Rule 11, in terms states that if the party concerned refiles the application after the period prescribed under sub-rule (4), the Registrar shall, after Registering the application, proceed under Rule 13, Rule 13 requires that where an application has been registered, the Registrar shall, as soon thereafter as possible, place it before the Tribunal for preliminary hearing. It is urged that there is no provision either in sub-rule (6) of Rule 11 or in any other Rule that the filing of the revision application after due compliance, though beyond the period fixed by the Registrar under sub-rule (4) of Rule 11, entails any penalty such as dismissal for late filing, provided the initial application has been filed within the time prescribed by law. In my opinion, there is considerable force in this contention and it must be accepted.

16. But what is even more clear to me is that the Legislature itself having fixed the limitation within which a revision application has to be filed under Section 114 of the Act, the rules made under Section 111 (2) cannot possibly be interpreted in any manner restricting that right by requiring the applicant to file some documents on the peril of his application being considered beyond time if such filing comes to be made after the period of limitation fixed by the statute. The most important fact that stares one in the face in this petition is and there is no dispute about it — that the petitioner had filed his revision application with a certified copy of the order challenged, namely, the order of the Deputy Collector, well within time. The petitioner's contention therefore is that he had complied with the provisions of the Act by filing the revision application in time and his failure to comply with the other provisions of the rules such as filing accompaniments etc., for which on account of the provision made in the rules, the revision application was returned to him for being re-filed along with the accompaniments, cannot entail the consequence of the rejection of his revision application as time-barred, when the original filing was well within time.

17. It is also urged, for which again there was no reply, that there is no limit of time fixed by the Rules for re-filing of an application for revision with the necessary accompaniments if the sub-rule could not have been properly called in aid. Even assuming that sub-rule (4) has been properly used, sub-rule (6) of Rule 11 does not prescribe any period of time; but on the contrary, assumes that if a party concerned re-files the application after removing the defects such application has necessarily to be registered and put up for admission.

18. In contrast with this, the provisions of sub-rule (7) of Rule 11 may be compared. Under sub-rule (7), an application filed beyond time, though with the necessary accompaniments and compliance with the other provisions of the rules, has to be placed before the Tribunal for orders on the point of limitation after hearing the opposite side. Thus, the only case in which the question of limitation can be properly raised for adjudication is where the initial filing of the revision application is itself beyond the limitation prescribed under Section 114. It does not appear that in any other case i.e. where the accompaniments are filed or other removal of defects is done late, the rules intend to penalise an applicant for revision who has filed his application for revision in time by non-suiting him on the ground that the compliance with the Rules has been made beyond a particular time.

19. The learned counsel for the respondents relied upon the following decisions on the assumption that this was a case governed by either Section 5 or Section 12 of the Limitation Act. These decisions are: Thirumala v. C. K. Anavemareddi, AIR 1934 Mad 306 (FB); Nemichand v. Chaturbhuj Damji, AIR 1937 Bom 64; Karsondas Dharamse v. Bai Gungabai, (1906) ILR 30 Bom. 329; M. L. and B. Corporation Ltd. v. Bhutnath, AIR 1964 SC 1336; Charity Commissioner v. Padmavati, AIR 1956 Bom. 86 and Imperial Tobacco Co. of India Ltd. v. Asst. Labour Commr., Patna, AIR 1967 Patna 153.

20. I do not think it is necessary to consider any of these decisions because they do not assist the respondent in view of the Full Bench decision of this Court in Chunnial Jethabhai v. Dahyabhai Amulakh, (1908) ILR 32 Bom 14. In that case a second appeal came to be filed within time accompanied by the judgment of the lower appellate Court but not accompanied by a copy of the order of the first Court in execution proceedings as required by Rule 25 of the rules framed in this Court. A copy of the order of the first Court was supplied much later, that is, almost a year and two months after the appeal was filed. The Registrar treated the second appeal as presented on the later date when the copy of the order of the first Court was filed, and treating it as time-barred, directed that it should be returned. Against this order a civil application was filed which was heard by a Bench of four Judges including the acting Chief Justice. On a consideration of the relevant provisions, it has been ruled that the accompaniments directed under Rule 25 of the Bombay High Court Rules are extraneous to the memoranda of appeals; application and appeals in execution and the rule expressly does not fix any time of which the documents mentioned in clauses (2) and (3) are to accompany the memoranda etc., and therefore an appeal etc., if presented in time, is validly presented for the purposes of the Limitation Act if it is accompanied by the copies required by the Code of Civil Procedure. In my opinion, this decision fully covers the principle to be followed in interpreting the obligations of the litigant in filing a revision application under the provisions of Section 111 read with Section 114 of the Tenancy Act, vis-a-vis the rules framed under Section 111(2) of that Act. The limitation for filing a revision application having been fixed by the statute itself and further that provision not requiring the petitioner to file the documents accompanying the application for revision, the rules made under Section 111(2) regulating the procedure before the Tribunal cannot, as it were, indirectly be read as part of Section 114, so as to make the right of filing a revision more onerous in the matter of limitation. If a rule of this Court requiring certain copies to be filed with a memorandum of second appeal, which copies are not required to be filed under the Code of Civil Procedure which gives the right of appeal, cannot be treated as a necessary requirement in exercising the right of filing an appeal, on parity of reasoning, the petitioner could well claim that he has complied with the provision of Section 114 read with Section 111 of the new Tenancy Act and his revision application should not be treated as time-barred. When this decision of this Court was brought to the notice of the learned counsel for the respondents, he was fair enough to state that he was unable to distinguish it on principle. It must therefore be held that if the rules framed under Section 111(2) do not in any way affect the period of limitation fixed and if a revision application is filed within the period of limitation fixed by the statute, then the failure of the applicant to comply with the provisions of any of the rules with the initial application presented within time will not entail rejection of the application on the ground of limitation because the compliance with the rules comes to be made at a later stage.

21. It was then urged, though somewhat faintly, that this Court should not exercise its extraordinary jurisdiction under Article 227 of the Constitution, even assuming that the order of the Tribunal was erroneous, because the Tribunal, it is urged, had the power to decide the question rightly as well as wrongly. I think that this is over-simplification of the issue involved in this case. Here the petitioner's revision application has been dismissed on the ground that it is barred by limitation, which finding is not sustainable. By so dismissing the application, the Tribunal has come to an end to the detriment of the interests of the petitioner as the application stands rejected. This is not a case where an interim order has been passed and has been challenged. As a result of the finding of the Tribunal that the revision application is barred by limitation, the petitioner's remedy successfully to challenge the order of the Deputy Collector on merits has been denied to him. Thus in this case there is a failure to exercise jurisdiction vested in it by law. If the Tribunal by erroneous decision as to limitation declines to adjudge the matter on merits, I do not think that the jurisdiction of this court is restricted in any manner from considering the validity of the order of the Tribunal under these circumstances.

22. The order under challenge before the Tribunal, namely, the appellate order of the Deputy Collector, rejects the application of the petitioner on the short ground that he claimed the property as a result of family partition in 1959. The Deputy Collector could not have rejected the application of the petitioner on this ground in view of the decision of this Court in Smt. Salubai v. Chandu, 1966 Mah LJ 289 = (AIR 1966 Bom 194). In view of this decision it is necessary not only to set aside the order of the Tribunal but also the order of the Deputy Collector which is ex facie not correct, and remand the matter to the Deputy Collector for a fresh decision of the appeal according to law. The orders of the Tribunal and the Deputy Collector are therefore set aside and the matter is remanded to the appellate authority for being considered at the appellate stage.

23. During the course of the arguments it has been observed that the exact import of the various sub-rules of Rule 11 cannot be properly appreciated. The rule-making authority may well consider whether it is advisable to make a provision of returning the original revision application itself only because the application does not comply with certain provisions of the rules. A better practice to regulate such matters would be to provide for retention of the revision application but give time to the erring party to comply with the provisions of the rules within a specified time. When a document or application is filed before the Tribunal the document and the application becomes a part of the record of the Tribunal and the Tribunal is in seisin of the matter judicially. It is not advisable in such circumstances that these papers should be allowed to be returned to the parties. A better course would appear to be to fix a time within which compliance with the provisions of the rules may be required to be made and failure so to comply may entail dismissal of the application for want of due prosecution. Return of papers involves many difficulties, there being no reasons of finding out at a later stage what documents were not in fact filed or were filed if a dispute is raised about such matters. The Registrar may be relied of this onerous duty by a suitable modification of the rules if found necessary.

24. There is another rule which has been brought to my notice, namely, Rule 45 which permits return of documents and certified copies filed by parties with the application. In fact, Rule 45 seems to suggest that the certified or original copies of documents filed with the application shall ordinarily be returned to the party concerned. In framing this rule, it seems to have been lost sight of that more often than not, the orders of the Tribunal are brought before this Court invoking its superintending jurisdiction under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution. If a document comes to be filed before the Tribunal and its relevancy or admissibility or its effect is adjudicated upon, it is not proper that such a document should be returned. In fact, it is contrary to all accepted rules of procedure that such documents, even though they are certified copies, should be returned to the parties until the lis is finally decided. In fact, there is no reason why certified copies of the documents should be returned at all. I have come across many instances where even original documents are returned to the parties without taking care to retain certified copies of the documents on record. In fact, according to accepted rules of procedure in all Tribunals exercising judicial power, documents filed by parties are not to be returned until the lis is finally decided, and even after the final decision, until such time as may be prescribed by the rules. A practice seems to have grown in the Tribunal perhaps in obedience to Rule 45, and also in subordinate Courts like the Tahsildar, the Deputy Collector etc. in these proceedings where documents solemnly admitted on record on behalf of either party are just returned for the asking. Return of documents makes it almost impossible for a superior Court to find out what the document was and what was its relevance or importance in the adjudication which comes in review. The State Government may well consider whether it is necessary to have a provision like Rule 45, or at any rate in its present form. The documents filed before the Tribunal or the subordinate Courts are part of the record and must be preserved until the rights are finally decided.

25. The result is that the petition is allowed. the orders of the Tribunal and the Deputy Collector in appeal are set aside and the matter is remanded to the appellate authority for a fresh decision according to law.

As the petition was opposed, the petitioner will be entitled to his costs.

Petition allowed.

PATEL AND WAGLE, JJ.

A. F. O. D. No. 193 of 1962, D/- 24-1-1969 against decision of Civil J. Senior Division at Sangli in Spl. C. S. No. 30 of 1959.

Contract Act (1872), Ss. 23, 205 — Drugs Act (1940), S. 18 — Drugs and Cosmetics Rules, Rule 61 — Agreement of agency — Trader appointed selling agent of medicines — Trader though not holding wholesaler's licence at time of agreement obtaining licence subsequently — Agreement is not void — Termination of agency by trader before expiry of stipulated period — Suit for damages is maintainable — (Specific Relief Act (1877), Ss. 21 (b), 21 (a), 19).

By an agreement of agency a trader was appointed as the selling agent of the medicines manufactured by a certain firm. By that agreement the trader undertook not to discontinue the agency for a period of three years and if he did so, he would have to pay damages to the firm. The trader held a licence for retail trade. But soon after he obtained wholesaler's licence under the Drugs Act but even then, by notice, he terminated the agreement on the ground that the agreement was void and illegal as he had no wholesaler's licence when the agreement was entered into.

Held, that the agreement could not be said to be a void agreement and the firm was entitled to claim damages. (Para 10)

There is nothing in the Drugs Act to show that no agreement can be entered into for agency unless and until the person who gives the agency is satisfied that the agent holds the licence. It only means that after the agreement is entered into between the parties, each party must do his best to fulfil his part. If per chance one party or the other cannot obtain such consent or licence then of course the agreement would be unenforceable but that would be not by reason of the fault or neglect of the party but because the licensing authority refused to grant the licence. It is only if the parties with a deliberate desire to evade the law enter into the contract to do something which is not legal, then the agreement must be regarded as void. (Para 6)

The underlying principle of such cases is that unless the transaction is itself of such a nature that it contravenes the law, it must be enforced by requiring the defendant to take such steps as are necessary in that direction. Much more so would be the case where the suit is not for specific performance but for damages where, the Court cannot specifically enforce the agreement of agency since it would be impossible to supervise the carrying out of it. The plaintiff would in such a case not be barred from asking for damages where the defendant does not carry out the contract not because the law prevents it but because he refused to take any action to satisfy the conditions imposed by law upon him before fulfilment of the contract. Hemendra Shah i/b. M/s. Mody Shambhu, Attorneys, for Appellant; B. R. Naik, for Respondent.

PATEL J.:— This is a plaintiff's appeal against the dismissal of his suit for damages and it arises under the following circumstances:

2. The plaintiff-firm manufactures Diamond Apicin and Diamond Jant-pudis at Miraj. The defendant is a trader at Sholapur. By an agreement dated January 2, 1959 between the plaintiff and the defendant, the defendant was appointed as the selling agent of the plaintiff's medicines for the Districts of Sholapur and Gulbarga, and for the Talukas of Humnabad, Tuljapur Latur and Indi. The agreement was to be in force for a period of three years. By this agreement the defendant undertook to purchase and sell a minimum of 80,000 pudis of Diamond Apicin and 5000 of Diamond Jant-pudis, agreeing further that the defendant would not discontinue the agency for the period of three years and if he did so, he would have to pay damages to the plaintiff. In pursuance of this contract, the defendant ordered some goods but it appears that by about February 1959, the Civil Surgeon at Sholapur ordered the defendant not to sell any of these articles as a wholesaler as the defendant had no licence for wholesale trade in drugs. It appears from the correspondence between the parties that the defendant had already made an application by about February 1959 for a wholesaler's licence under the Drugs Act and the correspondence further shows that he actually got the licence on June 6, 1959. Even so, by notice dated August 17, 1959, the defendant terminated the agreement on the ground that the agreement was void and illegal as the defendant had no licence when the agreement was entered into. He also made a statement in that notice that the goods of about five months were lying with him undisposed of as he had no licence, evidently a statement which was untrue, since he had already obtained a licence about two and a quarter months prior to the issue of this notice. It may be mentioned that the defendant got another agency. The plaintiff after some correspondence filed the present suit for damages claiming a sum of Rs. 70,000 from the defendant.

3. The defendant resisted the suit contending that the agreement of agency was illegal and void as he had no wholesale licence when the agreement was entered into. He also questioned the amount of damages. The learned trial Judge held that the agreement was invalid in law and therefore unenforceable. He also gave a finding on the question of damages which he assessed at Rs. 20,527. In view of his finding on the first and the main issue, the learned Judge dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appeals.

4. The first question is whether the agreement of the nature in the case can be said to be a void agreement, so that the plaintiff should be held not entitled to claim even damages. On behalf of the respondent it is argued that the agreement is contrary to the terms of the Drugs Act read with the rules and the licence issued to the plaintiff and therefore Section 23 of the Contract Act would be attracted and the plaintiff cannot sue.

5. Section 18 of the Drugs Act, 1940, prohibits the manufacture and sale of drugs and cosmetics except as provided therein. Clause (a) relates to the quality, clause (b) prohibits the sale of any of these articles or distribution thereof if imported or manufactured in contravention of the provisions of the Act or the rules and clause (c) prohibits the manufacture for sale, or sell or stock or exhibit for sale or distribute any drug, except under, and in accordance with the conditions of a licence issued for such purpose under the Chapter. Rule 61 of the Drugs and Cosmetics Rules framed under the Drugs Act prescribes different forms for different kinds of licences to deal in drugs. As in the present case the defendant had to act as a wholesale agent of the plaintiff, the Form applicable would be Form 20-B. The plaintiff undoubtedly and admittedly has a licence as per this Form. Now, the conditions of the licence amongst other things provide by condition 3 (ii) that no sale of any drug shall be made to a person not holding the requisite licence to sell, stock or exhibit for sale or distribute the drug. The proviso is not material to the present purposes.

6. What is prohibited is the actual sale of drugs by condition 3 (ii) of plaintiff's licence. If, therefore, in contravention of this provision a person actually sells or supplies the goods to a person who does not hold the licence for the particular purpose, then, as the sale is prohibited by law, he may not be entitled to recover the price for the goods. In the present case, however, there is an agreement of agency between the parties. An agreement of agency is capable of being carried on if each party does what is required of him to do. The plaintiff in order to fulfil his part had to have a licence for the sale of such drugs which he manufactured. Similarly the defendant in order to carry out his part of the contract was bound to have a licence which permitted him to deal in wholesale business of the drugs. It is admitted that he already held a licence for retail trade. There is nothing in the Drugs Act to show that no agreement can be entered into for agency unless and until the person who gives the agency is satisfied that the agent holds the licence. It would only mean that after the agreement is entered into between the parties, each party must do his best to fulfil his part. If per chance one party or the other cannot obtain such consent or licence then of course the agreement would be unenforceable but that would be not by reason of the fault or neglect of the party but because the licensing authority refused to grant the licence. It is only if the parties with a deliberate desire to evade the law enter into the contract to do something which is not legal, then the agreement must be regarded as void.

7. In this connection we may refer to a few cases which have come up before Courts. The case of Mrs. Chandnee Widya Vati v. Dr. C. L. Katial, AIR 1964 SC 978, arose out of a contract entered into by the appellant with the respondent to sell to the respondent a house which stood on a plot which was granted by the Government. The vendor-appellant could not have sold the house without the permission of the Government. As the vendor refused to complete the contract on that ground, the respondent filed a suit. The trial Court dismissed the suit. The respondent appealed to the High Court who decreed the plaintiff's suit saying that the Court had to enforce the terms of the contract enjoining upon the defendant to make the necessary application to the Chief Commissioner for the required sanction and it would then be for the Chief Commissioner to decide whether or not to grant the necessary sanction. The principle was accepted by the Supreme Court. The second case where similar principle was laid down is the decision in Dy. Director of Consolidation v. Deen Bandhu, AIR 1965 SC 484, which arose under the United Provinces Consolidation of Holdings Act of 1954. In a case under the statute where sanction was refused, the Supreme Court intervened and directed that the sanction for the transfer should be made. Following these cases, this Court in Tukaram Zipre v. Baban Dhondu, (1965) 67 Bom LR 908, held that in a case where sanction was necessary for transfer of the property, either the Court can compel the defendant to make the application for the same or appoint a Court Commissioner to do so or permit the plaintiff to make the application. The underlying principle of these cases is that unless the transaction is itself of such a nature that it contravenes the law, it must be enforced by requiring the defendant to take such steps as are necessary in that direction. Much more so would be the case where the suit is not for specific performance but for damages such as the present, where, the Court cannot specifically enforce the agreement of agency since it would be impossible to supervise the carrying out of it. The plaintiff would in such a case not be barred from asking for damages where the defendant does not carry out the contract not because the law prevents it but because he refused to take any action to satisfy the conditions imposed by law upon him before fulfilment of the contract. In this case it is much worse because the defendant terminated the contract after he had already got a wholesaler's licence for the drugs and, according to the plaintiff, he started competing the plaintiff's sales by pushing the drugs of other manufactures. The plaintiff is right in this allegation.

8. A somewhat similar question though in a slightly different context arose in H. O. Brandt and Co. v. H. N. Morris and Co., (1917) 2 KB 784. The contract in that case was for monthly deliveries of pure aniline oil. After the contract was made, the export of the oil was prohibited by an order in Council except otherwise than under licence to export. The Court held that the agreement was not void nor it became unenforceable by reason of the subsequent restrictions but that an obligation to apply for a licence lay upon the buyers who could not refuse to perform their part of the contract merely by alleging inability. Same principle has subsequently been followed in Taylor and Co. v. Landauer and Co., (1940) 4 All ER 335.

9. Dr. Naik relying upon some cases urged that the agreement such as the present is void in law. He relies upon the decisions Janu Sait v. Ramaswami Naidu, AIR 1923 Mad 626, Hormasji Motabhai v. Pestanji Dhanjibhai, (1888) ILR 12 Bom 422 and V. Narasimha Raju v. V. Gurumurthy Raju, (1963) 3 SCR 687 = (AIR 1963 SC 107). None of these cases have any application whatsoever. The first case arose out of an actual transaction of buying and selling. The plaintiff who had given the money and agreed to take the goods in payment thereof could not have received the goods by sale in this manner unless he had a licence. The Court held that the contract could not be enforced as the plaintiff himself had no licence though if he was not in pari delicto with the defendant in the making of the contract he could recover the amount which he had paid. In the second case the question arose in the relation to Abkari law where the partnership was absolutely prohibited. The Court found that both the parties were in pari delicto and as the partnership was absolutely prohibited the plaintiff could not succeed in his suit for account. The third case arose out of stifling of a prosecution which was filed against the promisor and as the Court came to the conclusion that it was intended to stifle the prosecution which was already launched, the promisee could not succeed on the promise. To the same effect are the other cases which are cited before us which we do not think it necessary to refer.

10. Dr. Naik has relied particularly upon the decision in Kedar Nath v. Prahlad Rai, AIR 1960 SC 213, where the Supreme Court after discussing several cases summarised the position in law as follows:

"The correct position in law, in our opinion, is that what one has to see is whether the illegality goes so much to the root of the matter that the plaintiff cannot bring his action without relying upon the illegal transaction into which he had entered. If the illegality be trivial or venial, as stated by Williston and the plaintiff is not required to rest his case upon that illegality, then public policy demands that the defendant should not be allowed to take advantage of the position. A strict view, of course, must be taken of the plaintiff's conduct, and he should not be allowed to circumvent the illegality by resorting to some subterfuge or by misstating the facts. If, however, the matter is clear and the illegality is not required to be pleaded or proved as part of the cause of action and the plaintiff recanted before the illegal purpose was achieved, then, unless it be of such a gross nature as to outrage the conscience of the Court, the plea of the defendant should not prevail."

The principle stated in this decision is not irreconcilable with the principles of the cases we have referred to. The Court either in enforcing the specific performance of the contract by requiring the party to apply for the required sanction, or in giving damages for the negligence of the party in carrying out his part of the contract in not even applying for a licence, is not doing something which is contrary to the principle above stated. Having regard to the terms of the provisions we are of the view that the learned Judge was not justified in holding that the agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant was void ab initio.

11. It is only necessary to state that even after the defendant was informed by the Civil Surgeon that as he had not got a wholesale drug licence he could not sell the goods, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff that the goods could not be sold not because he had not a wholesale drug licence but that he had applied for the same and further goods should be sent only after an intimation was given that such licence was received. This only shows that the agreement could be carried out after the licence was received. It was only in August 1959 when probably the defendant got some better temptation from others that he terminated the contract with the plaintiff. In our view, therefore, the plaintiff is clearly entitled to claim damages.

12. The next question is what should be the amount of damages decreed to the plaintiff. The plaintiff in its plaint had originally claimed a sum of Rs. 70,000 as damages on the basis that its monthly profit would have been Rs. 7,000. The learned trial Judge has estimated the damages at Rs. 20,527.

13. Where breach of contract has been established, the plaintiff is undoubtedly entitled to claim damages from the defendant. The plaintiff is, however, expected to take steps to mitigate his loss. The Court after considering both the actual loss and the steps taken by the plaintiff to mitigate the loss has to determine the amount of damages. In the present case the method adopted by the learned Judge to assess the damages is as below. The contract shows that every month the defendant had to sell these two drugs manufactured by the plaintiff valued at Rs. 5550 i.e. the drugs worth Rs. 66,600 per year. The plaintiff produced his assessment orders before the learned trial Judge to show that he was assessed on the basis of 66% profit in the year 1957-58 and on the basis of 47% on the sales of 30,000 in 1956-57. Exh. 167 showed that the gross profit in the trading and manufacturing account worked out at 66.2% on the sales of Rs. 51,609. Out of this amount the learned Judge deducted 15% commission payable to the agent defendant. The defendant himself did not enter the witness box to show what would be the profit in such business. The plaintiff further produced a statement, Exhibit 169, showing the sales effected by it from November 25, 1959 to May 29, 1960 for a period of six months as per the Tippians kept by him. In the statement the bill numbers and the quantity of packets sold were also mentioned. This showed that in six months he had sold medicines in the area of agency worth Rs. 23,534.37. If the defendant had continued the agency, medicines worth Rs. 33,300 for six months would have been sold. Thus the loss of sale in this area, was Rs. 9,765.63. On this basis, for 28 months the learned Judge held that the reduced sales in this area came to Rs. 45,570 and on this he held the loss would be Rs. 20,527. From this calculation it appears that the learned Judge has taken net profit at about 50% of the sales. This, however, in our view is not justified. There may be several vicissitudes in the market, prices might fluctuate, competition might increase with the result that some reduction in the price of the medicines sold also may be required. Having regard to all exigencies it seems to us that in this kind of business looking to the comparative higher profits, it would be reasonable to assess the loss at Rs. 25% of the sale price which would come to Rs. 11367.

14. We accordingly set aside the decree and order made by the learned trial Judge and decree to the plaintiff a sum of Rupees 11367 with costs in proportion to his success throughout. The defendant will bear his own costs.

Appeal allowed.

ABHYANKAR, J.

Madhao Narayan, Petitioner v. Ragho Niloo and others, Respondents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 763 of 1967, D/- 8-10-1968.

Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), S. 111 (2) — Rules under — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Rules (1959), R. 19 — Discretion of Tribunal to proceed to decide case in absence of both parties — Propriety — Proper order indicated — Applicants' counsel applying for adjournment after consulting Assistant Registrar — Tribunal proceeding to decide case on merits — Opposite party also absent — Propriety of order — Violation of principles of natural justice — (Civil P. C. (1908), Order 9, Rr. 3, 8; O. 17 Rules 2, 3) — (Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Rules (1959), R. 19).

Rule 19 does give the Tribunal a discretion either to dismiss an application if the applicant or his counsel is absent when the application is called for hearing or to decide it on merits after hearing the opposite side, if present. Where neither the applicant nor the non-applicant was present ordinarily, unless there is a compelling reason for the Tribunal to proceed with the disposal of the revision application on merits, the proper order would be an order for dismissal in the absence of parties. Passing of an order on merits without hearing the parties acts to the grave prejudice of the party in default, inasmuch as so far as the scheme of the Act is concerned, the Tribunal being the final forum where a dispute could be taken, the party suffers an adverse order without having an opportunity of being heard. It is against the principles of natural justice and the proper course in such cases would be an order of dismissal of the application for default of appearance. The Tribunal must indicate clearly and satisfactorily why its discretionary power to decide the application on merits has been exercised rather than the dismissal of application for default. (Para 9)

Where a litigant entrusts his brief to counsel, exigencies of work do necessitate adjustment subject to orders of the Court. Where the counsel after informing the Assistant Registrar of his inability to be present on the date of hearing, and on his advice the counsel applied for adjournment, the party cannot be penalised by having his case disposed of on merits without hearing the party specially when the opposite party, though served was also absent. (Para 9)

N. S. Munshi, for Petitioner; G. G. Modak, for Respondent No. 2.

ORDER: The petitioner in this application under Article 227 of the Constitution is Madhao Narayan Sarmukkadam, who is the tenure-holder of field survey No. 15/2, area 12 acres 1 guntha, situate at village Muchi, tahsil Wani, District Yeotmal. The landholder filed an application on 15-10-1963 for possession of survey No. 15/2 on the ground that the respondent No. 1 Ragho who was a tenant of this field had sublet it to respondent No. 2 Karnu. The petitioner gave a notice on 16-8-1962 charging Ragho that he was not cultivating the field though he was his tenant and that he had sublet the field to another person. A second notice was also given on 18-4-1963 charging Ragho with the same default. This was followed by an application dated 15-3-1963 to which both Ragho and Karnu were impleaded as parties. This application is registered in the Court of the Naib Tahsildar as Revenue Case No. 2/59 (10-B) of 1963-64. In these proceedings, both Ragho and Karnu filed a joint statement and their joint defence was that that field and survey Nos. 18 and 20 belonged to one Radhabai, and they were obtained by the petitioner as a result of partition and therefore the petitioner had no right. Their further case on merits was that Ragho never cultivated survey No. 15/2 and that it has been let out to Karnu by the mother of the petitioner since 1952-53. Thus, the second respondent Karnu claimed to be a direct tenant of the field and admitted to be in cultivating possession in his own right and not under Ragho.

2. The Tenancy Naib-Tahsildar, on a consideration of all the material on record, held that Ragho was the tenant of survey No. 15/2 and that he had sublet it to Karnu. Inasmuch as subletting was proved, the Naib Tahsildar ordered that the petitioner was entitled to possession of the entire area.

3. This order was challenged in appeal both by Karnu and Ragho. The appellate authority took a contrary view, reversed the order of the Naib-Tahsildar and rejected the application of the petitioner for possession.

4. Against this order, the petitioner Madhao filed a revision application. This was registered as Application No. 1350/Ten. of 1965. It appears the revision application was posted for hearing parties on 18-6-1966 before the Tribunal. The petitioner has alleged in paragraph 10 of the petition that his counsel filed an application for adjourning the hearing of this revision application to a further date as he had to leave Nagpur unexpectedly for appearance before an inquiry at Bastar. It is alleged that the Assistant Registrar of the Tribunal was contacted and apprised of his predicament and it was at the behest of the Assistant Registrar that the counsel gave an application for adjournment. It appears that the counsel made a single application in respect of his cases fixed for that date before the Tribunal, and no separate application was filed in Revision Application No. 1350/Tenancy of 1965. But the fact that an application was made is obvious from the order-sheet of that date in the proceedings before the Tribunal. That order-sheet is as follows :

"Applicant and his counsel are absent. Non-applicants are also absent. The applicant's counsel has applied for an adjournment of the revision on the ground that he is engaged elsewhere away from Nagpur for a month and a half. If so, the applicant's counsel should have made some other arrangement for his representation in this revision application. I decline to adjourn the revision. Record perused. Order passed."

The respondents have merely denied knowledge of these averments because the respondents were also absent and possibly could have no personal knowledge of the events.

5. The learned Member of the Tribunal not only proceeded with the matter in the absence of both the parties but has decided it on merits rejecting the application of the petitioner.

6-7. It is urged in support of the petition that the procedure followed by the Tribunal has ended in the failure of justice and the Tribunal should not have proceeded to decide the application on merits and the proper order that could be passed would have been an order of dismissal of the application for want of appearance, or for want of due prosecution, if at all it was necessary to take up the case without adjourning it.

8. On behalf of the respondents, the order is supported to be well within the jurisdiction of the Revenue Tribunal relying on the provisions of Rule 19 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Bombay Revenue Tribunal Procedure, Rules 1959, framed by the State Government in exercise of the power conferred by sub-sec. (2) of Sec. 111 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958. Rule 19 is as follows :

"19. Procedure in case of non-appearance of parties :

(1) If on the date fixed for hearing or any other subsequent day to which the hearing may be adjourned, the applicant does not appear either in person or through his agent or lawyer when the application is called for hearing, the Tribunal may dismiss the application or may decide it on merits after hearing the respondent or his agent or lawyer, if present.

(2) If on the date fixed for hearing or on any other subsequent day to which the hearing may be adjourned, the opponent does not appear in person or through his agent or lawyer when the application is called for hearing, the Tribunal may decide the same on merits, after hearing the applicant or his agent or lawyer.

(3) If there be doubt as to whether a party has been served with notice issued under Rule 18, the Tribunal may decide the application without issuing a fresh notice—

(a) If the said party be the applicant, or one of the applicants, and the Tribunal is of the opinion that the application should be wholly allowed, or,

(b) if the said party be opponent, or one of the opponents, and if the Tribunal is of the opinion that the application should be wholly dismissed or rejected."

9. It is apparent that Rule 19 does give the Tribunal a discretion either to dismiss an application if the applicant or his counsel is absent when the application is called for hearing or to decide it on merits after hearing the opposite side if present. In this case, neither the applicant nor the non-applicant was present. Ordinarily therefore, unless there is a compelling reason for the Tribunal to proceed with the disposal of the revision application on merits, the proper order would be an order for dismissal in the absence of parties. Passing of an order on merits without hearing the parties acts to the grave prejudice of the party in default, inasmuch as so far as the scheme of the Act is concerned, that being the final forum where a dispute could be taken, the party suffers an adverse order without having an opportunity of being heard. It is against the principles of natural justice and the proper course in such cases would be an order of dismissal of the application for default of appearance. The Tribunal must indicate clearly and satisfactorily why its discretionary power to decide the application on merits has been exercised rather than the dismissal of application for default. There is no such indication in the present order. Ordinarily, one would have expected the request for adjournment being granted as prima facie the reason disclosed in the application was entitled to consideration. Where a litigant entrusts his brief to counsel, exigencies of work do necessitate adjustment subject to orders of the Court. It does not appear that there was any indication given to the counsel when he made an application for adjournment to the Assistant Registrar that adjournment would not be possible. If the counsel left the matter there, the party cannot be penalized by having his case disposed of on merits without hearing the party. What is even more significant in this case is that the opposite party was also absent. The notice was ordered to be issued to the opposite party on 9-8-1966 and process fee seems to have been paid for issuing of this process. It is not clear from the record whether the opponents were served at all. Under these circumstances, it is urged that the applicant has been unduly prejudiced and suffered an adverse order without the benefit of a hearing being given to him. In my opinion, this contention is well-founded. Substantial issues were involved in the case and the applicant had gone up in revision against a reversing order and the least the applicant should have been held entitled to was a hearing before the disposal of his revision application on merits.

Under the circumstances, it must be held that the order of the Tribunal cannot be sustained. It is accordingly set aside and the matter is remanded to the Tribunal for a fresh decision according to law after giving a proper opportunity to both the sides to be heard. The petition is allowed but in the circumstances there will be no order as to costs.

Application allowed.

AIR 1970 BOMBAY 134 (V 57 C 23)

VAIDYA, J.

Criminal Appeal No. 1626 of 1967, D/- 9-4-1969.

Drugs and Cosmetics Act (1940), Ss. 3 (b), 18 (c) and 27 — Drugs — Definition of D.D.T. is a drug — Sale of compound containing D.D.T. without obtaining licence — Conviction under S. 18(c) read with S. 27 is proper.

The accused himself had admitted that the substance which he sold without obtaining licence as D. D. T. compound contained D. D. T.

Held having regard to the popular as well as dictionary meaning of the word 'drug', the D. D. T. compound which was sold by the accused was a drug irrespective of whether it was notified by the Government of India or whether it contained the chemical ingredients which the Public Analyst has found or not. The accused, therefore, was liable to be convicted under S. 18(c) read with S. 27. Conviction of the accused could not, however, be based on the report of the Public Analyst which did not mention protocol test. (Para 4)

N. V. Adhia, for Appellant; V. T. Gam-bhirwala, Asst. Govt. Pleader, for the State.

JUDGMENT: The only question which arises in this appeal filed by Prabhudas Kalyanji Adhia against his conviction under Section 18(c) read with Section 27 of the Drugs and Cosmetics Act, 1940, for manufacturing, stocking and selling on July 15, 1966 the substance which he described as 'D. D. T. compound' without a licence under the said Act is, whether the said D. D. T. compound is a drug within the meaning of that Act.

2. The accused did not dispute that at the relevant time he was manufacturing, stocking and selling at 121, Parel Tank Road, Parel, Bombay 12, as proprietor of M/s. Hill Side Products D. D. T. compound, but he denied that the substance which he was manufacturing or selling was intended to be used for the destruction of vermin or insects which cause disease in human beings or animals as mentioned in a notification of the Government of India under Section 3(b)(ii). He relied on a label which was used on his product which he produced. On one side of the label there is a picture of a theatre and it is written:

"Theatre Brand
D. D. T. Co.
Technical DDT cum Malathion
Superior Quality
Hill-side Products, Bombay."

On another side of the label it is written:

"Not for medical use.

Theatre Brand D. D. T. is to be used with a sprayer for the control of horticultural and household pests other than those that cause disease in human beings or animals.

Caution:—Store well away from Children, animals, foodstuffs and animal feed.
Wash hands after use.

Do not pour or spill on open fire.
Hill-side Products

Parel Tank Road, Bombay 12."

The accused did not dispute that D. D. T. was actually used in this drug. His only contention, therefore, was that the product was not intended to be used as medicine and, therefore, it was not a drug. He also contended that the report of the Public Analyst, which was relied on by the complainant who was a Drug Inspector, did not mention the protocol test and hence the report was useless as evidence.

3. The learned Magistrate was of the view that notwithstanding the contents of the label, the substance manufactured by the accused was drug. It is argued before me that the finding of the learned Magistrate was not right firstly because the report of the Public Analyst did not mention the protocol test and secondly because the substance manufactured, stocked and sold by the accused was not for medicinal use and the learned Magistrate erred in relying on the report and in holding in spite of what was mentioned in the label that the D. D. T. compound sold by the accused was drug.

4. The Magistrate convicted the accused under Section 18 (c) read with Section 27 of the Act and sentenced him to suffer simple imprisonment for one day and to pay a fine of Rs. 200 or in default to suffer further imprisonment for 15 days. In my judgment, the conviction and sentence passed against the appellant must be confirmed although not for the reasons stated by the Magistrate. The Learned Magistrate was not right in relying on the report of the Public Analyst which did not mention the protocol test. Nevertheless, as the accused himself has admitted that the substance which he sold contained D.D.T. and it was sold as 'D.D.T. compound,' it will be against commonsense to hold that it was not a drug. It is a well-established canon of construction that in dealing with matters relating to the general public, statutes are presumed to use words in their popular sense; uti loquitur vulgus. The Drugs and Cosmetics Act is dealing with matters relating to the general public. Its object is to regulate the import, manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs and cosmetics. There is no exhaustive definition which includes certain things which perhaps, according to popular usage, could not be included in the popular meaning of the word 'drug' or in respect of which there might be some doubt as to whether they would be considered as drugs according to the popular meaning of the word. Section 3 (b) reads:

3 (b): "Drug" includes —

(i) all medicines for internal or external use of human beings or animals and all substances intended to be used for or in the diagnosis, treatment, mitigation or prevention of disease in human beings or animals;

(ii) such substances (other than food) intended to affect the structure or any function of the human body or intended to be used for the destruction of vermin or insects which cause disease in human beings or animals, as may be specified from time to time by the Central Government by notification in the Official Gazette."

Therefore, it is necessary for us to take into consideration not merely the clause (i) and (ii) but to find out whether the substance which the accused manufactured, stocked and sold was a substance which was popularly considered as a drug. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 17, Third Edition, page 448 para 831 it is stated:

"The term 'drug' includes medicine for internal or external use. In any case of doubt, it will be a question of fact for the determination of the court whether an article is a drug or not, and the answer will depend upon whether or not the substance was sold for use as medicine. An article is not necessarily a drug because it is included in the British Pharmacopoeia and may be used in the preparation of medicines, nor is an article a drug merely because it is sold under a designation which implies that it contains a drug in its composition, when in fact it does not."

In the present case, the accused himself has admitted that the substance which he sold as D. D. T. compound contained D. D. T. which is a well-known drug in the 20th century. The Oxford English Dictionary has described drug as 'an original, simple medicinal substance, organic or inorganic, whether used by itself in its natural condition or prepared by art, or as an ingredient in a medicine or medicament'. Having regard to the popular as well as dictionary meaning of the word 'drug', I have no doubt that the D. D. T. compound which was sold by the accused was a drug irrespective of whether it was notified by the Government of India or whether it contained the chemical ingredients which the Public Analyst has found or not.

5. In the result, the conviction and sentence passed against the appellant are confirmed and the appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

CHANDURKAR, J.

R. J. Gujar, Appellant v. Jamnadas Gopalji and another, Respondents.

Criminal Appeal No. 65 of 1968, D/- 13-3-1969.

Prevention of Food Adulteration Act (1954), Ss. 16(1)(b), 19(2), 11 and 10 — Accused a dealer in "Anik Ghee" supplied by manufacturers in sealed tin — Accused refusing to sell to Food Inspector 450 Grams out of packing of 2 Kg. and insisting to purchase the sealed tin — Inspector refusing to purchase sealed tin as offered — Dealer, held not guilty under Section 16(1)(b) — Provisions of Ss. 10, 11 and 19 to be read harmoniously — S. 10 cannot be so construed as to deprive seller of his defence under S. 19(2) — Neither S. 11 of the Act nor Rr. 22 and 22A of the Rules, prohibits Food Inspector to purchase more than 450 grams of sample — (Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules (1955), Rr. 22 and 22A).

Where the accused who was a Kirana merchant and was also dealing in "Anik Ghee" supplied to him by the manufacturers in sealed tins under a warranty, refused to sell the Food Inspector a sample of 450 Grams after breaking open the sealed tin as required by the Food Inspector and insisted him to purchase the sealed tin of 2 Kg. but the Inspector refused to purchase the quantity more than 450 Grams under the impression that he had no power to purchase a quantity larger than 450 Grams.

Held that it could not be said that the accused had committed an offence of preventing the Food Inspector from taking a sample as contemplated by Section 16 (1) (b) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act. The failure to obtain the sample by the Food Inspector was essentially the result of a misapprehension of the legal position under which the Food Inspector himself was labouring, namely, that he was prohibited from purchasing more than 450 grams of the Food Article. Having regard to his right to take the benefit of the statutory defence under Section 19 of the Act the seller was entitled to insist that it should be purchased in the form which he received it from manufacturer. (Para 9)

KM/LM/F103/69/LGC/M

There is nothing in Section 11 (1) of the Act or in Rr. 22 and 22A of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules which casts any positive obligation on the Food Inspector to purchase 450 grams alone and not a gram more, nor is there anything which can be read as a prohibition to purchase a larger quantity if he thought it necessary.

(Para 7)

The very fact that the quantity of sample of Ghee to be supplied for analysis under R. 22 is specified to be an approximate quantity indicates that this rule is of directory nature and there is nothing in this rule which prevents the Food Inspector in a given case from sending a larger quantity.

The provisions of Sections 10, 11 and 19 of the Act have to be read harmoniously and the provisions of Section 10 dealing with the powers of the Food Inspector cannot be so construed as to deprive the seller of the statutory defence under Section 19(2) of the Act. If Section 10 is construed as giving a power to the Food Inspector to insist on a sale of an article in sealed container received by the seller with a warranty from the manufacturer after breaking open the seal then such a construction will deprive the seller of the defence under Section 19(2) of the Act.

(Para 8)

A. M. Bapat, for Appellant; V. G. Palshikar (for No. 1) and M. M. Qazi, Asst. Govt. Pleader (for No. 2), for Respondents.

JUDGMENT: This is an appeal filed by the Food Inspector of the Akot Municipal Council challenging the judgment of acquittal of the respondent No. 1, who was acquitted of the offence under Section 16(1)(b) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, hereinafter referred to as the Act.

2. The facts in this case are not disputed. The respondent No. 1 is a Kirana merchant, who deals, among other articles, in a product called "Anik Ghee", which is product of Hindustan Lever Limited. The complainant went to the shop of the respondent No. 1 at about 11.20 A. M. on 19-8-1966 and asked him to sell him a sample of the quantity of 450 grams out of a sealed container weighing 2 kg. which was kept for sale in the shop by the accused. The complainant served a notice on the respondent No. 1 that the sample of the food article "guaranteed pure Anik Ghee" which was stocked in his grocery shop for sale in the packing of 2 kg. was to be sent for analysis, and therefore, 450 grams of "Anik Ghee" should be given to the Food Inspector. The respondent No. 1 received this notice and endorsed thereon that he sold packed tins of "Anik Ghee" of Hindustan Lever Limited, Bombay, and that he did not sell in small quantity from the packed tin. He further stated "if you require, you can purchase a packed tin."

2A. The Food Inspector, however, carried the impression that he had no power to purchase a quantity larger than 450 grams of sample of food-stuff, and therefore, he did not purchase the whole container. He prepared a memo reciting all these facts in the presence of the two Panchas whom he had taken with him. According to the Food Inspector, this failure of the respondent No. 1 to sell 450 grams of Anik Ghee after breaking open the sealed container amounted to preventing him from taking a sample and he had thus committed an offence under Section 16(1)(b) of the Act. He, therefore, filed a complaint in the Court of the Judicial Magistrate, First Class, Akot, reciting all these facts. It is not necessary to reproduce all the contents of the complaint except the one relating to the explanation of the complainant why he did not purchase a larger quantity than 450 grams. In the complaint it is stated as follows:—

"Under rules made under the Act, the quantity of sample of the said Article of Food-ghee to be supplied to the Public Analyst for analysis is specified to be 150 grams. The quantity of sample is to be separated into three parts before sending one of the parts for analysis to the Public Analyst, and therefore the complainant had no authority to collect the quantity of the sample in any amount except than 450 grams."

3. The complainant examined himself and admitted in the witness-box that the accused was willing to sell the whole tin if the complainant so wanted. He sticks to the explanation why he did not purchase the whole tin by stating that as per law he could not take more than 450 grams of sample. The defence of the accused was that he was not permitted to sell retail quantity of Anik Ghee and this defence was put to the complainant in cross-examination, and in cross-examination the complainant admitted that the accused had not sold any loose Ghee from the tin in question. The warranty which was issued to the dealer by the Hindustan Lever Limited in respect of this article was put to the complainant in cross-examination.

4. The trying Magistrate on these admitted facts found that there was no provision of law which prevented the Food Inspector from purchasing a larger quantity than 450 grams of sample. He thus took the view that because the complainant did not purchase the whole tin or was unable to purchase the same it did not mean that the accused prevented him from taking the sample. He, therefore, acquitted the accused. Against this acquittal this appeal has been filed.

5. The learned counsel for the appellant contends that having regard to the provisions of Rules 22 and 22-A of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955, the complainant could insist on a sale of 450 grams of Ghee in the sealed container and that since the respondent No. 1 had failed to sell this quantity he should have been held guilty of the offence under Section 16 (1) (b) of the Act. He relied also on the provisions of Section 10 (1) (a) (i) for the proposition that the power which is given to the Food Inspector by this Section to take a sample of any article of food from any person selling such article could not be construed in such a way that he would be prevented from taking the necessary sample. This argument was supported by the learned Assistant Government Pleader appearing for the State also.

6. The learned counsel for the respondent No. 1, however, contended that there was no provision either in the Act or the Rules which prevented the Food Inspector from purchasing a sample of a quantity larger than 450 grams and as he was willing to sell the sealed container he had not committed any offence.

7. In order to appreciate the rival contentions it will be necessary to refer to certain provisions of the Act and the Rules. It is not disputed that the provisions of Section 10 (1) (a) (i) give power to the Food Inspector to take sample of any article of food from any person selling such article. Admittedly it was this power which the Food Inspector was seeking to exercise. But the real question is whether the failure of the Food Inspector to obtain the necessary sample from the respondent No. 1 was a result of any act on the part of the respondent No. 1 or whether it was a result of misapprehension of the legal position with regard to his powers under which the Food Inspector was, namely, that there was prohibition for him to purchase a quantity more than 450 grams by way of a sample. It is also an admitted position that Rule 22 prescribes the quantities of samples to be sent to the Public Analyst in respect of several articles specified therein. So far as Ghee is concerned, the quantity specified under Rule 22 is 150 grams. It is worth noting that these different quantities in respect of different articles which are specified under this Rule are only approximate quantities, because the column specifying the quantity of the article under this rule is itself headed as "approximate quantity to be supplied". The very fact that the quantity is specified to be an approximate quantity indicates that this Rule is of directory nature and there is nothing in this Rule which prevents the Food Inspector in a given case from sending a larger quantity. Section 11 of the Act prescribes the procedure to be followed by the Food Inspectors where a sample of food is taken for analysis and it requires that the sample taken is to be divided into 3 parts then and there and these parts are to be marked and sealed in such manner as its nature permits. Cl. (c) of sub-s. (1) of S. 11 of the Act requires one of the parts to be delivered to the person from whom the sample is taken, another part is to be sent for analysis to the Public Analyst and the third part is to be retained for production if necessary, in case any legal proceedings are taken or for analysis by the Director of the Central Food Laboratory under sub-section

(2) of Section 13 of the Act. It is on the basis of this provision with regard to the division of the sample into 3 parts that it is contended that not more than 450 grams could be taken by the Food Inspector. Section 11 (1) nowhere specifies the quantity to be taken by way of a sample. It is difficult to read the figure '450' into this Section, but probably the argument is that since 3 parts are to be made and one part which is to be sent to the Public Analyst is to consist of 150 grams it is intended that the total quantity must be of 450 grams. In a given case that may be so, but there is nothing in Section 11 (1) of the Act which casts any positive obligation on the Food Inspector to purchase 450 grams alone and not a gram more nor is there anything which can be read as a prohibition to purchase a larger quantity if he thought it necessary. Reliance is then placed on Rule 22-A of the Rules which is as follows:—

"22-A—Contents of one or more similar sealed containers having identical labels to constitute the quantity of food sample. Where food is sold or stocked for sale or for distribution in sealed containers having identical label declaration, the contents of one or more of such containers as may be required to satisfy the quantity prescribed in Rule 22 shall be treated to be a part of the sample."

On the basis of this rule it is contended that the Food Inspector was justified in asking the respondent No. 1 to break open the sealed container and sell 450 grams out of its contents to him. I am unable to spell out this power of the Food Inspector from the words of this rule. The obvious purpose of this rule appears to be that in a given case the contents of one of the containers may be such that it may not be sufficient to fulfil the requirement of Rule 22 and also the requirement of Section 11 where out of the 3 parts made, one is to be kept with the dealer and the other is to be retained by the Food Inspector. In a given case if the contents of a container are less than or even equal to 150 grams, it will be impossible to divide contents of that container into 3 parts so as to make available to the Public Analyst a quantity sufficient for analysis and also a sufficient quantity to be retained, if necessary, to be sent to the Director of the Central Food Laboratory under sub-section (2) of Section 13, and it may, therefore, be necessary to draw on the contents of another container in order to provide sufficient quantity of this food article. In the absence of this rule the accused might raise a defence that the different parts are not out of the same sample and it is obvious that it is to meet such a contention that this rule appears to have been made. But it is impossible to spell out from this rule a restriction on the power of the Food Inspector to purchase anything more than 450 grams or to insist upon the dealer to break open a sealed container and sell him a lesser quantity. Such a power does not appear to have been given by any of the provisions of either the Act or the Rules, either expressly or impliedly.

8. In this connection a reference to Section 19 also becomes necessary. Section 19 (2) enumerates the defences which are open to a person who is prosecuted in respect of an offence under the Act and one of the defences is that the seller has purchased an article of food with a written warranty in the prescribed form and that the article of food while in his possession was properly stored and that he sold it in the same state as he purchased it. If we contemplate a case in which a dealer who sells articles received by him in sealed containers under a warranty from the manufacturer and that article, if it is sold in the same state, namely, the sealed condition in which he had received from the manufacturer, and that article is found to be adulterated, then there is a good defence to him that the goods were purchased under a warranty and they were sold in the same state in which he had received them. The accused is entitled to raise such a statutory defence especially in a case where the dealer deals in an article like the present case. The accused has produced a warranty from the Hindustan Lever Limited as contemplated by Section 19 (2) and if he had sold this article in a state other than the one in which he had received, namely, by retail sale after breaking open the seal of the manufacturer, he would have been deprived of the statutory defence under Section 19 (2) of the Act. The provisions of Sections 10, 11 and 19 of the Act will have to be read harmoniously and the provisions of Section 10 dealing with the powers of the Food Inspector cannot be so construed as to deprive the seller of the statutory defence under Section 19 (2) of the Act. If Section 10 is construed as giving a power to the Food Inspector to insist on a sale of an article in sealed container received by the seller with a warranty from the manufacturer after breaking open the seal then such a construction will deprive the seller of the defence under Section 19 (2) of the Act.

9. It will, therefore, be seen that the failure to obtain the sample by the Food Inspector was essentially the result of a misapprehension of the legal position under which the Food Inspector himself was labouring, namely, that he was prohibited from purchasing more than 450 grams of the food article. Secondly this is not a case in which the respondent No. 1 refused to sell an article of food. All that he insisted was that it should be purchased in the form in which he had received it from the manufacturer and in my view he was entitled to so insist, having regard to his right to take the benefit of the statutory defence under Section 19 of the Act. Under such circumstances, it cannot be said that the accused had committed an offence of preventing the Food Inspector from taking a sample as contemplated by Section 16 (1) (b) of the Act. The trying Magistrate was, therefore, right in acquitting the accused.

10. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed.

AIR 1970 BOMBAY 138 (V 57 C 25)

CHANDURKAR, J.

Radheshaym Mohanlal Kaitan, Petitioner v. The Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal Nagpur and others, Respondents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 587 of 1966, D/- 1-4-1969.

(A) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region and Kutch Area) Act (99 of 1958), S. 36 (1) — Application under — Period of limitation — Starting point — Tenant dispossessed of fields — Limitation runs from date of dispossession.

The starting point of limitation under Section 36 (1) is the date on which the right to obtain possession of land accrues. So where a tenant is dispossessed of fields by the landlord, then limitation will start running from date when tenant is dispossessed. By the mere fact that, in proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. C. in respect of those fields a receiver appointed by the Magistrate was placed in possession of the fields in dispute, it cannot be said that the tenant had really no cause of action on the basis of which a claim for possession could be validly made under S. 36 (1) and that the cause of action for application under S. 36 (1) really arose when the possession of fields was handed over to the landlord by the Magistrate after the proceedings terminated in favour of the landlord. It is not possible to substitute in Section 36 (1) any other cause of action in place of one which is referred to therein for the purpose of deciding whether an application under Section 36 (1) is made within the prescribed period of three years. If the tenant is dispossessed, then it is that dispossession which gives him the right to obtain restoration of possession and the period of three years must be reckoned from that date alone and not from any other date. (Para 7)

(B) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region and Kutch Area) Act (99 of 1958) Section 36 (1) — Application for restoration of possession — Prescription of period of limitation under Act — It is different from period prescribed by 1st Schedule of Limitation Act — Section 14 of Limitation Act applies to proceedings under Sec. 36 (1).

Section 14 of the Limitation Act is applicable to a proceeding under Section 36 (1) of Tenancy Act. The two conditions which are required to be satisfied under Section 29 (2) of Limitation Act if the provisions enumerated in clause (a) thereof including Section 14 are to apply to a proceeding under the special law are that (1) the Special law prescribes a period of limitation different from the period prescribed by the First Schedule and (2) the application of those sections is not expressly excluded by the Special law. It cannot be said that as the First Schedule does not prescribe any period of limitation for an application under Sec. 36 (1), the first condition is not satisfied and as such the provisions of Section 14 are not applicable to such proceedings. The prescription of period of limitation by the Tenancy Act for application under Section 36 (1) for which no period is prescribed by First Schedule, must be taken to be prescription of a period of limitation different from the period prescribed by the First Schedule, for the purpose of Sec. 29 (2) of the Limitation Act. AIR 1961 Bom 154, Rel. on. (Para 10)

There is also no express provision in the Tenancy Act which excludes the applicability of the section enumerated in clause (a) of Sec. 29 (2) of Limitation Act. Hence Section 14 of Limitation Act is applicable to an application under Section 36 (1) of Tenancy Act. (Para 10)

(C) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region and Kutch Area) Act (99 of 1958), S. 36 (1) — Limitation prescribed under — Computation of—Proceedings instituted under S. 145 Criminal P. C. cannot be taken into account for that purpose, by applying Section 14, Limitation Act.

Before a party can claim the benefit of Section 14 (2) of the Limitation Act he must show that he was prosecuting another civil proceeding in good faith with due diligence in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of like nature was unable to entertain it. He has also to show that he was prosecuting the proceeding for the same relief which he claims in the subsequent proceeding. (Para 11)

So, where a tenant is dispossessed of the fields by the landlord, then the pendency of proceedings, instituted by the tenant under Section 145 Criminal P. C. in respect of those fields, cannot be taken into account for computation of limitation period prescribed under Section 36 (1) of Tenancy Act, by applying Section 14 of Limitation Act. The proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, by its very nature being a quasi-criminal proceeding, cannot be classified as civil proceeding as contemplated by Section 14 (2) of the Limitation Act. So, even if the proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, were pursued to their conclusion and there was no question of any want of jurisdiction in the Magistrate who passed the final order in those proceedings, and even assuming that the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court were for the same relief and were prosecuted with the due diligence, the most important conditions necessary for the applicability of Sec. 14 (2) of the Limitation Act, cannot be said to have been satisfied. (Para 11) and Kutch Area) Act (99 of 1958), Ss. 36 (1), 129 — Application under Sec. 36 (1) — Not prohibited by Sec. 129 in case of lands enumerated therein.

An application under Section 36 (1) is not prohibited by Section 129 in the case of lands enumerated therein. It is true that the section provides that "none of the foregoing provisions of the Act shall apply" but to this an exception is made by enumerating certain provisions which means that the provisions which are stated by way of an exception have been made applicable to the lands specified in the section. These provisions which are stated by way of exception to the general provision of inapplicability of anything that is provided in Sections 1 to 128-A are: Section 2, the provisions of Chapter II excepting Sections 21, 22, 23, 24 and 37 from that Chapter and Section 91 and the provisions of Chapters X and XII. Section 36 which is in Chapter II is not one of the provisions which are omitted from the Chapter II as being inapplicable because from Chapter II some of the provisions are made inapplicable and they are Sections 21, 22, 23, 24 and 37. N. S. Munshi and V. G. Senad, for Petitioner; P. B. Gadkari, for Respondent No. 4.

ORDER : The petitioner is the landlord of four fields with an area of 38.18 acres situated at village Randala, Tahsil and District Nagpur. The contesting respondent No. 4 who claimed to be a tenant cultivating these fields, filed an application on 26-2-1964 alleging that he was dispossessed of these fields otherwise than in accordance with law and that he was, therefore, entitled to be restored to possession. The application, however, does not state the exact date of dispossession but it is not now disputed that he was dispossessed on 10-6-1959. In respect of these fields proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, were taken by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Nagpur, in which according to the tenant, the Tahsildar, Kamptee, was appointed a receiver and he was placed in possession of these fields on 28-11-1959. These proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, terminated in favour of the petitioner landlord and in accordance with the decision of the Civil Court under Section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, the petitioner was put in possession of these fields on 23-5-1963 by the S. D. M. The tenant was conscious of the fact that his application filed on 26-2-1964 was delayed and he tried to explain this delay by stating in the application that the fields were in possession of the receiver and that "with a bona fide object of getting back the possession of the fields as early as possible, the applicant sued out proceedings under Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code and also as advised by his lawyer." He, therefore, stated that if there was any delay in making the application, then that should be excused taking into consideration those circumstances. This is the only ground on which the delay in making the application for possession under Section 36 (1) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1958 (hereinafter referred to as the Act) was explained. The landlord contested the application made by the tenant. According to him, the tenant had executed a surrender deed on 4-4-1959 in his favour and that it was submitted for verification and he was, therefore, entitled to be in possession. One of the main grounds on which the maintainability of the application filed by the tenant was contested was that the application was made beyond the period of three years from the date of dispossession and that the tenant was not entitled to exclude the time during which proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, were pending.

2. It appears that on 29-11-1959, the tenant had also filed an application in the Court of the Collector, Nagpur District, Nagpur, under Section 120 of the Tenancy Act and in that application, the tenant prayed that the landlord should be evicted from the fields in question as he had no right to disturb the possession of the tenant. It was alleged in this application under Section 120 of the Act that the dispossession had taken place on 4-11-1959. This application came to be registered as revenue case No. 128-A/52-59-60 in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Nagpur. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate on this application passed an order on 23-1-1959 forwarding it to the Naib-Tahsildar for enquiry and report. This application was then tagged on to the application filed by the landlord for verification of the surrender-deed. The case regarding verification of the surrender-deed was registered as revenue case No. 25/59-4-59-60 in the Court of the Naib Tahsildar, Nagpur.

3. The tenant's application under Sec. 36 of the Act was dealt with by the Additional Tahsildar, Nagpur. He framed a preliminary issue on the question of limitation. That issue was as follows:

"Whether the application of Shri Govind-rao son of Ramji Thakre, dated 24-2-1964, asking for possession of the suit land, is within limitation and whether it is tenable?" The Tahsildar took the view that the application was made beyond three years from the date on which the right to obtain possession had accrued to the tenant. He further held that the tenant was not entitled to the benefit of Section 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908 and that the pendency of proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code was not a bar to making an application under Section 36 (1) of the Act. He also gave a finding that the tenant had chosen a wrong forum and could not claim benefit of pendency of those proceedings and he had not acted with due diligence to safeguard his own interest. The application was thus rejected as barred by limitation.

4. Against this order, the tenant appealed. The Deputy Collector took the view that the time during which proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code were pending, was liable to be excluded for the purpose of ascertaining whether the application under Section 36 (1) of the Act was filed by the tenant within the prescribed period of limitation. The Deputy Collector also held that "Sec. 129 (d) of the Bombay Tenancy Act excluded operation of Section 36 on lands under Criminal Court's management" and therefore the period from 28-1-1961 i.e. the date when Act No. V of 1961 came into force, till 23-5-1963, when the fields were released, from the management of the Criminal Court, will have to be included. It appears that before that Deputy Collector an argument was advanced that the time involved in proceedings under Section 120 of the Tenancy Act should also be excluded under Section 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908. The contention was advanced before him on the basis of an application made to amend the memo of appeal before him in which it was stated that the case under Section 120 of the Act was still pending and that an additional ground of appeal should be allowed to be urged that the tenant was pursuing his remedy for possession in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Nagpur and that therefore the application under Section 36 was within time. Even this contention was accepted and the learned Deputy Collector held that the principle underlying Section 14 of the Limitation Act, should be applied in the case of an application under Section 36. He, therefore, set aside the order of the Tahsildar and sent back the case to the Tahsildar for disposal according to law.

5. This order of the Deputy Collector was challenged by the landlord petitioner by a revision application filed before the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Nagpur. The Revenue Tribunal made no reference to the case of the tenant that the time taken in the proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, should be excluded but the learned member of the Tribunal took the view that the tenant had chosen a wrong forum through ignorance or wrong advice by making an application to the Sub-Divisional Officer and that condonation of delay was justified. The revision application was, therefore, rejected. The landlord has now challenged the orders of the Revenue Tribunal and the Deputy Collector by this petition.

6. The learned counsel for the petitioner contends that the tenant was not entitled to the exclusion of the period between 23-9-1959 i.e., the date of the preliminary order to 23-5-1963 on which date the proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code ended in favour of the petitioner. According to him, the tenant should have made an application for restoration of possession within three years from 10-6-1959 which was the date of dispossession and the application was patently barred by time and was rightly rejected by the Tahsildar. The learned counsel for the respondent tenant, however, contends that the landlord was not in possession of the fields from 28-11-1959, when the receiver appointed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was placed in possession of the fields in dispute and that really the tenant had no cause of action on the basis of which a claim for possession could be validly made under Section 36 (1). According to him, cause of action for the application under Section 36 (1) of the Act really arose on 23-5-1963 when the possession of the fields was handed over to the landlord by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. He, therefore, contends that the application is well within limitation from that date. His alternative submission is that the tenant is entitled to have the period of pendency of the proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, excluded while computing the period of limitation by virtue of the provisions of Section 14 read with Section 29 (2) of the Limitation Act.

7. Having heard counsel for parties at some length I am inclined to hold that the tenant's application was rightly rejected by the Tahsildar. Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act prescribes a limitation of three years for an application by a tenant where he claims that he is entitled to possession as a result of eviction in contravention of sub-section (2) and this period of three years is to be reckoned from the date on which the right to obtain possession of the land had accrued to the tenant. The starting point of limitation, therefore, under Section 36 (1) is the date on which the right to obtain possession of land accrued. This right to obtain possession so far as present respondent-tenant is concerned, obviously accrued to him on the date on which he was dispossessed viz., on 10-6-1959. It is not possible to substitute in Section 36 (1) any other cause of action in place of the one which is referred to therein for the purposes of deciding whether an application under Section 36 (1) was made within the prescribed period of three years. Accepting the contention of the tenant that the cause of action in his favour really arose on 23-5-1963, under Section 36 (1) would be reading something in the section which the legislature never intended. If the tenant was dispossessed, then it is that dispossession which gives him a right to obtain restoration of possession and the period of three years must be reckoned from that date alone and not from any other date. Therefore, the application filed by the tenant on 24-2-1964 was barred by limitation.

8. The next question that requires to be decided is whether the pendency of the proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, should be taken into account for deciding whether the application by the tenant is within limitation or not. It was argued that Section 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908 became applicable to these proceedings by virtue of Section 29 (2) of that Act. The learned counsel for the landlord, however, contended that the Limitation Act does not provide for a period of limitation for an application made under Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act and in the absence of such prescription the condition required to be satisfied for the applicability of sub-sec. (2) of Section 29 is not satisfied and, therefore, the provisions enumerated therein viz. Section 4, Sections 9 to 18, and Section 22 of the Limitation Act cannot be said to be applicable to the proceedings under Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act in respect of which the limitation is provided by the Special law viz., the Tenancy Act.

9. Section 29 (2) of the Limitation Act, 1908 is as follows:

"Where any special or local law prescribes for any suit, appeal or application a period of limitation different from the period prescribed therefor by the first schedule, the provisions of Section 3 shall apply, as if such period were prescribed therefor, in that schedule, and for the purpose of determining any period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special or local law—

(a) the provisions contained in Section 4, Sections 9 to 18, and Section 22 shall apply only in so far as, and to the extent to which they are not expressly excluded by such special or local law; and

(b) the remaining provisions of this Act shall apply."

10. It is clear from the words of Section 29 (2) that there are the two conditions which are required to be satisfied if the provisions enumerated in Cl. (a) thereof including Section 14 are to apply to a proceeding under the special law. These conditions are that (1) the Special law prescribes a period of limitation different from the period prescribed by the First Schedule and (2) the application of those sections is not expressly excluded by the Special law. Learned counsel for the petitioner contends that the first condition is not satisfied in the instant case because the First Schedule does not prescribe any period of limitation for an application under Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act and therefore the provisions of Section 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908 are not applicable to a proceeding under Sec. 36 of the Tenancy Act. The argument must, however, be rejected having regard to the construction placed by this Court on the opening words in Section 29 (2) of the Limitation Act in Full Bench decision of this Court in Anjanabai v. Yeshwantrao, 1961 Nag LJ 1 = (AIR 1961 Bom 154 FB). The question in that case was whether the provisions of Section 5 of the Limitation Act are applicable in the case of an application made under Section 417 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code for the grant of leave to appeal against an order of acquittal. Section 29 (2) fell for consideration in that case and it was contended that sub-section (2) of Section 29 can apply only where the special law prescribes a period of limitation different from the period prescribed therefor by the First Schedule and that since the First Schedule to the Limitation Act does not prescribe any period of limitation for an application for leave to appeal against an order of acquittal, the period prescribed under Section 417 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be said to be different from that laid down in First Schedule to the Limitation Act. This contention was negated by the Full Bench relying on an earlier decision of Division Bench in Canara Bank Ltd. v. Warden Insurance Co. Ltd., 54 Bom LR 661 = (AIR 1953 Bom 35) which was later followed in State v. C. N. Raman, 58 Bom LR 295 = (AIR 1956 Bom 447). In Anjanabai's case the following observations of the Division Bench in the decision in the Canara Bank case were quoted with approval:

"The contention of Mr. Adarkar is that sub-section (2) only applies when you find a period of limitation laid down in the first schedule and a special law alters or modifies that period, and inasmuch as the Limitation Act does not provide for a period of limitation in respect of an appeal from a special officer to the High Court, S. 29 (2) has no application to this particular special law. In our opinion that is not the correct interpretation to put upon the language used by the Legislature, viz., a period of limitation different from the period prescribed therefor by the first schedule. The period of limitation may be different under two different circumstances. It may be different if it modifies or alters a period of limitation fixed by the first schedule to the Limitation Act. It may also be different in the sense that it departs from the period of limitation fixed for various appeals under the Limitation Act. If the first schedule to the Limitation Act omits laying down any period of limitation for a particular appeal and the special law provides a period of limitation, then to that extent the special law is different from the Limitation Act. We are conscious of the fact that the language used by the Legislature is perhaps not very happy, but we must put upon it a construction which will reconcile the various difficulties caused by the other sections of the Limitation Act and which will give effect to the object which obviously the Legislature had in mind, because if we were to give to Section 29 (2) the meaning which Mr. Adarkar contends for, then the result would be that even Section 3 of the Limitation Act would not apply to this special law. The result would be that although an appeal may be barred by limitation, it would not be liable to be dismissed under Section 3. Therefore, in our opinion, it is clear that we have before us a special law which does prescribe a period of limitation different from the period prescribed therefor by the first schedule to the Limitation Act."

The Full Bench observed that the view taken by the Court in the two earlier cases was correct. Thus, prescription of period of limitation of three years by the special law viz. Tenancy Act for an application under Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act, for which no period of limitation is prescribed by the First Schedule, must be taken to be prescription of a period of limitation different from the period prescribed by the First Schedule, for the purpose of Section 29 (2) of the Limitation Act, 1908. The first condition laid down in sub-section (2) of Section 29 having been satisfied, the provisions contained in Section 4, Sections 9 to 18 and Section 22 must be held to apply to an application under Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act, 1958 in so far as and to the extent to which they are not expressly excluded by such special or local law viz., the Tenancy Act. There is no express provision in the Tenancy Act which excludes the applicability of the sections enumerated in clause (a) of Section 29 (2) of the Limitation Act, 1908 in the case of an application under Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act. It must, therefore, be held that the provisions of Section 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908 are applicable to a proceeding under Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act. It will however depend on the facts of each case whether the party claiming the benefit of that provision satisfies the requirements thereof. In view of the fact that the provisions of the several sections enumerated in clause (A) of Section 29 (2) of the Limitation Act, 1908 has now been held to apply to a proceeding under Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act, Section 9 of the Limitation Act, 1908 will also become applicable to these proceedings. Section 9 of the Limitation Act, 1908 provides—

"Where once time has begun to run no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it:

Provided that where letters of administration to the estate of a creditor have been granted to his debtor, the running of the time prescribed for a suit to recover continues."

In this case the proviso is not material. The effect of Section 9 of the Limitation Act, however, is that if the limitation for an application under Section 36 (1) had begun to run from the date of dispossession viz., 10-6-1959, that limitation is not arrested. Thus for the purposes of Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act, the limitation must be held to have commenced from 10-6-1959.

11. The next question then is whether under Section 14 of the Limitation Act the time taken during the pendency of the proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code was liable to be excluded. The proceeding under Section 36 (1) is initiated by an application and the manner of computation of the period of limitation prescribed for an application is dealt with by Section 14 (2) of the Limitation Act. Section 14 (2) is as follows:

"It computing the period of limitation prescribed for any application, the time during which the applicant has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal, against the same party for the same relief shall be excluded, where such proceeding is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it."

Before a party can claim the benefit of Section 14 (2) of the Limitation Act he must show that he was prosecuting another civil proceeding in good faith with due diligence in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of like nature was unable to entertain it. He has also to show that he was prosecuting the proceeding for the same relief which he claims in the subsequent proceeding. In my view a proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, by its very nature is a quasi-criminal proceeding and cannot be classified as civil proceeding as contemplated by Section 14 (2) of the Limitation Act. The proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, were pursued to their conclusion and there was no question of any want of jurisdiction in the Magistrate who passed the final order in those proceedings. Thus even assuming that the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court were for the same relief and were prosecuted with the due diligence, the most important conditions necessary for the applicability of Section 14 (2) of the Limitation Act, 1908 are not satisfied in the instant case. The pendency of these proceedings cannot, therefore, be taken into account for computation of the period of limitation of three years prescribed by Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act. In my view the pendency of those proceedings did not also prevent the tenant from making an application under Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act. The application made by the tenant on 24-2-1964 must therefore be held to have been made beyond the period prescribed by Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act. It was, therefore, rightly rejected by the Tahsildar.

12. The learned counsel for the tenant then contended that his client was prevented from making the application under Sec. 36 of the Act because the management of the field was taken over by the receiver appointed by the Criminal Court. He was obviously referring to the fact that a receiver appointed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was in possession of the field and this amounted to taking over management by the Criminal Court within the meaning of Section 129 (d) of the Bombay Tenancy Act. For the proposition that the applicability of Section 36 of the Tenancy Act was excluded in the case of such property, the management of which was taken over by the Criminal Court, the learned counsel for the tenant relied on

"129. Nothing in the foregoing provisions except Section 2, the provisions of Chapter II (excluding Sections 21, 22, 23, 24 and 37) and Section 91 and the provisions of Chapters X and XII in so far as the provisions of the said Chapters are applicable to any of the matters referred to in sections mentioned above, shall apply—

- (a) X X X X
- (b) X X X X
- (c) X X X X X

(d) to any land taken under management by a Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court;"

The learned counsel contends that the opening words of Section 129 must be so construed as to mean that the provisions of Chapter II are made inapplicable in the case of lands under the management of civil, revenue and criminal Court. Section 129 of the Act deals with the applicability and the inapplicability of certain provisions to the different kinds of lands enumerated therein. It is true that the section provides that "none of the foregoing provisions of the Act shall apply" but to this an exception is made by enumerating certain provisions which means that the provisions which are stated by way of an exception have been made applicable to the lands specified in the section. These provisions which are stated by way of exception to the general provision of inapplicability of anything that is provided in Sections 1 to 128-A are: Section 2, the provisions of Chapter II excepting Sections 21, 22, 23, 24 and 37 from that Chapter and Section 91 and the provisions of Chapters X and XII. Section 36 is in Chapter II. Section 36 is not one of the provisions which are omitted from the Chapter II as being inapplicable because from Chapter II some of the provisions are made inapplicable and they are Sections 21, 22, 23, 24 and 37. Thus, Section 129 cannot be construed as to mean that an application under Section 36 is prohibited in the case of lands which are enumerated therein. If the tenant was entitled to take recourse to Section 36, even in the case of a land, the management of which was taken by the criminal Court, it is not possible to accept the submission that the tenant in the instant case could not have made an application for restoration of possession before the date on which the petitioner was placed in possession by the Magistrate because Sec. 36 of the Act was made inapplicable to the case of lands which were taken over by the receiver in the proceedings under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. It may also be stated that this ground was not even stated in the application made before the Tahsildar.

13. It is finally contended by the learned counsel for the tenant that the pendency of proceedings under Section 120 before the Sub-Divisional Officer, Nagpur, must be taken into consideration and that the learned member of the Revenue Tribunal and the Deputy Collector were justified in condoning the delay having regard to the pendency of those proceedings. I am unable to accept this contention also. There is no other provision other than Section 14 (2) of the Limitation Act under which such an indulgence could be claimed by the tenant. It is not necessary to decide for the purpose of this case whether the proceedings pending under Section 120 before the S. D. O. Nagpur, were in the nature of civil proceedings within the meaning of Sec. 14 (2) of the Limitation Act. But the record of those proceedings is before me and the record speaks eloquently of want of diligence on the part of the tenant. Whether a particular proceeding was being prosecuted with due diligence or not is a question of fact which must be decided on the facts of each case. I have already stated that before the Tahsildar the benefit of Section 14 (2) of the Limitation Act on the ground of pendency of proceedings before the Sub-Divisional Officer was never claimed by the tenant. If such a question was raised, the Tahsildar would have inquired into the question whether the tenant was prosecuting the proceedings with due diligence or not. Apart from that, patently the Sub-Divisional Officer does not have jurisdiction in respect of a matter which is covered by Section 36 (1) of the Act and the tenant has chosen a forum which had no jurisdiction to deal with his application at all. The learned member of the Tribunal has observed that the tenant must have done so on account of some mistake or wrong advice. That again would be a question of fact and there is no evidence in this case on the basis of which the reason why the tenant was prompted to approach an authority without jurisdiction could be ascertained. The record shows that after the proceeding under Section 120 of the Tenancy Act was instituted on 23-11-1959, it got tagged on to the proceedings started by the landlord for the purpose of the verification of the surrender deed which the tenant is alleged to have executed. It is surprising to see that for almost 3½ years these proceedings have remained unattended to. The order sheet dated 3-7-1961 in this case states that—

"Both (Radhesham and Govindrao) present. Radhesham filed an application for extension of period for allowing him to produce stay order, along with one affidavit that his application for stay will be heard in the first week of July by S. D. O. Await. Case for 18-7-1961."

and the next order-sheet after this is of 21-1-1965. This order-sheet mentions that—

"This case is put up to me by my Reader Shri Kamble on asking when in an application made by Shri Kamble pleader in case No. 15/59-32 of 63-64 of M. Ranara, he made a reference to this case pending decision. Reader orally tells me he found this case lying unattended to in the box containing papers received from the Court of N. T. Nagpur, Shri Gokhale. It appears the records of the case must have been received back by the former Court with revisional orders passed on 31-1-1963 by the Court of Spl. Dy. Collector, L. R. Nagpur; the order is on record of this case.

2. My reader will please report as to how and when he detected this case." It is not disputed before me by the parties that the proceedings in this case were never stayed and when the proceedings were never stayed, the tenant obviously did not appear to be interested in getting his application under Section 120 of the Tenancy Act decided early. The conduct of the tenant in not taking any steps to see that these proceedings are disposed of can hardly be said to be diligent. Apart from the fact that these proceedings have not even been disposed of and there is no finding that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain this application, the manner in which the tenant has prosecuted this proceeding under Section 120 is a clear proof of want of diligence on his part. I am, therefore, of the view that the learned member of the Tribunal and the Special Deputy Collector were not justified in accepting the vague allegation made at the appellate stage and condoning the delay in making the application by the tenant under Section 36(1) of the Tenancy Act.

14. These were the only contentions advanced before me. Since I have held that the application under Section 36(1) of the Tenancy Act was patently barred by time and that the tenant was not entitled to have the time taken in the two proceedings referred to above excluded, I must hold that the Tahsildar was justified in rejecting the application of the tenant as barred by limitation. The petition is therefore allowed. The orders of the Revenue Tribunal in Revenue Revision Application No. 1305 of 1965 decided on 7-8-1965 and the order of the Special Deputy Collector, Land Reforms, Nagpur, in Revenue Appeal No. 10/59-10(A)/64-65 decided on 30-4-1965 are, therefore, quashed. The petitioner shall be entitled to costs from the tenant-respondent No. 4.

Special Civil Appls. Nos. 1026 of 1966 and 170 of 1968, D/- 24-7-1969.

(A) Tenancy Laws — Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Ss. 12 to 21 (Chap. IV) — Scheme of Act — Ceiling area and surplus land — Determination of — Holder of land dying after 26-1-1962 but before declaration under S. 21 — His heirs by succession or under will have to file separate returns with respect to land held by them if it is in excess of ceiling area — Determination of surplus land has to be with respect to such returns and not with respect to land held by deceased holder on 26-1-1962.

Where a holder of property dies after the appointed day viz. 26-1-1962 and before any declaration is made by the Collector under Section 21 of the Ceiling Act, the heirs or the legatees are under an obligation to file a return in respect of the property which they may already hold as on 20-1-1962 and which they may get on the death of the deceased either by succession or under a will if these together are in excess of the ceiling area and it is only with respect to such property that the surplus has to be found. In such cases, the surplus cannot be found with respect to the property which the deceased holder held on 26-1-1962 and would have held on the date of the declaration had he been alive on that date. (Para 19)

The heirs or the legatees are the persons in respect of whom the ceiling area is to be determined and the surplus land declared. The returns which can be called from the heirs and legatees will be their individual returns and not joint returns. (Para 21)

The scheme of the Ceiling Act shows that a ceiling is to be determined with respect to "a person which also includes a family and it creates a bar to a person holding land in excess of the ceiling area. (Para 13)

The Ceiling Act nowhere makes a provision that the ceiling is to be determined as on the state of affairs existing on 26-1-1962 even if the holder who was alive on 26-1-1962 dies after that date. In the absence of any such provision, it must be taken that the Ceiling Act contemplates "a person" who is alive not only on the date 26-1-1962, the appointed day, but at the time of the filing of the return and till the date of the declaration made by the Collector under Section 21 of the Ceiling Act. (Para 14)

(B) Tenancy Laws — Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961) Pre. — Object of Act.

The main purpose of the Ceiling Act, seems to be to distribute agricultural land amongst the landless and other persons to subserve the common good and for the purpose, to limit the extent of land to be held by a person and to take away the land in excess of the land which is allowed to be retained by the holder which is called a ceiling and the land in excess of the ceiling area is then to be distributed by the State to certain categories of persons according to priorities. The taking over of the surplus land is thus related to its distribution among the landless and other persons and among such landless persons could be also the heirs or legatees of the deceased holder, who held land on the appointed day and died during the enquiry proceedings. (Para 6)

(C) Tenancy Laws — Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961) S. 4(2) — Deeming provision in S. 4(2) introduces a legal fiction and can be applied only for purpose intended and cannot be stretched further — It cannot be construed to mean that determination of surplus land is to be made as on 26-1-1962 irrespective of whether holder was alive or dead after 26-1-1962.

The deeming provision of sub-section (2) of Sec. 4 in which it is said that all land held by a person in excess of the ceiling area shall be deemed to be surplus land has only a limited application and cannot be stretched further. It cannot be contended that under this provision the date 26-1-1962 is to be taken as the date with reference to which the surplus land is to be determined, whether the holder of land who was alive on 26-1-1962 was thereafter living or dead. In the first place, sub-section (2) of Section 4 has no reference to the appointed day and also it does not make any provision to say that in spite of the death of the holder the determination of the surplus land will have reference to the appointed day. The deeming provision introduces a legal fiction that a position which otherwise would not obtain is deemed to obtain under those circumstances. (Para 16)

The introduction of this legal fiction is, therefore, only to this extent and it cannot be applied to mean that it applies with reference to property held on 26-1-1962 by a holder who dies subsequently but before the declaration is made. In the absence of any specific provision and looking to the purpose and intent of the Ceiling Act from the other provisions it does not appear that the surplus land was intended to be determined and declared as on the basis that the holder was alive on 26-1-1962 and continued to live on the date of the declaration. In Special Civil Appln. No. 1026 of 1966 V. R. Manohar and S. V. Natu, for Petitioners; P. G. Palshikar, Asst. Government Pleader, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 3.

In Special Civil Appln. No. 170 of 1968 S. V. Natu, for Petitioners, M. M. Qazi Asst. Government Pleader, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

PADHYE, J.: The facts in the two cases slightly differ, but that does not make any difference in the legal position to be considered in these two cases and hence both these special civil applications are disposed of by this common judgment.

2. In Special Civil Appln. No. 1026 of 1966 one Parwatabai, wife of Pundlikrao Gawande, owned 114 acres and 38 acres of land at various village in taluq Akot, District Akola. The ceiling area for dry crops land in this area is 78 acres. That was the land held by Parwatabai as on 4-8-1959 and she continued to hold the same till 26-1-1962. Parwatabai submitted the return as required by Section 12 of the Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act, 1961 (hereinafter called the Ceiling Act) on 26-7-1962. On this return enquiry was started by the Deputy Collector, Akot and during the pendency of this enquiry, the holder Parwatabai died on 3-9-1963. Before her death, however, she executed a will on 1-9-1963 under which the present petitioners Dadarao, sons of Kashiram and Janabai wife of Rambhau were made the legatees of this area. On the death of Parwatabai Janabai and Dadarao both contended that each of them held an area less than the ceiling area and no land which was originally held by Parwatabai was liable to be declared as surplus land. As regards Parwatabai the surplus land which could be delimited came to 38 acres and 4 gunthas in accordance with Section 21 of the Ceiling Act. The Deputy Collector rejected the contention of the petitioners and took the view that the devolution of the property on the petitioners by the will dated 1-9-1963 could not be taken into consideration and the surplus area will have to be determined on the basis that the original holder Parwatabai was still alive. On this view, the Deputy Collector delimited 38 acres 4 gunthas of land as detailed by him in his order dated 18th October 1965 in the last paragraph as surplus.

3. The petitioners challenged this order by way of appeal before the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal. The Revenue Tribunal by its order dated 16th September 1966 took the view that the ceiling area had to be determined for the persons who held the surplus land as on 26-1-1962 and the surplus land had to be determined in respect of that person. It was held that the will dated 1-9-1963 executed by Parwatabai will operate only with respect to the ceiling area held by her and subject to the delimitation of the surplus area under Section 21 of the Act. It was further observed that "If Parwatabai had been alive today the will dated 1-9-1963 executed by her would not have enabled her to escape the provisions of the Ceiling Act relating to loss of the surplus land to her and she would not have had any defence whatsoever to the delimitation of 38 acres and 4 gunthas of her land as surplus."

It was also observed that her death during the pendency of the proceedings under the Ceiling Act does not enable her legatees to claim the lands which Parwatabai herself would have lost as surplus land under Section 21 of the Act. Before the Revenue Tribunal, the petitioners had also urged that by reason of the death of Parwatabai during the enquiry proceedings, the proceedings for delimitation of the land abated and the proceedings which were started on the return of Parwatabai would not continue. The contention, it appears, was that after the death of Parwatabai only the legatees were obliged to file the returns in respect of their own property including the property they received under the will if such property held by them was in excess of the ceiling area. This contention was also negated by the Revenue Tribunal and the appeal was dismissed. These orders are challenged by the petitioners in this special civil application.

4. In Special Civil Application No. 170 of 1968, one Vasantarao Dajipant Kahate was the holder of about 460 acres and 20 gunthas of land on 4-8-1959 and continued to hold the same on 26-1-1962, the appointed day. He filed a return as required by Section 12 of the Ceiling Act on 20-7-1962, which was far in excess of the ceiling area. During the enquiry proceedings on this return, the original holder Vasantrao Kahate died intestate on 31-10-1966 leaving his widow and two married daughters as his heirs. Besides, there were other members in the family with whom we are not concerned at present. On the death of Vasantrao his heirs or legal representatives, namely, the present petitioners, were required to file the returns and they filed separate return of the property which each of them held including the property which they inherited from Vasantrao. The Assistant Collector and sub-Divisional Officer, it appears, under instructions of the Commissioner wanted to treat three returns as one joint return on behalf of the three petitioners jointly to which the petitioners did not submit. The petitioners submitted their contentions before the Assistant Collector contending that they could not be treated jointly as they had inherited separate shares from the deceased Vasantrao and the land which each of them got had to be treated separately for the purposes of the Ceiling Act. This contention was not accepted by the Assistant Collector. Taking into consideration the other members of the family, the Assistant Collector held that the land which could be retained would amount to 160 acres and the joint holders were ordered to file their retention statement under Section 16 of the Ceiling Act and it was further ordered that the remaining land should be declared as surplus. It may be mentioned that the petitioners had filed separate returns in pursuance of the order of the Assistant Collector dated 15-12-1966 which is in the following terms:

"The landholder Shri Vasantrao Kahate is dead. As instructions contained in Revenue and Forest Department letter No. ICH-2566-20787-N (Spl) dated 10-8-1966, now that the landholder is dead there can be no question of holding an enquiry under the Act for deciding the extent of surplus land. However, the lands held by him devolve on the successors and it has thus become a joint holding held by them. The joint holders will be liable to submit a return under Section 12. On receipt of such return fresh enquiry will be started. This case be filed."

Since the Assistant Collector was acting in pursuance of the instructions received from the Commissioner, that is, from the Government, the petitioners have directly come to this Court challenging the said order making the Commissioner and the State Government as parties to this petition.

5. It would thus be seen that the points arising in the two cases are the same and the fact that in one case the petitioners claim as legatees under a will from the deceased holder and in the other claims as heirs of the deceased holder, really makes no difference in the legal position.

6. The Ceiling Act has provided for fixing the ceiling acres for different areas or regions in the State and any person holding land in excess of the ceiling area fixed for any particular area is deemed to be a surplus holder and under the provisions of the Ceiling Act the land in excess of the ceiling area is delimited as surplus land and it is taken over by the State in which the title vests on possession of such surplus land being taken. If a person held land in excess of the ceiling area on 4-8-1959 and continued to hold the same on 26-1-1962, the appointed day, and further the enquiry was held and concluded during his lifetime and the possession of this surplus land was taken over by the Government, as envisaged by the Ceiling Act, no difficulty arises. It is only a matter of finding out the actual land which was held by the holder and after deducting the land upto the ceiling area from the land which the holder would retain with himself under the different provisions of Ceiling Act, the excess is to be declared as surplus area of which possession is to be taken by the Government. These two cases, however, are not cases of that type and the death of the holder during the enquiry proceedings changes the whole complexion. In order to appreciate the legal position, it would be necessary to take into consideration the object of the Ceiling Act and the various provisions thereof in order to find out whether the Ceiling Act seeks to deprive the legatees or the heirs of their land even if they do not hold land in excess of the ceiling area though the original holder hold surplus land. The object of the Ceiling Act is given in the preamble to the Act which reads as under:

"Whereas, for securing the distribution of agricultural land as best to subserve the common good, it is expedient in the public interest to impose a maximum limit (or ceiling) on the holding of agricultural land in the State of Maharashtra; to provide for the acquisition of land held in excess of the ceiling, and for the distribution thereof to landless and other persons; and for matters connected with the purposes aforesaid."

It is for this purpose that the Ceiling Act has been enacted which came into force on the 26th day of January 1962 which is also 'the appointed day' referred to in the Ceiling Act. The main purpose of the Ceiling Act, therefore, seems to be to distribute agricultural land amongst the landless and other persons to subserve the common good and for the purpose, to limit the extent of land to be held by a person and to take away the land in excess of the land which is allowed to be retained by the holder which is called a ceiling and the land in excess of the ceiling area is then to be distributed by the State to certain categories of persons according to priorities. The taking over of the surplus land is thus related to its distribution among the landless and other persons and among such landless persons could be also the heirs or legatees of the deceased holder, who held land on the appointed day and died during the enquiry proceedings.

7. It is contended by Mr. Natu who argued for the petitioners in both the special civil applications that the scheme of the Ceiling Act shows that the provisions regarding the determination of the surplus land as on 26-1-1962 referred only to a holder who was alive on 26-1-1962 and who filed a return under Section 12 or Section 13 of the Ceiling Act and was living on the day the enquiry concluded and the surplus land was declared by an order of the Collector in the enquiry proceedings, but the provisions of the Ceiling Act do not affect the persons who got the property either by inheritance or as legatees under a will from the holder who was alive on the appointed day, but died during the enquiry proceedings and before the declaration of surplus land was made. In order to understand the scheme of the Ceiling Act, it would be well to refer to a few provisions thereof and to see what the Ceiling Act intends and how the object of the Ceiling Act can be achieved or defeated. It will then have to be seen whether the contention raised on behalf of the petitioners in any way defeats the object of the Ceiling Act or in a way achieves it and whether the contention on behalf of the petitioners is well founded on the reading of the various provisions of the Ceiling Act.

8. Section 3 of the Ceiling Act reiterates the preamble of the Act given at the beginning. Section 4, sub-section (1) prohibits a person from holding land in excess of the ceiling area as determined in the manner provided by the Ceiling Act. Sub-section (2) of Section 4 provides that subject to the provisions of this Act, all land held by a person in excess of the ceiling area, shall be deemed to be surplus land, and shall be dealt with in the manner provided in the Ceiling Act for surplus land. How the surplus land is to be dealt with is given in Chapter VI of the Ceiling Act. By an explanation to Section 4 (1) it is provided that a person may hold exempted land to any extent. This, however, must be to the exclusion of any other land which is not exempted. This will be clear from the provisions of Section 7 which apply to a case where a person holds both exempted and other land. If a person holds both exempted and other land, then in determining the surplus land the exempted land is also taken into consideration along with the other land and the surplus is then determined.

8a. Coming then to Chapter III which deals with restriction on alienations and acquisitions of land and consequences of contraventions, reference will be made to Section 8 which provides :

"8. No person who, on or after the appointed day, holds land in excess of the ceiling area, shall on or after that day transfer or partition any land until the land in excess of the ceiling is determined under the Act.

Explanation : In this section "transfer" means transfer by act of parties (whether by sale, gift, mortgage with possession, exchange, lease or any other disposition) made inter vivos; and "partition" means any division of land by act of parties made inter vivos."

This provision puts a check on a surplus holder preventing him from defeating the object of the Ceiling Act by prohibiting him from transferring or effecting a partition of any land held by him on or after the appointed day until the land in excess of the ceiling is determined under the Ceiling Act. If such a provision had not been made, then a surplus holder would have divested himself of the excess property by transferring the same to various persons, with the sole object of defeating the provisions of the Ceiling Act so that no land of his could be taken as surplus land. If such a restriction had not been placed, then the object of the Ceiling Act could be defeated even by making nominal or bogus transfers and just with a view to avoid such result that this provision has been specifically made in the Ceiling Act. It has, however, to be noted that Section 8 deals only with the transfers inter vivos including a partition and has no reference whatsoever to any devolution of property on the death of a person either by inheritance or by a will. Section 9 then puts another restriction on the acquisition of land in excess of the ceiling area. It reads as under :

"9. No person shall, at any time on or after the appointed day, acquire by transfer or partition any land if he already has land in excess of the ceiling area, or land which together with any other land already held by him will exceed in the total the ceiling area." The words "transfer" and "partition" have been given the same meaning as in Section 8. The idea underlying is that after the appointed day no person shall hold any land in excess of the ceiling area under any circumstances and if a person comes to hold or comes into possession of any land in excess of the ceiling area after 26-1-62, that excess land will be taken over as surplus land leaving with the person only the ceiling area. This provision is thus meant to permit a holder to hold maximum land which is permissible to him under the ceiling Act and the rest of the land will be utilised for distribution among the needy persons.

8b. Section 10 provides for the consequences of certain transfers and acquisitions of land. It provides for contingency such as the holders owning land in excess of the ceiling area having come to know of the contemplated Act should not dispose of the excess land with a view to avoid or defeat the objects of the Ceiling Act. It refers to transfers made after the 4th day of August 1959 but before the appointed day. It provides that if any person transfers or partitions after the 4th day of August 1959 but before the appointed day any land in anticipation of, or in order to avoid or defeat, the objects of this Act, then, in calculating the ceiling area which that person is entitled to hold, the area so transferred or partitioned shall be taken into consideration, and land exceeding the ceiling area so calculated shall be deemed to be in excess of the ceiling area for that holding, notwithstanding that the land remaining with him may not in fact be in excess of the ceiling area. It also applies to lands transferred or partitioned in contravention of the provisions of Section 8. In cases of transfers made between these two dates, the burden is placed on the landholder to show that the transfers are not made in anticipation of, or in order to avoid or defeat, the objects of the Ceiling Act. Sub-sec. (2) of Section 10 then provides :

"If any land is possessed on or after the appointed day in excess of the ceiling area or if as a result of the acquisition (by testamentary disposition, or devolution on death or by operation of law including by, or in execution of a decree or order of a Court, tribunal or authority) of any land on or after that day, the total area of land held by any person exceeds the ceiling area, the land so in excess shall be surplus land."

Sub-section (3) of Section 10 is a penal provision which provides :

"Where any land is acquired in wilful contravention of the provisions of Section 9, or is obtained by collusive proceedings in any Court, then as a penalty therefor, the right, title and interest of that person in the land shall, subject to the provisions of Chapter IV, be forfeited, and shall be deemed to be transferred to, and shall vest without further assurance in the State Government."

This provision of Section 10, however, does not make the transfers or partitions invalid or void, but they are not recognised for the purpose of determining the ceiling area or the surplus land. Thus, what is restricted or prohibited in Chapter III is only the transfers including partition by act of parties made inter vivos and it has no reference whatsoever to any devolution of property either by way of inheritance or under a will.

9. Coming to Chapter IV which deals with surplus land, Section 12 thereof requires the surplus holders to submit their returns in the prescribed forms. It provides for four categories of persons who have to submit their returns and different periods are provided for these different categories of persons within which they have to submit their returns. Clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Section 12 categorises one class of persons who held land in excess of the ceiling area between the 4th August 1959 and 26th January 1962, the appointed day, that is, a person who held land in excess of the ceiling area after the 4th of August 1959, has to submit a return within six months from the appointed day. Clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 12 requires a person who on or after the appointed day acquires, holds or comes into possession of any land (including any exempted land) in excess of the ceiling area, has to submit a return within three months from the date of taking possession of any land in excess of the ceiling area. It is on the basis of these returns that a further enquiry is made in order to find out the surplus land with the holder in respect of which a declaration is to be made. We are not very much concerned in these cases with sub-section (2) of Sec. 12. If however a person falling in the categories mentioned in Section 12 fails to file a return under Section 12, though he was liable to file a return, then the Collector can call upon him to show cause why the penalty should not be imposed upon him and if the Collector finds that the person has without reasonable cause failed to submit the return within time or has submitted a return which he knew or had reason to believe to be false, then he may impose the penalty provided in Section 13 (1) and may require such person to submit a true and correct return complete in all particulars within a period of one month from the date of the order. If, even after such requisition the person fails to comply with the order within the time granted, then as a penalty for failure to furnish a return or a true and correct return complete in all particulars, the right, title and interest in the land held by him in excess of the ceiling area is to be forfeited to the State Government on which it will vest in the Government.

10. Thereafter an enquiry is to be held by the Collector in accordance with the provisions contained in Sections 14 to 20. The Collector has to make a declaration under Section 21 regarding the surplus land and take steps to take over possession of the surplus land. From the date on which the surplus land is taken possession of on the declaration being made, the said land shall be deemed to be acquired by the State Government for the purpose of the Ceiling Act and shall accordingly vest without further assurance and free from all encumbrances in the State Government. Such surplus land taken over by the State Government is then distributed as per provisions of Chapter VI of the Ceiling Act and further in respect of such surplus land compensation as provided in Chapter V of the Ceiling Act to be paid to the surplus holder is to be worked out.

11. Section 46 of the Ceiling Act empowers the State Government to make rules for carrying into effect the purposes of the Ceiling Act and sub-section (3) thereof provides that all rules made under this section shall be laid before each House of the State Legislature as soon as may be after they are made and shall be subject to such modifications as the State Legislature may make during the session in which they are so laid or the session immediately following and publish in the Official Gazette, so that if the requirements of sub-section (3) of Section 46 are complied with, the rules made by the State Government have the force of law and are to be treated as if they are part of the Ceiling Act itself. Under this rule-making power the State Government has framed rules, the validity of which has not been challenged, and under the rules several forms have also been prescribed which include the forms in which returns had to be filed and also the notice to be issued to the holders under sub-section (2) of Section 17, of the Ceiling Act. On the basis of the provisions of the Ceiling Act referred to above and the forms prescribed for filing of the returns, it is urged on behalf of the petitioners that throughout, the declaration of surplus land can be made with respect to a person who held land on the appointed day and continued to hold the land till the date of declaration under Sec. 21 of the Ceiling Act. Mr. Natu has also invited our attention to the different contemporary Acts by way of comparison to show that the Ceiling Act takes into consideration only the surplus land of a person who is alive on the date of the declaration and the heirs or legatees are not affected in any way unless the land obtained by them on succession along with their other land, if any, makes their land in excess of the ceiling area.

12. We shall now consider the effect of the various provisions of the Ceiling Act referred to above to ascertain therefrom the object or intention of the Legislature and to see how far the Ceiling Act affects the persons like the petitioners.

13. Reading the aforementioned provisions of the Ceiling Act, it appears to be the scheme of the Ceiling Act that a ceiling is to be determined with respect to "a person" which also includes a family and it creates a bar to a person holding land in excess of the ceiling area. With respect to a family the unit is taken as five members permitting it to hold land equal to one ceiling area. However, if the members of the family exceed five, then for each additional member an additional land of one-sixth of the ceiling area is permitted, so however that the total land held by a family however big will not exceed two ceiling areas. This ceiling area is, however, to be determined by a competent authority in accordance with the provisions of the law, whether such determination is for a person or a family and it is only after such determination that the surplus land is found out having regard to the ceiling fixed for a particular area and also having regard to the different kinds of lands which a person may hold. The surplus area is thus to be determined with respect to a person who is in existence at the date of determination. The provisions of Section 21 of the Ceiling Act will show that the Collector has to consider the matters which are given in Section 18 of the Ceiling Act and has also to take into consideration the matters given in Section 20 and it is only then that a declaration under Section 21 has to be made by the Collector. In making such a declaration the Collector has to find out the area of land which the person is entitled to hold as a ceiling area, the total area of land which is in excess of the ceiling area, the name of the person to whom possession of land is to be restored under Section 19, the area and particulars of such land, the area which is to be delimited as surplus land and the area which is to be forfeited to the State Government and it is only after such a declaration is made under sub-section (1) of Section 21 that a notification has to be made as to the land which is delimited as surplus land and also of the land to be forfeited to the State Government. After this is done, the Collector has to take possession of the land which is delimited as surplus land under sub-section (4) of Section 21 and it is only from the date on which the surplus land has been taken possession of, the surplus land is deemed to be acquired by the State Government for the purposes of the Ceiling Act and vest in the State Government. Till such vesting takes place, the holder of the land continues to be the owner of all the land he owned and possessed and is entitled to enjoy the same without any let or hindrance except that there are certain restrictions or prohibitions with respect to the transfer of any land by act of parties inter vivos. For example, a holder is precluded from transferring any land subsequent to 26-1-1962 and any such transfer will be at his peril while determining the surplus land. Similarly, from and after the date of the notification in pursuance of the declaration made under sub-section (1) of Section 21, no transfer such as sale, gift, mortgage, exchange, lease etc., can be made of the land which is delimited as surplus land and if any transfer is made in respect of the land which is delimited as a surplus land after the notification, then such transfer or disposition will be invalid and of no effect. It should also be noticed that the vesting is further postponed till the final decision of the appeal, if any is filed against the declaration or any part thereof, or the final decision of the State Government if it calls for the record or proceedings of the declaration under sub-section (2) of Section 45.

14. It will thus be seen that the holder of the land is not divested of the surplus land on 26-1-1962 but continues to be the owner of land till the final declaration is made by the Collector, or by the Revenue Tribunal, or the State Government, as the case may be and continues to be the owner and in possession and enjoyment of all his land till the date of vesting of the surplus land in the State Government. The said declaration has to be made on the basis of the return filed by "a person" which includes a family and that return has to be filed with respect to the land which he held on and after 4-8-1959 and continues to hold till 26-1-1962. With respect to such a return of "a person" the land to be retained by him and the land to be declared as surplus land is determined. If that person dies or ceases to be in existence after the return is filed, then the determination of the ceiling area to be retained by the holder cannot be with respect to that person because a dead person cannot hold or retain any property. There is no provision in the Ceiling Act for substitution of the legal representatives of the deceased holder who files a return or dies after 26-1-1962 so that the legal representatives would step into the shoes of the deceased holder. The vesting of the property cannot remain in abeyance and as such, as the holder dies before the vesting in the State Government takes place, the property which he held must pass to his heirs or if there is a "will" to his legatees and after such passing of the property the heirs or the legatees take the property in their own rights either as heirs or legatees and do not simply step into the shoes of the deceased holder. The Ceiling Act nowhere makes a provision that the ceiling is to be determined as on the state of affairs existing on 26-1-1962 even if the holder who was alive on 26-1-1962 dies after that date. In the absence of any such provision, it must be taken that the Ceiling Act contemplates "a person" who is alive not only on the date 26-1-1962, the appointed day, but at the time of the filing of the return and till the date of the declaration made by the Collector under Section 21 of the Ceiling Act. Contemplate a case, where a holder of property in excess of the ceiling area as on 26-1-1962 dies after that date but before the filing of the return. The property will naturally pass on such an event to his heirs or legatees. In such a case, the person who was alive on 26-1-1962 cannot naturally file a return and the return will have to be filed by the heirs or legatees who take the property. That return must necessarily be of the person who holds the property on that date and it is with respect to that person who files the return that the ceiling area and the surplus land have to be determined. There appears to be no obligation under any of the provisions of the Ceiling Act on the heirs or the legatees to file a return in respect of a person from whom they inherit. If there is no such obligation, then evidently there can be no return in respect of the property held by a deceased holder on 26-1-1962 and the only return that may be filed will be by a living person who can be called upon to file a return only in respect of the property which he holds which may include the property which he already owned on 26-1-1962 and which he inherited after 26-1-1962, but before the filing of the return and it is with respect only to such return and on this basis that a declaration can be made under Section 21. It is true that if a person liable to file a return does not file a return within the time prescribed and if the Collector considers that such a person is liable to file a return being in possession of land in excess of the ceiling area, the Collector can levy a penalty on such person and can call upon that person to file the return within the prescribed time and if he fails to file such a return, then he determines the ceiling area and the surplus land in the absence of the holder and the holder is further penalised by forfeiting the surplus land to the State Government, thus depriving the holder of the compensation which he would have normally got for the surplus land. But here again, Section 13 under which this action is taken postulates a living person because the person who was liable to file a return and does not file it as required by Section 12, because of his death in the meanwhile, cannot be proceeded against under Section 13 and the heirs or legatees of the deceased holder could not be penalised under Section 13 for non-filing of the return, nor can be called upon to show cause why penalty should not be imposed for the non-filing of the return by the deceased holder, nor can the penalty of forfeiture be levied against the heirs or the legatees for their failure to file the return since there is no duty or obligation on the heirs or the legatees to file any return in respect of the property held by the deceased holder.

15. The Legislature has made specific provisions which will be found in Sections 8 and 10 of the Ceiling Act inhibiting any person from transferring or partitioning only land on or after the appointed day until the land in excess of the ceiling is determined under the Ceiling Act. Even with respect to transfers between 4-8-1959 and the appointed day, 26-1-1962, a provision has been made throwing the burden on the holder to show that such transfers were not made in anticipation of, or in order to avoid or defeat, the objects of the Ceiling Act. However, these transfers relate only to transfers inter vivos made by act of parties. That means the Legislature did not want the holders of excess land to divest themselves of the excess land after the Ceiling Act came into force or in anticipation of the Ceiling Act coming into force in order to defeat the objects of the law, by voluntarily transferring their excess lands either by transfer or partition as that would prompt the holders to defeat the objects of the Ceiling Act by entering into nominal or fraudulent transactions or to benefit their relations or friends, who would not otherwise be entitled to the property and defeat the very purpose of the Ceiling Act namely distribution of the surplus land to the landless persons. If the Legislature wanted to extend this inhibition even to heirs or the legatees, it would have been very easy for the Legislature to include those contingencies also and it was open to the Legislature to specifically provide that the surplus land will be determined in relation to the property held by a person who was alive on 26-1-1962 and died subsequently before the declaration is made. In the absence of any such provision, it will be stretching the language of the Ceiling Act too far to include even such cases where the persons taking the property on the death of the holder have no hand in getting such property which comes to them because of the accident of their being the heirs or the legatees and in the latter case on account of the voluntary act of the testator to which the legatee is not a party.

16. It was contended on behalf of the State that the determination of the surplus land has to be made as on the appointed day on which the holder was living and the heirs or legatees will succeed only to the extent of the land which the holder would have been entitled to retain had he been alive on the date of determination and the surplus land must in any case vest in the State. Reliance is placed on the deeming provision of sub-section (2) of Sec. 4 in which it is said that all land held by a person in excess of the ceiling area shall be deemed to be surplus land and it is contended that under this provision the date 26-1-62 is to be taken as a date with reference to which the surplus land is to be determined, whether the holder of land on 26-1-1962 was thereafter living or dead. In the first place, sub-section (2) of Section 4 has no reference to the appointed day and also it does not make any provision to say that in spite of the death of the holder the determination of the surplus land will have reference to the appointed day. The deeming provision introduces a legal fiction that a position which otherwise would not obtain is deemed to obtain under those circumstances; see Kamaraja Nadar v. Kunju Thevar, AIR 1958 SC 687 and Additional Income-tax Officer v. E. Alfred, AIR 1962 SC 663, where the effect of such a legal fiction is stated thus :

"When a thing is to be deemed to be something else it is to be treated as if it is that thing, though in fact it is not."

However, the legal fiction has to be applied only for the purpose for which it is intended and cannot be carried further than that; construing this deeming provision in subsection (2) of Section 4, it has only a limited application. The deeming provision refers only to land which is under the Ceiling Act deemed to be surplus land. But for the Ceiling Act, there was no bar to a person holding any amount of land and no land with him could be said to be surplus land. By the Ceiling Act a bar is put on a person holding land in excess of the ceiling area in any particular area and the remaining land, though it is not in fact surplus with the holder, is deemed and declared to be surplus land in the hands of the holder for the purposes of the Ceiling Act so that that surplus land can be taken away by the Government and distributed to the landless persons. The introduction of this legal fiction is, therefore, only to this extent and it cannot be applied to mean that it applies with reference to property held on 26-1-1962 by a holder who dies subsequently but before the declaration is made. Section 4 (2) refers to a person who must be living at the date of the determination of the surplus land because the surplus land can only be determined after the enquiry contemplated by Sections 18 to 20 after which a declaration is to be made under Section 21. If the intention of the Ceiling Act was to treat the land in excess of the ceiling area as surplus as on 26-1-1962 irrespective of the existence or non-existence of the person after 26-1-1962, then suitable provisions could have been made requiring the heirs or the legatees to file the return in respect of the property held by the deceased holder as on 26-1-1962 and provision could also have been made for determining the surplus land on the basis of such return, deeming that person to be alive even at the date of the declaration though he is dead. In the absence of any such provision and looking to the purpose and intent of the Ceiling Act from the other provisions to which we have already referred, it does not appear to us that the surplus land was intended to be determined and declared as on the basis that the holder was alive on 26-1-1962 and continued to live on the date of the declaration.

17. The provisions of the Ceiling Act may be contrasted with the provisions of other Acts by which there has been expropriation of land. We may refer in this connection to the Madhya Pradesh Abolition of Proprietary Rights (Estates, Mahals, Alienated Lands) Act, 1950 (No. 1 of 1951) by which the lands and other things which were previously held by the erstwhile proprietors were expropriated and vested in the State. It may be seen that in this Act there is no reference to "a person" but it deals only with properties and certain kinds of properties which the proprietors held which were deemed to vest in the State from a particular date and the proprietors were to cease to hold those properties from the specified date. Reference may be made to Section 3 of that Act which provides :

"3 (1). Save as otherwise provided in this Act, on and from a date to be specified by a notification by the State Government in this behalf, all proprietary rights in an estate, mahal, alienated village or alienated land, as the case may be, in the area specified in the notification, vesting in a proprietor of such an estate, mahal, alienated village, alienated land, or in a person having interest in such proprietary right through the proprietor, shall pass from such proprietor or such other person to and vest in the State for the purposes of the State free of all encumbrances." By notifications, dates from which the property was to vest in the State were notified and Section 4 of the said Act gives the consequences of such vesting. Thus, by this Act a clear provision has been made that all the properties which are of the categories mentioned in Section 4 (1) and the proprietary rights vest in the State from the specified date and all rights, title and interest vesting in the proprietor or any person having interest in such proprietary right through the proprietor shall cease from that date. It has no reference to the person at all and nothing is to be determined for the purpose of vesting the property in the State. Vesting takes place with immediate effect from the specified date unlike the vesting under the Ceiling Act which can only take place after the declaration is made, the notification is issued and the possession of the property is taken by the State. The vesting under the Ceiling Act takes effect only after certain stages have been gone into and after making an enquiry into the several matters upon which only the ceiling area and the surplus land can be determined. If no restrictions were placed as in Sections 8 and 10 of the Ceiling Act, then the property which would vest even in respect of a person living on 26-1-1962 would be that which would be left as surplus at the date of the declaration and would have no reference to the date 26-1-1962. It is only because of the restrictions put by Sections 8 and 10 of the Ceiling Act that the property of the holder who continues to live till the date of declaration has to be taken for the purposes of determination of the ceiling area and the surplus land as on 26-1-1962. It will thus be seen that 26-1-1962 cannot be taken to be the date for determining the surplus area which vests in the heirs or the legatees after 26-1-1962, but before any declaration could be made.

18. Reference may be made to some provisions of the Estate Duty Act, 1953. Section 5 of the said Act is the charging section which provides for the levy of estate duty on the death of a person leaving property. The property as on the death of that person is the subject matter of the charge and the provision has been made specifically in Section 53 of the Act for the liability of the legal representatives and other persons to whom such property passes. But for this provision, the legal representatives would not perhaps have been liable for payment of the estate duty on the property left by the deceased. A similar provision has been made in the Income-Tax Act, 1922 after the decision of this Court in Commr. of Income-Tax v. Ellis C. Reid, AIR 1931 Bom 333. The facts of this case were that a notice was issued to an assessee to make a return for income-tax. After the receipt of notice the assessee had 30 days' time in which to comply with the notice. After the expiration of the period of 30 days but before any return could be filed, the assessee died. Question was whether the assessment could be continued with respect to the estate in the hands of his legal representatives and whether the income-tax payable by the deceased assessee could be determined after his death and the income-tax could be recovered from the estate of the deceased in the hands of the legal representatives? In construing the provisions of the Income-tax Act, the Division Bench observed that having regard to the definition of "assessee" as being a person who is liable to pay income-tax, the word is not appropriate to a dead man, so that if an assessment is to be made on a dead man, as was done here, under Section 23 (4), some violence must be done to the language of the section. We may refer to the following pertinent observations made by Beaumont C. J. in the judgment, at p. 335, column 2:

"these are, I think, the only material provisions of the Act. It is to be noticed that there is throughout the Act no reference to the decease of a person on whom the tax has been originally charged, and it is very difficult to suppose the omission to have been unintentional. It must have been present to the mind of the legislature that whatever privileges the payment of income-tax may confer, the privilege of immortality is not amongst them. Every person liable to pay tax must necessarily die and in practically every case, before the last instalment has been collected, and the legislature has not chosen to make any provisions expressly dealing with assessment of, or recovering payment from, the estate of a deceased person. In order that the Government may succeed and assessment made in this case may be held legal I think, one must do a certain amount of violence to the language of Section 23 (4); I should say a considerable amount of violence to the language of Section 27, or else hold that the privilege conferred on a living person assessed under Section 23 (4) of getting the assessment set aside if not to be enjoyed by the estate of a deceased person distinction for which I can see no logical reason."

Later it was further observed:

"In my judgment, in construing a taxing Act the Court is not justified in straining the language in order to hold a subject liable to tax. If the legislature intends to assess the estate of a deceased person to tax charged on the deceased in his life-time, the legislature must provide proper machinery and not leave it to the Court to endeavour to extract the appropriate machinery out of the very unsuitable language of the statute. We are not concerned with the case which may arise on the death of a person after assessment but before payment."

It is after this judgment that a specific provision came to be made in the Income-tax Act by adding Section 24B by which assessment of the year in which an assessee died could be made even after the death of the assessee and the property of the deceased in the hands of the legal representatives could be made liable for the assessment. This was because by Section 24B legal personality of a deceased assessee is extended for the duration of the entire previous year in the course of which he died and therefore the income received by him before his death and that received by his heirs and legal representatives after his death but in that previous year becomes assessable to income-tax is the relevant assessment year. While dealing with these provisions, the Supreme Court in Commr. of Income-tax v. Amarchand, AIR 1963 SC 1448, observed:

"The section was enacted by the Legislature to bring to tax, after his death, income received during his lifetime, and fill up the lacuna which was pointed out by the High Court in 5 ITC 100 = AIR 1931 Bom 333." It was further observed in paragraph 7 of the judgment:

"By Section 24B the legal representatives have, by fiction of law, become assessee as provided in that section but that fiction cannot be extended beyond the object for which it was enacted. As was observed by this Court in Bengal Immunity Co. Ltd. v. The State of Bihar, 1955-2 SCR 603 at p. 646 = AIR 1955 SC 661 at p. 680, legal fictions are only for a definite purpose and they are limited to the purpose for which they are created and should not be extended beyond that legitimate field. In the present case the fiction is limited to the cases provided in the three sub-sections of Section 24B and cannot be extended further than the liability for the income received in the previous year."

19. It will thus be found that neither there is any specific provision for a contingency, such as it occurs in the present case namely, on the death of a holder subsequent to 26-1-1962 but before making of a declaration, nor is there any legal fiction created by which the property of the holder as on 26-1-1962 has to be taken into consideration for determining the surplus area even though that person dies after 26-1-1962 but before either filing the return or before making of the declaration, and the legal fiction, as we have said above, extends only to declare certain land as surplus which otherwise could not be said to be surplus with the holder. The position, therefore, that emerges is that where a holder of property dies after 26-1-1962 and before any declaration is made by the Collector under Sec. 21 of the Ceiling Act, the heirs of the legatees are under an obligation to file a return in respect of the property which they may already hold as on 26-1-1962 and which they may get on the death of the deceased either by succession or under a will if these together are in excess of the ceiling area and it is only with respect to such property that the surplus has to be found. In such cases, the surplus cannot be found with respect to the property which the deceased holder held on 26-1-1962 and would have held on the date of the declaration had he been alive on that date.

20. We are thus unable to agree with the contentions raised by the learned counsel for the State and the view taken by the Revenue Authorities.

21. The orders of the Deputy Collector and the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal (in Special Civil Application No. 1026/66) and of the Assistant Collector (in Special Civil Application No. 170/68) are quashed and set aside. The respective cases are sent to the Deputy Collector and the Assistant Collector who will deal with these cases in accordance with law and proceed on the basis that the heirs or the legatees are the persons in respect of whom the ceiling area is to be determined and the surplus land declared. The returns which can be called from the heirs and legatees will be their individual returns and not joint returns.

22. In the result, both the petitions succeed and are allowed with costs.

Petitions allowed.

(NAGPUR BENCH)

PADHYE AND CHANDURKAR, JJ.

Ramchand Maroti Mandwale, Petitioner v. Malkapur Municipal Council, Malkapur and another, Respondents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 55 of 1967, D/- 19-2-1969.

(A) Constitution of India, Arts. 246, 265, Sch. 7 List 2, Entries 11, 49 — Maharashtra Education (Cess) Act (27 of 1962), Pre — Word "education" — Levying and collecting cess for purpose of promoting education will be covered by term "education" — Incidence of this tax falls on lands and buildings — State Legislature is competent to impose this tax under Entry 49, even assuming tax is not covered by Entry 11 — (Words and Phrases — "Education").

For levying and collecting any tax a law has to be made and in view of Art. 265 of Constitution that law must be made by a Legislature which has competence to make that law. The State Legislature has made Maharashtra Education (Cess) Act (27 of 1962) for the purpose of levying and collecting the education cess and the authority to make such a law is to be found in List II or List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. Entry No. 11 in the List II relates to education and the purpose of levying the education cess under the Maharashtra Act is for promoting the education in the State of Maharashtra and it is for this purpose that the impugned Act has been made. Giving a wide amplitude to the word "education" levying and collecting of the cess for the purpose of promoting the education would also be covered by the term "education". If the State is to impart education, it must have funds for the purpose without which it would not be possible for the State to carry on that obligation. Hence whatever is necessary for the purpose of carrying out the main object, that is, of education, would be within the competence of the State Legislature and raising of funds being essential for the purpose of imparting education, the entry No. 11 in the List II would also take in the said subject namely, levying and collecting of a cess or tax for the purpose of augmenting the funds. (Para 6)

Assuming that the subject of this tax is not covered by entry No. 11, it can still be brought under Entry No. 49. (Para 6)

It may be that some persons might be deriving income by letting their houses, but the levy is not only on such persons, but also on persons, who occupy their own houses and do not derive any rent from them. This is really not a tax on the income which a person derives as rent, but for the occupation of the lands or buildings, and the incident of taxation falls on all persons, whether the person is an owner or a tenant occupying the land or a building. This tax would, therefore, wholly fall within Entry No. 49 of List II of the Seventh Schedule. (Para 7)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 45 — Maharashtra Education (Cess) Act (27 of 1962), Pre — State can impose tax on citizens for meeting expenses of education—Art. 45 is no bar.

Article 45 only directs the imparting of free education to the children, but does not prohibit collection of taxes for that purpose to meet the expenses of such education from other sources and further a tax on lands and buildings or a tax on professions, trades, callings and employments would be other sources for meeting the expenses of free education. If the State is enjoined to provide for free education for all children, then it must necessarily have funds for carrying out that purpose and it is no answer to say that without levying any further tax, the education must be provided out of the revenues from the consolidated fund. Thus the State can impose tax on citizens for meeting expenses of education. Article 45 is no bar. (Para 8)

(C) Maharashtra Education (Cess) Act (27 of 1962), Pre, Ss. 3, 4 — Imposition under Act is tax on lands and buildings — Tax is authorised by Entry No. 49 of List 2 of Sch. 7 of Constitution — Fact that tax has no relation to services rendered is immaterial. (Constitution of India, Arts. 246, 265, Sch. 7 List 2, Entry 49).

The imposition described as "education cess" under Mah. Act 27 of 1962 is a tax on lands and buildings under the Municipalities Act. The property tax has also no relation to the services rendered, but is a tax on the property itself, which is authorised by entry No. 49 in List II and the impugned Act is not ultra vires on that account. (Para 9)

It is true that the education tax is levied on a percentage basis on the annual letting value of the lands and buildings, but that is a mode of determining the quantum of tax imposed on the person who owns lands and buildings. None-the-less, it is a tax on lands and buildings and not on the income.

The obligation to give free education is cast on the State by the directive principles and therefore, it is the State which has to meet the expenses for providing free education. The State has got the power to impose tax on lands and buildings and that power cannot be taken away because part out of it has been given to the local bodies. The State is not divested of its power to impose tax on lands and buildings because the State has also authorised the Municipalities to levy some taxes on lands and buildings. That power is for all the time, preserved to the State and the State is empowered to make this law.

(Para 10)

The Maharashtra Education (Cess) Act provides for levy of certain percentage on the annual letting value of the lands and buildings which annual letting value is already determined by the municipalities in respect of each land and house for the purpose of levying and collecting the municipal taxes, such as conservancy, water rate, the property tax etc. It was not, therefore, necessary to evolve an independent method for the purpose of determining the quantum of the assessment to be imposed on lands and buildings afresh for the purpose of the education cess. Under the Municipalities Act, the machinery is provided for dealing with the objections which might be raised by the tax-payers to the valuation of the lands and buildings and for the determination of the annual letting value of the lands and buildings. That opportunity having been provided, it is not necessary to provide further opportunity by this Act for raising objections to the annual letting value.

(D) Constitution of India, Art. 276(2), Sch. 7 List 2, Entry 49 — Maharashtra Education (Cess) Act (27 of 1962), Ss. 3, 4 — Education tax covered by Entry 49 — There is no limit fixed in so far as taxes falling under Entry 49 are concerned—Hence, education tax cannot be limited to Rs. 250 — Art. 276(2) has no application.

B. R. Mandlekar, for Petitioner; C. S. Dhar-madhikari, Asst. Govt. Pleader for Respondent No. 2 and Advocate General.

PADHYE J.: By this petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution, the petitioner seeks to challenge the demand notice dated 21st January 1967 as being illegal and prays for a writ of prohibition to the respondents from making the recovery of the education tax on the basis of the said demand notice dated 21st January 1967. The petitioner also seeks a direction that the respondent No. 2, the State of Maharashtra, be ordered to restore and repay the amount of Rs. 775.50 to the petitioner which has been collected by the respondent No. 1 for respondent No. 2 towards the education tax for the period from 1962-63 to 1964-65. The petitioner further wants a prohibition against the respondents prohibiting them from further recovering any amount under the Maharashtra Education (Cess) Act, 1962 and the Rules thereunder. A relief is also claimed for a declaration that the Maharashtra Education (Cess) Act 1962 be declared as ultra vires of the Constitution.

2. The petitioner is a resident of Malkapur, taluq Malkapur, District Buldana and owns several lands and buildings in the town of Malkapur. Most of these buildings are let out to tenants and the petitioner gets rent for those buildings. Besides, the petitioner is also a cultivator and carries on business of moneylending. The petitioner has set out in paragraph 1 of his petition the several houses in different wards of the town of Malkapur. Education cess is being demanded by the Malkapur Municipal Council from the petitioner since October 1962 at the rate of two per cent of the annual letting value of lands and buildings owned by the petitioner within the limits of the Malkapur Municipal Council. By a notice dated 16-2-1965 an amount of Rs. 775.00 was demanded by the Municipal Council towards the education cess for the period 1962-63 to 1964-65 along with other municipal taxes. The petitioner protested against the said demand contending that it was illegal and ultra vires and requested the Municipal Council to withdraw the demand of education tax. The petitioner, however, was further served with other demand bills dated 2-12-1966 for Rs. 190 and Rs. 174 for the years 1965-66 and 1966-67 respectively on account of the education tax and the petitioner was further pressed to pay the education tax for the period 1962-63 to 1964-65. In order to avoid any coercive process, the petitioner is alleged to have paid under protest on 3-12-1966 an amount of Rs. 775.50 towards the education cess for the years 1962-63 to 1964-65. The petitioner again received another demand bill on 19th December 1966 for Rs. 82 towards the education tax for the period 1965-66 and 1966-67. The representation by the petitioner to the Chief Officer of the Municipal Council was rejected on or about 5th January 1967. The petitioner again received another demand bill dated 21st of January 1967 for Rs. 364.50 towards the education tax with a threat that in case of failure to pay the amount, the amount would be recovered by issuing a warrant under the provisions of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965. The petitioner has given a schedule in paragraph 7 of his petition showing the amount of education cess or tax paid by him or demanded of him during each of the years 1962-63 to 1966-67. The education cess demanded for 1962-63 for the second half was Rs. 153.50, for 1963-64 was Rs. 307, for 1964-65 Rs. 295, for 1965-66 Rs. 223 and for 1966-67 it was Rs. 223. In view of the demand made by the Municipal Council for the unpaid education cess, coupled with the threat by the Municipal Council to recover the amount by coercive process, the petitioner is led to file this writ petition for the reliefs claimed by him as stated above.

3. The petitioner's contentions are: (1) The Maharashtra Education (Cess) Act, 1962, Act No. XXVII of 1962, is ultra vires the powers of the State Legislature of Maharashtra because the State List prescribed under the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution of India does not empower the State to impose education tax; (2) The imposition of education tax by the State of Maharashtra offends the directive principles laid down under Article 45 of the Constitution of India. It was urged that the Constitution directs that education should be free and this implies that no direct impost could be levied by the State and the expenditure has necessarily to be met from the general revenue raised by the State. As a part of the same contention, it has been urged that it is the duty of the respondent No. 1 under the Constitution to impart education and that the direct taxes could not be imposed for carrying out the said duty when the general revenue was provided for meeting the same. (3) The imposition of education tax exempting lands and buildings having annual letting value less than Rs. 75 and without any maximum per annum and in direct proportion to the annual letting value of the lands and buildings irrespective of any services rendered or not to the assessee is ultra vires of the Constitution of India. It was stated that the impost was strictly in the nature of tax and not fee. (4) The education tax is a tax on houses and lands in direct relation to the annual letting value of the same and such levy being exclusively reserved for the public authorities or local bodies for their purposes, the State had no jurisdiction for the same. These are, in substance, the contentions which are advanced on behalf of the petitioner. It is also urged that the Act does not provide for giving any opportunity at any stage to the assessee to raise objections to the assessment or to dispose of any such objection, if raised, and therefore, the Act offends against the accepted principles of natural justice and the assessment lists prepared have no legal force so far as the education cess is concerned, as there are no guiding principles prescribed under the Act for the levy of the assessment of these taxes.

4. The Maharashtra Education (Cess) Act, 1962, Act No. 27 of 1962, has been enacted by the State Legislature and was published on or about the 13th August 1962. This Act has been made, as will appear from the preamble, for providing for the creation of a fund for the promotion of education in the State of Maharashtra, and for matters connected with the purposes aforesaid. Section 3 of the Act provides that for the purpose of providing for the cost of promoting education in the State of Maharashtra there shall be levied and collected in the manner hereinafter provided, the taxes in the next succeeding section described as the "Education Cess". The levy and collection was to be made with effect from the 1st of October 1962 and the levy was made on the basis of two per cent of the annual letting value of lands and buildings. Section 4 mentions this levy to be a tax on lands and buildings. Section 5 (1) provides that where more than one land or building in a municipal area is owned by the same person, the tax on lands and buildings shall be assessed on the annual letting value of all such lands and buildings. Section 6 provides that the proceeds of the Education Cess and penalties (not being a fine) recovered under this Act, shall first be credited to the Consolidated Fund of the State; and after deducting the expenses of collection and recovery shall, under appropriation duly made by law in this behalf, entered in, and transferred to, a separate fund called the State Education Cess Fund and the amount transferred to the State Education Cess Fund shall be charged on the Consolidated Fund of the State and further, the amount in the Fund shall be expended, in such a manner and under such conditions as may be prescribed, for the purposes mentioned in Section 3, that is, for promoting the education in the State of Maharashtra. Section 9 (1) (b) authorises the municipality to collect the tax, and sub-section (2) (b) provides the machinery for collecting the tax in the same manner in which the property tax is collected in that area under the relevant municipal law, or where no property tax is levied by the municipality, the tax is to be collected in such manner as may be prescribed. Sub-section (3) of Section 9 further authorises the appropriate municipal authority appointed to collect the property tax on behalf of such municipality to collect the education tax and the penalty. After making the collection, the municipality is to be given such rebate as may be prescribed to compensate the cost of the collection of the tax. From this latter provision, it would appear that the tax is levied by the State Government for augmenting its funds for the purpose of education and the municipality is only a Collecting Agent for the State and after Collection the account has to be credited to the State fund.

5. The main contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner is that the impugned Act is ultra vires of the State legislature as no entry in the State List empowers the State Legislature to make such a law. It is contended that the subject with respect to the levy of the education cess or tax does not fall under any of the entries in the List II or List III of the Seventh Schedule and as such, the State Legislature has no competence to make such a law. It is further contended that the cess contemplated is in fact a tax and as such, it is only the Union that can make such a law and not the State. It is also argued that this cess is in fact a tax on income which is also within the competence of the Union Legislature and the State Legislature has no power to make such a law. It is true that in the impugned Act itself, the Legislature has described this levy as a tax as will appear from the various provisions in the said Act. The cess is in fact a tax and that is so held by the Supreme Court in Shinde Brothers v. Deputy Commr., Raichur, AIR 1967 SC 1512 and Ahmedabad Manufacturing and Calico Printing Co. Ltd. v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1967 SC 1916. Under List II of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution, the State Legislature is empowered to make laws for the levy of taxes under several entries, such as Entries Nos. 46, 49, 50, 52 to 58 and 60 to 62. Entry No. 11 in List II deals with the subject of education including Universities subject to the provisions of Entries 63, 64, 65 and 66 of List I and Entry 25 of List III. Entry No. 49 provides for taxes on lands and buildings and Entry No. 60 relates to taxes on professions, trades, callings and employments. As has been observed by the Supreme Court in Jagannath Baksh Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1962 SC 1563:

"It is an elementary cardinal rule of interpretation that the words used in the Constitution which confer legislative power must receive the most liberal construction and if they are words of wide amplitude, they must be interpreted so as to give effect to that amplitude. It would be out of place to put a narrow or restricted construction on words of wide amplitude in a Constitution. A general word used in the entry must be construed to extend to all ancillary or subsidiary matters which can fairly and reasonably be held to be included in it."

6. Article 265 of the Constitution provides that no tax shall be levied or collected except by authority of law. Therefore, for levying and collecting any tax a law has to be made and that law must be made by a Legislature which has competence to make that law. The State Legislature has made this law for the purpose of levying and collecting the education cess and the authority to make such a law is to be found in List II or List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. Entry No. 11 in the List II relates to education and the purpose of levying the education cess under the Maharashtra Act is for promoting the education in the State of Maharashtra and it is for this purpose that the impugned Act has been made. Giving a wide amplitude to the word "education" as has been observed by the Supreme Court in the case cited supra, levying and collecting of the cess for the purpose of promoting the education would also be covered by the term "education". If the State is to impart education, it must have funds for the purpose without which it would not be possible for the State to carry on that obligation. Hence whatever is necessary for the purpose of carrying out the main object, that is, of education, would be within the competence of the State Legislature and raising of funds being essential for the purpose of imparting education, the Entry No. 11 in the List II would also take in the said subject, namely, levying and collecting of a cess or tax for the purpose of augmenting the funds. It may be stated, and has been so said, on behalf of the petitioner that the matter of tax would not be covered in Entry No. 11 because in the same List wherever power has been given to impose taxes, it has been so specifically stated in the different entries, for example, Entry No. 46 and onwards in List II, and hence Entry No. 11 could not empower the State Legislature to impose any cess or tax though for the purpose of education. Assuming, however, that the subject of this tax is not covered by Entry No. 11, it can still be brought under Entry No. 49. Entry No. 49 relates to taxes on lands and buildings. The impugned Act in effect levies this tax as a tax on lands and buildings, as would be seen from Section 4 of the Act. This would be found repeated in several provisions of the said Act. This is, therefore, a tax on the lands and buildings just as the municipalities have been authorised to levy and collect conservancy tax, water rate, lighting tax, property tax and other taxes. Though the purpose of this levy is for the promotion of education, the incidence of this tax falls on lands and buildings and is thus a tax on lands and buildings which the State Legislature is competent to impose under Entry No. 49. It is an addition to an existing tax levied by the municipalities under the Maharashtra Municipalities Act or the earlier Municipal Acts prevalent within the different regions of the State. Being a tax on lands and buildings, the State Legislature is competent to make a law in that respect and it cannot be said that the impugned Act is beyond the competence of the State Legislature.

7. It was urged that in cases where a person derives a rental income from his house property, the incident of this tax would fall on that rental income which is an income of the owner and this tax on such income would amount to an Income-tax which is wholly within the competence of the Union Legislature. It may be that some persons might be deriving income by letting their houses, but the levy is not only on such persons, but also on persons, who occupy their own houses and do not derive any rent from them. Besides, the Act provides that in respect of the education cess which the owner might be required to pay in respect of the house in occupation of the tenants the owner is entitled to charge the said increase on the tenants and thus, it would appear that this is really not a tax on the income which a person derives as rent, but for the occupation of the lands or buildings and the incident of taxation falls on all persons, whether the person is an owner or a tenant occupying the land or a building. This tax would, therefore, wholly fall within Entry No. 49 of List II of the Seventh Schedule.

8. The next contention that was raised was that Article 45 of the Constitution of India, which is in Chapter of Directive Principles of State Policy in Part IV of the Constitution, places a duty on the State to endeavour to provide for free and compulsory education for all children until they complete the age of fourteen years. It is urged that it being the duty of the State to impart free education to all children, it cannot impose any taxes on the citizens for meeting the expenses of such education. Mr. Mandlekar contended that the cost of education to the children must be met by the State out of the consolidated fund which it collects from the various sources and no tax under the head "Education" could be levied and collected by the State. It is true that the directive principle embodied in Article 45 provides for free education of children, and that is the endeavour that is being made by the State in that direction. The State has provided for free education of children upto the age of 14 years and no fees are recovered from such students. Article 45 only directs the imparting of free education to the children, but does not prohibit collection of taxes for that purpose to meet the expenses of such education from other sources and further a tax on lands and buildings or a tax on professions, trades, callings and employments would be other sources for meeting the expenses of free education. If the State is enjoined to provide for free education for all children, then it must necessarily have funds for carrying out that purpose and it is no answer to say that without levying any further tax, the education must be provided out of the revenues from the consolidated fund. It has to be seen that this is not the only obligation on the State, but the consolidated fund is required for other obligations which the State has to discharge. The contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner, therefore, on this point cannot be accepted.

9. As regards the third contention that the imposition is in direct proportion to the annual letting value of the lands and buildings irrespective of any services rendered or not to the assessee and hence the imposition is ultra vires, the same reasoning will apply as on the first point. The new imposition is a tax on lands and buildings just as a property tax is imposed on lands and buildings under the Municipalities Act. The property tax has also no relation to the services rendered, but is a tax on the property itself, which is authorised by Entry No. 49 in List II and the impugned Act cannot be held ultra vires on that account, as contended on behalf of the petitioner.

10. The next contention is also similar to the one already dealt with. It is true that the education tax is levied on a percentage basis on the annual letting value of the lands and buildings, but that is a mode of determining the quantum of tax imposed on the person who owns lands and buildings. None-the-less, it is a tax on lands and buildings and not on the income, as contended by the petitioner or exclusively reserved for local bodies. For the purposes of carrying out the municipal administration, the State Legislature has passed the Maharashtra Municipalities Act and in order to meet the needs of the administration has made provision authorising the Municipal Councils or Municipal Committees to raise the revenue and conservancy, water rate, property tax etc., are some of the taxes which the Municipalities are authorised to levy for their purposes. The obligation to give free education is cast on the State by the directive principles and therefore, it is the State which has to meet the expenses for providing free education. The State has got the power to impose tax on lands and buildings and that power cannot be taken away because part out of it has been given to the local bodies. The State is not divested of its power to impose tax on lands and buildings because the State has also authorised the municipalities to levy some taxes on lands and buildings. That power is, for all the time, preserved to the State and the State is empowered to make this law which is impugned in this case.

11. The next ground that is urged was that there is no machinery provided for the manner of levying or imposing the taxes. There is no opportunity afforded to the taxpayers to raise any objections, nor any machinery provided to hear and decide those objections to the levy of the tax. It was also contended that there is no machinery for the determination of the tax by providing any method in the Act itself. It has to be noticed that this Act provides for levy of certain percentage on the annual letting value of the lands and buildings which annual letting value is already determined by the municipalities in respect of each land and house for the purposes of levying and collecting the municipal taxes such as conservancy, water rate, the property tax etc. It was not, therefore, necessary to evolve an independent method for the purpose of determining the quantum of the assessment to be imposed on lands and buildings afresh for the purpose of the education cess. Under the Municipalities Act, the machinery is provided for dealing with the objections which might be raised by the tax-payers to the valuation of the lands and buildings and for the determination of the annual letting value of the lands and buildings. That opportunity having been provided, it is not necessary to provide further opportunity by this Act for raising objections to the annual letting value.

12. A similar objection was raised in a case arising in the State of Gujarat in AIR 1967 SC 1916 which was also a case under the Gujarat Education Cess Act and has finally been decided by the Supreme Court. It was urged there that the Education Cess Act was bad because it was not self-contained in the matter of assessment. It did not provide its own procedure of assessment and did not give the tax-payers an opportunity for putting forward their objections by way of representation, appeal or otherwise before the tax was finally fixed and hence offended the principles of natural justice. While dealing with the contention, the Supreme Court held:

"The cess is nothing more than an addition to existing taxes. As it is a percentage of another tax, the determination of the cess is not by an independent assessment. It is an arithmetical calculation based on the result of assessment under other Act or Acts. Those Acts allow the raising of objections and provide for appeals. It is only the result of assessment after scrutiny, objection and appeals which forms the basis for the application of a percentage. There is no need for further scrutiny, objection or appeals. Nor is the Cess Act bad because it is not self-contained in the matter of assessment. In all cases of imposition of cesses for special administrative purposes (such as health cess, road cess, education cess, etc.) this method is followed. Being an addition to another tax this is the only method possible. The legislation on the subject of the imposition, levy and collection of a cess is made complete by incorporation of and reference to another piece of legislation.

"This practice is neither ineffective nor unconstitutional and cannot be said to be bad."

It will thus be seen that this contention of the petitioner also had no force.

13. Lastly, it was urged that the education tax in excess of Rs. 250 could not be recovered from the petitioner in any one year as it would offend the provisions of Article 276 of the Constitution. Article 276 (2) provides that the total amount payable in respect of any one person to the State or to any one municipality, district board, local board or other local authority in the State by way of taxes on professions, trades, callings and employments shall not exceed two hundred and fifty rupees per annum. The contention of the petitioner is that the letting of houses by the petitioner and deriving income from them is a profession or a calling of the petitioner and hence even if each house which he owns were to be assessed to tax separately, the total amount of tax could not exceed Rs. 250 in one year. This would be so if the said Act would fall wholly under Entry 60 of List II of the Seventh Schedule and would not be covered by any other entry. We have already held that this subject is wholly covered by Entry No. 49 relating to tax on lands and buildings and the Supreme Court has also held in the Gujarat case referred to above that it is an addition to the existing tax on lands and buildings and hence it would fall under Entry No. 49. There is no limit fixed so far as taxes falling under Entry No. 49 are concerned and the tax payable by the petitioner could not be limited to Rs. 250, as contended by him and Article 276 (2) of the Constitution would have no application to the present case.

14. On the basis of sub-section (1) of Section 5 of the impugned Act it was contended that if a person owns more than one land and building in a municipal area, the tax on the lands and buildings has to be assessed on the annual letting value of all such lands and buildings and hence, it is contended that the sum total of the annual letting value of all the lands and buildings has to be taken for imposing a total tax on the owner and that tax should not exceed Rs. 250 as provided by Article 276 (2) of the Constitution. It appears that this provision has been made for facilitating the demand to be made on the owner owning more than one land or building and for the facility of recovering the said tax, which has nothing to do with the limit of tax provided in Article 276 (2) of the Constitution. We do not see any force in this contention also. None of the contentions raised on behalf of the petitioner can, therefore, be accepted and in our opinion, the petitioner is not entitled to any of the reliefs claimed by him.

15. The petition thus fails and is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

AIR 1970 BOMBAY 160 (V 57 C 28)

(NAGPUR BENCH)

ABHYANKAR, J.

Gitabai w/o Srinivas, Petitioner v. Dayaram Shankar and others, Respondents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 930 of 1966, D/-4-9-1968.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 13, Rule 9 — Courts are not empowered to allow a party to take back documents filed by him normally without notice to other side and without placing on record a certified copy of that document — Document must be available throughout the lis till matter is finally decided.

The Courts are enjoined that no presiding officer is empowered to allow a party to take back the documents filed by him normally without notice to the other side and without placing on record a certified copy of that document. Allowing documents to be taken away introduces a grave lacuna in the procedure and creates unnecessary handicaps in the appreciation of the material and the conclusions drawn therefrom, by the superior Courts.

The Courts are exercising judicial power and the material on the documents on which their decisions are based must be available throughout the lis till the matter is finally decided. As tribunals of limited jurisdiction exercising exclusive powers under special Acts, there is a special responsibility cast on the presiding officers of the tribunals faithfully to observe these rules of procedure which are also rules of caution. If a party is allowed to file documents which influences the tribunal in arriving at its conclusion, it is not only fair but it is necessary that that document must continue to form part of the record throughout the proceedings.

(Para 5)

(B) Evidence Act (1872), S. 18 — Document — Admission of execution — Admission of signature of a person on document is not tantamount to admission of execution document by that person—It is one thing to admit signature of a person on a document and quite another thing which has different legal implications to admit that that person whose signature is identified by the deponent has executed the document.

(C) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 91, 92 — Partition deed — Document containing admission of both parties that they were joint till 1954 — Oral admission of partition in 1951 — Court should not persuade itself to hold that there was an oral partition between parties in face of admissions in written partition deed.

(Para 7)

(D) Tenancy laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), Sections 6, 7 — Tenancy, proof — Mere production of batai patra alleged to contain signature of a person cannot lead to an inference of his cultivation — Affirmative evidence of actual cultivation should be produced before Court.

(E) Tenancy Laws—Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), S. 111 — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115 — Relationship of landlord and tenant — Mixed question of law and fact — Revisional authority can interfere.

It is true that in reaching a conclusion about the jural relationship like that of landlord and tenant in this case, certain facts are required to be established, and so far as the facts to be established lead to an inference of fact, that may be a finding which is binding on the superior authorities. But if the inference reached itself is without evidence, then it is open to the revisional authority to find what the evidence is in order to come to a proper conclusion as to the jural relationship. Moreover the question of status of a person who claimed to be a tenant on land and a protected lessee is not a pure question of fact, nor is it dependent on an inference from fact. It is a question of law and/or at any rate, a mixed question of law and fact. The question as to whether a certain legal position is created as between the parties as the result of a certain transaction is a matter of law, and hence the question whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the defendants and the plaintiff is one of law and not of fact. Case law discussed.

Therefore, where on facts which could be said to be established, an inference as to the jural relationship between the parties viz., that of landlord and tenant, is required to be drawn, the jurisdiction of the revisional authority cannot be denied on the ground that it is interfering with the finding of fact. The inference being a legal inference to be drawn from proved circumstances, it was open to the Tribunal to record a finding.

J. N. Chandurkar, for Petitioner; V. R. Manohar, for Respondent No. 1.

ORDER: This is a landlord's petition under Article 227 of the Constitution. Dayaram, respondent No. 1, filed an application on 21-5-1963 before the Agricultural Lands Tribunal requesting that he should be Authority under Section 6(1)(b) of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1932.

6. In my view, however, the contention raised by the learned Advocate for the petitioners appears to be sound and must prevail. Both the Bengal Municipal Act and the Howrah Municipal Act are enactments of the same legislature, which undoubtedly is competent to legislate on the subjects included in the two enactments. The provision in one statute cannot be ignored in order to give effect to the provision in the other. Section 6 of the Bengal Municipal Act requires the State Government to issue a notification if it wants to do any of the various things set out in sub-section (1) of the said section. The matter, however, does not stand there. Section 7 gives to any inhabitant of the town or local area, or any rate payer of the Municipality or Municipalities in respect of which a notification has been published under Section 6, a right to file an objection within three months from the date of publication of the notification, and the State Government is required to take such objection into consideration. The provisions requiring the State Government to take the objection into consideration are mandatory in nature. If any inhabitant of the town or local area or any rate payer of the Municipality has been given a statutory right to file objection and the mandate of the legislature is that the State Government should consider such objection, it cannot, in my view, be said that this mandate of the legislature can be ignored or over-looked because the Howrah Municipal Act has included the areas which were previously within the Bally Municipality and the Howrah Municipality into one area and incorporated this area into Howrah Municipal Corporation. It is true that under the Howrah Municipal Act no provision has been made with regard to the notification required to be published under Section 6 of the Bengal Municipal Act, but that omission in the latter statute does not make a provision in Sections 6 and 7 of the earlier statute, namely, the Bengal Municipal Act, ineffective and inoperative. The provisions in Sections 6 and 7 of the Bengal Municipal Act have created rights and imposed obligations which are mandatory in nature and it cannot be said that these provisions can be ignored, overlooked or not complied with because in the latter Act, the legislature has chosen to incorporate two different areas of the Municipalities into one Municipal Corporation.

7. The doctrine of implied repeal in the rule of construction of statutory provisions which are repugnant to each other cannot be invoked in construing the provisions of the Bengal Municipal Act and the Howrah Municipal Act, as there is no repugnancy in the provisions of the two statutes. Section 6(1)(b) of the Bengal Municipal Act requires the State Government to publish a notification declaring its intention to withdraw a Municipality from the operation of the Bengal Municipal Act. Section 7 of the same Act confers upon various classes of persons a right to file objections and imposes an obligation upon the State Government to consider such objections. These provisions are not inconsistent with any of the provisions in the Howrah Municipality Act. But even the doctrine of implied repeal does not allow the revocation or alteration of a statute by construction when the words may be capable of proper operation without it, (see Maxwell 9th Ed. p. 163). It is only where the coexistence of two sets of provisions in two statutes would be destructive of the object for which the latter was passed that the earlier would stand repealed by the latter, (see Maxwell 9th Ed. p. 171). But in this case the provisions in the Bengal Municipal Act regarding publication of the notification under Section 6(1) and the filing of objections under Section 7 is not destructive of the purpose of the latter Act namely the Howrah Municipal Act, which is the creation of a Municipal Corporation of Howrah, including therein the areas previously included in what were known as the Municipality of Howrah and the Municipality of Bally. I set out below the statement of the law on the doctrine of implied repeal in Craies on Statute Law 5th Ed. p. 338:

"Before coming to the conclusion that there is a repeal by implication the Court must be satisfied that the two enactments are so inconsistent or repugnant that they cannot stand together before they can, from the language of the later, imply the repeal of an express prior enactment i. e. the repeal must, if not express, flow from necessary implication."

8. In this case, in my view, there is no inconsistency or repugnancy at all. All that has happened is a failure or omission on the part of the State Government to issue the notification prescribed by Section 6(1) of the Bengal Municipal Act, in consequence whereof the inhabitants and rate payers of the Bally Municipality have been deprived of the statutory right to file their objections. It is therefore clear to me that there is no repugnancy or inconsistency between the provisions of the two statutes.

9. Regarding the contentions raised on behalf of the respondents that by reason of the operation of Section 8 of the Howrah Municipal Act all laws, applicable to what was previously known as 'the Howrah Municipality and the Bally Municipality' stand repealed, I must at once point out that what was repealed was "all laws relating to matters provided for in this Act". That being so, if there were any laws which were in force in the two Municipalities of Howrah and Bally covering subjects which were covered by the Howrah Municipal Act, then such laws as were in force in the Municipalities of Howrah and Bally should stand repealed. It is to be noted that in the Howrah Municipal Act there is no provision similar to matters dealt with in Section 6 of the Bengal Municipal Act. Section 6 of that Act is in Part II Chapter II which is headed "The creation of Municipalities". There is no corresponding subject dealt with in the Howrah Municipal Act, and therefore, Section 8 of the Howrah Municipal Act cannot have the effect of repealing Section 6 of the Bengal Municipal Act.

10. It was next contended on behalf of the respondents that under Section 6 (1)(b) of the Bengal Municipal Act "the State Government may, by notification and by such other means as it may determine" declare its intention to do any of the Acts specified thereunder. With regard to this provision, it was argued in the first place that it was in the discretion of the State Government to publish a notification and it was not mandatory that such notification should be published by the State Government. The word "may" it was submitted, made it plain that the State Government was not bound to issue a notification. I cannot accept this contention. The scheme of the sections in Chapter II and Part II of the Bengal Municipal Act make it abundantly clear that the word "may" is not only directory but mandatory in nature and if the State Government wants to do any of the things set out in Section 6 (1)(b) of the Act a notification as mentioned above must be published.

11. It was next argued that the declaration of intention of State Government may be either by notification or by such other "means" as it may determine. It was submitted that the enactment of the Howrah Municipal Act by the State legislature was a "means" of declaration of intention of the State Government, and therefore, publication of notification was not necessary. This contention also must be rejected because S. 6(1) requires that the State Government may by a notification "and" by such other means as it may determine, do any of the acts specified thereunder. A notification therefore must be published as prescribed by the section, and in addition to the notification the State Government may adopt other means for declaring its intention.

12. In my view it was not competent for the State Government to withdraw the areas from what was previously known as the Bally Municipality without first publishing the necessary notification under Section 6(1)(b) of the Act, and to include such areas into areas previously known as the Howrah Municipality even though the latter Act, namely the Howrah Municipal Act, has authorised the inclusion of areas in what was previously known as the Bally Municipality within the Howrah Municipal Corporation. This position becomes clear on a reference to "The Chundernagore Municipal Act, 1955." In schedule I to the said Act are set out the modifications of the Bengal Municipal Act, and by clause (4) of the schedule Sections 6 to 14 of the Bengal Municipal Act have been directed to be omitted.

13. Again in Section 594 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1951, it is provided that the State Government may by notification in the official Gazette declare that the area comprised within the Municipality of Tollygunge shall be included within Calcutta and shall be administered under the Calcutta Municipal Act. In clause (a) of Section 595 of the said Act it is provided that the Bengal Municipal Act 1932 shall be deemed to be repealed, in the areas comprised within the Municipality of Tollygunge upon publication of the notification under Section 594. These provisions in the Chundernagore Municipal Act and the Calcutta Municipal Act make it clear that the requirements of notification under Section 6(1)(b) of the Bengal Municipal Act are to be complied with before any area included within the Municipality is withdrawn and incorporated in another Municipality or in a Municipal Corporation.

14. The learned Advocate General appearing for the State of West Bengal submitted further that since the legislature which is competent to enact the Howrah Municipal Act has provided for inclusion of the Bally Municipality into the area now included in the Howrah Municipal Corporation, such inclusion cannot be challenged merely because of non-compliance with the requirements of Section 6(1)(b) of the Bengal Municipal Act. In my view, however, in the absence of any provisions in the Howrah Municipal Act to that effect, before the Bally Municipality can be withdrawn from the operation of the Bengal Municipal Act a notification under Section 6(1)(b) declaring the State Government's intention to withdraw the Municipality from the operation of the Act has to be published. There is nothing in the Howrah Municipal Act which dispenses with the compliance with the provisions of Bengal Municipal Act and unless there is clear statutory provision dispensing with the fulfilment of the compliance with the requirements of the Statute, it is not open to a party to contend that the State Government is at liberty to dispense with the compliance with the provisions of the Statute.

15. For the reasons mentioned above, this Rule is made absolute. There will be no order for costs.

16. As prayed for by the learned Advocate-General let there be stay of the operation of the order passed to-day for six weeks from date.

Order accordingly.

AIR 1970 CALCUTTA 131 (V 57 C 20)

D. BASU, J.

Kshetra Mohan Nath, Petitioner v. District Controller of Stores, E. Rly. Halishahar and others, Respondents.

C. R. No. 1174 (W) of 1965, D/- 17-7-1969.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 245 — Delegation by delegatee — Power to call for statement of assets from railway employee — General Manager is competent to further delegate his power as he is a "Government" in respect of non-gazetted staff within the meaning of R. 2 (i) of Railway Service (Conduct) Rules.

In view of the fact that the word 'Government' has been defined in R. 2 (i) of the Railway Services (Conduct) Rules 1956 as meaning the 'General Manager' in respect of non-Gazetted staff, the General Manager, as 'the Government' can authorise the Controller to exercise his power. It cannot be contended that under R. 15 (4) the Government having empowered the General Manager to call for the statement of assets of the employee, the latter cannot further delegate his delegated power, according to the maxim delegatus non potest delegare. (Paras 7, 8)

(B) Constitution of India, Arts. 311 and 226 — Departmental proceedings — Natural justice — Applicability.

It is an elementary principle of natural justice that a person who is required to answer a charge must know not only the accusation but also the testimony by which the accusation is supported. As a general rule, therefore, the delinquent should not be interrogated before some witness or witnesses are examined in support of the charge. The reason is that, in order to be consonant with natural justice, a disciplinary inquiry should not be in the nature of an inquisition. AIR 1968 SC 266 & AIR 1963 SC 1719 & (1964) 3 SCR 652, Rel. on. (Para 12)

To the above general rule, an exception has been engrafted, namely, where an interrogation of the delinquent at the beginning of the inquiry may be to his advantage, by way of explaining an admission made by him or when the accusation is based on matters of record. The exception is based on the principle that the rules of natural justice do not prevent the delinquent being interrogated where the evidence in support of the charge is already known to him or where such interrogation would be beneficial to him; it is only inquisition which is prohibited. AIR 1968 SC 236, Rel. on.

(Para. 13)

Railway Establishment Code does not lay down anything contrary to the foregoing principle. It only lays down the sequence of the stages at an inquiry and does not lay down that witnesses must be examined in support of the charge even where no such evidence was necessary.

Noni Coomar Chakrabarty, S. K. Sen Gupta and Mrs. K. Banerjee, for Petitioner; Ajoy Kr. Basu for B. N. Bose, for Respondents.

ORDER:— The petitioner, who entered into the service as Khalasi under the Eastern Railway, was, at the material time, working as Clerk, Grade III. By the letter at Ann. B., dated the 31st May, 1962, the Controller of Stores (Respondent no. 3) asked the petitioner to submit a complete statement of his assets, movable and immovable by the 15th June, 1962. Another letter was issued by respondent no. 3 to the same effect on the 28th June, 1962 (Ann. C), but on the 26th December, 1962, the charge-sheet at Ann. G was issued against the petitioner to show cause why he should not be punished for 'disobedience of order' for having failed to submit his statement of assets by the 15th June, 1962, even though he was reminded of his obligation by a second letter.

2. In his answer to the charge-sheet (Ann. H), the petitioner stated, inter alia that in course of a proceeding started by the Special Police Establishment, the statement of assets had been called for by them from the petitioner and the petitioner had submitted to them such statement. The petitioner had, by his letter of 4th July, 1962 (Ann. D) requested the Controller to refer to the statement which the petitioner had filed before the Police.

Notwithstanding all this, the Controller appointed the Assistant Controller as the Inquiry Officer, on the 21st May, 1963. The Inquiry Officer submitted his report on the 28th October, 1964, finding the petitioner guilty (Ann. T.), and, agreeing with that finding, the District Controller (respondent no. 1) issued the second show cause notice at Ann. U, proposing removal from service as the tentative punishment. In pursuance thereof, the petitioner was removed from service by the order of the 8th December, 1964 at Ann. W, made by the District Controller (respondent 1). The petitioner's appeal to the Controller (respondent 3) filed on the 23rd December, 1964, not having been disposed of in a year, the petitioner moved this Court on the 21st December, 1965 and obtained this Rule, challenging the validity of the charge-sheet, show cause notice and the removal order.

3. The petition is opposed by a joint affidavit on behalf of respondents 1-3, by the Assistant Controller, respondent 2.

4. I. Before going into the points raised by the petitioner, it is to be noted at the outset that the appeal referred to in the petition has since been rejected on the 27th December, 1965, by the Deputy Controller, who is stated in the appellate order as the proper authority. Since this is subsequent to the Rule, the petitioner has not amended the petition to challenge its validity, but has nevertheless urged that his appeal has not been disposed of by the proper authority. The District Controller is, admittedly, the punishing authority of the petitioner. In para 23 of the counter affidavit, it was categorically stated that the appellate authority from orders of the District Controller is the Deputy Controller and not the Controller. Nothing has been said in reply or at the hearing to show that this is not correct. Hence, it cannot be said that appellate order was without jurisdiction. But since the disposal of the appeal took place after the issue of the Rule, the petitioner is entitled to challenge the validity of the disciplinary proceedings culminating in the removal, regardless of the order at Ann. III of the counter-affidavit.

5. II. Since the charge was one of violation of orders of a competent authority to submit a statement of assets, at the hearing the petitioner first seeks to cut at the root by urging that it was the General Manager and not the Controller who was competent to ask for such a statement and that accordingly, the order on the basis of which the disciplinary proceeding was founded was without jurisdiction.

6. Mr. Chakravarty, appearing on behalf of the petitioner, relies on R. 15 (4) of the Railway Service (Conduct) Rules, 1956, which says —

"(4) The Government or any authority empowered by it in this behalf may, at any time, by general or special order, require a railway servant to submit, within a period specified in the order, a full and complete statement of such movable or immovable property held or acquired by him or by any member of his family as may be specified in the order."

7. The case of the respondent is that the Government has, in exercise of the above rule, empowered the General Manager to call for the statement and that the latter, in his turn, has delegated his power to the Controller, by a circular of 4th June, 1957, which has been produced before me. The petitioner questions the validity of the second delegation, made by the General Manager on the ground that it is only the Government or any other person authorised by the Government, which can make an order calling for such statement; the authority empowered by the Government cannot further delegate his delegated power, according to the maxim 'delegatus non potest delegare.'

8. This contention cannot, however, succeed in view of the fact that the word 'Government' itself has been defined in R. 2(i) of these rules as meaning the 'General Manager', in respect of non-Gazetted staff; if so, there has been nothing wrong in the General Manager, as 'the Government', to authorise the Controller to exercise his power by the Circular produced by the respondents. This plea is accordingly rejected.

9. III. The next point taken on behalf of the petitioner is that, in contravention of R. 1712 of the Railway Establishment Code, Vol. I, the petitioner was interrogated by the Inquiry Officer, at the outset, without taking any evidence in support of the charge. The averments in this behalf in para 19 of the petition are corroborated by the copy of the first day's proceeding at Ann. M, namely, that after the Inquiry Officer read over the charge to the petitioner, he put questions to the latter as to why he did not submit the statement of assets asked for from him. The petitioner said that he had nothing to add to what he had stated in his written explanation.

10. The language of R. 1712(1), indeed suggests that the normal procedure at the inquiry is that after reading over the charge, the evidence in support thereof, in so far as the charge is not admitted, shall be recorded before the delinquent may be called upon to adduce evidence in his defence.

11. The plea in para 15 of the counter-affidavit is that from the papers on the record, including the petitioner's correspondence, it was evident that statement was called for by the Controller but the petitioner did not comply with his demand and that accordingly, no further evidence was necessary to establish the charge of disobedience to that order and that the only point for the Inquiry Officer was to ascertain from the petitioner if he had any valid excuse for not obeying the order; it was for this reason that the Inquiry Officer interrogated the Petitioner to that effect at the beginning.

12. Though there are no reported Supreme Court decisions relating to disciplinary proceedings against Government servants on this point, the matter has been dealt with in several cases relating to disciplinary proceedings against industrial employees, where the question of natural justice arose.

13. The general principles laid down in these cases, relating to natural justice, will not be out of place in understanding the import of R. 1712 (1) of the Code. These are :—

(i) It is an elementary principle of natural justice that a person who is required to answer a charge must know not only the accusation but also the testimony by which the accusation is supported. As a general rule, therefore, the delinquent should not be interrogated before some witness or witnesses are examined in support of the charge (Meenglass Tea Estate v. The Workmen, AIR 1963 SC 1719 (1720); Associated Cement Co. v. Workmen, (1964) 3 SCR 652 (661)). The reason is that, in order to be consonant with natural justice, a disciplinary inquiry should not be in the nature of an inquisition, Central Bank of India v. Karunamoy, AIR 1968 SC 266 (271).

(ii) To the above general rule, an exception has been engrafted, namely, where an interrogation of the delinquent at the beginning of the inquiry may be to his advantage, by way of explaining an admission made by him or the accusation is based on matters of record (AIR 1968 SC 266, ibid; Firestone Tyre Rubber Co. v. Workmen, AIR 1968 SC 236). The exception is based on the principle that the rules of natural justice do not prevent the delinquent being interrogated where the evidence in support of the charge is already known to him or where such interrogation would be beneficial to him; it is only 'inquisition' which is prohibited.

14. In the nature of the charge against the delinquent in this case, therefore, there was nothing wrong in asking the petitioner why he did not comply with the order of the Controller, when the materials on the record showed that there was an order and that the petitioner did not comply with it. His plea was that the order was without jurisdiction and that he was not bound to comply with it. R. 1712(1) of the Code does not lay down anything contrary to the foregoing principle. It only lays down the sequence of the stages at an inquiry and does not lay down that witnesses must be examined in support of the charge even where no such evidence was necessary. In the circumstances of the case, therefore, I hold that the rule relied upon by the petitioner has not been violated and also that there has been no contravention of the requirements of natural justice.

15. IV. In para 20 of the petition, the complaint is made that at the second sitting of the inquiry on the 10th April, 1964, the defence helper of the petitioner, Sri Monoj Bose, could not attend because he was not spared by the Railway Administration and the Inquiry Officer also did not grant the petitioner's prayer for adjournment on that ground. In para 16 of the counter-affidavit, it is contended, with reference to Annexure II thereto that the said defence helper was indeed spared by the respondents but that he did not turn up on the date in question for private reasons, namely, that he had to attend trade union or like meetings.

16. Under Rule 1712(2) it has been held by this Court that the defence helper being a Railway servant, the respondents must take all reasonable steps for enabling him to appear so that the provision in Rule 1712(2) may not be rendered nugatory. The obligation of the Railway, however, ends as soon as the officer in question is spared from his duties for the purpose. They cannot be held responsible if the defence helper does not attend for any reason of his own. The petitioner has not been able to establish, in the instant case, that the respondents did not spare the defence-helper. Hence, the petitioner cannot complain of any violation of the Rule referred to.

17. As to the petitioner's request for adjournment, the respondents contend that adjournments had been sought for and granted to the petitioner on two previous occasions (Annexure I) and on one of those occasions (I) the ground stated by the petitioner was that the said defence helper had to attend a meeting of the Railwaymen's Federation. If, in these circumstances, the Inquiry Officer refused to allow adjournment on the third occasion, though the defence-helper had been spared, it cannot be held that such refusal was arbitrary.

18. This point must also be rejected, accordingly.

19. V. The next point urged on behalf of the petitioner is that the report of the Special Police Establishment (if any) which was called for by the petitioner's letter dated the 9th January, 1964 (Annexure L) was not shown to him. The plea in para 19 of the counter-affidavit is that there was no such report and, secondly, that the instant charge was independent of any other proceeding held against the petitioner. This plea of the respondents must be upheld. The present charge was one of disobedience to the order to submit statement of assets. That offence had nothing to do with any adverse report of the Special Police against the petitioner, even if any such report had been received. For the same reason, the non-examination of the officer in charge of such proceeding by the Police by the prosecution caused no irregularity or prejudice in the present disciplinary proceeding against the petitioner. One of the pleas raised by the petitioner for non-submission of the return as asked for by the Controller was that he had already submitted such return to the Police (para 10 of the Petition). This is, however, no excuse for non-submission of return as asked for under the Railway Establishment Code.

20. The present plea must also fail.

21. VI. One of the points raised by the petitioner is that he had previously submitted a return of his assets at the verbal order of Mr. Sambully, the District Controller and that if the latter had been examined, as requested by the petitioner he would have proved this fact. It is to be noted that the District Controller had no jurisdiction, under the Rule, read with the Circular, to ask for such a statement. The petitioner's story on this point seems to have been an afterthought and, in the circumstances, it cannot be said that the petitioner has been prejudiced in any way by the non-examination of Mr. Sambully. As I have said in another case, if a Criminal Court has the power to withhold examination of a witness who does not appear to the Court to be relevant to the charge, an Inquiry Officer at a disciplinary proceeding cannot lack that power and Rule 1712 does not lay down anything to the contrary.

22. VII. The most important point raised on behalf of the petitioner was that the Inquiry Officer was a witness against the petitioner in a Civil suit instituted by the petitioner against the respondents in the matter of stoppage of his increment which was pending at the Baraset Court at the time of the instant proceedings. This objection was, however, rejected by the Inquiry Officer on the ground that the Civil suit at the Baraset Court related to an issue different from that involved in the instant charge (Annexure N). It has been rightly argued by Mr. Basu on behalf of the Railway that the petitioner has not shown that the Inquiry Officer had any personal grudge against the petitioner; if he had deposed against the petitioner in an official capacity regarding another matter, it cannot be said that the Inquiry Officer had any bias against the petitioner at the present inquiry for non-compliance with the order for submitting return of assets, which was to be established by documentary evidence. The deposition of the Inquiry Officer at that suit has also not been produced before me. Nor is any actual malice shown by the Inquiry Report where the Inquiry Officer did not go out of his way in suggesting any particular punishment.

23. It cannot, therefore, be held that the petitioner was in any way prejudiced by any bias on the part of the Inquiry Officer.

24. All points having failed, this Rule must be discharged. But I make no order as to costs.

Rule discharged.

AIR 1970 CALCUTTA 134 (V 57 C 21)

B. C. MITRA, J.

Sheikh Mohammed Sayeed, Petitioner v. Assistant Collector of Customs for Preventive (I) and others, Respondents.

Matters Nos. 332 and 359 of 1966, D/-5-6-1969.

(A) Customs Act (1962), Ss. 124, 110 (2) Proviso — Order of extension of period under proviso to S. 110(2) — Notice and an opportunity of being heard to party whose goods have been seized not required — Sufficiency of cause is merely subjective satisfaction of Collector — Unless Order is in violation of provision in statute there can be no judicial review of such order — (Constitution of India, Art. 226).

There is nothing in the Customs Act which requires the Collector of Customs while making an order of extension under S. 110 (2) to act judicially or quasi-judicially and have a judicial approach so that he must give notice to the party whose goods have been seized and give an opportunity of being heard to such a party. The order of extension contemplated by the proviso to S. 110(2) is to be made where a notice under S. 124 could not be served within the initial period of six months. The cause that can be shown for an order of extension is that inquiries from particular persons or at particular places could not be completed within the specified period for one reason or another. To give notice to the party against whom the investigation is to be made, that inquiries have yet to be made from particular persons at particular places, will not only be contrary to the scheme of the Act but will be against public interest. The phrase 'on sufficient cause being shown' in the proviso to S. 110(2) merely postulates a subjective satisfaction of the Collector of Customs and it is satisfaction of the Collector of Customs that provides the ground and justification for an order extending the time to complete the inquiry. Objections that notice to show cause or opportunity of being heard was not given, cannot provide any grounds for challenging the legality or validity of an order of the Collector extending the time under S. 110 (2). The satisfaction of the Collector on the question of sufficiency of cause is not justifiable and there can be no judicial review of an order of extension duly made, unless such an order is made in violation of the provisions in the statute after expiry of six months fixed by the statute or expiry of the period of extension. Case law discussed. (Paras 18, 19, 20, 42, 43)

(B) Customs Act (1962), Ss. 2(25), 110 (1), 111 (d), 130 — Goods, meant for home consumption, cleared upon payment of Customs Duty on basis of forged licence — Goods so imported cannot be treated to be lawfully imported goods within S. 2 (25) — Liable to be seized under S. 110(1) — S. 130 not applicable.

The import of goods on a licence, in the case of goods the import of which is prohibited, must be confined to imports made on a licence lawfully obtained. If import licence, on the basis of which goods meant for home consumption are cleared upon payment of Customs Duty, is forged it is no licence at all and any import cannot be valid import under the Act. Goods so imported cannot therefore, be treated to be lawfully 'imported goods' within the definition of that term in S. 2(25). The goods must be held to have been brought contrary to a prohibition imposed by law as contemplated by S. 111(d) and such goods though cleared upon payment of duty are liable to confiscation and power to seize under S. 110(1) can be invoked by Customs authorities. In such case it cannot be said that the goods were released by Customs authorities and that their decision to release being conclusive such decision can be revised only by the Central Board of Revenue under Section 130. AIR 1960 SC 415, Relied on.

(C) Customs Act (1962), S. 110 (2), Proviso and S. 124 — Goods seized from business premises and residence of a person — Period to issue show cause notice under S. 124 extended by order of Collector of Customs in exercise of power under proviso to S. 110(2) — Person, challenging the validity of that order, obtaining from Court Rule nisi and order of injunction restraining the customs authorities from taking any steps — After expiry of extended period, by consent of parties interim order modified so as to enable the Customs authorities to serve show cause notice — Show cause notices under S. 124 subsequently served — Validity of show cause notice challenged on ground that it was issued beyond the extended period and not within period prescribed by Statute — Held, show cause notices issued under S. 124 were valid — Time for issue of show cause notice lapsed because of the order of injunction and this injunction was obtained by petitioner and it was not open to him to plead lapse of time as the ground of invalidity of show cause notices. ORDER:— This is an application for appropriate writs and orders directing the respondents to recall and cancel the seizure of the petitioner's goods and also an order dated December 5, 1965, authorising detention of the petitioner's goods and from giving any effect to the said order. There is a further prayer for a writ in the nature of mandamus directing the respondents to release and return to the petitioner the goods, books, papers and documents seized by the Customs authorities and a further writ restraining the respondents from starting any proceedings on the basis of the seizure and also detention of the goods.

2. The petitioner is the sole proprietor of a firm known as Anglo-Swiss Watch Company. On December 1, December 2, December 3 and December 5, 1965 the Customs authorities conducted searches at the petitioner's business premises and also in the show-room, factory and residence of the petitioner and seized various goods and documents. Thereafter the Customs Officers made inquiries and investigations regarding the violation by the petitioner of the Import and Export Control Act, 1947, the Sea Customs Act, 1878 and the Customs Act, 1962. It is alleged that with regard to the import of parts of Watches, Clocks and Time-pieces, show cause notices under the Customs Act, 1962, could not be served upon the petitioner within the prescribed period of six months from the date of the seizure as required by Section 110 (2) of the Customs Act, 1962.

3. On December 5, 1965, an order was made by the Customs authorities under the proviso to Section 110 (1) of the Customs Act, 1962, whereby the petitioner was directed not to remove, part with or otherwise deal with the goods except with the previous permission of the respondents No. 3. With regard to this order the petitioner's case is that there was no material on the basis of which the respondents could have any reason to believe that the goods or any of them were liable to confiscation under the Act. In the petition there is a challenge to the vires of Section 110 of the Customs Act, 1962, on the ground that it confers upon the Customs Officer an absolute arbitrary, untrammelled and uncontrolled power without laying down any standard or principle for his guidance, and enables a Customs Officer to pick and choose any person for the favour of giving premission to deal with the goods so detained, and for that reason the said provision is violative of Article 14 of the Constitution, as it denies equal protection of laws to the owner or holder of goods. There is also a challenge to the vires of Section 110 (3) of the Customs Act, 1962, on the ground that it is violative of Articles 14, 19 (1) (f) and (g) and 31 (1) of the Constitution.

4. The seizure of the goods was followed by criminal proceedings against the petitioner and by an order dated 29th June 1966 the petitioner was discharged from one of the said proceedings and by another order dated August 26, 1967, the petitioner was again discharged in a second criminal case in which a proclamation was issued against the petitioner. This proclamation was also recalled.

5. In exercise of the powers under the proviso to section 110 (2) of the Act, an order was made whereby the period of six months was extended by two months with effect from June 1, 1966, and this order of extension was communicated to the petitioner by a letter dated May 30, 1966. The petitioner's contention is that the said order of extension was passed ex parte and without giving the petitioner an opportunity to show cause against the said extension and without hearing him. It was also contended that it was incumbent on the Customs authorities to serve notice on the petitioner before making the order of extension, and also to give him an opportunity of being heard, on the question whether extension of time should be granted or not. It is alleged that there was no cause or sufficient cause justifying extension of time and the order was passed without jurisdiction and for that reason is null and void.

6. On July 7, 1966, the petitioner moved this Court for a Rule Nisi and also for an order of injunction. On that date a Rule Nisi was issued and also an order of injunction restraining the Customs authorities from taking any steps on the basis of or in connection with the order of detention whereby the petitioner was restrained from removing, parting with or otherwise dealing with the goods mentioned in the Schedule to the order. The injunction also restrained the Customs authorities from taking any steps on the basis of or in connection with the order of extension of the period of detention by two months as communicated by the letter of May 30, 1966, or from issuing any notice or initiating any proceedings whatsoever against the petitioner.

7. On May 31, 1966, the six months period prescribed by Section 110 of the Customs Act, 1962, for issue of a show cause notice under Sec. 124 of the Act expired. By a letter dated May 30, 1966, the petitioner was informed that the Additional Collector of Customs, on sufficient cause being shown, had extended the period by two months with effect from June 1, 1966. This extended period of two months expired on July 31, 1966, but before the expiry of this period however the petitioner obtained the Rule Nisi and the order of injunction mentioned above. On September 27, 1966, by consent of parties an order was made by this Court whereby the interim order already passed was modified so as to enable the Customs authorities to serve show cause notices on the petitioner. The order was made without prejudice to the rights and contentions of the parties and it was also ordered that the petitioner's contentions regarding the validity of the show cause notices was to be dealt with by the Court at the hearing of the Rule Nisi.

8. Although in the petition the vires of Section 110 of the Act and the sub-sections thereunder has been challenged on the ground of violation of Articles 14, 19 (1) (f), (g) and 31 (1) of the Constitution, the only question canvassed before me, was that the extension of two months granted by the Assistant Collector of Customs was bad, as the order was made without hearing the petitioner, and without giving him an opportunity of showing cause as to why such an order of extension should not be made. It was contended that in exercising the power of extension under the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act, the Customs Officer was acting quasi-judicially, and he was therefore bound to hear the objections of the petitioner to such an order of extension, before granting the extension. It was argued that the statute required the Customs Officer in dealing with an application for extension under the proviso to Section 110 (2) to adopt a judicial approach. The statute required, it was further argued, that an order for extension could be made on sufficient cause being shown, and this requirement of the statute, it was submitted, quite plainly indicated that the Customs Officer should act judicially or at any rate quasi-judicially, and for that reason the petitioner who would be vitally affected by an order of extension, should be given an opportunity of showing cause against such an order, and of being heard with regard to the objections that he may have, to such an order being made. In this case no such opportunity was given to the petitioner, and the order of extension was made without considering the petitioner's objections to such an order. The extension order was made, it was submitted, in violation of the rules of natural justice, and was therefore illegal and should be struck down. It was next contended that the extension order being bad, the petitioner has acquired a vested right to the return of the goods and also of the books and documents which had been seized. The respondents, it was further submitted, were not entitled to retain the goods any longer and were bound to return the same to the petitioner as required by the statute.

9. The argument in substance is that a valid order for extension to retain the goods beyond the period of six months, could be made only upon notice to the party whose goods had been seized, and after giving him an opportunity of being heard, and of making representations against such an order of extension; and if an order was made without hearing the party, and without giving him an opportunity of making representations against the proposed order of extension, such an order would be clearly violative of the rules of natural justice, as the statute required the Customs authorities to have a judicial or quasi-judicial approach to any request for extension of time.

10. The next contention on behalf of the petitioner was that even assuming that the order of extension was validly made, the period of extension expired on July 31, 1966, and as no show cause notice was served within the extended period, the petitioner was entitled to the return of the goods, as also of the books and documents seized by the Customs authorities. Several show cause notices dated 1-10-66, 3-10-66, 15-10-66 and 8-11-66 were issued and served on the petitioner. These notices, it was argued, were clearly served beyond the extended time which expired on July 31, 1966. Leave to serve show cause notices was obtained by the petitioner from this Court on September 27, 1966, on which date by consent of parties the order of injunction was modified to enable the respondents to serve show cause notices on the petitioner. This leave was obtained after expiry of the extended period and thereafter the show cause notices were served as mentioned above. It was therefore submitted that as no show cause notice was served upon the petitioner within the period prescribed by the statute, the respondents were bound to restore the goods, books and documents seized, to the petitioner and the respondents had no authority in law to withhold or retain them any longer.

11. In my view there is no merit in the contention that the respondents are bound to restore to the petitioner all that was seized, as the show cause notices were served beyond the extended period. By the order of ad interim injunction passed by this Court the respondents were restrained from taking any steps in connection with the seizure and order of detention dated December 5, 1965, and also from issuing any notice or initiating any proceeding whatsoever against the petitioner. The respondents were restrained from issuing the show cause notices, and therefore, even though time was extended by two months from June 1, 1966, they could not possibly serve a show cause notice in violation of the ad interim injunction issued by this Court. Having regard to the ad interim injunction, it was not open to the respondents to serve any show cause notice on the petitioner for commencing proceedings which may terminate in an order for confiscation of the goods under Section 111 and an order imposing penalty under Section 112 of the Act. This is precisely what the petitioner apprehended, and it was on his prayer that the order of injunction was made restraining the respondents from taking any steps whatsoever in connection with the search and seizure of the goods. The order of injunction was wide and comprehensive in its terms, and having obtained this order it is not open to the petitioner now to contend that the show cause notices were not served upon him within the period prescribed by the statute. I shall revert to this question later in the judgment.

12. In support of the contentions mentioned above Mr. A. K. Sen learned counsel for the petitioner relied upon a Bench decision of this Court, Charan Das Malhotra v. Assistant Collector of Customs and Superintendent Preventive Service, AIR 1968 Cal 28. In that case also the appellant carried on the business of a watch dealer and a search was conducted at his place of business. Several watches of foreign make were seized on March 19, 1963, and a show cause notice was issued on March 6, 1964. Between the dates of the seizure and the issue of the show cause notice, two extensions were granted under the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act. The first extension was granted on September 19, 1963, for four months and a second extension for two months was granted extending the time till March 17, 1964. The first extension for four months granted on September 19, 1963, expired on January 19, 1964. The second extension of two months, however, was granted after the expiry of the first extension on January 19, 1964, as the order of second extension of two months was made on February 20, 1964. The show cause notice under Section 124 of the Act in that case was given on March 6, 1964. Admittedly therefore in this case the second extension was granted after the expiry of the first extension on January 19, 1964. The contention of the appellant was that both the extensions were granted ex parte and without notice to him. It was held, however, that even if the first extension granted on September 19, 1963, was justified the ex parte order made on February 20, 1964, by which a second extension of two months was granted could not be justified. It was further held that notice under Section 124 of the Act must be given within six months of any extended time and if it was not so given, the goods seized must be returned to the person from whom they have been seized. It was further held that the first extension expired on January 19, 1964, and since on that date no extension order was made, the right to the return of the goods devolved on the appellant. The second extension was granted on February 20, 1964, a month after the expiry of the first extension and by this order of extension, it was held, a vested right of the appellant was being taken away. It was also held that as the Collector of Customs had to consider whether the cause shown was sufficient or not specially as it affected a vested right, he should have a judicial approach in the sense "that he would have to hear the pros and cons from all parties affected and then come to a decision as to whether the cause shown was "sufficient", so as to warrant the taking away of a vested right." It was held that under those circumstances a determination requires a judicial approach and could not be made ex parte. This decision to my mind does not uphold the petitioner's contention in the instant case now before me. In that case the second order of extension was admittedly made after the expiry of the first extension of four months, so that immediately on the expiry of the first extension of four months the appellant acquired a vested right to the return of the goods as there was no order of extension on January 19, 1964, on which date, the first extension expired. Secondly in that case the first order of extension was made before the expiry of the initial period of six months and the Division Bench observed with regard to the first extension which also was made ex parte "that even if the first extension on the 18th September, 1963, was justified, the ex parte order made on 20th February 1964, cannot be justified." Quite clearly therefore although the Division Bench held that an order of extension made ex parte after the expiry of the period was bad, it did not hold, that an ex parte order extending the time within the period of six months as prescribed by the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act was bad. The question decided in that case was that where the period prescribed by the statute had expired or lapsed in consequence whereof a party had acquired a vested right to the return of the goods seized, such a vested right could not be taken away so as to deprive the party to the return of the goods by an order made ex parte extending the time. In other words it was held that where a party had acquired a vested right to the return of the goods by reason of the expiry of the time within which notice was to be served, such a vested right could not be taken away by an order of extension made ex parte without hearing the party. For these reasons this decision, to my mind, is of no assistance to the petitioner in this case.

13. The next decision relied upon by learned counsel for the petitioner was a decision of this Court reported in (1969) 73 Cal WN 340, Bibhuti Bhushan Bagh v. I. J. Rao. In that case on May 5, 1966, various type-writers adding and calculating machines were seized by the Customs Authorities after a search. Before the expiry of the period of six months within which a notice under Section 124 was to be served, the Additional Collector of Customs by an order made on November 3, 1966, extended the initial period of six months for giving notice under Section 124, and within this extended period a notice under Section 124 was served on December 16, 1966. The order of extension, however, in that case, was not served and communicated until December 16, 1966, that is to say, after expiry of the initial period of six months from the date of seizure. Ghose J. relying upon two decisions reported in AIR 1959 Cal 219 and (1960) 11 STC 589 (Cal), came to the conclusion that the order of extension though made on November 3, 1966, was to be treated as made on the day when it was communicated to the party namely December 16, 1966, and as by this time the right to get back the goods seized had become vested in the petitioners in that case, the order extending the time was bad. The facts in this case are clearly distinguishable from the facts in the instant case now before me, in which the initial period of six months expired on May 31, 1966, but before the expiry of this period that is to say, on May 30, 1966, the petitioner was informed about the order of extension by two months with effect from June 1, 1966. Ghose J. came to the conclusion that the order of extension was to be treated to have been made on the day on which it was communicated to the petitioners in that case namely, December 16, 1966, and as on that date the petitioners had already acquired a vested right to the return of the goods, such a right could not be taken away without given an opportunity of being heard to the petitioner.

14. The decision reported in (1969) 73 Cal WN 340 was strongly relied upon by the learned counsel for the petitioner in support of his contention that in making the order of extension the Customs Officer must act judicially or quasi-judicially and must have a judicial approach; and therefore he must give notice to the party whose goods have been seized and give an opportunity of being heard to such a party and if an order was made extending the time without giving such an opportunity, and without hearing the party, such an order must be held to be bad and must be struck down. In dealing with this contention it is to be considered, if the phrase "on sufficient cause being shown, in the proviso to Sec. 110(2) of the Act requires an objective analysis of the grounds made out for extension of time or merely postulates a subjective satisfaction of the Collector of Customs who is empowered to make the order of extension.

15. The provisions in statute requiring public servants to make confiscatory orders, whenever they have reason to believe that grounds exist for formation of such a reason to believe have received judicial attention in several decisions to which I shall presently refer. It is necessary to go into these decisions to find out if the phrase "on sufficient cause being shown" in the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act is a matter of subjective satisfaction of the Customs Officer or postulates an objective analysis, which demands a show cause notice to the party likely to be affected by the order and also an opportunity of being heard being given to him. The first case to which I shall refer in this connection is a decision of the Supreme Court, Collector of Customs, Madras v. N. Sampathu Chetty, AIR 1962 SC 316. In that case Section 178 (1) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, which prescribed that where goods to which that section applied were seized in the reasonable belief that they were smuggled goods, the burden of proving that they were not smuggled goods shall be on the person from whose possession the goods were seized, came up for consideration and it was held that if circumstances existed to raise a reasonable suspicion that the goods seized had been obtained illicitly, that was sufficient to constitute in the words of the statute, "a reasonable belief that the goods (gold) were smuggled." It was held to be a matter of subjective satisfaction of the Customs Officer and a suspicion that goods were obtained illegally was sufficient to constitute a reasonable belief.

16. The next case to which I shall refer on this question is also a decision of the Supreme Court Babulal Amthalal v. Collector of Customs, Calcutta (1958) SCA 13 = (AIR 1957 SC 877), in which the Supreme Court considered the questions of reasonable belief that the goods were smuggled goods as prescribed by S. 178-A (1) of the Sea Customs Act 1878. In that case several pieces of diamond were seized by the Customs Officer upon a search. This seizure was made in the reasonable belief of the Customs authorities that the diamonds were smuggled goods. Under S. 178-A (1) the burden of proving that the goods were not smuggled goods is on the person from whose possession the goods were seized. Dealing with this provision and also the question of reasonable belief it was held at page 21 of the report as follows:—

No doubt the content and import of the section are very wide. It applies not only to the actual smuggler from whose possession the goods are seized but also to those who came into possession of the goods after having purchased the same after the same has passed through many hands or agencies. For example, if the Customs authorities have a reasonable belief that certain goods in the possession of an innocent party are smuggled goods and the same is seized under the provisions of this Act, then the person from whose possession the goods were seized, however innocent he may be, has to prove that the goods are not smuggled articles. This is no doubt a very heavy and onerous duty cast on an innocent possessor who for aught one knows, may have bona fide paid adequate consideration for the purchase of the articles without knowing that the same has been smuggled. The only pre-requisite for the application of the section is the subjectivity of the Customs Officer in having a reasonable belief that the goods are smuggled."

The question of 'reasonable belief' was again considered by the Supreme Court in Pukhraj v. D. R. Kohli, AIR 1962 SC 1559. In that case the Collector of Central Excise, Nagpur, passed an order directing confiscation of gold found in the possession of a party and imposing upon him a personal penalty of Rs. 25,000 under Section 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, read with Section 19 of the said Act and Section 23-A of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947. It was contended that there were nothing on record to show that the seizure of gold had been effected by the Officer acting on a reasonable belief that the gold was smuggled. It was also contended that the question whether there was a reasonable belief or not was justiciable and since there was no material on the record to show that the belief could have been reasonable the statutory presumption could not be raised. In rejecting this contention the Supreme Court held:

"After all, when you are dealing with a question as to whether the belief in the mind of the Officer who effected the seizure was reasonable or not, we are not sitting in appeal over the decision of the said Officer. All that we can consider is whether there is ground which prima facie justifies the said reasonable belief. That being so, we do not think there is any substance in the argument that the seizure was effected without a reasonable belief and so is outside Section 178-A."

17. The next case on this point relied upon by the learned counsel for the respondents was a Bench decision of this Court reported in (1966) 70 Cal WN 349, Nathmull Jalan v. Additional Collector of Customs. In that case certain gold bars were seized and thereafter a show cause notice under Section 167 (8) of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, read with Section 23-A of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947, was served. It was argued in that case that as the bullion was purchased from a dealer at Bombay, the onus of proof that the gold involved was smuggled gold shifted from the party to the Customs authorities and that in those facts there could be no ground for having a reasonable belief that the bullion was smuggled. It was held that the question whether the gold was smuggled gold was a matter of subjective satisfaction of the Customs authorities and that it was not open to the party from whom the gold was seized to challenge the grounds of reasonable belief of the respondents as required by Section 178-A of the Sea Customs Act, 1878.

18. It is to be noticed that the decisions mentioned above have dealt with the question of 'reasonable belief' or 'reason to believe' in the Sea Customs

Act, 1878, and the matter with which I am concerned in this case is the phrase 'on sufficient cause being shown' in the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act. Under the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act, sufficient cause is to be shown to the Collector of Customs; and it is he who is to be satisfied about the sufficiency of the cause shown by the department for an extension of time. Section 178-A (1) which was considered by the Supreme Court in Babulal Amthlal Mehta's case, 1958 SCA 13 = (AIR 1957 SC 877) (supra) and also in Pukhraj's case, AIR 1962 SC 1559 (supra) runs as follows:—

"Where any goods to which this section applies are seized under this Act in the reasonable belief that they are smuggled goods, the burden of proving that they are not smuggled goods shall be on the person from whose possession the goods were seized.

In dealing with the question of reasonable belief in the section quoted above it was held in Pukhraj's case, AIR 1962 SC 1559 (supra) that the Court does not sit in appeal over the decision of the Customs Officer in dealing with a question as to whether the belief in the mind of the Officer was reasonable or not. In my view the same principles are attracted in construing the phrase 'on sufficient cause being shown' in the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act. With regard to the nature and sufficiency of the cause, it is the satisfaction of the Collector of Customs that provides the ground and justification for an order extending the time to complete the inquiry. Objections raised on behalf of the party from whose custody goods have been seized, however strong and cogent they may be, cannot in my view provide any grounds for challenging the legality or validity of an order of the Collector of Customs extending the time under the proviso to section 110 (2) of the Act. If the order of extension is made before expiry of the initial period of six months, or before expiry of the extended period, it cannot in my view be challenged on the ground that notice to show cause, or opportunity of being heard was not given to the party, provided however that such an order of extension is made within the limit of one year prescribed by sub-section (2) and the proviso thereto to Section 110 of the Act.

19. Let me now proceed to test the question from a different point of view. The proviso requires the department to show sufficient cause to the Collector of Customs. What is this cause that the department can show? Quite plainly the cause that can be shown is that the investigation is not complete and that inquiries have yet to be made from persons

A. B. and C at places X, Y and Z and that for one reason or another, such inquiries could not be completed either within the initial period of six months or within the extended period, which must not of course exceed a further period of six months. Such is the cause to be shown, and such is the cause that can provide the ground for an order of extension. If an order of extension is made after expiry of the initial period of six months or after expiry of the extended period, different considerations will apply, as a statutory right to the return of the goods vests in the party under sub-section (2) of Section 110 of the Act. But if it is held that notice must be given to the party whose goods have been seized, before making an order of extension, and that such order of extension can be made only upon hearing the party it must follow that the materials which have been produced before the Collector of Customs by the department, must also be placed before the party, and he must be told that inquiries have yet to be made from persons A, B and C at places X, Y and Z. What would be the result of disclosure of such materials to a party who is charged with smuggling and whose dealing with the goods are under investigation? It is obvious that such disclosure would lead to disappearance of or at any rate tampering with material evidence. Such a course of action in my view would defeat the purpose of the investigation itself and is entirely against public interest.

20. The purpose for which six months time has been given by Parliament to the department for serving a notice under S. 124 of the Act, and the purpose for which provision has been made for extension of the initial period of six months by a further period not exceeding six months, is quite plain. That purpose is to enable the department to commence and conclude investigation regarding the importation of the goods and subsequent dealings therewith. If the party from whose custody the goods have been seized, and who may be charged with smuggling of the goods, and against whom an order confiscating the goods, and imposing a personal penalty may be made, is informed that investigations with regard to the import of, and subsequent dealings with the goods are going to be made, from such and such persons at such and such places, the purpose of the investigation itself, and indeed the whole proceedings commencing from search and seizure would be altogether defeated. The investigation contemplated by the statute, must be made without the knowledge of the party (from whom the goods have been seized) as to the sources at which investigation is to be made. For such an investigation to succeed, it must be made behind the back of the party who has been charged with the offence of smuggling. Parliament in my view did not intend that when an order of extension was made before expiry of the statutory period or extension thereof notice must be given to the party from whom goods have been seized and such a party must be heard by the Collector of Customs before making the order. When Parliament desired that notice should be given, followed by an opportunity of making representations, and an opportunity of being heard, provision to that effect has been expressly made in the statute itself. This becomes clear on a reference to Section 124 of the Act in which mandatory provision has been made firstly for giving notice in writing of the grounds on which goods are proposed to be confiscated, or penalty imposed; secondly of giving an opportunity of making the representation and thirdly of giving reasonable opportunity of being heard. Keeping in mind the mandatory provisions regarding service of notice, written representations and opportunity of being heard in Section 124 of the Act, in my view it is not open to the Court in construing the terms of the proviso to sub-section (2) of Section 110 of the Act. In a case in which the order of extension was made before expiry of the initial period of six months, or expiry of subsequent extension not exceeding a further period of six months, to hold that the statute requires by implication though not expressly, that a notice and an opportunity of being heard is to be given to the party. That in my view would have the result of introducing in the proviso to sub-section (2) of Section 110 something which is not there at all. It is true that when statutory authorities are given jurisdiction to deal with the rights of citizen, they may be required to act judicially by the statute and in such cases there may be either an express provision in the statute or such a provision may be implied. In other words when a statutory authority is required by the statute to deal with the rights of citizens, they may be required to act judicially or quasi-judicially by implication, even though no express provision has been made in the statute. But such an implication, in my view cannot be inferred when the Collector of Customs is exercising his jurisdiction under the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act. From what I have said above it will be amply clear that in circumstances such as these, namely an investigation following seizure of goods, to hold that the Collector of Customs must act judicially, and give notice to the party and also an opportunity of being heard, would defeat the purpose of the investigation itself. To read into the proviso to S. 110 (2) of the Act an implied provision requiring the Customs Officer to act judicially will be altogether contrary to the scheme of the Act in Chapter XIII which deals with search, seizure and arrests.

21. It was argued by learned counsel for the petitioner, that even if it was held that the order of the Collector of Customs was an administrative order and not a judicial or quasi-judicial order, notice should have been given to the petitioner, who should also have been given an opportunity of being heard. In other words, it was contended that even in case of an administrative order, the authority making the order is required to follow the rules of natural justice, and should therefore give to the party affected, a notice that an order affecting him may be made and also give such a party an opportunity of being heard. In support of this contention reliance was placed upon a decision of the Supreme Court, State of Orissa v. Dr. (Miss) Binapani Dei, AIR 1967 SC 1269. In that case there was a dispute with regard to the declared age of a Government servant who claimed that her age as recorded in the Civil List and the Service Records of Gazetted Officers should be accepted. The age of superannuation was raised from 55 to 58 from December 1, 1962. But before this alteration in the age of retirement, she was due to retire on April 10, 1965 upon completing 55 years. According to her, her age of birth was April 10, 1910. But upon an inquiry being made on the basis of some anonymous letters she was required to show cause why her date of birth should not be treated to be April 4, 1907. The Government of Orissa thereupon determined the date of birth of the Government servant to be April 16, 1907, and declared that she would be deemed to have retired on April 16, 1962, subject to certain extensions owing to which she was to retire on July 15, 1963. The High Court of Orissa held that the order whereby the Government servant was superannuated on April 16, 1962, on the basis of her date of birth as April 16, 1907, amounted to compulsory retirement before she attained the age of superannuation and was removed from service within the meaning of Article 311, and as the Government servant was not given a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the order of removal, the order itself was invalid. In order to find out the correct position regarding the age, the Additional Director of Planning was asked to make a report, and he made a report regarding the age of the Government servant.

This report was not disclosed to the Government servant. It was in these facts that the Supreme Court held that the said authority should have placed all the materials before the Government servant and called upon her to explain the discrepancy, and to give an explanation, and that although the order was administrative in character, it should have been made consistently with the rules of the natural justice after informing the Government servant of the state of evidence with regard to her age, and after giving her an opportunity of being heard. It is to be noticed that in that case question of superannuation of an employee was involved. There was dispute on the question of the correct age and the State Government had collected various materials with regard to her age, and these materials were not placed before her and she was not given an opportunity of explaining the discrepancies. It was in the background of these facts that the observation of the Supreme Court that even in case of an administrative order rules of natural justice should be followed was made. This decision, to my mind, does not support the petitioner's contention in this case. Certain materials collected behind the back of the Government servant were going to be used against her and she was not informed of such materials, nor was she given an opportunity of explaining the discrepancy arising out of her declared age and the age arrived at on materials collected by the Government, and relying on the materials collected by the Government an order of superannuation was made. In the instant case now before me no order has been made against the petitioner to his prejudice nor has any materials collected against him been used. All that has been done was that of order of extension was made in terms of the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act. The decision of the Supreme Court mentioned above is not an authority for the proposition that rules of natural justice must be followed in the case of every administrative order and a notice should be served to the party against whom an order is proposed to be made. An order of search and seizure for instance under the Act is also an administrative order, and it is an order which is seriously detrimental to the party against whom it is made. But can it be said that notice must be given to the party against whom an order for search and seizure is going to be made and further that the party should be given an opportunity of being heard before making an order of search and seizure? Quite plainly the answer must be in the negative.

22. In support of the contention mentioned above reliance was also placed on another decision of the Supreme Court Barium Chemicals Ltd. v. Company Law Board, AIR 1967 SC 295. In that case an order of investigation under S. 237 of the Companies Act, 1957, was challenged on the ground that circumstances did not exist and they were not such as to enable the Central Government to form an opinion suggestive of the things set out in sub-clauses (i), (ii) and (iii) under Section 237 (b) of the Companies Act, 1957. It was held that if it was shown that circumstances did not exist or that they were such that it was impossible for any one to form an opinion suggestive of the aforesaid things, the opinion of the Central Government was challengeable on the ground of non-application of mind or perversity or on the ground that it was formed on collateral ground and was beyond the scope of the statute and was based on grounds extraneous to the legislation. This decision again, to my mind, is of no assistance to the petitioner in this case. Sub-clauses (i), (ii) and (iii) under Section 237 (b) of the Companies Act lays down certain condition precedent to the exercise of the power to appoint Inspectors to investigate into the affairs of a company, and it was held that if there was a challenge to the exercise of the power by the Central Government, it must be shown that circumstances did exist to enable the Central Government to form an opinion in the matter so as to exercise its power to direct investigation into the affairs of the company. In the instant case now before me there is no condition precedent to the exercise of the power to extend the time under the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act. The decision in Barium Chemicals' case, AIR 1967 SC 295 (supra) to my mind has no application to the facts of this case. Section 237 (b) of the Companies Act lays down conditions which must exist before the power to order an investigation can be exercised by the Central Government, and the majority view of the Supreme Court was that as the existence of 'circumstances' was the condition fundamental to the making of an opinion, the existence of the circumstances, if questioned, had to be proved at least prima facie and that it was not enough to assert that circumstance existed and give no clue to what they were because the circumstances must be such as to lead to conclusions of certain definiteness, on the question of subjective satisfaction of the Central Government as to the existence of the circumstances. A material portion of the observations runs as follows:—

"No doubt the formation of opinion is subjective but the existence of circumstances relevant to the inference as the sine qua non for action must be demonstrable. If the action is questioned on the ground that no circumstances leading to an inference of the kind contemplated by the section exists, the action might be exposed to interference unless the existence of the circumstances is made out."

It will be amply clear that the questions considered by the Supreme Court in Barium Chemicals' case, AIR 1967 SC 295 (Supra) were entirely different from the question with which I am concerned in this application. There are no conditions precedent to the exercise of the power to extend the time, nor is there any challenge to the existence of any such conditions precedent.

23. On the same question reliance was also placed by the learned counsel for the petitioner on another decision of the Supreme Court, Bhagawan v. Ram Chand, AIR 1965 SC 1767. In that case the Supreme Court considered the question of the validity of an order of the State Government under the Uttar Pradesh (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, on the ground that the State Government did not hear the parties who were affected by it. In that case the landlord applied to the Rent Controller and Eviction Officer under Section 3 of the said Act for permission to sue the tenant for ejectment. This permission was granted and the tenant thereupon appealed to the Additional District Magistrate. The Appellate authority declined to confirm the permission granted to the landlord and remanded the case for fresh hearing. On remand the officer changed his views and rejected the application for permission. The landlord then moved the Appellate authority again for extending the original order directing him to sue. The appellate authority granted permission to the landlord and thereupon the tenant moved the Commissioner of Agra in revision. This application in revision was allowed and the appellate order granting permission was set aside. Thereupon the landlord went up to the State Government under Section 7-F of the said Act, and the State Government directed the Commissioner to revise his order on the ground that it thought the need of the landlord to be genuine. On this direction the Commissioner passed an order cancelling the previous order and confirming the order passed by the Appellate Authority granting permission to the landlord to sue. The landlord thereupon sued the tenant in ejectment and obtained a decree. The matter went up to the Allahabad High Court in second appeal and the only issue in the High Court was if the order of the State Government was valid as it was made without giving the tenant an opportunity of being heard. The Allahabad High Court came to the conclusion that the order of the State Government was invalid as exercising its power under Section 7-F of the Act the State Government did not give an opportunity of being heard to the tenant. Thereafter the matter went up to the Supreme Court and it was held that when an Act conferred jurisdiction and power on any authority to deal with the rights of citizens, it may be required by the statute to act judicially in dealing with matters entrusted to it and that an obligation to act judicially might in some cases be inferred from the scheme of the statute and its provisions. In such cases it was held, it is easy to hold that the authority must act in accordance with the principles of natural justice and that it was not necessary that the obligation to follow the principles of natural justice must be expressly imposed on the authority. On the obligation to act judicially the Supreme Court observed at page 1770 of the report as follows:—

"If it appears that the authority or body has been given power to determine questions affecting the rights of citizens, the very nature of the power would inevitably impose the limitation that the power should be exercised in conformity with the principles of natural justice. Whether or not such an authority or body is a tribunal would depend upon the nature of the power conferred on the authority or body, the nature of the rights of citizens the decision of which falls within the jurisdiction of the said authority or body, and other relevant circumstances."

This decision also to my mind, is of no assistance to the petitioner in this case. In making the order of extension the Collector of Customs, in my view, was not making any order determining a question affecting the rights of the petitioner. The rights of the petitioner, such as they were, were already affected by the search and the order of seizure. The extension order was made within the period of six months and it cannot therefore be said that the petitioner had acquired any right to the return of the goods. The order of extension merely enlarged the time within which the department was to complete its investigation. There was in my view, no determination of a question affecting the rights of the petitioner. It is to be remembered that the attack in this case was confined to the order of extension and not directed against the order of search and seizure.

24. The next case relied upon by the learned counsel for the petitioner was also a decision of the Supreme Court M. Gopal Krishna Naidu v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1968 SC 240. That was again a case relating to certain orders made against the appellant who was a Government servant. The appellant was suspended from service and was prosecuted under the Indian Penal Code. He was convicted but this conviction was set aside on appeal, for want of a sanction to prosecute. He was prosecuted for the second time on the same charge but this prosecution was quashed on the ground that the investigation was not conducted by the proper authority. In revision the Nagpur High Court held that the Court below was in error in so holding but recommended that the prosecution should not be proceeded with as 10 years had gone by since it was lodged. Thereafter the prosecution was dropped but a departmental enquiry was held on the same charges. The appellant was found not guilty, but the Government disagreed with that view, and served a show cause notice for dismissal. On cause being shown, the Government held that the charges were not proved beyond doubt but that the suspension and the departmental enquiry were not wholly unjustified. The appellant was directed to be reinstated with effect from the date of the order, but retire from that date as he had attained the age of superannuation already, and the entire period of absence from duty was to be treated as spent on duty for pension only but he was not to be allowed any pay beyond what he had actually received or what was allowed to him by way of subsistence allowance. The appellant thereafter filed a writ petition for quashing the order of reinstatement without pay and for an order directing the Government to treat the period of absence from duty as period spent on duty. This petition, however, was dismissed by the High Court and the matter thereafter went up to the Supreme Court in appeal. It was held that the order passed under the relevant fundamental rule would affect the Government servant adversely if it was made under clauses III and V and that consideration of the case depended on facts and circumstances in their entirety, and an order resulting from a finding of the facts and circumstances would result in pecuniary loss to the Government servant and such an order must be held to be an objective rather than a subjective function. It was further held that the very nature of the function implied the duty to act judicially and if an opportunity to show cause against the action proposed was not given the order was liable to be struck down as invalid on the ground that it was made in breach of the principles of natural justice. This decision, in my view, does not uphold the contentions advanced on behalf of the petitioner. The order made on the face of it caused pecuniary loss to a Government servant and seriously affected the question of his pension and it was held that an order causing pecuniary loss to a Government servant by non-payment of salary and also reducing his pension could not be made without giving him an opportunity of being heard. The questions raised and decided in this case have no application to the question with which I am concerned in the instant writ petition.

25. The next decision relied upon by the learned counsel for the petitioner was also a decision of the Supreme Court, Calcutta Discount Co. Ltd. v. Income-Tax Officer, Companies District I, Calcutta, AIR 1961 SC 372. In that case the Supreme Court considered the validity of a notice issued under Section 34 of the Income-tax Act, 1922. It was held that Section 34 of the said Act laid down two conditions precedent to the exercise of the power to issue of notice namely that the Income-tax Officer must have reason to believe that income, profits or gains chargeable to tax had been under-assessed and secondly that the Income-tax Officer must have reason to believe that the under-assessment had occurred by reason either of omission or failure on the part of the assessee to make a true return of his income, or omission or failure on his part to disclose fully and truly all material facts necessary for his assessment. It was held that both these conditions precedent must be satisfied before the Income-tax Officer could have jurisdiction to issue a notice for the assessment or re-assessment beyond four years but within eight years from the end of the year in question. In the facts of that case it was found that the conditions precedent mentioned above did not exist and the Income-tax Officer therefore had no jurisdiction to issue notices under Section 34 of the Act. This decision again, to my mind, has no application to the question with which I am concerned in this case. There are no conditions precedent to the exercise of the power by the Collector of Customs under the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act. The only requirement of the statute is that an order for extension can be made on sufficient cause being shown and whether the cause shown by the department, for extension of time to complete investigation into the charge of illegal importation is sufficient or not, as I have said earlier must be a matter of subjective satisfaction of the Collector of Customs.

26. The next case relied upon by the learned counsel for the petitioner was the decision of the Supreme Court, Rohtas Industries Ltd. v. S. D. Agarwal, 1969-1 SCC 325 = (AIR 1969 SC 707). In that case also the validity of an order made by the Central Government under sub-clauses (i), (ii) of clause (b) of Section 237 of the Companies Act, 1956, appointing Inspectors to investigate into the affairs of a company was considered by the Supreme Court. The challenge to the order was on the ground that the Central Government had no material before it from which it could have come to the conclusion that the appellant's business was being conducted in violation of the provisions of the statute. Agreeing with the majority view in Barium Chemicals' case, AIR 1967 SC 295 (supra) it was held as follows:—

"For the reasons stated earlier we agree with the conclusion reached by Hidayatullah and Shelat JJ. In Barium Chemicals' case that the existence of circumstances suggesting that the company's business was being conducted as laid down in sub-clause (1) or the persons mentioned in sub-clause (2) were guilty of fraud or misfeasance or other misconduct towards the company or towards any of its members is a condition precedent for the Government to form the required opinion and if the existence of these conditions is challenged the Courts are entitled to examine whether those circumstances were existing when the order was made. In other words, the existence of the circumstances in question are open to judicial review though the opinion formed by the Government is not amenable to review by the Courts. As held earlier the required circumstances did not exist in this case."

For the reasons mentioned by me while dealing with Barium Chemicals' case, this decision also is of no assistance in deciding the questions with which I am concerned in the case.

27. The next case relied upon by Mr. Sen was also a decision of the Supreme Court, Purtabpore Co. Ltd. v. Cane Commissioner of Bihar, 1969-1 SCC 308 (SC). In that case there was a dispute between two sugar manufacturing companies with regard to allotment of sugarcane producing villages in Bihar and U. P. The Cane Commissioner had allotted certain villages to the appellant, but the Chief Minister of Bihar intervened in the matter and passed an order for alteration of the allotment made. On the order of the Chief Minister, the Cane Commissioner revised his earlier order of allotment, and this revised order was challenged in a writ petition. The ground of challenge was that though the order was made by the Cane Commissioner it was in substance the order of the Chief Minister and the Cane Commissioner had abdicated his authority and function and therefore the order revising the earlier allotment was bad. The second ground of challenge was that the Cane Commissioner acted in a quasi-judicial capacity and as no opportunity was given to the appellant for making representation against the order of revision, the order was bad. The third ground of challenge was that even if the order was an administrative order, it was liable to be set aside on the ground of violation of rules of natural justice. The Supreme Court held that though the impugned order was purported to be made by the Cane Commissioner, it was in fact made by the Chief Minister, and hence they were invalid. The Cane Commissioner, it was held, merely carried out the orders of the Chief Minister and though the order was that of the Cane Commissioner, he had merely carried out the directions of the Chief Minister and the Chief Minister had imposed his opinion on the Cane Commissioner. It was further held that the power exercisable by the Cane Commissioner was a statutory power and he alone could have exercised that power and he could not abdicate his responsibility in favour of any one, and that the Cane Commissioner acted in a quasi-judicial capacity as there was a lis between two contending parties and this lis commenced as soon as one of the parties moved the Government for altering or modifying the reservation made in the earlier order. It was further held that the order was bad on the ground that though the Cane Commissioner acted in a quasi-judicial capacity no opportunity for making representation was given to the appellant. I do not see how this decision helps the petitioner in the instant case now before me. There is no question involved in this case of the order having been made by any authority other than that whom the statute has empowered to make the order. There is no question of abdication of power or authority by the Collector of Customs in favour of anybody else, and there is no challenge to the order of extension on that ground. Secondly there was no lis between two rival or contending parties. The only question is whether the Collector of Customs should have granted the extension in exercise of the powers under the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act. This decision, to my mind, is therefore of no assistance to the petitioner in this case.

28. The next contention of Mr. Sen was that even if an order is an administrative order, the authority making the order must act fairly if not judicially. It was argued that if it was held that the Collector of Customs was not bound to act judicially, he was nevertheless bound to act fairly. In support of this proposition reliance was placed on an English decision Re: H. K. (an infant), (1967) 1 All E. R. 226. In that case a national of Pakistan to whom the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962, applied, had settled in England leaving his wife and family in Pakistan. In order to bring his eldest son to England he forwarded to the Pakistan High Commission in England a sworn declaration dated June 8, 1966, stating that his son was 15½ years old and that it was his intention to be responsible for and maintain his son in England. A Passport was issued in Pakistan to the son in which his date of birth was given as February 29, 1951. Thereafter the Pakistan national arrived at London Airport with his son and they were interviewed by the Immigration authorities. The Immigration Officer was of the view that the son was not more than 16 years old and thereupon sent the son to the Medical Officer whose opinion was that the son was 17 plus. Thereafter the father and son were again interviewed and this interview was followed by a formal notice in writing from the Chief Immigration Officer to the son refusing him admission. Subsequently it appeared that the son had in his possession a school leaving certificate in Arabic script which showed that the son was born on February 29, 1951. An application was made for the issue of Writ of Habeas Corpus to secure release of the son from the custody of the Chief Immigration Officer and there was also a prayer for a Writ of certiorari for quashing the decision refusing the son's admission to the United Kingdom. After referring to an earlier decision of the Judicial Committee under a statute which required the officer to hold an inquiry and specific provision was made for service of notice and for hearing. Lord Parker C. J. held that that was a clear case where the officer was acting judicially or quasi-judicially and he was required to adopt a judicial process and then went on to hold at p. 231 of the report:

"This, as it seems to me is a very different case, and I doubt whether it can be said that the Immigration authorities are acting in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity as those terms are generally understood. At the same time, however, I myself think that even if an Immigration Officer is not acting in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity, he must at any rate give the immigrant an opportunity of satisfying him of the matters in the sub-section and for that purpose let the immigrant know what his immediate impression is so that the immigrant can disabuse him. That is not, as I see it, a question of acting or being required to act judicially, but of being required to act fairly. Good administration and an honest or bona fide decision must, as it seems to me, require not merely impartiality, nor merely bringing one's mind to bear on the problem, but of acting fairly and to the limited extent that the circumstances of any particular case allow and within the legislative framework under which the administrator is working, only to that limited extent do the so-called rules of natural justice apply, which in a case such as this merely a duty to act fairly."

In the same case Salmon L. J. held at page 232 of the report:

"I have no doubt at all that in exercising his powers under that section, the Immigration Officer is obliged to act in accordance with the principles of the natural justice. That does not of course mean that he has to adopt judicial procedure or hold a formal inquiry, still less that he has to hold anything in the nature of a trial, but he must act, as Lord Parker C. J. has said fairly in accordance with the ordinary principles of natural justice. If for example, and this I am sure would never arise, it could be shown that when he made an order refusing admission he was biased or had acted capriciously or dishonestly, this Court would have power to intervene by the prerogative writ."

In the facts of that case, however, it was held that it was impossible to hold that the decision made by the Chief Immigration Officer was not arrived at fairly and that both the father and son knew full well of what they had to satisfy the authorities and they were given ample opportunity to do so and the fact that the officer was not satisfied was not a matter for the Court. It is clear that in that case it was held that an administrative officer must act fairly in dealing with a matter under a statute which did not require the officer to act judicially or quasi-judicially. But this decision, to my mind, is of no assistance to the petitioner in this case, firstly because an immigrant under the English Act was required to satisfy the officer about the age of his son whom he wanted to bring into England for permanent residence. The officer was required to come to a decision on the fact of the correct age and he was empowered either to admit or to refuse admission to the son of the immigrant. Secondly, evidence regarding age is required to be produced and the officer is required to apply his mind in coming to a decision on the question. In the case with which I am concerned, the party whose goods have been seized is not required by the statute to produce any evidence as to why an order of extension should not be made because all that the statute requires is a cause to be shown by the department and not by the party from whose custody goods have been seized. Secondly there is no charge in this case that the Collector of Customs was biased or had acted capriciously or dishonestly. There is nothing in the petition to show that the order of extension was unfairly made.

29. In support of the same contention reliance was placed on another English decision R. v. Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, Ex parte Lain, (1967) 2 All E. R. 770. In that case a police constable became blind as a result of shooting by suspect, whom he was about to question. He applied to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board for compensation under the scheme. He was offered and accepted an interim compensation of £300. Later he committed suicide which was attributable to the injury. His widow became entitled to the interim award and also applied for further compensation. On this application a single member of the Board made a final award of £300. The widow thereupon applied for a hearing before three members of the Board who decided that having regard to other payments made she was not entitled to any compensation and made a nil award. The widow thereupon applied for a certiorari to quash the decision. The contention that the jurisdiction of the Court did not extend to the Board was repelled by Lord Parker C. J. and it was held that the Court had jurisdiction although the Board was not a statutory Board. It was held that the Board was a body of persons, of a public as opposed to a purely private or domestic character, that they were performing public duties and were quite clearly under a duty to act judicially. This decision, again, to my mind, is of no assistance to the petitioner as the main question with which the Court was concerned in that case was whether the Board not being a statutory body, the Court had jurisdiction to issue a prerogative writ against its decision. On the question whether an applicant was entitled to the hearing there could be no dispute because the scheme which provided for disposal of the matter by our members of the Board, itself laid down that the applicant would be entitled to a hearing before three other members excluding one who had made the initial decision. It is clear therefore that the constitution of the Board itself provided for a hearing and therefore this decision does not touch the question with which I am concerned in this application.

30. The next case relied upon by Mr. Sen was a decision of the Judicial Committee De Verteuil v. Knaggs, (1918) A. C. 557. In that case the validity of an order made by the acting Governor of Trinidad was challenged on the ground that it was not made on a statutory exercise of discretion vested in the Governor, by Section 203 of the Immigration Ordinance No. 161. That section empowered the Governor to transfer the indentures of immigrants "on sufficient ground shown to his satisfaction, that all or any of the immigrants indentured on any plantation should be removed therefrom." The Governor in exercise of this power transferred the indentures and certain immigrants from a particular estate upon a complaint with regard to the treatment and condition of the indentured immigrants on the estate. It was held that the Governor could not carry out the duty entrusted to him without making some inquiry if sufficient grounds had been made out that the immigrants indentured on a particular estate should be removed and that in making such inquiry there was a duty of giving to any person against whom the complaint was made a fair opportunity to make any relevant statement which he might desire to bring forward and a fair opportunity to controvert any statement made to his prejudice. This decision, again, is of no assistance to the petitioner in this case, because upon a complaint being made against the employer of indentured labourers an inquiry was to be made by the Governor and all that was held was that before coming to a decision the Governor who was to hold the inquiry must give the party against whom a complaint was made an opportunity of making representation against the complaint. An inquiry was to be made on a complaint of a particular nature and quite plainly the person against whom the complaint was made must be given opportunity of making proper representation. To my mind, this decision, has no application to the instant case now before me.

31. I now turn to the next contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner. This was based on the definition of "imported goods" in sub-section (25) of Section 2 of the Act. This definition is as follows:—

"(25) 'Imported goods' means any goods brought into India from a place outside India but does not include goods which have been cleared for home consumption."

It was argued that the goods in this case had been cleared upon payment of Customs duty and as these goods were cleared for home consumption they were not 'imported goods' within the meaning of the Act. It was argued that the Customs authorities had released the goods upon payment of the duty imposed, and this decision of the customs authorities to release the goods could not be revised or rescinded by any authority other than the Central Board of Revenue in exercise of its jurisdiction under S. 130 (1) of the Act. In other words, the argument was that the Customs authorities had released the goods upon payment of the duty assessed; and these goods were meant for home consumption and therefore they ceased to be imported goods within the meaning of the Act; the goods were imported under a valid licence and the duty assessed on the import was duly paid. The decision to release the goods upon payment of duty was conclusive and irrevocable; this decision could be revised only by the Central Board of Revenue under Section 130 of the Act. In this case, it was argued, there was no such decision by the Board and therefore the goods which were lawfully imported, and which were released upon payment of duty had ceased to be imported goods and no action could be taken with regard to them.

32. This argument though attractive, seems to me to be without merit. The different sections of the Act cannot be read in isolation. The definition of "imported goods" in Section 2 (25) has to be read along with Section 111 of the Act which deals with goods brought from a place outside India. This section is in Chapter XIV of the Act which provides for confiscation of goods and conveyances and imposition of penalties. Under Section 111 (d) of the Act any goods which are imported contrary to any prohibition imposed by or under this Act or any other law for the time being in force shall be liable to confiscation. The goods which have been seized in this case cannot be imported into India without a licence under the Import Control Act and there is therefore a prohibition in law for the import of the goods except in compliance within Import Control Act. It is true that the goods were cleared from the Customs barrier on the basis of import licence produced by the petitioner, but the respondents' case is that the import licences, on the basis of which the goods were cleared were not genuine. The licences which were utilised by the petitioner for the purpose of clearing the goods, according to the respondents, were forged licences. If a licence is forged it is no licence at all, and any import of goods, of which the importation is prohibited by law, cannot be a valid import under the Act. Goods so imported cannot therefore be treated to be lawfully "imported goods" within the definition of that term in Section 2 (25) of the Act. Since the respondents' case is that the licences on the basis of which the goods were imported were forged licences, if the allegation of forgery is true, the goods must be held to have been brought into India contrary to a prohibition imposed by law as contemplated by Section 111 (d) of the Act, and in that case such goods are liable to confiscation and the power to seize under Section 110 (1) of the Act can be invoked by the Customs authorities and the goods, though cleared after payment of duty can be seized under Section 110 (1) of the Act. The contention on behalf of the petitioner that the goods having been imported into India for home consumption would cease to be imported goods and the decision of the Customs authorities to release the goods upon payment of the duty imposed cannot be revised by any authority other than the Board in exercise of its power under Section 130 (1) of the Act therefore fails and is rejected.

33. Before turning to the decision relied on by the learned counsel for the respondents in support of the proposition that the order is an administrative order and no show cause notice need therefore be served and no opportunity to make representation need be given, I should refer to one decision relied on by Mr. R. C. Deb learned counsel for the petitioner in Matter No. 359 of 1966. The facts involved in that case are the same, and the same questions arise for consideration. Mr. Deb adopted the arguments advanced by Mr. A. K. Sen and supplemented them by certain further contentions. He argued that in Bibhuti Bhushan Bagh's case, (1969) 73 Cal WN 340 (supra) Ghose, J., had given two reasons in making the Rule absolute namely that the order of extension was served and communicated after the expiry of the initial period of six months from the date of seizure, and secondly that the Customs Officer was bound to have a judicial approach in making the order of extension and therefore should have given a notice to the party whose goods were seized, before making the order of extension. Mr. Deb submitted that both these reasons were ratio decidendi of the case and that it was not open to the learned counsel for the respondents to contend that the conclusion of Ghose, J.

that the order of extension was bad on the ground that a show cause notice and an opportunity of being heard was not given to the party, was an obiter dictum. In support of this contention Mr. Deb relied upon a decision of the House of Lords Jacobs v. London County Council (1950) 1 All ER 737. I accept Mr. Deb's contention that both the reasons given by Ghose J. are to be taken as the ratio decidendi of that case. But as I said earlier while dealing with Bibhuti Bhusan Bagh's case, (1969) 73 Cal WN 340 (supra) the decisions of Ghose J. were based on the facts of that case which are quite distinguishable from the facts in the present writ petition. The order of extension in that case was not served and communicated until December 16, 1966, after the expiry of six months, although it was made within the period of six months, and Ghose J. held that the order must be treated to have been made on the day on which it was communicated. In this case, on the other hand, the order of extension was made before the expiry of the period of six months and therefore the facts in this case are quite distinguishable from the facts in Bibhuti Bhusan Bagh's case. By the time the order of extension was served on the party in Bibhuti Bhusan Bagh's case, 1969-73 Cal WN 340 (supra) the six months had expired and it was contended that the petitioner had acquired a vested right to the return of the goods. It was in these facts that Ghose J. came to the conclusion following the Bench decision in Charandas Malhotra's case, AIR 1968 Cal 28 (supra) that the Customs Officer should have had a judicial approach and should have given a show cause notice and an opportunity of being heard.

34. Let me now turn to the decisions relied on by the learned counsel for the respondents on the question namely whether the Customs Officer should have a judicial approach in making the order of extension or whether the order is an administrative order and no show cause notice and opportunity of being heard need be given to the party. The first decision relied upon was a Bench decision of the Mysore High Court reported in AIR 1968 Mys 89, Ganesh Mul Channilal v. Collector of Central Excise and Asst. Collector, Bangalore. In that case the same question was raised namely the validity of an order of extension made under the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act. Certain pieces of gold were seized under Section 110 (1) of the Act on the ground that there was reason to believe that the goods were liable to confiscation. The seizure was made on February 21, 1963. On September 19, 1963, a communication was sent by the Collector of Customs to the parties which purported to be an order of extension under the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act extending the time, within which a notice under Section 124 of the Act could be served, till February 20, 1964. This communication was followed by a show cause notice under Section 124 dated December 19, 1963. A writ petition was filed challenging the order of extension and also the seizure of the goods under Section 110 (1). The Division Bench held that there could be hardly any doubt that before an order of seizure could be made the proper officer should have reason to believe that the goods which were proposed to be seized were liable to confiscation and that it was equally clear that the belief which he should form in his mind was a subjective belief on ground which he need not disclose and which were not subject to judicial review. On the question whether a show cause notice should be given by the Collector of Customs before making the order of extension it was held as follows at p. 93 of the report:

"We take the view that the power created by the proviso to Section 110(2) by the exercise of which the Collector could extend the period for service of the notice, could be exercised by the Collector without hearing the person from whom the goods were seized. That power is an administrative power, through the exercise of which all that the Collector does is to extend the period during which the investigation should be completed before the commencement of the proceedings in which the question has to be decided whether the goods have to be confiscated or not. At that stage, what the Collector has to do is to apply his mind to the question whether there was any special difficulty which constituted impediments to the completion of investigation within the period of six months to which Section 110 (2) refers and exercise his discretion in favour of its extension if he was satisfied that there was any such justification for non-completion of the investigation. It would surely be a very unusual and inconvenient thing for the Collector at this stage to call upon the person from whom the goods were seized to show cause why the delay should not be condoned or to reveal to him the difficulties which were encountered during the investigation and which was responsible for its non-completion within the prescribed period. Disclosure of these grounds to the person from whom the goods were seized would be against public interest and would be utterly detrimental to the completion of the investigation. We therefore take the view that the petitioner had no right to be heard at the stage when the Collector ordered the extension."

Reliance was next placed on a Bench decision of the Bombay High Court reported in AIR 1967 Bom 138, Vasantlal v. Union of India. In that case the Enforcement Department conducted a search on the strength of a search warrant and recovered certain diamonds. On the day following the search, a safe was opened and some further packets of diamonds were recovered. All the diamonds remained in the custody of the Enforcement Directorate till September 14, 1964, on which day the Customs Department took charge of the diamonds and seized them under Section 110 of the Customs Act. On March 4, 1965, the Collector of Customs made an order of extension under the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act and on May 27, 1965, a further extension of three months was granted. It was contended that as the seizure by the Customs Officer was made on September 4, 1964, the period of six months expired on March 3, 1965, and no order of extension could have been made after that date. It was held that Section 9 of the General Clauses Act applied and the order of extension which was made on March 4, 1965, was made within time. The order of extension was held to be valid although no show cause notice or opportunity of being heard was given to the party. I must point out, however, that the question of validity of the order on the ground that no show cause notice was given by the Collector of Customs in making the order of extension under the proviso to Section 110 (2), and also on the ground of an opportunity of being heard was not given were not canvassed before the Court and these questions were not discussed in the judgment. The order, however, was held to be valid. I have already expressed my views on these questions namely the validity of the order of extension having regard to the fact that no notice to show cause was served upon the petitioner and no opportunity of being heard was given to him. All that I need say at this stage is that with respect I agree with and accept the views expressed by the Division Bench of the Mysore High Court and of the Bombay High Court mentioned above.

35. The next case relied upon by the learned counsel for the respondents was a decision of the Supreme Court R. S. Sethi Gopi Kisan v. R. N. Sen, AIR 1967 SC 1298. In that case upon information received that the appellant was in possession of undeclared gold the Customs authorities issued an authorisation under the Defence of India (Amendment) Rules, 1963, (Gold Control Rules) for searching the appellant's premises. The search was accordingly carried out and gold and other articles, foreign currency and documents were seized. Writ petition filed by the parties before the Bombay High Court was dismissed and thereafter the matter went up to the Supreme Court. The first contention was that in the authorisation it was not stated that there was a reason to believe that goods were secreted. It was held that though the words 'reasons to believe' were not embodied in the authorisation the phraseology used in it had the same effect. The next point decided was that the S. 105 of the Act did not require the Customs Officer to give reasons for his belief and that while it was advisable and proper to give reasons the non-mention of reasons in itself did not vitiate the order. The next question decided was that it was not necessary to set out the particulars of the nature of the goods and of the documents in the authorisation. To my mind, this decision is not of any assistance in this case. The question of validity of the authorisation on the ground that the reason to believe had not been set out in it or on the ground that goods and documents had not been specified was not canvassed on behalf of the petitioner in this case.

36. The next contention of the learned counsel for the respondents was that the license used by the petitioner for the purpose of clearing the goods was not a genuine license, but was a forged one, and therefore there was no license at all; and that being so, the import of the goods was unlawful and the goods even though cleared from the Customs barrier, were liable to confiscation and the petitioner who was responsible for using a forged licence for clearing the goods was in addition liable to an order of penalty. In support of this contention reliance was placed on a decision of the Supreme Court, Fedco (P) Ltd. v. S. N. Bilgrami, AIR 1960 SC 415. In that case it was held that the entire scheme of control and regulation of imports by licences was on the basis that the licence was granted on a correct statement of relevant fact and that if the grant of the licence was induced by fraud or misrepresentation that basis disappeared. It was also held that it would be absolutely unreasonable that such licence should be allowed to continue. In my view this contention of the learned counsel for the respondents is well founded. The import of goods on a licence, in the case of goods the import of which is prohibited, must be confined to imports made on a licence lawfully obtained. If a licence is forged, and I wish to make it clear that in this case I do not say that it has been forged, as that would be a matter for determination in other proceedings against the petitioner, there is no licence at all. The respondents' case is that the licence used by the petitioner is a forged one, and if such forgery is proved in appropriate confiscatory and penal provisions of the proceedings, the import of the goods would be unlawful and would attract the Customs Act and other statutes.

37. I shall now proceed to deal with the question of validity of the show cause notices under Section 124 of the Act. The respondents moved an application for modification of the order of injunction made by this Court while issuing the Rule Nisi. That application was disposed of by me by a judgment delivered on March 12, 1968. In opposing the application learned counsel for the petitioner had contended that under the order of extension by two months communicated by the letter of May 30, 1966, the two months extension commenced from June 1, 1966, and expired on July 31, 1966, and no further extension was granted and therefore the extended period expired on July 31, 1966. The notices under S. 124 of the Act were served on 1-10-66, 3-10-66, 15-10-66 and 8-11-66 and in Matter No. 359 of 1966 these notices were served on October 3, 1966 and October 15, 1966. These show cause notices under Section 124 of the Act were issued after the Rule Nisi was issued, and the order for interim injunction was made restraining the respondents from taking any steps on the basis of or in connection with the seizure of the goods and the order of detention dated December 5, 1965. I have already dealt with this contention earlier in this judgment. I need not therefore say anything more on this question except that the order of injunction obtained by the petitioner restrained the respondents from taking any steps in connection with the seizure and the order of detention. Quite clearly the show cause notices under Section 124 of the Act could not be issued by the Customs authorities in violation of the order of injunction. The injunction restrained the respondents from issuing the show cause notices under S. 124 of the Act, and the respondents became entitled to serve the show cause notice only after the order modifying the order of injunction was made on September 27, 1966. The petitioner had moved the Court for the order of injunction, and had obtained the same, and it is not open to him to contend that the show cause notices are bad as they were issued beyond the extended period of two months which expired on July 31, 1966.

38. These show cause notices were served, as I noticed earlier, after the Rule Nisi was issued by this Court and is therefore outside the scope of the Rule Nisi, and strictly speaking in disposing of this application, I am not called upon to deal with the question of validity of the show cause notices. But by the consent order made on September 27, 1966, the question of validity of the show cause notices is to be dealt with by the Court at the hearing of the Rule. That being the position I have to go into the question if the show cause notices issued by the Customs authorities under Section 124 of the Act are valid.

39. The contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner with regard to these notices is that they are invalid as they were issued beyond the extended period of two months, even assuming the order of extension was good. As I have noticed earlier the order of injunction restrained the respondents from taking any further steps in connection with the seizure and with the order of detention. The respondents could not, even if they wanted to, issue the show cause notices by reason of the order of injunction obtained by the petitioner. The show cause notices were issued, as they could only be issued, after the injunction was modified enabling the respondents to serve the show cause notices. As the order of this Court prevented the respondents from issuing the show cause notices, and as they were enabled to issue such notices only after the order made on September 27, 1966, I cannot hold that the show cause notices are invalid because they were issued after the expiry of the extended period of two months. Time in this case for issue of the show cause notices lapsed because of the order of injunction issued by this Court, and this injunction was obtained by the petitioner, and in my view the petitioner cannot now plead lapse of time as the ground of the invalidity of the show cause notices. In my view, therefore, the show cause notices issued by the Customs authorities under Section 124 (1) of the Act are valid.

40. Let me now examine the question if the respondents had acted fairly in making the order of seizure and detention and also in extending the original period of six months in exercise of the powers conferred by the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act. In paragraph 14 of the affidavit-in-opposition affirmed by Maurich Galestine on August 31, 1968, it is said that there were definite materials for the reason to believe that the goods were liable to confiscation, particularly the documents relating to import of watch parts against forged I. T. C. licence on account of Messrs. Bhagwan Dass and Company, which was recovered from the show-room at premises No. 6, Dalhousie Square East and the disclosure made in the course of inquiry revealed that the goods were prima facie liable to confiscation. In paragraph 32 of this affidavit it is said that there are systematic infringement of prohibition committed by the petitioner regarding import of parts of watches and time-pieces parts, on the strength of documents recovered from the petitioner's premises which relate to forged import trade licences valued at Rs. 1,73,946. In paragraph 38 of this affidavit it is said that inquiries made had disclosed that the petitioner with others at Calcutta, Delhi and other places had been party to a conspiracy for unlawful import of watch-parts and time-pieces parts valued at Rs. 25 lacs. In paragraph 12 of the affidavit-in-opposition affirmed by Chittaranjan Dutta on September 12, 1966, in Matter No. 359 of 1966, it is said that there were facts and circumstances to indicate that the petitioner with other person was concerned in the fraudulent importation of the parts of the time-pieces, watches etc. against the various forged I. T. C. Licences including those forged and purported to have been issued for a sum of Rs. 3,08,600 in favour of Sudershan Industries and that documents concerning this firm were recovered from the petitioner's premises and for that reason there was reason to believe that the goods in question were smuggled goods and were liable to confiscation. In paragraph 27 of this affidavit it is said that there was sufficient cause for extension of the period under S. 110 (2) of the Act and that inquiries with regard to systematic infringement of the orders of prohibition committed by the petitioner and others in and outside West Bengal could not be completed within the period of six months from the date of seizure and/or detention.

41. The respondents have disclosed in the affidavits filed on their behalf the materials which provided the reasons to believe, that the goods which had been seized are liable to confiscation. According to the respondents forged licences had been used by the petitioner for the purpose of importation of the goods. According to the respondents again the petitioner had entered into a conspiracy with other persons at Delhi and other places for unlawful import of watch parts and time-pieces valued at a large sum of money. Show cause notices under Section 124 of the Act had been served upon the petitioner. He will therefore have the opportunity of disproving the charge of importation of goods on forged licence. The allegations in the affidavits-in-opposition, to which I have referred, disclosed in my view, prima facie at any rate, that there were grounds for reason to believe that the goods were liable to confiscation. Sufficiency of the grounds for a reason to believe is a matter of subjective satisfaction of the Customs Officer.

42. Turning now to the impugned order of extension made in exercise of the powers under the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act, it is to be noticed that there is no charge against the Collector of Customs that this order has been made capriciously or arbitrarily or dishonestly or that the Collector of Customs was biased against the petitioner. The only ground of attack on the order of extension was that it was made in violation of the rules of natural justice, inasmuch as no notice was served upon the petitioner to show cause why an order of extension should not be made, and the petitioner was given no opportunity of being heard. Chapter XIII of the Act deals with searches, seizure and arrest, and Section 110 of the Act is in this chapter. The order of extension contemplated by the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act is to be made where a notice under Section 124 of the Act could not be served within the initial period of six months. As I have noticed earlier the cause that can be shown for an order of extension is that inquiries from particular persons or at particular places could not be completed within the specified period for one reason or another. If notice is to be served upon the persons whose goods have been seized, that inquiries have yet to be made from particular persons or at particular places, the purpose of the investigation itself would be defeated. Such investigation to succeed must in its very nature be of a confidential character. It must be made in secrecy and behind the back of the party whose goods have been seized. To give notice to the party against whom the investigation is to be made, that inquiries have yet to be made from particular persons at particular places, would not only be contrary to the scheme of the Act but would be against public interest. It can by no means be said that there was lack of fairness on the part of the Collector of Customs in making the order of extension without notice to the party and without giving an opportunity of being heard. The Collector of Customs must be satisfied that there is sufficient cause for making an order of extension. The scheme of the Act, in my view, does not demand that he should have a judicial approach in coming to a decision if there is sufficient cause for making an order of extension when such an order is made before expiry of the time. The satisfaction of the Collector of Customs on the question of sufficiency of the cause is not justiciable and there can be no judicial review of an order of extension duly made by the Collector of Customs, unless such an order is made in violation of the provision in the statute, after expiry of six months fixed by the statute or expiry of the period of extension.

43. The question when an administrative or executive officer is required to act judicially or quasi-judicially is by no means uncertain. As early as 1950 this question came up before the Supreme Court and two tests were laid down which have since been adhered to in all other decisions of the Supreme Court on this question. These two tests were laid down in Province of Bombay v. Khushaldas S. Advani, AIR 1950 SC 222. After reviewing merely all the decisions on the question it was held at pp. 259-260 of the report as follows:—

"What are the principles to be deduced from the two lines of cases I have referred to? The principles, as I apprehend them, are: (i) that if a statute empowers an authority, not being a Court in the ordinary sense, to decide disputes arising out of a claim made by one party under the statute which claim is opposed by another party and to determine the respective rights of the contesting parties who are opposed to each other there is a lis and prima facie, and in the absence of anything in the statute to the contrary it is the duty of the authority to act judicially and the decision of the authority is a quasi-judicial act; and (ii) that if a statutory authority has power to do any act which will prejudicially affect the subject, then, although there are not two parties apart from the authority and the contest is between the authority proposing to do the act and the subject opposing it, the final determination of the authority will yet be a quasi-judicial act provided the authority is required by the statute to act judicially."

In the instant case the second principle is attracted and applying that principle can it be said that the statute in this case requires the authority to act judicially? On an analysis of the scheme of the Act and the requirement by the statute itself of notice to a party in particular cases, the answer to the question cannot but be in the negative. There is nothing in the statute which requires the Collector of Customs to act judicially and to direct him to act judicially or quasi-judicially and compel him to serve notice upon the party whose goods have been seized before making an order of extension under the proviso to Section 110 (2) of the Act would be contrary to the statute itself and would defeat its purpose.

44. For the reasons mentioned above this application fails and is accordingly dismissed. The Rule is discharged. There will be no order as to costs. All interim orders are vacated.

45. The questions involved in Matter No. 359 of 1966 Sheikh Serajuddin v. The Assistant Collector of Customs for Preventive and others which was heard along with Matter No. 332 of 1966 are identical. For the reasons mentioned in my judgment in Matter No. 332 of 1966 this application is also dismissed. The Rule is discharged. All interim orders are vacated. Each party to pay its own costs.

Petition dismissed.

Haripada Moitra, Petitioner v. President, Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 2440 of 1965, D/- 27-6-1969.

(A) Constitution of India, Article 227 — Power of superintendence — Nature of, stated.

The power of superintendence is in addition to the power conferred upon the High Court to control inferior Courts and Tribunals by means of writs under Article 226 but the power under Article 227 is not as extensive as that under Article 226 in certain respects and in exercise of the powers under Article 227, the High Court cannot exercise its powers under Article 226. This power again is discretionary and cannot be claimed as of right by any party. The power of general superintendence conferred under Article 227 invokes a duty on the part of the High Court to keep all Courts and Tribunals within its territorial jurisdiction, within bounds of their authority, to see that they do what their duty requires and that they do it in a legal manner. This power, however cannot be used as an appellate or revisional power and must be exercised most sparingly when interference is called for in cases of grave dereliction of duty or flagrant violation of law.

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Natural justice — Formal cross-examination is not part of natural justice but of legal and statutory justice. AIR 1967 Cal 80 Foll.

(C) Calcutta Improvement Act (5 of 1911), S. 74 — Power to reduce, suspend or dismiss any member of staff — It is exercised by President as administrative officer and not as Court or tribunal though he has to act observing principles of natural justice — Power of superintendence of High Court under Art. 227 of Constitution does not extend to exercise of administrative power — (Constitution of India, Art. 227.) (Para 36)

(D) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Natural justice — Disciplinary proceedings against employee — Employee deliberately not appearing and explaining charges against him, with an eye to future legal remedy — Such conduct goes against his plea that he had no opportunity to defend and that proceedings were conducted in violation of the principles of natural justice.

Nani Coomar Chakravarti and Nepal Chandra Sen, for Petitioner; G. P. Kar and Somen Bose, for Respondent.

DAS, J.: This is an application under Art. 227 of the Constitution for setting aside an order dt. March 10, 1965, passed by the opposite party President Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, dismissing the petitioner and imposing a penalty by way of deducting a portion of the contributory provident fund.

2. The petitioner Haripada Moitra joined the Improvement Trust Tribunal as accountant in 1935 and was promoted as Chief Ministerial Officer in 1938, the designation of which part was changed to Superintendent of the Improvement Tribunal.

His retirement was due on March 15, 1959 on attainment of the age of 55 but he was granted extension of service for one year at a time for six such terms, the last of which expired on March 15, 1965.

3. In 1936, the then President of the Tribunal directed the petitioner to look after the records of the tribunal in addition and to stay in a portion of the office premises of the tribunal as a Court keeper, though such stay was not a condition of the employment relating to this additional work.

In 1941, Government sanctioned a special allowance of Rs. 30 for this additional job which however, did not entail any responsibility for furniture of the tribunal, as he was placed merely in overall supervision of the furniture. In August 1, 1964, he relinquished the charge of this additional work, under pressure from the opposite party, president of the tribunal.

4. The opposite party assumed charge as President and started with bias against him, as he pointed out several illegal and irregular acts done by him in connection with appointment and discharge of officer of the tribunal. Trouble then started over the opposite party's demand on petitioner to vacate a portion of accommodation which the petitioner was holding adjacent to the quarter of the court keeper — which the petitioner refused.

5. Petitioner went on leave in August 1964 and after a short break again went on medical leave due to expire on December 6, 1964.

6. By an order dated December 5, 1964, the Opposite party placed the petitioner under suspension with effect from December 5, 1964 and his application for extension of leave was rejected. On December 28, 1964, the petitioner was served with charge-sheet and two proceedings were started against him.

7. The charges related to furniture, his failure to stay in the quarters during his term as Court Keeper, for which he drew allowance, for not immediately making over possession to the entire premises in his occupation as Court Keeper to his successor and for breach of office discipline and misappropriation of office articles.

8. The petitioner was thereafter directed to show cause why he should not be dismissed from service, make good the property, refund the allowances, and also, why deduction shall not be made from his provident fund under Rules of the tribunal.

9. The petitioner who was ill and on medical leave, denied all the charges and prayed for copies of documents, specified in the list annexed to the letter and for time to submit explanations.

10. The petition was rejected and the petitioner was informed that the copies of the documents could not be furnished 'at that stage'. His subsequent prayer for transferring the proceeding to some other authority, as the opposite party was himself a material witness, was also rejected.

11. Various correspondence thereafter followed but the petitioner's requests were not complied with and the proceedings continued ex parte, and the petitioner was not allowed to be represented by a lawyer.

12. By an order dated February 24, 1965, the opposite party found the charges proved and passed an order directing refund of Rs. 3,500 drawn by petitioner over a period of 10 years for failure to stay in the quarters, for compensation for the loss of furniture, and dismissing him from service.

13. The petitioner was served with a copy of the order and directed to show cause why he should not be dismissed from service.

14. The petitioner submitted a representation showing cause against the proposed penalty and submitting comments on the entire case.

15. The petitioner contends that the action of the opposite party amounts to violation of the principles of natural justice, as he was denied sufficient opportunity to show cause, by supplying the copies of documents, by adjourning the hearing and allowing him to be represented by a lawyer and by the further fact that the opposite party being himself the accuser and a material witness, started with a bias against him.

16. The petitioner contends that the opposite party President has been vested with 'larger, untrammelled and uncontrolled power' and the said powers have not been regulated by any Rules made under Section 74 (2) of the Act. The petitioner further contends that the provisions of S. 74 of the Act giving absolute powers to the President in the matter of reduction, suspension and dismissal of officers and servants of the tribunal are discriminatory and ultra vires Art. 14 of the Constitution.

17. Petitioner therefore contends that the order of dismissal and deduction from the provident fund is wrongful, mala fide, illegal and should be set aside.

18. The opposite party President of the tribunal filed an affidavit in opposition claiming that this application under Art. 227 is not maintainable as the President of the tribunal does not act as Judicial or quasi-judicial Tribunal in the matter of taking disciplinary action against officers appointed by him under the provisions of the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911. He contends that Art. 311 of the Constitution does not apply and no rules have been framed under the provision of this Act for disciplinary action against employees and therefore the ordinary law of master and servant applies. The order passed by the President is an administrative order and as such, it is not amenable to High Court's jurisdiction under Art. 227 of the Constitution.

19. There is a general denial of the allegations on fact made in the petition and a claim that the power of suspending and dismissing officers and servants of the Tribunal vests in the President alone.

20. The petitioner could not be easily contacted at his house though he was instructing his solicitors in several matters relating to the proceeding, repeating prayers for copies of documents and for adjournments and for transfer of proceedings. The depositions of witnesses and exhibits and the copy of list of furniture were sent to petitioner by messenger but he made no submissions and only prayed for adjournment on the ground of illness which was not believed by the opposite party.

21. The opposite party contends that the petitioner's story of illness was false and mala fide and that he was given sufficient opportunity to appear and answer the charges but he did not avail of that and should not therefore now be permitted to raise the plea that the principles of natural justice were not observed in dealing with the charges against the petitioner.

22. Final order in respect of the two proceedings was passed on 10-3-65, Annexure X to the petition. The President thereafter recorded the following order:

"On the findings, therefore, as recorded in order No. 22 of 24-2-64, in proceeding No. 1 of 1964 and order no. 22 of 3-3-1965 in proceeding No. 2 of 1964 and on his being found guilty on the charges therein, he be dismissed from service as superintendent of this office with effect from the afternoon of this date.

It was further found that the grounds on which he was dismissed are acts of grave misconduct including act of embezzlement and negligence causing loss to the tribunal and to the Trust. It was therefore ordered that a sum of Rs. 3,500 be deducted from his provident fund under Rule 12 of the Contributory Provident Fund Rules, read with Section 6 (b) of the Provident Funds Act.

23. The petitioner has challenged the order passed by the President particularly on the ground of jurisdiction and also on the ground of violation of the principles of natural justice. The President was himself the prosecutor and a witness and had a bias against him, which rendered him unfit to hold the enquiry and to punish him. The charges framed are bad in law and no opportunity was given to petitioner who was ailing, to appear and defend his honour and honesty. He was not given copies of papers upon which charges were framed even after the President made a tentative decision to dismiss him and this ex parte enquiry and order of dismissal and deduction of Provident Fund Money is violative of the principles of natural justice.

24. Art. 227 of the Constitution gives power of Superintendence over Courts and Tribunals to the High Court and the relevant portion of the Article read as follows:—

"Every High Court shall have superintendence over all Courts and tribunals throughout the territories in relation to which it exercises jurisdiction" except Military Courts and Tribunals.

This power of Superintendence is in addition to the power conferred upon the High Court to control inferior Courts and Tribunals by means of writs under Art. 226 but the power under Art. 227 is not as extensive as that under Art. 226 in certain respects and in exercise of the powers under Art. 227, the High Court cannot exercise its powers under Art. 226. This power again is discretionary and cannot be claimed as of right by any party. The power of general superintendence conferred under Art. 227 invokes a duty on the part of the High Court to keep all Courts and Tribunals within its territorial jurisdiction, within bounds of their authority, to see that they do what their duty requires and that they do it in a legal manner. This power, however, cannot be used as an appellate or revisional power and must be exercised most sparingly when interference is called for in cases of grave dereliction of duty or flagrant violation of law.

25. Mr. Chakraborty, learned Advocate for the petitioner has principally rested his argument on what he termed as arbitrary exercise of power as President of the Calcutta Improvement Trust Tribunal in violation of the principles of natural justice and he, therefore, invoked the aid of the Court's jurisdiction under Art. 227 for interference.

26. The petitioner was the Chief Ministerial officer in the office of the Improvement Trust Tribunal of which the opposite party was the President. Petitioner was due to retire with effect from March 15, 1959 and he was given several successive extensions — six terms of one year each. Petitioner went on leave in August, 1964 and after a short break, again went on medical leave due to expire on December 6, 1964. He was, however, placed under suspension with effect from December 5, 1964 and on December 28, 1964, petitioner received 2 charge-sheets against him. Then started a series of correspondence between petitioner and the President — Petitioner's claim for certain papers were turned down, petitioner did not attend the enquiry and his request to engage a solicitor to defend him was rejected, though copies of proceedings including evidence recorded and documents were sent to him at his residence. His plea for transfer of the enquiry to a different authority and his plea for long adjournments on medical grounds were also turned down. The President-opposite party made a tentative decision to dismiss him and communicated the decision to him for further explanation. The petitioner again raised similar contentions and did not participate by personal appearance. Long and protracted correspondence, all with the object of delaying consideration of the charges ill-befits petitioner's plea of serious illness, making his participation difficult on grounds of health. Such correspondence with reservation that he was not participating in the ex parte proceeding is likely to raise a suspicion that it is motivated. This is abundantly clear from his letter dated February 18, 1965, Annexure Q(1) where he wrote "Please note that by this it must not be thought that I am taking part in ex parte proceeding." Obviously, he was advised against appearing and explaining the charges and he was acting with an eye to future legal remedy. Such conduct goes against his plea that he had no opportunity to defend and that the proceeding was conducted in violation of the principles of natural justice. It is true that at times, the President's order seemed strange and harsh and smacked of arbitrariness; his requests for certain copies were turned down without recording reasons, his petitions for time at all stages were rejected and he was given only a week's time to show cause against dismissal. These are, however, matters within the discretion of the President and in view of the determined refusal of the petitioner to participate in the hearing of the proceedings, it is difficult to say that the principles of natural justice were violated. A departmental proceeding is a two-sided affair — the officer drawing up the proceeding must be reasonable and helpful in allowing the person who is charge-sheeted to meet the case; equally, the latter must participate, instead of attempting to block the enquiry. Unfortunately neither went by that standard and the occasional lapses by the President is more than compensated by the studied refusal of the petitioner to participate on pleas which do not appear to be substantiated. We are therefore, unable to hold that the principle of natural justice was violated, to the prejudice of the petition.

27. Mr. N. C. Chakravarti, learned Advocate for petitioner has submitted that the President had a bias against the petitioner and combined in himself a prosecutor and judge, in spite of protest and petitioner was condemned unheard, as he had no reasonable opportunity to appear and defend his honour. We have already discussed the circumstances in which the charges against the petitioner were heard ex parte. The petitioner indulged in lengthy and protracted correspondence while pleading inability to attend on grounds of health which makes it abundantly clear he never wanted to participate but merely to delay it, for future favourable circumstances. The learned Advocate strenuously argued the principle of natural justice, forgetting that no natural justice requires that, there shall be a formal cross-examination. A Division Bench of this Court held in the case, reported in AIR 1967 Cal 80 that formal cross examination is procedural justice, it is governed by the rules of evidence, it is the creation of court, not a part of natural justice, but of legal and statutory justice. In the instant case, charges were framed, evidence was taken and considered and even copies of evidence and document sent to the petitioner, although he refused to participate. Indeed, he sent lengthy letter, disclosing the nature of his defence, though at the same time attempting to make it clear that he was not participating in the ex parte enquiry. It is not for this court to lay down what documents should be furnished at what stage or what adjournments should be granted or whether a medical certificate should be believed, but the entire proceeding leaves an impression that the petitioner was determined not to participate in the enquiry by the opposite party. The plea of a bias and prayer for transfer of the proceeding to some other authority is apparently not bona fide but merely out of a motive for delaying the consideration of the charges. No failure of the principles of natural justice is, therefore, involved and the argument is misconceived.

28. This brings us to the question whether this principle can be invoked in an application under Art. 227 of the Constitution against decision by the opposite party President of the tribunal. The jurisdiction of the High Court on an application under Art. 227 of the Constitution is supervisory over all courts and tribunals when it outstrips the limits of its jurisdiction or acts in excess of authority vested under the law. Tests for exercise of this power under Art. 227 have been laid down in the case reported in (1967) 71 CWN 152, B. Haldar v. P. M. Chakraborty and several other decisions and the High Court draws its jurisdiction over Courts and Tribunals and none over administrative decisions or orders. Mr. Chakraborty has drawn our attention to several decisions based on the failure of natural justice but these are decisions under Art. 226 of the Constitution where the Court exercised its control over the inferior Courts and Tribunals by means of the writs. The power of judicial superintendence conferred by Art. 227 is not as extensive as the power conferred by Art. 226 and it can be exercised over Courts and Tribunals only in certain circumstances, earlier pointed out and enumerated in the decision reported in (1967) 71 Cal WN 152. Mr. Chakraborty referred to Binapani Dei's case, reported in AIR 1967 SC 1269 in support of the argument that even administrative orders which involve evil consequences have to be passed consistently with rules of natural justice, but that was a decision in exercise of the power under Art. 226. It was also pointed out in J. P. Mitter's case reported in (1967) 71 Cal WN 926, that the doctrine of natural justice is not attracted where the function is purely administrative as distinguished from quasi-judicial. It is true also that the "area where principles of natural justice have to be followed and judicial approach has to be adopted has become wider and consequently the horizon of writ jurisdiction has been extended in a corresponding measure but then this power can be exercised in exercise of the writ jurisdiction under Art. 226 and not in exercise of the power of superintendence under Art. 227 of the Constitution.

29. In the case reported in AIR 1967 SC 361 Bharat Barrel and Drum Mfg. Co. v. L. K. Bose, it was pointed out by the Supreme Court that while considering the question, the Court should not proceed as if there are only inflexible rules of natural justice of universal application. Court has to consider in each case whether in the light of the facts and circumstances of the case, nature of issues involved, nature of order passed, and interests affected merely, a fair and reasonable opportunity of being heard was furnished to the person affected.

30. As already pointed out, the supervisory jurisdiction under Art. 227 is over Courts and Tribunals and does not extend to acts in the exercise of administrative jurisdiction where the relationship is that of master and servant. The aggrieved party may have other remedy but this Court has no jurisdiction to interfere under Art. 227 in exercise of supervisory jurisdiction.

31. The President is the administrative head, empowered to take disciplinary action. He framed charges, served copies, took evidence, invited petitioner to participate and cross-examine witness. He considered the evidence and documents and passed certain orders. One aspect of Mr. Chakraborty's argument has been that the President was acting as a tribunal and therefore subject to supervisory jurisdiction of the Court under Art. 227. In Maqbul Hossen's case, reported in AIR 1953 SC 325, it was held that the customs officer is not a Court or Tribunal though in adjudicating upon matters under S. 167 of the Act he has to act in a judicial manner.

An identical question was again considered by the Supreme Court in a decision reported in AIR 1964 SC 1140. Indo China Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. v. Jasjit Singh, in connection with an application under Article 136 of the Constitution. This Article empowers the Supreme Court to entertain an application on two conditions being satisfied, firstly the order impugned must be an order of judicial or quasi-judicial character and should not be purely an administrative or executive order; secondly, the said order should have been passed either by a Court or a Tribunal in the territory of India. Article 136 of the Constitution relates to orders passed by "Court" or "Tribunal". Court's power of superintendence under Article 227 is also over courts and tribunals and therefore the view expressed by Supreme Court as to what constitutes a Court or tribunal should form the guiding line in deciding the question. The Supreme Court held as follows:

"It is clear that before an appeal can be entertained in this Court under Art. 136, two conditions have to be satisfied; the order impugned must be an order of a judicial or quasi-judicial character and should not be purely an administrative or executive order; and the said order should have been passed either by a Court or a Tribunal in the territory of India. It is difficult to lay down any definite or precise test for determining the character of a body which is called upon to adjudicate upon matters brought before it. Sometimes in deciding such a question, courts enquire whether the body or authority whose status or character is the subject matter of the enquiry, is clothed with the trappings of a Court. Can it compel witnesses to appear before it and administer oath to them, is it required to follow certain rules of procedure, is it bound to comply with the rules of natural justice, is it expected to deal with the matters before it fairly, justly and on the merits and not be guided by subjective considerations; in other words, is the approach which it is required to adopt judicial or quasi-judicial approach? If all or some of the important tests in that behalf are satisfied the proceedings can be characterised as judicial proceedings and the test of trappings may be said to be satisfied. But apart from the test of trappings, another test of importance is whether the body or authority had been constituted by the State and the State has conferred on it its inherent judicial power. If it appears that such a body or authority has been constituted by the legislature and on it has been conferred the State's inherent judicial power, that would be a significant, if not a decisive indication that the said body or authority is a Tribunal." It was further pointed out as follows:—

"All the proceedings under the Act, whether before the Customs Officer or whether in appeal or revision, have to be conducted in accordance with the principles of natural justice and they are in that sense judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings. The fact that the status of the Customs Officer who adjudicates under Section 167 (12A) and Section 183 of the Act is not that of a tribunal, does not make any difference when we reach the stage of appeal or revision. A period of limitation is prescribed for the appeal, a procedure is prescribed by Rule 49 that the appeal or revision must be accompanied by a copy of the decision or order complained against, and the obvious scheme is that both the appellate and the revisional authorities must consider the matter judicially on the evidence and determine it in accordance with law."

The Custom Officers therefore did not form a court or tribunal, though proceedings had to be conducted in accordance with principles of natural justice and jurisdiction under Art. 227 cannot be involved except against the order passed by a court or tribunal.

The result, therefore, is that an officer acting in exercise of its administrative function does not constitute a tribunal or a court so as to invoke the jurisdiction under Article 227 of the Constitution, even if he has to act observing principles of natural justice. It would now be useful to examine the provisions of the Calcutta Improvement Act for examining how far the President of the Tribunal in dealing with the employees was acting as a Court or Tribunal.

Section 70 of the Act provides for Constitution of a Tribunal for the purposes of performing the functions of the Court in reference to acquisition of lands.

Section 71 provides that for the purposes of acquiring land under Land Acquisition Act, the Tribunal shall be deemed a Court (except for certain purposes) and the President of the Tribunal shall be deemed to be a judge.

Section 72 provides that the Tribunal shall consist of a President and two assessors.

Section 74 provides for officers and servants of the Tribunal, and for preparation of a statement by the President showing number and grades of the clerks and other officers and servants and their salaries.

Clause (2) of the section authorises the President to make service rules prescribing age of superannuation and other conditions including leave, allowances etc. and for establishing and maintaining provident or annuity fund.

Sub-clause (4) reads as follows:—

"(4) Subject to any directions contained in any statement prepared under sub-section (1) and any rules made under sub-section (2), and for the time being in force, the power of appointing, promoting and granting leave to officers and servants of the Tribunal, and the power of reducing, suspending or dismissing them, shall vest in the President of the Tribunal."

32. The President of the tribunal, therefore, sits with two assessors and forms the Court and exercises powers under the Land Acquisition Act. The President is also the administrative head and controls the staff and has the power of 'reducing, suspending or dismissing them'. Clause 4 makes it clear that such power vests in the President of the Tribunal and he exercises the powers "subject to any rules made under sub-section (2). Admittedly no rules have been made and the President has the power to reduce, suspend or dismiss them. This administrative power is exercised by the President alone and shall not be confused with what is termed a Court within the meaning of Sections 71 and 72 formed by the President and the 2 assessors. The President sitting with assessors forms a Court but President alone exercises administrative functions subject to rules framed but no rules have been framed.

33. Mr. Chakraborty submitted that under the scheme of the Act, President alone performs certain judicial functions as enumerated in Section 77 (6) of the Act. This is in respect of determination of the person to whom compensation is payable and apportionment of compensation, which may be done in the absence of assessors if the President considers this procedure unnecessary.

This, however, is in the nature of a routine matter and in any case, it authorises the President to do it in certain circumstances but in doing so, he does not himself constitute a court or tribunal within the meaning of the Act.

34. The President alone, therefore, controls the staff in its administrative capacity and has the right to reduce, suspend, or dismiss any member of the staff. This power is exercised as an administrative officer and the relationship is that of master and servant and he does not exercise such power as a Court or tribunal. No rules have been framed and no question of violating any such Rule arises. This court has power of superintendence over all courts and Tribunals within the limits of its jurisdiction but it does not extend to administrative orders, by persons or bodies which do not constitute a court or a tribunal.

35. Mr. Chakraborty next argued that rules governing Provident Fund are statutory Rules and in deducting the sum of Rs. 3000, President acted illegally and in violation of the rules. The relevant rule reads as follows:—

"(2) The reasons for which a dismissal from the service may, under Section 6 (b) of the Act, authorize a deduction from the sum standing to the credit of the subscriber in the fund, are:—

- (i) grave misconduct,
- (ii) any act of embezzlement,
- (iii) any wilful default or neglect of duty by such subscriber by reasons of which the President or the Board may at any time have paid, sustained or been put to any loss, damage, costs or expense."

If therefore the petitioner has been dismissed and his dismissal order is valid, the order of deduction of Provident Fund money is only consequential and not in violation of these rules and it calls for no action from this Court.

36. We, therefore, conclude as follows:

(1) Out of the facts disclosed, it is difficult to say that the petitioner had no opportunity to explain the charges or put his case before the President and the question of violation of the principles of natural justice, therefore, does not arise.

(2) President of the tribunal in exercising disciplinary jurisdiction did not constitute a Court or a tribunal but acted in exercise of his administrative duty and therefore the law of master and servant applied and whatever other remedies the petitioner might have, he cannot invoke the aid of this court's power under Art. 227 for redress of his grievances.

(3) Even though not a court or tribunal, the proceeding before the President has to be concluded observing principles of natural justice but in any case the High Court cannot interfere in exercise of its power under Art. 227.

37. This application therefore stands dismissed.

38. There will be no order as to costs.

39. K. K. MITRA, J. :— I agree.
Application dismissed.

AIR 1970 CALCUTTA 161 (V 57 C 23)
P. N. MOOKERJEE AND A. K. DUTT, JJ.

Abhoy Pada Roy, Petitioner v. Excise Commissioner, West Bengal and another, Opposite Parties.

Civil Rule No. 300 of 1961, D/- 29-2-1968.

Medicinal and Toilet Preparations (Excise Duties) Act (1955), S. 3 and Schedule, Item 1 and Clause 2 (iii) — Medicinal and Toilet Preparations (Excise Duties) Rules, 1956, Rules 60 and 67 — Presumption under Rule 67 possible only if the preparation is an Ayurvedic one — Higher rate under Item 1 cannot also be charged.

The Commissioner of Excise sought to charge a preparation 'Dhanantari Rasayan' at the higher rate under Item 1 of Schedule to the Medicinal and Toilet Preparations (Excise Duties) Act treating it as an Ayurvedic preparation, on the ground that the petitioner had not proved it to be an allopathic preparation and that it was not licensed under the Drugs Act. The preparation was thus presumed under R. 67 to be Ayurvedic one and higher duty was levied under Item 1 of Schedule to the Act in the place of the lower duty under residuary Cl. 2 (iii) of the Schedule.

Held, that under S. 3, the charging section, the taxing authority had to satisfy the test for holding that a preparation was chargeable to higher duty. For higher duty the medicinal preparation should not only be one to which alcohol has been added, but must be capable of being consumed as ordinary alcoholic beverage. For establishing that it is capable of being consumed as ordinary alcoholic beverage, presumption under R. 67 can be relied upon only when the preparation in question is an Ayurvedic preparation. In the absence of any material on record to indicate that it was an Ayurvedic preparation, the presumption under R. 67, namely, that for purposes of duty Ayurvedic preparations to which alcohol is added shall be treated as alcoholic beverages, would not apply and the higher rate of duty could not be levied. (Para 3)

Shaila Dhar Chowdhury, for Petitioner; Soumendra Chandra Bose and Dwijendra Nath Lahiry, for Opposite Parties.

ORDER:— This Rule was obtained by the petitioner against an order of the Commissioner of Excise, West Bengal,

2. The reason, given by the learned Commissioner, is that, in view of Rule 60 of the Medicinal and Toilet Preparations (Excise Duties) Rules, 1956, as subsequently amended, the appellant not having adduced any proof that the preparation in question is manufactured according to the allopathic system of medicine and the Deputy Commissioner having reported that the preparation in question has not been licensed under the Drugs Act, the said preparation has to be classed as an Ayurvedic preparation and, accordingly under Rule 67, the above higher duty, in place of the lower duty of Rs. 5/- under the residuary clause 2 (iii) of the Schedule to the Act, will be leviable.

3. The point raises a short question. The above taxing statute contains, as its charging section, Section 3, and the taxing authority has to satisfy the test for holding that it is chargeable to higher duty. The schedule to the statute [The Medicinal and Toilet Preparations (Excise Duties) Act, 1955] mentions, in the relevant item No. 1, to quote its relevant part, "Medicinal preparations containing alcohol  to which alcohol has been added; and which are capable of being consumed as ordinary alcoholic beverages" as liable to the higher duty of Rs. 17.50 P. There is no dispute that the preparation in question is a medicinal preparation. There is no dispute either that it is a medicinal preparation to which alcohol has been added. The parties, however, are not agreed on the point whether this preparation is capable of being consumed as ordinary alcoholic beverage. That aspect, therefore, has to be established before the department can assess the preparation in question to the higher duty. For establishing the same, the department relies on Rule 67 of the Rules which, to quote the relevant facts, is in these terms: "For purpose of duty Ayurvedic preparations  to which alcohol is added at any stage of manufacture, shall be treated as alcoholic preparations capable of being used as ordinary alcoholic beverages." This presumption, however, will apply only when the preparation in question is an Ayurvedic preparation. There is no material on the present records to indicate that the disputed preparation is an Ayurvedic preparation and, unless this is established, the presumption under Rule 67, or, for the matter of that, the application of the higher duty under the above item 1 of the Schedule to the Act, cannot be made. In this view, we are unable to uphold the order or decision of the Commissioner, which is the subject-matter of the present Rule, and, in our opinion, the matter requires further consideration.

4. We would, accordingly, make this Rule absolute, set aside the impugned order and send the matter back to the Commissioner for fresh and further consideration on the materials, already on record, and on such further materials as may be made available to him by the parties, in accordance with law, in the light of the observations, made in this judgment.

5. There will be no order for costs in this Rule.

Petition allowed.

AIR 1970 CALCUTTA 162 (V 57 C 24)
AMARESH ROY AND S. N. BAGCHI, JJ.

The State, Appellant v. Golam Rasul, Respondent.

Govt. Appeal No. 6 of 1963, D/- 7-2-1969.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 492 — Provision in Legal Remembrancer's Manual of West Bengal does not enable Government of West Bengal to appoint any Public Prosecutor in respect of Central Territory of Andaman and Nicobar Islands — Calcutta High Court (Extension of Jurisdiction) Act (41 of 1953) — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 4(1)(i)) — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 2 (7) (a)) — (Constitution of India, Art. 258 (1)).

The Calcutta High Court under the Act 41 of 1953 exercises jurisdiction as the High Court for the Andaman and Nicobar Islands. The State Government of West Bengal has not been authorised to perform the functions of the State Government of the Central Territory in Andaman and Nicobar Islands. That being so, the Legal Remembrancer of Government of West Bengal has no connection with the appeal from acquittal preferred by the Chief Commissioner of the Islands through the Public Prosecutor and therefore, has no authority to appoint any lawyer either for the appellant State or for the accused-respondent in the appeal. A provision in the Legal Remembrancer's Manual under which there is an arrangement between Central Government and the State Government of West Bengal for appointing lawyers does not enable the Government of West Bengal to appoint any Public Prosecutor in respect of the Central Territory under Section 492 Cr. P. C. In an appeal against an order of acquittal it is the appellant-State, which is the Central Government in the case, that has the right to prosecute the appeal by appointing a properly authorised lawyer. (Para 12)

Per Bagchi J. :— Legal Remembrancer of West Bengal, can however, if appointed by Central Government by virtue of provisions of Art. 258 (1), read with S. 492 (1) of Criminal P. C. (1898), represent Andaman and Nicobar Islands i. e. Central Government in any appeal or proceedings before Calcutta High Court and can also nominate counsel for the Union Territory to prosecute the appeal for and on behalf of the Union Territory and can also appoint, upon the High Court's approval, Counsel to represent the respondent accused. Dipak Kumar Sen Gupta, for Appellant; J. C. Sinha and I. A. Qayum, for Respondent.

AMARESH ROY, J. :— This appeal is from Andaman and Nicobar Islands and has been preferred by the State through the Public Prosecutor, Andaman and Nicobar Islands, against an order of acquittal passed by the Additional District Magistrate, Andaman and Nicobar Islands on 27th December, 1962 in a trial held in Port Blair in Criminal Case No. 63/40 of 1962 in which the respondent Golam Rasool was charged for an offence under Section 408 of the Indian Penal Code alleged to have been committed by him on or about 16th December, 1959 at Long Islands as a servant in the employment of Forest Co-operative Chain Stores in respect of Rs. 977.08 nP. That amount was alleged to be the money recovered from the Forest Mazdoors against goods supplied to them on credit which the Range Officer Henry Lawrence sent through N. Kaniappa Mudaliar and alleged to have been received by Golam Rasool.

2-5. Case started on the report of the President of the Forest Co-operative Chain Stores Ltd., Chatham to the Superintendent of Police, Port Blair, in which it was alleged that Rs. 2721.06 nP. was found short.

(His Lordship reviewed the evidence in the case and proceeded).

6. In that state of evidence the finding of the learned Magistrate at the trial court that prosecution has failed to prove that the money was entrusted to Golam Rasool is, in our view, the correct and proper finding. That being so, apart from other infirmities in the prosecution case and evidence referred to by the learned Magistrate in his judgment the order of acquittal is the only legal order that could be made in the case. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

7. Besides dismissing the appeal on merits, we also need mention a feature in prosecuting this appeal. As we have already mentioned the appeal was preferred under Section 417 (1) Cr. P. C. by the State Government through the Public Prosecutor at Andaman and Nicobar Islands. In the Memorandum of Appeal it has been stated in paragraph 23 that the appeal was so filed by the Public Prosecutor — "Being directed by the Chief Commissioner, Andaman and Nicobar Islands in exercise of the powers of the State Government under Section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (vide Order No. 193 dated 27th January, 1963)". A copy of that Order was appended to the Memorandum of Appeal as Annexure 'B'. When the appeal was presented in the Islands it was admitted by the order of Sri Halve who was functioning as the Registrar in the Islands in the absence of the Chief Commissioner. Thereafter on 24th April, 1963, an order was made by a Division Bench of this Court (D. Mukherjee and D. N. Das Gupta, JJ.) in these terms:—

"Consequent on the order of admission of the appeal we direct the respondent Golam Rasool to be re-arrested and released on bail to the satisfaction of the Chief Commissioner of the Andaman & Nicobar Islands. We also direct the issue of usual notices."

Order for bail was modified by an Order dated 15th of July, 1964 passed by the Division Bench (D. N. Das Gupta and A. C. Gupta, JJ.). It remains doubtful if a proper order admitting the appeal for hearing was made according to the Rules of the Appellate Side on this Court.

8. At the hearing before us Mr. Dipak Sen Gupta appeared for the prosecution being so appointed by the Legal Remembrancer of West Bengal. Mr. Sen Gupta stated before us that he has not been authorised either by the Public Prosecutor of Andaman and Nicobar Islands, nor has he been appointed as Public Prosecutor for the purpose of this case by the State Government of Andaman and Nicobar Islands which is a Central Territory. Mr. Sen Gupta frankly stated that he was in doubt whether he has proper authority and locus standi to represent the appellant in this appeal.

9. It also appears that upto a stage during the pendency of the appeal in this Court the accused-respondent Golam Rasool had not entered appearance through any lawyer appointed by him. At that stage the Legal Remembrancer of West Bengal Government appointed a learned Advocate of this Court Mr. Jogesh Chandra Sinha to represent and appear for the respondent in this appeal. Before the date of hearing, however, a learned Advocate Mr. Inamdar Abdul Quayum has filed a Vakalatnama executed by the respondent Golam Rasool. The said learned Advocate Mr. Abdul Quayum appeared before us at the hearing. The situation thereby created was one of doubt and confusion regarding the position of the learned Advocate Mr. Jogesh Chandra Sinha who was appointed to appear for defence by the Legal Remembrancer of West Bengal.

10. It is also noticeable that during the pendency of the appeal in this Court, for the State the learned Dy. L. R. of West Bengal, Mr. S. N. Banerjee appeared before the Division Bench on 24th April, 1963 and on 25th of July, 1964 another learned Advocate Mr. Prasun Chandra Ghosh appeared before the Division Bench for the State.

11. The appeal was by the State Government under Section 417 (1) Cr. P. C. The territory of Andaman and Nicobar Islands is a Central Territory and the State Government in relation to that territory is the Central Government of India. The Chief Commissioner appointed by the Central Government exercises the functions of the State Government for that territory and the appeal was filed through the Public Prosecutor of Andaman and Nicobar Islands under the directions of the Chief Commissioner given under Section 417 (1) Cr. P. C.

12. This High Court under the Act of 1953 exercises jurisdiction as the High Court for the Andaman and Nicobar Islands. The State Government of West Bengal has not been authorised to perform the functions of the State Government of the Central Territory in Andaman and Nicobar Islands. That being so, the Legal Remembrancer of Government of West Bengal has no connection with the appeal, and therefore, has no authority to appoint any lawyer either for the appellant State or for the accused-respondent in this appeal. The learned Dy. L. R. Mr. S. N. Banerjee has referred to a provision in L. R.'s Manual under which there is an arrangement between Central Government and the State Government of West Bengal for appointing lawyers. That provision, however, does not enable the Government of West Bengal to appoint any Public Prosecutor in respect of the Central Territory under Section 492 Cr. P. C. In an appeal against an order of acquittal. It is the appellant-State, which is the Central Government in the present case, that has the right to prosecute the appeal by appointing a properly authorised lawyer. Mr. Dipak Sen Gupta was not so authorised.

13. For the accused-respondent in the appeal a lawyer appointed by him on a vakalatnama appeared before us at the hearing. The learned Advocate Mr. Jogesh Chandra Sinha, who was appointed by the Legal Remembrancer of West Bengal, was rendered functus officio and had no proper authority to represent the accused-respondent.

14. Such state of confusion in the important matter of proper representation at the Bar of the parties in the appeal is likely to hamper proper disposal of the appeals for doing justice between parties. Governments concerned should be alive to the necessity of proper appointment of lawyers and avoid such confusion. As, however, the learned Advocates, who were before us, had prepared the case, we availed their assistance at the hearing of the appeal. They made their submissions on the evidence in the case and the order we have made above was upon hearing of all the three learned Advocates above mentioned.

15. The appeal is dismissed. The Respondent Golam Rasool is discharged from the Bail bond.

16. BAGCHI, J. :— I agree with my Lord that the appeal be dismissed and the respondent, Golam Rasul, be discharged from the bail bond. But I like to add a few words of my own on some question of law.

17. In the matter of appointment of the Public Prosecutor and the defence Counsel in this appeal, there has been utter confusion and violation of law. My Lord has been pleased to deal with the matter regarding how they were appointed to represent this appellant, the Union Territory of Andaman and Nicobar Islands and the respondent, Golam Rasul.

18. Section 492 of the Code of Criminal Procedure reads as follows:—

"The Central Government or the State Government may appoint, generally, or in any case, or for any specified class of cases, in any local area, one or more officers to be called Public Prosecutors (added by Sec. 3 — Anti-Corruption Laws Amendment Act, Act XL of 1964 which came into force on and from 18-12-64)."

Section 4, sub-section (1), clause (i) of the Code of Criminal Procedure says:—

"'High Court', in relation to the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, means the High Court in Calcutta, and, in relation to any other local area, means the highest court of criminal appeal for that area"

19. The High Court of Calcutta has jurisdiction over the local area of the State of West Bengal as well as of the local area of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands. The Andaman and Nicobar Islands are a centrally administered territory. The executive power of the State Government under Art. 154 of the Constitution vests in the Governor whereas the executive power of a centrally administered territory vests in the President under Art. 73 of the Constitution.

20. Section 492 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 since the amendment in 1964 authorises the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, to appoint, generally, or in any case, or for any specified class of cases, in any local area, one or more officers to be called Public Prosecutors. The emphasis lies in the expression 'in any local area' as occurring in Sec. 492, sub-section (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Bhagwan Das v. The King, reported in AIR 1949 PC 263, had to interpret the executive authority of the province under Section 49 of the Government of India Act, 1935, to make appointments to the post of a Public Prosecutor under Section 492, sub-section (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure as it then stood, and in that context, their Lordships were pleased to observe that it was a part of the executive authority of the province to make appointments to the post of a Public Prosecutor and the executive authority of the province being vested by Section 49, Government of India Act, 1935, in the Governor, he only was entitled to appoint the Advocate General, a Public Prosecutor.

21. The local area of a State and the local area of an Union Territory are well defined. The Andaman and Nicobar Islands constitute an Union territory administered by the Central Government through the Chief Commissioner. The local area of an Union territory administered by the Chief Commissioner, as in the case of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, is a centrally administered State and the executive power of a centrally administered State vests in the President of India under Art. 73 of the Constitution. That is why in regard to appointments of Public Prosecutors in any local area in relation to a State or the Union, amendment had to be made in sub-section (1) of Section 492 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 in 1964 and the two groups of words in the alternative, the "Central Government" or the "State Government" had to be introduced in sub-section (1) of Section 492 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The executive power of the Governor of a State in the matter of appointment of a Public Prosecutor by virtue of the authority of article 154 of the Constitution, read with Section 492, Sub-section (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, extends within the local area of a State, while the executive power of the President under Art. 73 of the Constitution, read with Section 492, sub-section (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure extends within the local area of an Union territory, such as, in the case of Andaman and Nicobar Islands.

22. Art. 258 of the Constitution CL (1) reads as follows:—

"Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution, the President may, with the consent of the Government of a State, entrust either conditionally or unconditionally to that Government or to its officers functions in relation to any matter to which the executive power of the Union extends."

23. The President may, with the consent of the Government of a State, such as that of West Bengal, entrust to such State Government or its officers functions in relation to the appointment of a Public Prosecutor in regard to cases arising within the local area of the Union territory, as in the case of Andaman and Nicobar Islands, within which the executive power of the Union, vested in the President, extends. In the present appeal, neither the learned Counsel, appointed by the learned Legal Remembrancer of the State of West Bengal, representing the Union territory of Andaman and Nicobar Islands, the appellant, before us at the hearing of this appeal, nor the learned Counsel, appointed by the learned Legal Remembrancer of the State of West Bengal, appearing for the respondent who had not been initially represented, but later on, represented by the lawyer of his own choice, could enlighten us as to whether or not the President with the consent of the Government of West Bengal entrusted either the Government of West Bengal or the learned Legal Remembrancer, West Bengal, the function in relation to the appointment of a Public Prosecutor for the appellant, Andaman and Nicobar Islands, to prosecute with this appeal before this High Court at Calcutta for and on behalf of the said appellant, and to appoint a learned Counsel to represent the unrepresented respondent in this appeal before this Court. The Central Government could also appoint by virtue of the provisions of sub-clause (1) of Art. 258 of the Constitution, read with sub-sec. (1) of Section 492 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, with the previous consent of the State Government, the Legal Remembrancer, West Bengal as Public Prosecutor for the Union territory of Andaman and Nicobar Islands for the purpose of this appeal under Section 417, sub-section (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and in that event, the learned Legal Remembrancer, West Bengal could well have nominated the learned Counsel appearing for the appellant, Union territory, to prosecute with the appeal for and on behalf of the Union territory, and could also appoint, upon this Court's approval, the learned defence Counsel to represent the respondent in this appeal before this Court. Neither of the learned Counsel appearing for either side, nor the learned D. L. R. of West Bengal could show us any notification under sub-art. (1) of Art. 258, read with sub-section (1) of Section 492 of the Code of Criminal Procedure whereby the President with the consent of the Governor of the State of West Bengal entrusted, by appointing L. R., West Bengal, a Public Prosecutor for and on behalf of the centrally administered territories of Andaman and Nicobar Islands with the function of prosecuting with this appeal before this Court. If there was such a notification the learned D. L. R. West Bengal, could well represent as Public Prosecutor for the Union Territory of Andaman and Nicobar Islands, the appellant, in this appeal before this High Court at the hearing of this appeal and he could have also authorised the learned counsel appearing for the appellant in this case to represent the Union territory of Andaman and Nicobar Islands. the appellant, in this appeal. In that event also, the learned L. R.'s nomination of the learned Defence Counsel representing the respondent in this appeal could have been approved by this Court at the hearing of this appeal.

24. In the case of Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Tularam Barodia, reported in AIR 1919 Cal 203, their Lordships of the Division Bench of this Court had to consider Section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, in a case there the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal, appointed by the then Bengal Government to be the Public Prosecutor in the case heard by the High Court at Calcutta. That was a case of appeal against acquittal filed by the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal appointed by the Government of Bengal as it then was,

Tracing the history of the office of the Legal Remembrancer, their Lordships at column '2' of the Report at p. 203 observed:—

"The appeal was presented by the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal, who by notification of date 19th May, 1915, has been appointed by the Local Government to be by virtue of his office Public Prosecutor in all cases heard by this Court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction."

In that observation, their Lordships were pleased to pin-point the question of appointment of Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal, that emanated from the notification of the Local Government of Bengal and to put emphasis on the words 'Local Government'. In sub-section (1) of Section 492 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the emphasis lies also on the words 'in any local area.'

25. In the case of the State v. Brīndavan, reported in AIR 1952 Madh B. 13 (Dixit and Chaturvedi, JJ.), their Lordships observed at p. 14 of the report: "The appointment may be in respect to particular case or in respect to a particular class of cases or in regard to cases generally. But it must in any event be with reference to a local area for exercising the powers of Public Prosecutor. The words "in any local area" which occur in Section 492 qualify not only the words "for any specified class of cases" but also the preceding words "generally", or "in any case". It must be noted that the word "generally" has been used to contra-distinguish all cases from a particular case or a particular class of cases. If the words "in any local area," which are preceded by a comma are taken to qualify only the words "for any specified class of cases" and if the word "generally" is to be read independently of the words following it, the result would be to create a conflict between the jurisdiction of officers appointed as public prosecutors in regard to cases generally. A Public Prosecutor has specific powers under the Code and he cannot exercise these powers in regard to cases generally or in regard to a particular case or a class of cases unless the local area within which he is to exercise the powers is specified. In my view, under Section 492 of the Code it is incumbent on the Govt. to specify the local area within which the person appointed as Public Prosecutor is to exercise his powers." In regard to Andaman and Nicobar Islands, the High Court of Calcutta is also the High Court for that Union territory, but the Local Government of that territory and the Local Government of the State of West Bengal are two different and distinct constitutional and juristic entities and the executive power of those two Local Governments under the Constitution vests in two different Constitutional heads, having their well-defined local areas, former in the State of West Bengal, latter in the Union territory of Andaman and Nicobar Islands.

26. In the case of Tushar Kanti Ghosh v. Governor of Bengal in Council, reported in AIR 1933 Cal 118 at p. 118, their Lordships of the Division Bench of this Court had to consider the legal position of Legal Remembrancer of Bengal. Interpreting Section 4, CL (t) and Section 493 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, their Lordships at page 120 of the Report expressed themselves as follows:

"The Legal Remembrancer is ex-officio Public Prosecutor on the appellate side of the Court and as such has the power to instruct counsel, his authority to act for the Local Government being in no way dependent on anything in the nature of a Vakalatnama or warrant of attorney."

In this observation their Lordships also emphasised on the words "His authority to act for the Local Government."

27. I respectfully accept the principle laid down in the decisions I have just now reviewed.

28. In the present appeal, the "Local Government" means the Union territory of Andaman and Nicobar Islands and the "Local area" also relates to those Islands, a Centrally administered territory, administered by the Union of India, the executive power of which vests in the President under Art. 73 of the Constitution (vide Constitution, Seventh Amendment Act, 1956, 1st Schedule — II, Union territories, Clause 5). In view of the principles, enunciated in the decisions discussed above, for the local area of a Centrally administered territory and for the local area of a State, the Central Government and the State Government have their respective powers under sub-section (1) of Section 492 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, as amended in 1964, to appoint a Public Prosecutor to represent the Union territory and the State, as the case may be, in any appeal or proceedings before this High Court. The High Court of Calcutta is undoubtedly the High Court for Andaman and Nicobar Islands — a Union territory as well as the High Court for the State of West Bengal. But the local area of the State of West Bengal and the local area of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands are distinct and different from each other and the executive power in the case of the State of West Bengal vests in the Governor of the State of West Bengal, and in the case of Andaman and Nicobar Islands, vests in the President of India. Accordingly, the State of West Bengal has appointed only for the local area of the State of West Bengal, the learned Legal Remembrancer, West Bengal, to be a Public Prosecutor having authority to represent the State Government before the High Court of Calcutta in its appellate jurisdiction which extends over the local area of the State of West Bengal and the local area of the Union territory of Andaman and Nicobar Islands. But the learned Legal Remembrancer of West Bengal cannot, unless appointed by the Central Government by virtue of the provisions of sub-art. (1) of Art. 258, read with sub-section (1) of Section 492 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, represent the appellant-Andaman and Nicobar Islands — a Centrally administered Union territory i. e. the Central Government in any appeal or proceedings before this High Court. I have observed earlier in this judgment that the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer, West Bengal, could not show us any notification appointing him a Public Prosecutor by the Central Government to represent the appellant Union territory of Andaman and Nicobar Islands as the Public Prosecutor for that territory before this High Court in its appellate jurisdiction. The learned Legal Remembrancer of West Bengal, therefore, had no authority to appoint either the learned Counsel for the appellant or the learned Counsel for the respondent to represent either the appellant or the respondent respectively before us in this appeal since he himself had not been appointed by the Central Government to be a Public Prosecutor for the Union territory of Andaman and Nicobar Islands and to represent that territory in this appeal before the appellate jurisdiction of this Court. We hope that such illegality, as I have just now pointed out, would not recur in future. We have, however, with pleasure, acknowledged the assistance given to us in this appeal by the learned Counsel for the appellant and the learned Counsel for the respondent appointed by the learned L. R. of West Bengal and the learned Counsel for the respondent appointed by the respondent at the time of hearing of this appeal.

AIR 1970 CALCUTTA 167 (V 57 C 25)

R. N. DUTT AND A. P. DAS, JJ.

Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, West Bengal, Appellant v. Prohlad Agarwalla, Respondent.

HM/JM/D323/69/MBR/D

Essential Commodities Act (1955), Ss. 3, 7, 5 — Iron and Steel (Control) Order (1956), Para. 14 (2) — Order under S. 3 — Contravention of direction contained in notification issued under para 14(2) of Order — It is not contravention of provisions of Order and so not punishable under S. 7.

A person can be convicted under S. 7 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955, only when it is proved that he has contravened any 'order' made under S. 3 of the Act. When there was a contravention of a direction given under the notification made by the Controller in exercise of the powers given to him under paragraph 14(2) of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order, 1956 which was made under S. 3 of the Act and the direction was not a direction contained in the order but that was a direction contained in the notification, the contravention of the direction could not be said to be the contravention of a provision of the Order.

The notification made by the Controller was not an Order under S. 3. Firstly, there was no notified Order made by the Central Government under S. 5 of the Act directing the Controller to make an Order under S. 3. If the Central Government is to delegate its power to make an order under S. 3 to some Officer, it has to make a notified Order under S. 5. Secondly, the notification itself showed that it was not an Order under S. 3 but it was just a direction to the stockholders in exercise of the powers to the Controller under paragraph 14 (2) of the Order. The Controller did not say that he was making the order by virtue of powers under S. 3 on the basis of a delegation made by the Central Government under S. 5.

(Para 6)

An Order under S. 3 can be made by the Central Government. The Central Government made such an Order, i. e., Order of 1956. Paragraph 14 of the Order no doubt authorised the Controller to make certain directions but those directions do not relate back to the Order or form part of the Order under S. 3 because that would involve double delegation of legislative power not authorised by Parliament.

(Para 7)

Furthermore, contravention of the provisions of paragraph 12(1) of the Order is punishable under S. 7. But paragraph 14 (2) does not require the stockholder to do a particular thing. Therefore, contravention of a direction contained in a notification issued under paragraph 14(2) of the Order is not a contravention of the provisions of the Order and so is not punishable under S. 7.

(Para 8)

Priti Bhushan Burman, for Appellant; Ajit Kumar Dutt and J. P. Sribastava, for Respondent.

R. N. DUTT, J.:—The respondent was tried by a Magistrate under Section 7 of the Essential Commodities Act, convicted and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 51, in default to rigorous imprisonment for three weeks. The respondent thereafter made an appeal and the Sessions Judge set aside the conviction and sentence and acquitted the respondent. Thereafter the State Government has filed this appeal against this order of acquittal.

2. The prosecution case was as follows:

3. The respondent was employed under Messrs. Nandaram Deotram, a firm at Kurseong. The firm was an authorised dealer in iron and steel under the Iron and Steel (Control) Order, 1956. On November 17, 1960 the respondent sold three bundles of galvanised corrugated sheets to one Beharilal Bahsaria against permit no. 69/60, dated November 10, 1960, granted by the Sub-Divisional Controller of Food and Supplies. Beharilal paid Rs. 294.52 P. as price and a cash memo was written and granted to him mentioning the rate at Rs. 880 per ton. The weight was not however mentioned in the cash memo. On November 19, 1960 Beharilal had certain suspicion about the weight and got the three bundles weighed and found the total weight as 5 Cwt. 3 Qrs. 6 lbs. whose price at Rs. 880 per ton would be Rs. 255.34 P. The allegation against the respondent was, therefore, that he sold the G. C. sheets at a rate higher than the controlled rate.

4. On this allegation the respondent was charged under Section 7 of the Essential Commodities Act for having contravened paragraphs 15 and 27 (4) of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order, 1956. The learned Magistrate found that the respondent did not charge a rate in excess of the controlled rate but he held that the respondent did not mention the weight of the G. C. sheets in the cash memo which he was required to do under notification no. S. R. O. 1111/ESS. Comm. Iron & Steel and on this finding the learned Magistrate convicted the respondent under Section 7 of the Essential Commodities Act. The learned Sessions Judge set aside this conviction primarily on the ground that there was want of mens rea in what the respondent did, namely, in not mentioning the weight of the G. C. sheets in the cash memo.

5. Having heard Mr. Burman and Mr. Dutt we do not think that the order of acquittal should be interfered with in this appeal. It is not necessary for us to consider the grounds for which the learned Sessions Judge set aside the conviction of the respondent. We think that even otherwise the respondent cannot be convicted under Section 7 of the Essential Commodities Act on the findings of the learned Magistrate. Section 7 of the Essential Commodities Act makes contravention of any 'order' made under Section 3 of the Act punishable. So a person can be convicted under Section 7 only when it is proved that he has contravened any 'order' made under Section 3 of the Act. Here, the Iron and Steel (Control) Order, 1956 is an order made by the Central Government under Section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act. There is no contravention of any provision of this 'Order' as such. Paragraph 14(2) of this Order states as follows:

"The Controller, may by notification in the official Gazette, direct that every producer, stockholder or other person holding stocks of iron or steel when selling any iron or steel shall give to the purchaser a memorandum containing the particulars specified in such notification."

By virtue of this power the Controller issued notification No. S. R. O. 1111/ESS. COMM/Iron and Steel and that notification required a stockholder, here the respondent, to issue a memorandum relating to every sale of iron and steel showing certain particulars; weight of the goods sold is one of such particulars. So, what the learned Magistrate has found was that there was a contravention of a direction given under this notification made by the Controller in exercise of the powers given to him under paragraph 14(2) of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order. The question, therefore, arises if contravention of this direction is a contravention of any provision of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order which was made under Section 3 of the Act. This direction is not a direction contained in the Iron and Steel (Control) Order. But this is a direction contained in a notification issued by the Controller in exercise of a power given to him under the Iron and Steel (Control) Order. On the face of it, therefore, a contravention of this direction cannot be said to be a contravention of a provision of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order, 1956.

6. But Mr. Burman submits that the Central Government may delegate its authority to make an Order under Section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act to an Officer or Authority subordinate to the Central Government under Section 5 of the Act. So, the Central Government may direct an officer or Authority subordinate to it to make Orders under Section 3 of the Act and the provision of paragraph 14(2) of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order is, such a direction and notification No. S. R. O. 1111/ESS. Comm. Iron & Steel made by the Controller is an order under Section 3 of the Act.

This contention is not tenable. Firstly, there is no notified Order made by the Central Government under Section 5 of the Act directing the Controller to make an Order under Section 3. If the Central Government is to delegate its power to make an Order under Section 3 to some Officer it has to make a notified Order under Section 5 but here in this case there is no such notified Order. Secondly, the notification itself shows that this was not an Order under Section 3 of the Act but this was just a direction to the stockholders in exercise of the powers to the Controller under paragraph 14(2) of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order. The Controller does not say that he was making this order by virtue of powers under Section 3 of the Act on the basis of a delegation made by the Central Government under Section 5 of the Act.

7. Mr. Burman then argues that since this was a direction made by the Controller in exercise of a power conferred on him by the Iron and Steel (Control) Order, 1956 the direction should be regarded as part of the Order made by the Central Government. This argument again cannot be accepted. An order under Section 3 can be made by the Central Government. The Central Government made such an Order, i. e., the Iron and Steel (Control) Order, 1956. Paragraph 14(2) of this Order no doubt authorised the Controller to make certain directions but those directions do not relate back to the Order or form part of the Order under Section 3 because that would involve double delegation of legislative power not authorised by Parliament.

8. Furthermore, we do not think that contravention of such direction was intended to be made punishable under Section 7 of the Essential Commodities Act. When we compare, say, paragraph 12 (1) with paragraph 14 (2) this will be clear. Paragraph 12 (1) says that every stockholder shall keep such books, accounts and records relating to the business carried on by him as the Controller may require. Obviously, the requirement to keep books of accounts and records is a part of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order. But what books are to be kept is left to the discretion of the Controller. Here, if a stockholder does not keep the required books and accounts and records, that act being a contravention of the provisions of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order is punishable under Section 7. But paragraph 14(2) does not require the stockholder to do a particular thing. It only empowers the Controller to give directions to the stockholders to give a memorandum or sale containing some specified particulars. Whatever that may be, we have no doubt that contravention of a direction contained in a notification issued under paragraph 14(2) of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order is not a contravention of the provisions of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order, 1956 and so is not punishable under Section 7 of the Essential Commodities Act. The respondent cannot, therefore, be convicted.

9. In the result, the appeal is dismissed. The respondent is discharged from his bail bond.

10. A. P. DAS, J. :— I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Kalipada Trivedi, for Petitioner; Ramendra Nath Chakraborty, for the State; Biswa Ranjan Ghoshal, for Opp.
Parties.

R. N. DUTT, J. :— On an application by the petitioner before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Barrackpore, a proceeding under Section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was started against the opposite parties and a conditional order was issued and they were asked to show cause. They appeared and showed cause before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Thereafter the Sub-Divisional Magistrate transferred the case to Shri M. N. Pramanick, Magistrate 1st Class, for disposal. Shri Pramanick examined witnesses, heard arguments but ultimately held that the transfer of the proceeding to him was incompetent and as such he dropped the proceeding. The petitioner has obtained this Rule against this order of the said Magistrate, Shri M. N. Pramanick.

2. When the opposite parties were directed to show cause, there was no specific direction as to whether cause should be shown before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate or any other Magistrate. We find that though the order does not specifically say that cause was to be shown to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, the cause was in fact shown before him because there was no direction that cause was to be shown before some other Magistrate. We then find that after cause was shown, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate transferred the proceeding to Shri M. N. Pramanick. The question for consideration is if such transfer is competent in law? On this point the latest Division Bench decision of this Court is contained in Bardeshwari Prosad Bhattacharjee v. Rabi Nandan Saha, AIR 1956 Cal 24. The previous decisions on this point were considered by the Division Bench in this case. A. N. Sen, J. held in Pran Krishna v. Shyam Sundar, AIR 1949 Cal 637 that, no such subsequent transfer under Section 192 of the Code was competent. Sen, J., purported to rely on the decision in Inasaddar Ali v. Isimulla, AIR 1929 Cal 813. The Division Bench deciding Bardeshwari's case, AIR 1956 Cal 24, overruled A. N. Sen J. and held that such subsequent transfer can be made under Section 192 of the Code. Debabrata Mookerjee, J., no doubt followed the previous decision in Jhatu Charan Das v. Bhanu Chandra Das, AIR 1956 Cal 220. Though this case was decided in February, 1956 it appears that the Division Bench decision in Bardeshwari's case, AIR 1956 Cal 24, decided in June, 1955 was not considered as obviously it was not brought to his Lordship's notice. The Single Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Kishorilal v. State, AIR 1960 All 244 was relied upon by the learned Magistrate. We may also refer to the Bench decision of the Rajasthan High Court in Ram Charan v. Residents of Shahabad, AIR 1958 Raj 248. These decisions have no doubt held that Section 133 of the Code is self-contained and proceedings thereunder cannot be subsequently transferred under Section 192 of the Code. But as we have said the latest Division Bench decision of this Court has held in Bardeshwari's case, AIR 1956 Cal 24 that such transfer is competent. The learned Magistrate should have followed this decision instead of the Single Bench decisions. We have considered the matter in all its aspects. True, under Section 133 of the Code the Magistrate who draws up the proceeding can no doubt ask the opposite parties to show cause before some other Magistrate. But the terms of Section 133 of the Code cannot and should not be construed as to exclude the general provisions of transfer contained in Section 192 of the Code. We do not think that this is a matter which should be referred to a larger Bench for further consideration; rather we think that we should follow the Bench decision in Bardeshwari's case, AIR 1956 Cal 24. In that view of the matter the instant order should be set aside.

3. In the result, the Rule is made absolute. The order of the learned Magistrate is set aside and the learned Magistrate is directed to proceed with further hearing of the matter in accordance with law.

4. Let the records be sent down at once.

5. B. BANERJI, J. :— I agree.

D. BASU AND AJAY K. BASU, JJ.

Asiatic Society's Employees Union, Appellant v. Asiatic Society and others, Respondents.

Appeal No. 74 of 1967, D/- 15-7-1969.

Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Section 2 (j) — 'Industry' — Meaning — Institution carrying on different activities — Dominant purpose will determine its character as "industry" or otherwise — Society catering for intellectual needs of men — Improvement of general knowledge of men through research and publication of journals — Society having no press of its own — Society is not an "industry" — Neither it is an "undertaking".

In determining whether an undertaking is an industry the following propositions emerge from the case law.

(a) The definition of 'industry' S. 2 (j) contains two parts: The first part determines an industry by reference to the activities of the employer and the second part looks at it from the angle of employees. But the second part, standing alone, cannot define industry. It is only if an activity of the employer comes within the first part of the definition, then it will be an industry and thereupon any kind of activity carried on by the employees of such employer will also be included within the concept of industry, as applied to that establishment.

(b) An activity will constitute an industry only if it caters to the material needs (as distinguished from intellectual or cultural needs of the society) and that is done as part of trade or business or as analogous to trade or business.

(c) The concept of industry postulates partnership between capital and labour but any activity in which there is co-operation between the employer and the employee is not an industry. It will be an industry only if the co-operation is directly and necessarily involved in the production of the goods or in the rendering in the service which is the object of the establishment concerned and the contribution made by the employer is of capital as distinguished from intellectual and educational equipment.

(d) When an institution carries on activities of different kinds, it is its dominant purpose, which will determine its character as an industry or otherwise. In the modern world, pure organisms are rarely available and that is why the test of dominant purpose has been introduced even in the sphere of ultra vires in administrative law. AIR 1968 SC 554 & AIR 1961 SC 484 & AIR 1963 SC 1873 & AIR 1964 SC 903 & AIR 1962 SC 1081, & (1907) 96 LT 762 & 1952 AC 362, Ref. (Para 11)

A Society having for its object catering to the intellectual as distinguished from material needs of men by promoting general knowledge of the country by conducting research and publishing various journals and books is not an "industry". Even though it publishes books for sale in market, when it has no press of its own, the Society cannot be termed even an "undertaking" selling of its publications being only an ancillary activity and the employees being engaged in rendering clerical assistance in this matter just as the employees of a solicitor's firm help the solicitors in giving legal advice and service. The test of dominant purpose, would also lead to the same conclusion. (Para 14)

K. K. Maltra and N. K. Bhattacharya, for Appellant, Subimal Roy and B.
Sarkar, for Respondents.

D. BASU, J:— The appellant before us is the Union of the Employees of Respondent no. 1, the Asiatic Society, a society registered under Act XXI of 1860 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Society'). There was a dispute between the Society and its employees, which was referred by the State of West Bengal for adjudication to the First Industrial Tribunal (Respondent 3), by the order of 23-12-63, which is at p. 9 of the Paper-book. When the reference came up before the Tribunal, the Society raised the preliminary objection to the jurisdiction of the Tribunal on the ground that the reference was ultra vires since the Society did not carry on any 'industry' and its employees were not 'workmen' within the meaning of those terms as defined by the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947.

2. The Tribunal rejected the said objection by its order of 28-6-64 (p. 11 of the Paper-book), holding that the Society was not an educational institution, but an 'undertaking', coming within the definition of 'industry' and that, accordingly, the parties were governed by the Industrial Disputes Act and the reference was competent.

3. Thereupon the Society came to this Court with a Petition under Article 226 (p. 1 of the Paper-book), challenging the validity of the order of reference of 1963 and the order of the Tribunal of 28-6-64 rejecting the Society's objection as to jurisdiction. On 16-9-66, B. C. Mitra, J. allowed that petition and quashed the two impugned orders, holding that the Society was not an undertaking or industry within the purview of the Industrial Disputes Act (pp. 57-66).

4. It is against the aforesaid decision of Mitra, J. that the instant appeal has been preferred.

5. The question involves the interpretation of several definitions of the Industrial Disputes Act, as applied to the established objects of the Society.

6. The Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, provides for the investigation and settlement of 'industrial disputes'. The machinery set up by the Act, therefore, cannot be used unless there is an 'industrial dispute' as defined in Sec. 2 (k) of the Act, "(k) 'industrial dispute' means any dispute between employers and workmen . . . which is connected with the employment or non-employment . . ."

7. The definition of 'employer' and 'workman' import the concept of an 'industry'. Thus,

(s) " 'Workman' means any person ... employed in the industry..."

8. We have, therefore, to turn to the definition of 'industry' in Section 2 (j) — " 'industry' means any business, trade, undertaking, manufacture or calling of employers and includes any calling, service, employment, handicraft, or industrial occupation or avocation of workmen."

9. According to the Tribunal, the Society, in the instant case, is an 'undertaking' as explained by the Supreme Court in the case of State of Bombay v. Hospital Mazdoor Sabha, AIR 1960 SC 610 (616), in these words —

"... an activity systematically or habitually undertaken for the production or distribution of goods or for the rendering of material services to the community at large or a part of such community with the help of employees is an undertaking."

10. We have, therefore, to determine whether the Society's activities fall under the description of an 'undertaking' as given by the Supreme Court in the cited decision.

11. Before proceeding further, it must be noted that the above definition of 'industry' is an artificial definition, which is wider than the ordinary connotation of the term when it is used to denote activities other than agriculture and similar other occupations. In interpreting this definition, therefore, Courts have been guided by a twofold consideration, namely, that unless the definition is given a liberal interpretation, the beneficial object of the legislation, namely, to secure peace and amicable relations between capital and labour may be defeated; on the other hand, if a too wide interpretation be given, the carrying on of intellectual and other pursuits which are beneficial to society at large may be hampered by interference from external agencies. Naturally, therefore, the decisions of our Supreme Court, on this subject, have proceeded along these two apparently opposite directions, and it will be seen that the wide observations in the Hospital case, AIR 1960 SC 610 have by this time been qualified and limited by exceptions acknowledged in favour of various institutions, with more or less similar features.

A. In the Hospital group of cases, the following have been held to be 'undertakings'.—

(i) A hospital giving medical relief to citizens. The Hospital case, (AIR 1960 SC 610 ibid.)

(ii) An Ayurvedic College Pharmacy, manufacturing medicines for sale, and for the benefit of the students in the college (L. H.A. College Pharmacy v. Worker's Union, AIR 1960 SC 1261.)

(iii) A research Association which is an adjunct of a textile industry, whose object is to discover ways and means by which the member-mills may obtain larger profits in connection with the industry (A. T. I. Research Association v. State of Bombay, AIR 1961 SC 484 (487).)

(iv) A company formed for the purpose of producing agricultural products for sale as a trader (Harinagar Cane Farm v. State of Bihar, AIR 1964 SC 903.)

B. In the other group of cases, the following have been held not to be undertakings. —

(i) A solicitor's firm (N. U. C. Employees v. M. R. Meher Industrial Tribunal, AIR 1962 SC 1080.)

(ii) Educational Institutions like a college, University. (University of Delhi v. Ram Nath, AIR 1963 SC 1873.)

(iii) A members' club (as distinguished from a proprietary club) providing a venue for sports, recreation and entertainment (Madras Gymkhana Club Employees' Union v. Management of the Gymkhana Club, AIR 1968 SC 554.)

(iv) A members' club promoting sports including cricket, having residential arrangements on payment. (Cricket Club v. Bombay Labour Union, AIR 1969 SC 276.)

Though in this sphere it is difficult to hazard general propositions, the following propositions may be gathered from the observations made in the foregoing cases:

(a) The definition of 'industry' in Section 2 (j) contains two parts. The first part determines an industry by reference to the activities of the employer and the second part looks at it from the angle of employees. But the second part, standing alone, cannot define 'industry'. It is only if an activity of the employer comes within the first part of the definition, then it will be an 'industry' and thereupon any kind of activity carried on by the employees of such employer will also be included within the concept of industry, as applied to that establishment, (AIR 1968 SC 554 (561).)

(b) An activity will constitute an industry only if it caters to the material needs (as distinguished from intellectual or cultural needs of the society, AIR 1961 SC 484 (486); AIR 1963 SC 1873 (1874-5) and that is done as part of trade or business or as analogous to trade or business (AIR 1968 SC 554 (565); AIR 1964 SC 903 (Para 12); AIR 1961 SC 484.)

(c) The concept of 'industry' postulates partnership between capital and labour but any activity in which there is co-operation between the employer and the employee is not an industry. It will be an industry only if the co-operation is directly and necessarily involved in the production of the goods or in the rendering in the service which is the object of the establishment concerned, AIR 1962 SC 1080 (1083), and the contribution made by the employer is of capital as distinguished from 'intellectual and educational equipment' (p. 1085, ibid).

(d) When an institution carries on activities of different kinds, it is its dominant purpose, which will determine its character as an 'industry' or otherwise (AIR 1963 SC 1873 (para 8); AIR 1962 SC 1080 (para 11)). It may not be out of place to mention in this context that in the modern world, pure organisms are rarely available and that is why the test of 'dominant purpose' has been introduced even in the sphere of ultra vires in administrative law (vide R. v. Brighton Corporation, (1907) 96 LT 762 (764); Fitzwilliams Wentworth Estates Co. v. Minister of Housing and Local Government (1952) AC 362).

12. Applying the foregoing principles to the Society before us, it is evident at once that the object and activities of this Society are to cater to the intellectual as distinguished from the material, needs of men. According to its Rules —

"The bounds of its investigations will be the geographical limits of Asia, and within these limits its enquiries will be extended to whatever is performed by Man, or produced by Nature."

13. The Tribunal indeed came to this conclusion in unequivocal terms (p. 13) —

"In my opinion it is a cultural institution, the aim is to promote the general knowledge of the country by conducting research and by publishing various journals and books".

The Tribunal, nevertheless, as observed in the Hospital decision had held that if a hospital could be an 'undertaking' a research institution could not be otherwise. But the Tribunal failed to notice how the Hospital decision had been explained and distinguished in later decisions of the Supreme Court. The distinction, primarily, is that while a Hospital caters to the material needs of men, a research institution caters to their intellectual needs. The Tribunal's finding cannot, accordingly, be upheld.

14. It was argued by Mr. Maitra on behalf of the Appellants that the Society should nevertheless be held to be an undertaking because it publishes books for sale in the market and the employees contribute their labour in that production. It must be noted however that the Society has no press of its own, and the employees are not engaged in any such industrial establishment. The selling of its publications is only an ancillary activity and the employees are engaged in rendering clerical assistance in this matter just as the employees of a solicitor's firm help the solicitors in giving legal advice and service. The test of 'dominant' purpose, as explained above, wipes out the contention raised by Mr. Maitra.

15. It was argued, as a matter of last resort, that the Court below should have remanded the case to the Tribunal for taking evidence on facts. But the Rules of the Society as well as other facts as appear from the statements of the parties were already before the Court, together with the affidavits. The Court did not travel beyond these materials nor was it necessary to collect other evidence.

16. The judgment of the Court below was correct. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

17. AJAY K. BASU, J:— I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

A. K. SINHA, J.

Shib Kumar Dutta, Petitioner v. Appellate Sub-Committee of the State Transport Authority, W. B. and others, Respondents.

Civil Revn. No. 1025 (W) of 1965, D/-19-2-1969.

(A) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), S. 60 (1) (a) and (c) — Cancellation of permit — R. T. A. acts quasi-judicially — It has also to give reasons for its decision.

The Regional Transport Authority while exercising its power under S. 60 for cancellation of a permit is supposed to act quasi-judicially. Therefore, a conclusion drawn by it must be reached not by a subjective process but on an objective basis. Clearly, therefore, such a conclusion must be based on some evidence on which it is reasonably possible to come to a conclusion that such a charge made against the permit holder for the proposed cancellation of his permit stood established. If, such a conclusion is not based on any evidence or material, prima facie, appearing on the resolution, such resolution cannot be sustained as valid. The R. T. A. has also to give reason for its action as required by S. 60(2) of the Act. It is not possible to hold that simply because the permit-holder was keeping his car in another garage without the permission of the concerned authority, a reasonable conclusion could be drawn from that fact alone without more that he parted with the ownership of the car. (Para 5)

(B) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), S. 64 (b) — Appeal against cancellation of permit — Additional evidence admitted — Appellate Authority should give opportunity to rebut it.

Even assuming that Appellate authority is competent to take additional evidence then also proper opportunities are to be given to the aggrieved party to contradict such evidence taken or relied on at the appellate stage. Where the Appellate Authority relies on a report made by the Special Officer of the Public Vehicles Department without disclosing the same to the aggrieved party but comes to the conclusion solely on the basis of that report, that he had transferred his car sometime back, the action is opposed to fundamental principles of all judicial procedure and cannot be sustained as valid. (Para 6)

(C) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Sections 60 (1) (a) and 59 (3) (a) — Bengal Motor Vehicles Rules, Rule 108 — Cancellation of permit under Section 60 (1) (a) — Contravention of Chapter V or Rule framed thereunder necessary — Rule 108 contravened, framed under Chapter IV.

HM/LM/D331/69/MVJ/M

— Permit cannot be cancelled under Section 60 (1) (a).

It is only on breach of the conditions under Section 59, namely, failure to comply with the requirements of chapter V or the Rules made thereunder that the permit holder may be deprived of his rights to hold such permit. Where the specific allegation against the licence holder is that he kept the car in another garage without the permission of the authority, it is a contravention of Rule 108 of the Bengal Rules which are framed under Chap. IV of the Act and not Chap. V of the Act which is contemplated by S. 59(3)(a). Permit cannot be cancelled under S. 60 (1)(a) in such a case. (Para 7)

(D) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), S. 60 (3) — Duty of R. T. A. under sub-section (3) — Matter not considered at all by Authority — Infirmary is introduced in the resolution to cancel the permit.

Sub-section (3) of S. 60 casts a duty upon the transport authority to form an opinion having regard to the circumstances of each particular case as to whether holder of permit should be directed to pay a certain sum of money before cancelling or suspending the permit. The failure to consider this aspect of the matter introduces an infirmity in the resolutions passed by the R. T. A. and the State Transport Authority. (Para 8)

S. K. Biswas, for Petitioner; D. N. Lahiri, for Respondents.

ORDER:— In this Rule, the petitioner prays for quashing certain orders made by the Regional Transport Authority, respondent No. 2 and affirmed by the Appellate sub-committee of the State Transport Authority, the respondent No. 1 cancelling the petitioner's permit relating to his vehicle No. WBT 1709 (Landmaster Baby Taxi) as a contract carriage. The facts briefly are:

2. The petitioner was granted the above permit some time in August 1956. Since then he had been using the said Taxi Cab for the purpose of serving the public convenience. By a notice dated October 28, 1964, the Secretary of the respondent no. 2 directed the petitioner to show cause against a proposed cancellation of the said permit under Section 60(1)(a) & (c) of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 (referred to herein as the Act).

3. The petitioner furnished an explanation in which he denied that he ceased to own the vehicle but admitted that he had changed the garage from 137/3, Upper Circular Road no. 7, Ganapat Bagla Lane, without prior permission of the concerned authority for which he regretted. Thereafter, by a memorandum dated March 26, 1965, the secretary of the respondent no. 2 informed the petitioner that his explanation was found to be 'thoroughly unsatisfactory' by the Regional Transport Authority, Calcutta which in its meetings held on January 18, 1965 passed a resolution for cancellation of the said permit and directed the petitioner to surrender the permit in respect of the above vehicle within seven days from the cancellation.

4. As against this resolution, the petitioner preferred an appeal before the State Transport Authority. The appellate Sub-Committee dismissed the petitioner's appeal and thus affirmed the resolution passed by the respondent no. 2.

5. Upon these facts several grounds were taken but Mr. Biswas, learned Advocate for the petitioner, in the first place, contended that since in the resolutions of respondent no. 2 no reason was given it could not be sustained as valid. Then, the decision taken by respondent no. 1 regarding change of ownership of the vehicle was based not on any evidence but on report never disclosed to the petitioner. The petitioner made it clear that the disputed car stood in his name duly registered under the Act. He possessed the Registration Certificate, Insurance Certificate etc. in his own name. There were no other relevant materials excepting so called report by which any reasonable conclusion could be drawn that the petitioner ceased to own his vehicle or parted with its ownership in any way. This report, Mr. Biswas submitted, was totally inadmissible and extraneous and the respondent went beyond its jurisdiction in drawing such a conclusion against the petitioner on the question of ownership of the car solely relying on such a report. I think there is substance in what Mr. Biswas contends. It cannot be denied that the respondent no. 2 while exercising its power under Section 60 for cancellation of the permit is supposed to act quasi-judicially. If that be so, the conclusion drawn by the concerned Regional Transport Authority must be reached not by a subjective process but on an objective basis. Clearly, therefore, such a conclusion must be based on some evidence on which it is reasonably possible to come to a conclusion that such a charge made against the petitioner for the proposed cancellation of his permit stood established. If, such a conclusion is not based on any evidence or material, prima facie, appearing on the resolution, I do not think that such resolution can be sustained as valid. In the instant case, the petitioner has denied that he sold the car or parted with his ownership in any way relating to that car and he also produced the registration certificate (Blue book) and gave all particulars relating to his ownership and possession as required under the Act. As against these, there is nothing to indicate as to how the Regional Transport Authority could hold that the petitioner's explanation was thoroughly unsatisfactory. The Transport Authority did not also give any reason as required under sub-section (2) of Section 60 of the Act. It is not possible to hold that simply because the petitioner was keeping his car in another garage without the permission of the concerned authority, a reasonable conclusion could be drawn from that fact alone without more that the petitioner parted with the ownership of the car. This transfer of garage without permission of the concerned authority may no doubt raise some suspicion but that fact by itself cannot be accepted as proof of the fact that the petitioner ceased to be the owner of the vehicle.

6. Then again, the Appellate Sub-Committee introduced an enquiry report made by the Special Officer of the Public Vehicles Department and relying on this report it came to the conclusion that the car was transferred to some other person some time in 1962. This, I think, is not permitted under the Act. Even assuming that the Appellate Sub-Committee is competent to take additional evidence then also proper opportunities are to be given to the aggrieved party, in the present case, the petitioner, to contradict such evidence taken or relied on at the appellate stage by the Appellate Sub-Committee. It is an admitted fact that this report of the Special Officer of the public vehicles department was never disclosed to the petitioner; nevertheless the conclusion that the petitioner transferred his car some time in 1962 was solely based on this report. This is opposed to fundamental principles of all judicial procedure. So, the conclusion drawn by the Appellate Sub-Committee on the view that there had been a transfer of the car some time in 1962 cannot be sustained as valid.

7. In the second place, Mr. Biswas contended that so far as the breach of Section 60 (1) (a) was concerned, the specific allegation was that the petitioner kept the car in another garage without the permission of the authority but this was not one of the conditions contemplated in Section 59 (3) of the Act, on breach of which alone, the petitioner's permit might be liable to be cancelled. The transfer of a garage without the permission of the authority, in other words, Mr. Biswas submitted, did not come within chapter V of the Act or the Rules made thereunder as contemplated in sub-section (3) Clause (a) Section 59 of the Act. The relevant Rule, namely, Rule 108 of the Bengal Motor Vehicles

Rules relating to transfer of garage is framed under chapter IV of the Act; clearly therefore, such a transfer from a garage to another garage without the permission of the concerned authority, did not entail cancellation of the permit under Section 59 (3) (a) read with Section 60 (1) (a) of the Act. I think having regard to the above provisions of the Act and the Rule the correctness of the contentions made by Mr. Biswas cannot be doubted. It seems to me quite clear that it is only on breach of the conditions under S. 59 (3) (a), namely, failure to comply with the requirements of chapter V or the Rules made thereunder that the permit holder may be deprived of his rights to hold such permit. So, if the Rules relating to transfer of garage under Rule 108 is a Rule framed under chapter IV of the Act, then there cannot be any question of violation of such a condition so as to make the petitioner liable to cancellation of the permit. Mr. Lahiri on behalf of the respondents also could not seriously oppose this position, in law.

8. There is yet another aspect of the matter. Under Section 60 (3) of the Act before cancellation or suspension of the permit if the Transport Authority which granted the permit is of opinion that "having regard to the circumstances of the case, it would not be necessary or expedient so to cancel or suspend the permit if the holder of the permit agrees to pay a certain sum of money", then "notwithstanding anything contained in Sub-section (1) the Transport Authority may, instead of cancelling or suspending the permit, as the case may be, recover from the holder of the permit the sum of money agreed upon". I find that this aspect of the matter was not considered at all by the Transport Authority, namely, respondent no. 1. It cannot be denied that this Sub-section casts a duty upon the transport authority to form an opinion having regard to the circumstances of each particular case as to whether the petitioner should be directed to pay a certain sum of money before cancelling or suspending the permit. In my view, failure to consider this aspect of the matter has introduced another infirmity in the impugned resolutions passed by the respondents nos. 1 and 2. Considering all these, it must be held that both the impugned resolutions passed by the respondents nos. 1 and 2 are invalid.

9. The result is, the petition succeeds. Both the impugned resolutions are quashed.

10. I make it clear, however, that the Regional Transport Authority will be at liberty to decide the matter afresh if it so likes in accordance with law and in the light of the observations made above. Before I part with this case I must notice one argument made by Mr. Lahiri. His argument was that transfer of garage without permission of authority is a condition attached to the permit and, therefore, the petitioner's permit, in any case, was liable to be cancelled.

11. The original permit was produced before me and no such condition was found attached to the permit. This argument has, therefore, no substance. Let a true copy of this permit be kept with the record.

12. The Rule is made absolute to the extent indicated above.

13. Let a writ both in the nature of mandamus and certiorari issue accordingly.

14. There will be no order as to costs.

Revision allowed.

A winchman working under the Calcutta Dock Labour Board is neither a domestic servant nor a Labourer within the meaning of Clause (h) of Proviso to Section 60 (1) of Civil P. C. and his salary can therefore, be attached in execution of a decree. A winchman cannot be equated to a labourer or a domestic servant because a person has got to undergo training prescribed under R. 21 of the Calcutta Dock Workers (Regulation of Employment) Scheme, before he can be employed as a winchman. Thus, he is not a manual labourer only. A 'Labourer' is a person who earns his daily bread by personal manual labour, or in occupation which requires little or no art, skill or previous training. country is to be decided by the Central Government and not by this Court in the present proceedings. We are, in the circumstances, inclined to direct the respondents to consider and adjudicate upon the question of the petitioner's citizenship under S. 9 of the Citizenship Act.

7. The petitioner's argument that the Citizenship Act and the Rules framed thereunder contemplate dual citizenship has not impressed us and we are unable to accept this submission. Dual citizenship does not seem to us to be possible under our law except to the limited extent as contemplated by the proviso to Section 9 (1) of the Citizenship Act.

8. Before concluding, we may point out that on behalf of the petitioner, his Solicitors and Advocates have had correspondence both with the Bombay Government and the Ministry of Home Affairs of the Government of India in connection with the question of his citizenship. On 21-8-1967, a letter was addressed on behalf of the petitioner by Anand Dasgupta & Sagar, Solicitors and Advocates, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Ministry of Home Affairs, pointing out that the question of the termination of the petitioner's citizenship had never been determined under Section 9 (2) of the Citizenship Act, with the result that the petitioner must be held never to have been deprived of his Indian citizenship. The Government was called upon to accept the petitioner as an Indian citizen and not to interfere with his right to enter the territories of India and to stay there. Unfortunately, the Central Government was not expressly required by this letter to decide the question as contemplated by Section 9. From the record it does not appear that any reply was sent thereto.

It seems that neither the petitioner formally required the Central Government to decide the question of his citizenship nor did the Central Government itself undertake to do so. This attitude on the part of both the parties seems to us to be difficult to appreciate. Apparently, they were both labouring under some misapprehension about the legal position. The same having now been clarified, it is hoped that the disputed question of the termination or continuation of the petitioner's Indian citizenship would soon be determined as required by Section 9 of the Indian Citizenship Act and the petitioner's Advocates would place before the Central Government all material on which reliance is placed in support of his claim to Indian citizenship. We are unable to give any further direction at this stage in the present proceedings. This petition is thus disposed of in the terms just stated. In the peculiar circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs.

Order accordingly.

According to the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court is expected itself to hold an enquiry into the question of pauperism. The report from the Collector is to be called for in cases where the Collector is supposed to be better fitted to hold enquiries. The Court cannot, however, blindly and automatically adopt the report which is only to help the Court in judicially determining the ability of the plaintiff to pay court-fee. The issue of pauperism is to be decided by the Court and delegation and sub-delegation of this duty and power is not easy to sustain.

v. Mt. Man Kaur

M. S. Chadha, for Petitioner.

ORDER:— This revision by Kewal Krishan plaintiff is directed against the order of a learned Subordinate Judge Ist Class, Delhi, dated 15-11-1966, whereby the petitioner-plaintiff's application for permission to sue as a pauper was disallowed.

2. The trial Court on 26-3-1966, called for a report from the Collector on the petitioner's application under Order 33, Rule 1, Civil P. C. The report was required to be sent to the Court by 12-5-1966. After several hearings, on 15-11-1966, the learned Subordinate Judge, in the presence of the counsel both for the plaintiff and for the defendant, considered the report of the Collector and on the basis of that report, disallowed the plaintiff's application. The report, which is really made by a Naib-Tehsildar, and is dated 16-5-1966, reads as under:—

"This is a pauper case filed by Sh. Kewal Krishan s/o Shri Nathu Ram. He was called in this office and his statement was recorded. He gave two witnesses in support of his statement. From the statement of the petitioner, it appears that he (has) seven brothers who are employed and his father is also doing some business. The petitioner himself is a earning member. With the earning of the petitioner and help from his brothers he can arrange for the Court-fees stamp charges.

In view of the above, I cannot recommend his case and I am in view that he can easily arrange for the Court-fees stamp charges."

This report was sent on to the Tehsildar, who forwarded to the A. D. M. (Judicial) who sent it on to the Court.

3. This, in my view, is a hardly satisfactory way of dealing with pauper applications. According to the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court is expected itself to hold an enquiry into the question of pauperism. The report from the Collector is to be called for in cases where the Collector is supposed to be better fitted to hold enquiries. Such is not the case before me. Only if the learned Subordinate Judge had cared to look at the report, he would have discovered that a report of this type can hardly be proper material for holding that the petitioner-plaintiff has sufficient means to be able to pay court-fee. One outstanding error which underlies the report of the Naib-Tehsildar is that he has taken into account the financial capacity of the petitioner's brothers and father. This, normally speaking, is not to be taken into account. In Sharan Singh v. Mt. Man Kaur AIR 1929 Lah. 746(2), it was observed by Tek Chand, J. that in dealing with pauper applications, the capacity of the plaintiff himself to pay the court-fee and not that of his next friend or relations is to be considered. In the reported case, the means of the adoptive father, the natural father and uncle of the minor-plaintiff were taken into account. This was held to be a material irregularity and the High Court allowed the revision. In Mohammad Ashraf v. Muhammad Bibi, AIR 1946 Lah. 81 Abdur Rahman, J. also observed that in case of a minor plaintiff, his resources are to be considered and the fact that his next friend is fairly rich, is immaterial. There too, the revision was allowed, as the court below was held to have acted with material irregularity. This view seems to me to be correct.

4. In the case in hand, so far as the plaintiff's own resources are concerned, there is precious little to be said in support of the Naib-Tehsildar's report. The Court cannot, however, blindly and automatically adopt the report which is only to help the Court in judicially determining the ability of the plaintiff to pay court-fee. It is a matter for regret that the Tehsildar and the Additional District Magistrate (Judicial) did not apply their own mind to the report of the Naib-Tehsildar and forwarded the same as if with their approval. It must be remembered that the issue of pauperism is to be decided by the Court and delegation and sub-delegation of this duty and power is not easy to sustain. The learned Subordinate Judge has completely ignored this vital aspect and has dealt with the matter, in common with the A. D. M. (Judicial), the Tehsildar and the Naib-Tehsildar, more in an administrative than in a judicial manner. Such a course cannot be approved by this Court.

5. For all the foregoing reasons, I unhesitatingly allow this revision and setting aside the order of the Court below, send the case back to it for a proper judicial enquiry into the plaintiff-petitioner's pauperism and for further proceedings in accordance with law as contained in Order 33, Civil P. C. The plaintiff-petitioner is directed to appear in the Court below on 28-10-1968 when a short date would be given for further proceedings. As there is no appearance for the respondent, there is no order as to costs in this Court.

AIR 1970 DELHI 82 (V 57 C 17)

S. N. ANDLEY, J.

Ex. First Appeal No. 175-D of 1962 D/- 24-1-1969, from Order of Sub. J. 1s Class, Delhi, D/- 3-9-1962.

(A) Administration of Evacuee Property Act (1950), Ss. 17 and 50 — Limitation Act (1908), Art. 181 — Application under S. 17 — Article 181 applies — Time begins to run from the date of sale of property — Fact that only symbolic possession and not actual physical possession of property was given in sale is immaterial.

The status of the Custodian is not the status of a stranger or an entirely different person qua the evacuee. It is no doubt true that he has been given certain rights and even powers by the Evacuee Act, which were not possessed by the evacuee. Nevertheless, the fact remains that he is a Custodian of the property of the evacuee in the capacity of a representative or manager. The possession of the evacuee property by the Custodian or its vesting in him does not create any sort of independent statutory title in him with reference to that property. In view of the fact (1) that the title of the Custodian cannot be said to be independent of the title of the judgment-debtor and (2) that the Custodian merely steps into the shoes of the judgment-debtor, the law of limitation for an application under S. 17 of the Act by the Custodian has to be applied to the Custodian as it would have been applied to the judgment-debtor himself. Lack of notice to or the ignorance of the Custodian cannot be taken into consideration in determining the commencement of the running of the period under Art. 181. (Paras 9 and 14)

Further, S. 50 of the Act certainly requires the Courts mentioned therein to give notice to the Custodian. But that is only if it appears to such Courts that a question relating to the property of an evacuee or an intending evacuee is involved in the proceedings before that Court. This section cannot arrest the running of time under the Limitation Act if time has already begun to run.

The fact that only the symbolical possession and not actual physical possession of the property sold in Court execution sale has been given is not material as delivery of symbolical possession has been given the same status as delivery of actual physical possession. Roshan Lal, for Appellants; H. Shiv Charan Singh, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT:— The property in question was mortgaged by Mohd. Ismail, respondent No. 9 and at the instance of the mortgagee, who had filed a suit and in whose favour a Mortgage Decree had been passed it was put to sale through the Court Auctioneer. In this sale, Kabool Singh (original appellant) and Raghunath Das (original respondent No. 2) were declared the joint purchasers and the sale in their favour was confirmed by an order of the Court dated January 19, 1952. It is not disputed that Raghunath Das (original respondent no. 2) transferred all his rights, title and interest as an auction purchaser in favour of Kabool Singh aforesaid.

2. Since the property was tenanted, mere symbolical possession was given to Kabool Singh on February 28, 1952 under Rule 96 of Order 21 Civil Procedure Code. After a few years of obtaining symbolical possession Kabool Singh on February 2, 1956 filed a suit which was dealt with by the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court, against Lekh Ram, one of the tenants in the said property for recovery of arrears of rent. Lekh Ram resisted the suit on the ground, inter alia, that the property was evacuee property and that the Custodian of Evacuee Property should be impleaded as a party defendant. Upon this objection, the Custodian was impleaded and on July 20, 1956, he raised an objection that inasmuch as the property had vested in him under the provisions of the Administration of Evacuee Property (Chief Commissioner's Province) Ordinance XII of 1949, the sale thereof, was void and ineffective by reason of the provisions of S. 17 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act 31 of 1950. The claim of the Custodian was rejected by an Order of the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court on December 18, 1956.

3. In the meantime, the Custodian, filed an application in the Court of Mr. P. R. Aggarwal, Sub-Judge, Ist Class Delhi which was the executing Court in so far as the aforesaid mortgage decree was concerned. This application was filed on October 4, 1956 under Sec. 17 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act 1950 read with S. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. The executing Court dismissed this application by its order dated August 14, 1957 on the ground that it was barred by res judicata on account of the aforesaid order dated December 18, 1956 of the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court.

4. Against both the orders, namely the order dated December 18, 1956 of the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court and the order dated August 14, 1957 of Mr. P. R. Aggarwal, Sub-Judge Ist Class, Delhi the Custodian filed revisions in the Punjab High Court (Circuit Bench) at Delhi. Both these orders were set aside in revision by R. P. Khosla, J. by his order dated January 27, 1961. The learned Judge, however, remanded the case for determination of three issues which were framed by him and which are in the following terms:—

1. Whether the claim put in by the Custodian was in time?

2. Whether the property vested in the Custodian on 5th December 1951 the date of the sale and remained so vested?

3. Relief.

5. The issues were tried by Mr. M. L. Jain, Sub-Judge, Ist Class, Delhi, who by his order dated September 3, 1962 allowing the application dated October 4, 1956 which had been filed by the Custodian under Sec. 17 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950. He held that inasmuch as the property had vested in the Custodian on the date of sale i.e., December 5, 1951, the sale itself was void under S. 17 of the said Evacuee Act and that the said application was not barred by time. It is against this order that Kabool Singh, who is now represented by his legal representatives, has filed the present appeal.

6. Mr. Raushan Lal, learned counsel for the appellant, has argued that the notification dated December 14, 1949 whereby the property is alleged to have vested in the Custodian had been issued in exercise of powers conferred by the said Ordinance No. XII of 1949 and this Ordinance had been declared ultra vires by a Full Bench of the Punjab High Court in the decision which is reported in AIR 1960 Punj. 341 in re: Durga Parshad v. Custodian of Evacuee Property. He therefore, contends that there was no vesting of the property in the Custodian as claimed by him. It is not necessary to go into the validity of this argument for the simple reason that the defect, if any, in the said Ordinance No. XII of 1949 was cured by the Administration of Evacuee Property Amendment Act of 1966 whereby sub-section (2-A) had been added to Section 8 of the said Evacuee Act of 1950 and with regard to this amendment Act, the Supreme Court in its decision reported in AIR 1961 S.C. 365 in re: Azimunnissa v. Deputy Custodian Evacuee Properties has said:

"The effect of S. 8 (2-A) is that what purported to have vested under S. 8(2) of the Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance XXVII of 1949 and which is to be deemed to be vested under S. 8 of the Act which repealed that Ordinance, notwithstanding any invalidity in the original vesting or any decree or order of the Court shall be deemed to be evacuee property validly vested in the Custodian and any order made by the Custodian in relation to the property shall be deemed to be valid. Thus retrospective effect is given to the Act to validate (1) What purports to be vested; (2) removes all defects or invalidity in the vesting or fictional vesting under S. 8(2) of the Ordinance XXVII of 1949 or S. 8(2) of the Act which repealed the Ordinance; (3) makes the decree and judgments to the contrary of any Court in regard to the vesting ineffective; (4) makes the property evacuee property by its deeming effect; (5) validates all orders passed by the Custodian in regard to the property." Therefore even if Mr. Raushan Lal is right that there had not been any vesting of the property in 1949 when the aforesaid notification was issued, it will not help him because by reason of S. 8(2-A) vesting was made retrospective.

7. The next question that has to be determined is whether the application dated October 4, 1956 filed by the Custodian under S. 17 of the Evacuee Act of 1950 was within time. In view of the decision of the Supreme Court reported in AIR 1956 SC 87 in re: Ramanna v. Nallaparaju, it is not disputed that the appropriate article of the 1908 Limitation Act would be Article 181 and no other. This Article prescribes the period of limitation for an application for which no period of limitation has been prescribed. The period prescribed is three years and the time from which the period begins to run is "When the right to apply accrues".

8. The contention on behalf of the appellant is that assuming that the property vested in the Custodian, his possession was disturbed by the delivery of symbolical possession to the appellant on February 28, 1952 and, therefore, the right to apply accrued on this date. On the other hand, Bawa Shiv Charan Singh, learned counsel for the Custodian contends that the sale being void by reason of S. 17 of the Evacuee Act of 1950, it was open to the Custodian not to take any notice of it and that he could take notice of it only when he was made aware that somebody else was claiming a right in the property to his prejudice. According to the argument, such awareness came to the Custodian only on July 20, 1956 when he was served with the notice by the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court, and, therefore, the right to apply accrued only on this date.

9. The status of the Custodian is not the status of a stranger or an entirely different person qua the evacuee. It is no doubt true that he has been given certain rights and even powers by the Evacuee Act, which were not possessed by the evacuee. Nevertheless, the fact remains, that he is a Custodian of the property of the evacuee in the capacity of a representative or manager. It is difficult, for me to accept the argument that the possession of the evacuee property by the Custodian or its vesting in him creates some sort of independent statutory title in him with reference to that property. A Division Bench of the Punjab High Court has expressed the view in the case Abda v. Yusuf Khan (1948) 50 Pun. L. R. 210, that the object of the Evacuee Act is to preserve the property of an evacuee and that even though the property of the evacuee vests in the Custodian such vesting does not deprive an evacuee of his right to continue his case in a Court of law.

10. Similar observations have been made in the case reported in AIR 1964 Andh. Pra. 126 in re: Mohd. Ali Hasan Khan v. Bhagirathilal where it is stated that it is not the object of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act to make the Government or the Custodian of Evacuee Property the owner of the property declared as evacuee property. Notwithstanding such a declaration the property shall continue to be the property of the evacuee and the vesting thereof in the Custodian would only mean that the Custodian is stepping into the shoes of the evacuee as a statutory agent or manager for continuing administration and management of the same.

11. The question of limitation, has therefore, to be looked at from the point of view that the Custodian is an agent or manager of the evacuee. Bawa Shiv Charan Singh has drawn my attention to S. 50 of the Evacuee Act of 1950 which provides that if in any suit, it appears to the Civil Court that a question relating to the property of an evacuee or an intending evacuee is involved, the Court shall not proceed to determine that question until notice has been given to the Custodian. It is contended that since no notice was given to the Custodian by the executing Court, the Custodian is not bound by the execution proceedings or by the sale of the property by Court auction and could not have been expected to have taken any steps until his possession was in fact disturbed. It is further contended that delivery of symbolical possession to the auction purchaser would not be disturbance of the Custodian's possession. S. 50 certainly requires the Courts mentioned therein to give notice to the Custodian. But that is only if it appears to such Courts that a question relating to the property of an evacuee or an intending evacuee is involved in the proceedings before that Court. This section cannot arrest the running of time under the Limitation Act if time has already begun to run.

12. The next contention on behalf of the respondent is that symbolical possession, which is delivered under the provisions of Rule 96 of Order 21 Civil Procedure Code may amount to delivery of possession where the tenants are of the judgment-debtor himself. In this case, it is contended that the tenants were not of the judgment-debtor but of the Custodian and therefore delivery of symbolical possession in this case could not be said to be interference with the possession of the Custodian. It is difficult to accept this argument.

13. The Privy Council has observed in AIR 1949 P.C. 124 in re: Adya Nath v. Krishna Prasad Singh that delivery of symbolical possession of property found to be in occupation of a tenant of the judgment-debtor effectively terminates the possession of both the judgment-debtor and the tenant. Similarly in AIR 1959 Punj. 515 in re: Mst. Mewa v. Amar Singh delivery of symbolical possession has been given the same status as delivery of actual physical possession.

14. In view of the fact (1) that the title of the Custodian cannot be said to be independent of the title of the judgment-debtor and (2) that the Custodian merely steps into the shoes of the judgment-debtor, the law of limitation has to be applied to the Custodian as it would have been applied to the judgment-debtor himself. Lack of notice to or the ignorance of the Custodian cannot be taken into consideration in determining the commencement of the running of the period under Article 181 of the Limitation Act 1908. The time from which the period begins to run is when the right to apply accrues and that right in my opinion definitely accrued to the judgment-debtor and, therefore, to the Custodian on February 28, 1952 when symbolical possession was delivered to the appellant.

15. Under the circumstances, I hold that the application dated October 4, 1956, filed by the Custodian under S. 17 of the Evacuee Act of 1950 was filed beyond the time prescribed by Article 181 of the Limitation Act of 1908. This appeal is, therefore, allowed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Second Appeal No. 182 of 1968, D/- 24-4-1969, against order of Addl. Dist. J., Delhi, D/- 13-5-1966.

(A) Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act (1954), S. 36 — Scope — Distinction between Rr. 41 and 42 of Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Rules (1955) — "Shall" and "may" — Construction — Plaintiff alleging to be claimant, displaced person and lawful tenant of Government-built property — Suit filed for declaration —

FM/JM/C409/69/JRM/P

Suit is barred by S. 36 — (Interpretation of Statutes — Operation of Statutes — Mandatory and directory provisions — Use of words "may" and "shall")—(Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble — Interpretation of Statutes — Operation of Statutes — Mandatory and directory provisions — Use of words "may" and "shall") — (Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Rules (1955), Rr. 41 and 42).

Where a plaintiff files a suit for declaration alleging to be a claimant, displaced person and lawful tenant of Government-built property, such a suit is barred by S. 36, Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act.

It is obvious that prima facie S. 36 bars such a suit. A bare reading of that section shows how widely it is worded and how clearly it bars the jurisdiction of civil courts in matters specified therein. The statute quite clearly provides a complete machinery for a person claiming compensation or rehabilitation under the Act and there are ample provisions for appeals and revisions if an interested party feels aggrieved. The bar under S. 36 renders such a suit incompetent and it binds the civil courts. (Para 6)

When the plaintiff in such a case is held to be not a displaced person having a verified claim and his allegation that he is a claimant is not accepted, in view of the difference in the language of Rr. 41 and 42 of Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Rules, it cannot be contended that there is no distinction between the right of a displaced person with a verified claim and one without such a claim. The use of "shall" and "may" in Rr. 41 and 42 of those Rules brings out this distinction. That distinction is also rational. There is no reason why the word "shall" in R. 41 should be given a permissive colour or the word "may" in R. 42 should be construed in a peremptory manner. The word "shall" does not always conclusively convey an imperative mandate and similarly the word "may" is at times intended to mean "must". But to construe "shall" as "may" and "may" as "shall", there must be compelling reasons discernible from the context and the statutory aim, object and purpose. In the absence of such consideration, these words must be given their normal meanings in the English language. Thus such a suit is barred under S. 36 and is incompetent. 1967 D.L.T. 656 & AIR 1952 SC 319 & AIR 1963 SC 507 & AIR 1962 SC 1258 & C. W. No. 400-D of 1960, D/- 5-5-1967 (Delhi), Dist.; L.P.A. habilitation) Act — Both lower courts not accepting that allegation — Conclusion of both lower courts not shown to be tainted with any illegality — In second appeal that plea is unacceptable and must be repelled under such circumstances. (Para 7)

(C) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 100 and 11 — Plea of res judicata — Plea negated by trial Court — Plea not agitated in first appellate Court — Plea not allowed to be raised in second appeal, more particularly when the suit itself is held to be incompetent. (Para 7)

JUDGMENT:— This second appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration instituted by the plaintiff-appellant on the allegations that he is a claimant and displaced person and lawful tenant of a Government-built property in question situated in Tilak Nagar, New Delhi. The said property is stated to be an allotable property, its value having been assessed at Rs. 3,200/-. The plaintiff pleaded that he was entitled to the transfer of this property at the assessed value under the provisions of the Displaced Persons (Compensation & Rehabilitation) Act (hereafter called the Act). His claim was denied and the property in dispute was transferred by the Union of India in favour of Smt. Kundan Devi, defendant No. 2. This transfer was described by the plaintiff to have been effected as a result of fraud and misrepresentation practised by the transferee's husband. The matter was taken by the plaintiff to the Settlement Commissioner on appeal, but the same was rejected on 14-3-1962. This order was described by the plaintiff to be without jurisdiction because the Assistant Commissioner, according to him, had not been delegated the powers of the Settlement Commissioner. The matter was further taken on revision to the Chief Settlement Commissioner, but that was also rejected on 11-6-1962. The approach to the Central Government under Section 33 of the Act was also unsuccessful. It was thereafter that the present suit was instituted.

2. The pleadings of the parties gave rise to several issues, but issue No. 4, which is concerned with the plaintiff's locus standi to institute the present suit, alone concerns me. The trial Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had no locus standi to sue. The other issues were also decided on the merits by the trial Court. Issue No. 6 dealing with the plea of res judicata was decided in favour of the plaintiff.

3. On appeal, the learned Additional District Judge affirmed the judgment and decree of dismissal of the suit on 13-5-1968. According to the lower Appellate Court, under Rule 42 of the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Rules, the authorities concerned had a discretion to transfer or not to transfer an allotable property to a displaced person who did not hold a verified claim and in view of this rule, the plaintiff-appellant had no locus standi to maintain the suit as he had no actionable claim against the Rehabilitation Department of the Government of India. From the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, it seems that no other ground was pressed before that Court. I have made this observation because Shri G. N. Aggarwal, learned counsel for one of the respondents, has tried to re-agitate the question of res judicata which was decided by the trial Court, but which was not the subject-matter of argument before the lower Appellate Court.

4. In this Court, Shri Nijhawan, the learned counsel for the appellant, has in very elaborate arguments forcefully pressed the contention that although his client was not absolutely entitled to get the property in question, still as he was one of the persons who might have been given this property, he had a locus standi to institute the suit and that the lower Appellate Court was, for this reason, wrong in law in holding the suit to be incompetent. He has drawn my attention to various provisions of the Act and the Rules framed thereunder, but he has specifically referred to Rules 36, 41 and 42. Rule 36 reads as under:—

(a) every Government-built residential property valued at rupees fifteen thousand or less and occupied by a displaced person on a rental basis; Provided that the Central Government may in any particular case direct that any such property shall not be allotable;

(b) every Government-built shop valued at rupees fifteen thousand or less.

Explanation. — No such property shall be allotable, if it is in the occupation of two or more persons, whether any or all of them be displaced persons or not.”

5. According to Shri Nijhawan, there is no distinction between the right of a displaced person who holds a verified claim and the one who does not hold such a claim, but this submission seems to me to be misconceived because of the difference in the language of Rules 41 and 42. Rule 41 lays down that a displaced person having a verified claim who is in occupation of a Government-built property which is an allotable property, shall be paid compensation by the transfer of the property to him:

x x x x

Rule 42 on the other hand provides that where a displaced person, who does not hold a verified claim, is in occupation of a Government-built property, which is an allotable property, the property may be transferred to him if he makes the initial payment of:

x x x x

The use of the words “shall” and “may” in the two rules respectively, seems to me to bring out the distinction between the two, which also appears to be rational. No argument has been advanced before me on behalf of the appellant as to why the word “shall” in Rule 41 should be given a permissive colour or the word “may” in Rule 42 should be construed in a peremptory manner. The decisions on which the learned counsel for the appellant has placed reliance do not seem to be of much assistance to him.

Bhiru Mal v. Finance Commr., 1967 D.L.T. 656, is a case of a writ petition in which it was held that if the petitioner had direct individual personal interest in a certain matter, which was being affected prejudicially by a quasi-judicial order in a proceeding to which he was a party, then it could not be said that he had no right to invoke the extraordinary jurisdiction of a High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution merely because no law conferred on him the absolute right to claim the very relief for which he had applied and which had been denied to him. In the reported case, where the impugned order by the Managing Officer showed on its very face that the said officer was prohibited by administrative instructions from exercising his discretion or even from bringing to bear upon the question before him his own independent mind by certain administrative instructions or a circular letter issued by a superior authority, then that order had to be held to be based on extraneous reasons liable to be set aside on that short ground. The ratio of this decision is clearly of no help to the appellant.

Ebrahim Aboobakar v. Custodian General of Evacuee Property, 1952 SCR 696=(AIR 1952 SC 319), was a decision given on appeal from a decision of the Punjab High Court in writ proceedings and it was held that a person claiming to be interested in an enquiry as to whether a person was an evacuee and his property evacuee property, who had filed a written statement and adduced evidence, was a "person aggrieved" by an order that the latter was not an evacuee and had a locus standi to prefer an appeal from that order.

State of Punjab v. Suraj Parkash Kapur, (1962) 2 SCR 711=(AIR 1963 SC 507), was an appeal from an order of the Punjab High Court in writ proceedings and it was held that the respondents' lands had been substituted by lands of less value without paying compensation and that, therefore, the High Court was right in setting aside the order confirming the scheme under the East Punjab Holdings (Consolidation and Prevention of Fragmentation) Act, 1948. Management of Marina Hotel v. The Workmen, (1962) 3 SCR 1=(AIR 1962 SC 1258), a case dealing with an industrial dispute is equally unhelpful to the appellant. The ratio of the unreported decision of this Court in Sohan Lal v. Union of India C. W. No. 400-D of 1960, D/- 5-5-1967 (Delhi) also does not support the appellant's submission that he has in the present case a right which can be enforced by way of suit.

It is indisputable that the word "shall" does not always conclusively convey an imperative mandate and similarly the word "may" is at times intended by the law-giver to mean "must". But to construe "shall" as "may" and "may" as "shall" there must be compelling reasons discernible from the context and the statutory aim, object and purpose. In the absence of such consideration, these words must be given their normal meanings in the English language.

6. Shri Kirpal has drawn my attention to Section 36 of the D. P. (C and R) Act which bars the jurisdiction of Civil Courts in all matters which the Central Government or any officer of the authority appointed under the Act is empowered by the statute to determine except where this Act itself provides otherwise. It is obvious that prima facie this section bars the present suit and on behalf of the appellant, precious little has been said for taking the present case out of this statutory bar. Our attention has also been invited to an unreported Bench decision of this Court in Hafiz-ud-Din v. Union of India, L. P. A. No. 43-D of 1966, D/- 21-9-1967 (Delhi) in which challenge by means of a civil suit on the ground of want of consideration to a transfer of property by the Central Government through the Managing Officer was held to be incompetent by virtue of Section 36.

In my opinion, the respondents are right in their reliance on Section 36. A bare reading of this section shows how widely it is worded and how clearly it bars the jurisdiction of Civil Courts in matters specified therein. The statute quite clearly provides a complete machinery for a person claiming compensation or rehabilitation under this Act and there are ample provisions for appeals and revisions if a party interested feels aggrieved. The bar renders the present suit incompetent and it binds the Civil Courts.

7. Although the learned counsel for the appellant at one stage virtually conceded that he was not a claimant, nevertheless in the fag end of his arguments, he made a half-hearted attempt to urge that he was also a claimant, but this submission is unacceptable on second appeal on the facts and circumstances of this case. The trial Court had observed in express words that there was no evidence on behalf of the appellant to show that he held a verified claim in his favour. His bald submission that he was a claimant was not accepted. The lower Appellate Court also held that the appellant could not be considered to be a displaced person having a verified claim. These conclusions have not been shown to be tainted with any illegality, with the result that this submission must be repelled.

As observed earlier, Shri G. N. Aggarwal tried to raise the question of res judicata but no attempt had apparently been made in the Lower Appellate Court to support the decree of the trial Court on this plea which had been negatived by the first Court. I, therefore, did not consider it proper to allow him to raise this point on second appeal, more particularly as I was not persuaded to hold the suit to be competent.

8. For the foregoing reasons, this appeal fails and is dismissed, but with no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mohan Singh, Petitioner v. Roshan Lal and others, Respondents.

Civil Misc. No. 384 of 1968 in Ex. Petn. No. 5 of 1968, D/- 1-5-1969.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 151, O. 45, R. 13(2) (d) — Inherent power — Absence of — Abuse of process of Court — Exercise of inherent power not necessary.

Section 151 merely saves by expressly preserving to the Court (which is both a

GM/HM/D6/69/HGP/P

Court of equity and law) inherent power to act according to justice, equity and good conscience and make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court. It does not confer any additional power not already vesting in it, to entertain a proceeding but applies only to the exercise of power when the matter is before the Court. (Para 5)

Where, pending the appeal and cross appeal in Supreme Court against the judgment and decree of the High Court in a money suit, the decree-holder applied to the High Court under S. 151 to modify its judgment and decree by adding that the judgment-debtor should furnish adequate security for the sum of decree and this relief was sought so that the ultimate realization of the amount be facilitated in case the Supreme Court upholds that part of the decree.

Held that there was neither the question of abuse of the process of the Court nor was it necessary in the ends of justice to make such order in the circumstances disclosed on the record.

Held further that O. 45, R. 13 (2) (d) Civil P. C. was of no help to the decree-holder in such a case, because that rule does not empower the Court to alter, amend or modify the judgment or decree. (Para 5)

Sushil Malhotra, for Petitioner; Chhabildass, for Respondents.

I. D. DUA, C. J.:—The decree-holder has approached this Court under Section 151, Civil Procedure Code. His application so far as material may be reproduced in extenso:—

"The respondent decree-holder respectfully prays as under:

1. That in the aforesaid R.F.A. No. 21 of 1967 this Hon'ble Court consisting of Hon'ble Mr. Justice S. N. Shankar and Hon'ble Mr. Justice Jagjit Singh in its judgment dated 30th August, 1968 was pleased to hold that the respondent decree-holder was entitled to recover the amount of Rs. 5,08,333-5-6 plus interest upto 7th April, 1961. Costs awarded by the Pakistan Court, Costs awarded by the Trial Court at Simla and interest on principal amount from 8th April, 1961 till realization, amounting to a total of Rs. 10,92,318-37 calculated upto 8-9-1968. It was further directed in the judgment and decree that the respondent/Decree-Holder is entitled to take out immediate execution for the recovery of the decretal amount as mentioned above less, deposit amount of Rupees Three Lacs with a proviso that if within three years from the date of this order no payment is received by him out of or from the Deposit amount he will be entitled to sue for execution for the recovery of the unpaid decretal amount then due to him.

2. That the Decree-Holder feels that it would be difficult for him to realise the amount of Rupees three lacs lying in deposit in the High Court of West Pakistan from the legal representatives of Late Rai Bahadur Jodha Mal the original defendant.

3. It is, therefore, fit and proper in the circumstances as mentioned above that the Judgment-Debtor/Appellant be directed to furnish a Cash Security or a Bank Guarantee to the satisfaction of this Hon'ble Court so that there is no difficulty for the respondent/Decree-Holder to realise the aforesaid amount of Rupees Three Lacs if the same is not received by the Decree-Holder within the stipulated period.

4. This is without prejudice to the right of the Decree-Holder respondent to take any other appropriate action arising out of the judgment of this Hon'ble Court.

5. It is, therefore, prayed that your Lordships may be pleased to direct the Judgment-Debtor/Appellant to furnish cash security or a Bank Guarantee for Rs. 3 Lacs to the satisfaction of this Hon'ble Court.

Any other orders or directions that your Lordships may deem fit and proper under the circumstances of this case may be passed."

2. This matter originally came up before learned Single Judges of this Court more than once. On the last occasion my learned brother P. N. Khanna, J. referred the matter to a larger Bench because it was suggested (the suggestion is also repeated before us) that the prayer in this petition virtually amounts to the amendment of the decree. It is for this reason that the matter was placed before a Division Bench.

3. The relevant part of the Judgment of the Division Bench of this Court dated August 30, 1968, which judgment and decree is the subject-matter of appeal in the Supreme Court by both parties on a grant of a certificate, reads as under:—

"We, accordingly, hold that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the aforementioned amounts and future interest out of the assets of the deceased R. B. Jodha Mal and the appellants will be liable to pay the same to that extent only. As stated earlier, he (Rai Bahadur Mohan Singh Oberoi) will be entitled to take out immediate execution only for the recovery of the decretal amount less the deposit amount of rupees three lacs with a proviso that if within three years from the date of this order no payment is received by him out of or from the deposit amount, he will be entitled to sue out execution for the recovery of the unpaid decretal amount then due to him."

4. It is conceded at the Bar that objection to this part of the judgment and decree has been taken in the memorandum of appeal to the Supreme Court and the matter will have to be ultimately decided by that Court. Indeed, the judgment-debtor is also questioning, on appeal to the Supreme Court the decree to the extent of Rs. 3,00,000/- as granted by this Court.

5. On behalf of the decree-holder now what is prayed in real substance is that we should modify the judgment and decree of this Court against which cross-appeals are already pending in the Supreme Court, by adding a further proviso that the judgment-debtor should furnish adequate security for a sum of Rs. 3,00,000/- and this relief is sought so that the ultimate realization of this amount by the decree-holder is facilitated in case the Supreme Court upholds this part of the decree. We are unable to make this order under Section 151, Civil Procedure Code on the facts and circumstances of this case. Section 151 merely saves by expressly preserving to the Court (which is both a Court of equity and law) inherent power to act according to justice, equity and good conscience and make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court. It does not confer any additional power not already vesting in it, to entertain a proceeding but applies only to the exercise of power when the matter is before the Court. There is no question of abuse of the process of the Court in this case and we are also far from satisfied that it is necessary in the ends of justice to make the order sought in the circumstances disclosed on the record. Reference has been made to Order XLV, Rule 13(2)(d), Civil Procedure Code, by Shri S. Malhotra and according to him, even though his application does not purport to be under this provision of law, the prayer in the application is clear and this Court should, despite different label on the application, exercise its power under Clause (d) of this rule and give the directions prayed. In our opinion, this rule does not empower this Court to alter, amend or modify the judgment or decree. The conditions to be placed on any party seeking relief from the Court and directions to be given respecting the subject-matter of the appeal are intended largely for the restricted purpose of interim protection without altering on merits the judgment appealed from. The matter is concededly pending before the Supreme Court and if the parties are so advised, they may approach that Court and seek appropriate directions by way of interim relief for safeguarding their rights.

6. For the reasons given above, this petition fails and is dismissed with costs.
Petition dismissed.

AIR 1970 DELHI 90 (V 57 C 20)

FULL BENCH

I. D. DUA, C. J., H. R. KHANNA AND JAGJIT SINGH, JJ.

Unique Motors and General Insurance Co., Petitioner v. S. K. Vaiyapuri and others, Respondents.

Civil Writ Petn. No. 35 of 1967, D/- 23-7-1969.

(A) Insurance Act (1938), Ss. 3(4)(f), 64-M(3), 110 and 114 — Insurance Rules (1939), R. 17-H — R. 17-H does not confer power of cancellation of registration of insurer independently of S. 3(4)(f) — Right of appeal against cancellation not taken away — (Insurance Rules (1939), R. 17-H) — (Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble— Interpretation of Statutes).

Per Jagjit Singh, J.: R. 17-H of Insurance Rules (1939) does not confer on the Controller of Insurance the power to cancel the registration of an insurer independently of S. 3(4)(f) of the Act. The correct interpretation of Clause (a) of that rule is that the certificate of registration granted to an insurer may be cancelled by the Controller in pursuance of sub-section (3) of S. 64-M under the Act, from which it follows that cancellation of the registration of the insurer is to be effected under the provisions relating to cancellation of registration as embodied in the Act. (Para 20)

The only provision in the Act relating to cancellation of registration are to be found in sub-sections (3) and (4) of S. 3. In sub-section (3) of S. 3 the expression used is "cancel a registration already made" while in sub-section (4) the registration which can be cancelled is not described as "the registration of the insurer under the Act", but merely as "registration of an insurer". Sub-sec. (5) of S. 3 requires that when the Controller withholds or cancels any "registration under sub-sec. (3) or Clause (a), Clause (aa), Clause (e), Clause (ee), Clause (f), Clause (g) or Clause (h) of sub-sec. (4)", a notice in writing shall be given to the insurer of his decision etc. The registration referred to is not granted under sub-sec. (3) or the clauses mentioned after the words "under sub-sec. (3)", but those clauses have reference to the provisions under which registration is cancelled. It appears that in Rule 17-H the same form of construction was used and the words "under the Act" do not qualify the expression "registration of the insurer", but go with the word "cancel". The rule, therefore, does not confer an independent power of cancellation on the Controller. Besides prescribing for certain other matters it seems to provide that the registration of the insurer may be cancelled under the Act, which in the context should mean the provisions of S. 3(4)(f) of the Act. (Para 17)

The right of appeal to a Court of law is a most valuable right and deprivation of that right is not to be lightly assumed. The Act does not provide for deprivation of right of appeal in case of insurers whose registration is cancelled after their disregard of two warnings by the Controller nor such deprivation can be inferred from the provisions of Act.

(Para 18)

Per I. D. Dua, C. J. (H. R. Khanna, J. Concurring): Sub-section (3) of Section 114 is designed to retain legislative control over the rules framed under S. 114. This provision clearly suggests that the Legislature has been given an opportunity of scrutinising the rules made under S. 114 of the Act and it may be assumed that in the case in hand, the opportunity was utilised as intended. Rule 17-H which must, therefore, be deemed to have the implied sanction of the legislature after it was made, deserves to be read as a part of the Act itself. A rule of this type being a part of the statute, has to be construed along with the other provisions of the statute and every effort should be made to fit it in with the general statutory scheme which is discernible from the Act read as a whole. The language used in Rule 17-H may be capable of two meanings, but if reasonably permissible, the Court should adopt the one which would render it valid rather than invalid. The Court may more readily be inclined to assume — if necessary — a mistake in drafting rather than to impute to the Legislature an intention to place on the statute book or approve under S. 114(3) an invalid or unconstitutional provision. From this point of view, the impugned rule must be so read as to make it lawful, constitutional and consistent with the smooth working of the system which the statute purports to regulate, and there does not seem to be any insurmountable obstacle in so reading it. (Para 24)

(B) Insurance Act (1938), Ss. 64-M(3) and 3 (5-c) — Insurance Rules (1939), R. 17-H — Registration cancelled in pursuance of S. 64-M (3) may be revived in suitable case — (Insurance Rules (1939), R. 17-H). (Para 19)

(C) Insurance Act (1938), S. 64-M(3) — Insurance Rules (1939), R. 17-H — Constitution of India, Art. 14 — S. 64-M(3) and R. 17-H are not violative of Art. 14 — (Insurance Rules (1939), R. 17-H) — (Constitution of India, Art. 14).

As cancellation of the registration in pursuance of S. 64-M(3) read with R. 17-H cannot be made independently of S. 3 (4)(f) of the Act it cannot be said that the Act provides two separate and independent procedures for cancellation of registration and that one of the procedures is more prejudicial than the other. Hence the question of infringement of Art. 14 of the Constitution does not arise.

Cases Referred: Chronological Paras (1967) AIR 1967 S.C. 1581 (V 54) = (1967) 3 SCR 399, Northern India Caterers (Private) Ltd. v. State of Punjab 14

S. S. Ahuja, for Petitioner; B. R. L. Iyengar with B. N. Kirpal for Attorney-General of India and the Controller of Insurance.

JAGJIT SINGH, J.:— The following questions have been referred to the Full Bench by a Division Bench of this Court:—

"1. Whether Rule 17-H confers power on the Controller of Insurance to cancel the registration of an insurer independently of Section 3(4)(f) of the Act? If so, whether Rule 17-H is ultra vires of Section 110(a) of the Act?

2. Whether Section 64-M(3) of the Act read with Rule 17-H is ultra vires of Article 14 of the Constitution as conferring unbridled, arbitrary and discriminatory powers on the Controller of Insurance?"

2. The facts of the case are given in detail in the reference of the Division Bench. It may, however, be mentioned that Unique Motor and General Insurance Company Limited, Bombay (hereinafter referred to as the petitioner-company), is a public limited Company registered and incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, and was carrying on the business of general insurance and more particularly of motor insurance. On November 6, 1942, the petitioner-company was registered in respect of miscellaneous insurance business under Section 3(6) of the Insurance Act, 1938 (Act IV of 1938), called hereafter as the Act.

3. The Controller of Insurance, Simla, by an order, dated April 17, 1964, cancelled the certificate of registration of the petitioner-company. The order purported to have been passed under sub-section (3) of Section 64-M of the Act read with Rule 17-H of the Insurance Rules, 1939 (to be referred to for facility of reference as the Rules) and was in the following terms:—

"I have the honour to say that your Company has disregarded two warnings given to it under sub-section (2) of Section 64-M of the Insurance Act, 1938.

2. I, therefore, in pursuance of sub-section (3) of Section 64-M of the said Act read with Rule 17-H of the Insurance Rules, 1939, hereby cancel the certificate of registration bearing the number 339/2 dated the 6th November 1942 in respect of miscellaneous insurance business granted to your company under Sec. 3 of the said Act and the cancellation will take effect on the 27th April, 1964."

4. Under provisions of Section 64-M (2) three warnings were administered to the petitioner-company, for contravention of Section 40-C of the Act, with respect to the expenses of management in miscellaneous insurance business during the years 1957, 1958 and 1959 (vide letters dated 10-12-1959, 22-12-1959 and 11-1-1962 respectively). It was after these warnings had been given that the certificate of registration of the petitioner-company was cancelled.

5. The petitioner-company filed an appeal against the order cancelling its certificate of registration to the High Court of Bombay. On November 23, 1964 R. M. Kantawala, J. dismissed the appeal after holding that Section 110 of the Act, which deals with appeals, does not provide for any appeal from an order made under Section 64-M of the Act read with Rule 17-H of the Rules. The petitioner-company then filed a petition for issuing a writ of certiorari for quashing the order of the Controller, dated April 17, 1964. It was during hearing of that petition that the abovementioned questions were formulated and referred to the Full Bench.

6. At this stage some of the provisions of the Act may be noticed briefly. Sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Act provides for registration of insurance. Sub-section (2) of that Section mentions the documents which are required to accompany every application for registration. Sub-section (6) authorises the Controller on being satisfied that the application has fulfilled all the requirements of the section and subject to compliance of certain other provisions to register the insurer and grant him a certificate of registration. Sub-section (3) of the same section empowers the Controller to withhold registration or cancel a registration already made if in a country where any insurer has his principal place of business or domicile Indian nationals are debarred from carrying on the business of insurance or where any reciprocal condition imposed on such insurer is not satisfied.

7. Under sub-section (4) of Section 3 of the Act it is obligatory on the Controller to cancel the registration of an insurer either wholly or in so far as it relates to a particular class of insurance business if the case of the insurer falls under any clause of clauses (a) to (ee) thereof. Where, however, the case of an insurer falls under any clause of clauses (f) to (h) of that sub-section cancellation of registration is discretionary. Under clause (f) the Controller may cancel the registration of an insurer if the insurer makes default in complying with, or acts in contravention of, any requirement of the Act or of any rule or order made thereunder. Sub-section (5-C) enables the Controller at his discretion to revive the Registration cancelled under clause (a), clause (aa), clause (e), clause (f), clause (g) or clause (h) of sub-section (4).

8. Sections 40-A, 40-B and 40-C and Part II-A, containing Sections 64-A to 64-T, were inserted in the Act by the Insurance Amendment Act, 1950 (Act XLVII of 1950). These sections were inserted to provide for the control of overall expenses of all insurers through the medium of statutory association of insurers and the Executive Committee of the Life Insurance Council and the General Insurance Council.

9. Sub-section (1) of Section 40-C of the Act places limitation on expenses of management in general insurance business. It, inter alia, provides that after December 31, 1949, no insurer shall, in respect of any class of general insurance business transacted by him in India, spend in any calendar year as expenses of management including commission or remuneration for procuring business an amount in excess of the prescribed limit. There is, however, a proviso to this sub-section which is to the effect that where an insurer has spent as such expenses in any year an amount in excess of the amount permissible under this sub-section he shall not be deemed to have contravened the provisions of the section, if the excess amount so spent is within such limits as may be fixed in respect of the year by the Controller after consultation with the Executive Committee of the General Insurance Council by which the actual expenses incurred may exceed the expenses permissible under the sub-section.

10. Section 64-M of the Act provides for giving of advice by the Executive Committee of the General Insurance Council to the Controller in the matter of fixing, under the proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 40-C, the limits by which the actual expenses of management incurred by an insurer, carrying on general insurance business, in respect of such business in the preceding year, may exceed the limits prescribed by that sub-section. It also provides for administering of warnings to an insurer guilty of contravention of the provisions with respect to the expenses of management and for the Controller taking such action against an insurer disregarding two warnings as may be prescribed. The section reads:—

"64-M(1). It shall be the duty of the Executive Committee of the General Insurance Council to meet at least once before the 31st day of March every year to advise the Controller in fixing under the proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 40-C the limits by which the actual expenses of management incurred by an insurer carrying on general insurance business in respect of such business in the preceding year may exceed the limits prescribed under that sub-section, and in fixing any such limits the Controller shall have due regard to the conditions obtaining in general insurance business in the preceding year, and he may fix different limits for different groups of insurers.

Where an insurer is guilty of contravening the provisions of Section 40-C respect to the expenses of management the Controller may, after giving insurer an opportunity of being heard, administer a warning to the insurer.

Where in any case two warnings have been given to an insurer under sub-section (2) and he has disregarded by him, the Controller may take such action against the insurer as may be prescribed."

The expression "prescribed" has been defined in Section 2(14) of the Act to mean as prescribed by rules made under Section 114. Section 114 gives power to the Central Government to make rules to carry out the purposes of the Act, including any matter which is or may be prescribed.

Rule 17-H of the Rules, made under Section 114 of the Act, prescribes the action that may be taken by the Controller under sub-section (3) of Section 64-M. The rule is as follows:—

17-H (1) In pursuance of sub-section (3) of Section 64-M of the Act the Controller may:—

(a) Cancel the registration of the insurer under the Act, and

(b) Request the Executive Committee of the General Insurance Council to consider practical steps for the reconstruction of the insurer concerned or for transferring its business to some other insurer.

(c) When such a request as is referred to in the preceding sub-rule is received by the Executive Committee of the General Insurance Council, it shall meet not more than one month of the receipt of the request to consider the request and within seven days of such meeting shall communicate its decision to the Controller.

(d) The Controller may, after considering the recommendations of the Executive Committee in this behalf apply to the court for winding up of the insurer concerned if he thinks fit."

3. The Act also contains provisions, Section 110, regarding appeal against order under Section 3 refusing to register or cancelling the registration of insurer.

4. Shri S. S. Ahuja, learned counsel for the petitioner-company, was at first inclined to take the stand that Section 64-M(3) of the Act read with R. 17-H of the Rules does not confer any independent power on the Controller of cancelling the registration of an insurer, who has disregarded two warnings given to him, and that the cancellation of the registration of an insurer in such a case has to be considered to have been made under Section 3(4)(f) of the Act. This line of reasoning was, however, abandoned when it was realised that the judgment of the Bombay High Court, to which reference has been made earlier, was inter partes. Shri Ahuja, therefore, on the assumption that the view taken by the learned Judge of the Bombay High Court was correct, contended that clause (a) of Rule 17-H of the Rules confers power on the Controller independently of Section 3(4)(f) to cancel the registration of an insurer in pursuance of sub-section (3) of Section 64-M and the rule to that extent is ultra vires of Section 110(a) as there is no right to appeal against such cancellation of the registration of an insurer. It was further urged that Section 64-M(3) read with Rule 17-H is ultra vires of Article 14 of the Constitution as these provisions confer unbridled, arbitrary and discriminatory power on the Controller to either proceed under these more prejudicial provisions or to take action under Section 3(4)(f) of the Act. Reliance was placed on the case of North India Caterers (Private) Ltd. v. State of Punjab, AIR 1967 SC 1581.

15. Shri B. R. L. Iyengar, who appeared for the Controller of Insurance and the Attorney General of India, submitted that Section 64-M of the Act read with Rule 17-H of the Rules forms a separate scheme which is only applicable to that class of insurers who have been extravagant in the matter of expenses of management and have also disregarded two warnings given to them by the Controller. According to the learned counsel action against such an insurer can only be taken under Section 64-M(3) read with Rule 17-H and as such there is no question of the Controller having arbitrary discretion either to proceed under those provisions or to take action under Section 3(4)(f). It was urged that the Legislature has intentionally withheld the right of appeal from this class of insurers as under the proviso to Section 40-C the Controller has to fix for each year, after considering the advice of the Executive Committee of the General Insurance Council and having regard to the conditions obtaining in general insurance business in the preceding year, the limits within which the expenses of management may exceed the prescribed limits. Eight representatives of the members of the Insurance Association of India also being members of the Executive Committee of the General Insurance Council, it was stated the advice tendered by the said Committee is based on the actual needs and difficulties of insurers carrying on general insurance business. As action for cancellation of the registration is only taken after two warnings have been disregarded, it was contended the insurer concerned can have, under the circumstances, no grievance that right of appeal has been denied to him.

16. In clause (a) of Rule 17-H of the Rules the words used are "cancel the registration of the insurer under the Act". It is true that the rule is somewhat unhappily worded and possibly a construction can be put on it that in pursuance of sub-section (3) of Section 64-M of the Act the Controller may cancel the registration of the insurer granted under the Act. The other interpretation would be that the registration of an insurer may be cancelled by the Controller under the provisions of the Act relating to cancellation of registration. The learned Judge of the Bombay High Court, on the appeal of the petitioner-company, had adopted the first interpretation.

17. The only provisions in the Act relating to cancellation of registration are to be found in sub-sections (3) and (4) of Section 3. Sub-sections (1) and (6) of that section provide for the registration. In sub-section (3) of Section 3 the expression used is "cancel a registration already made" while in sub-section (4) the registration which can be cancelled is not described as "the registration of the insurer under the Act", but merely as "registration of an insurer". Sub-section (5) of Section 3 requires that when the Controller withholds or cancels any "registration under sub-section (3) or clause (a), clause (aa), clause (e), clause (ee), clause (f), clause (g) or clause (h) of sub-section (4)", a notice in writing shall be given to the insurer of his decision, and the decision shall take effect on such date as may be specified in that behalf in the notice, such date being not less than one month nor more than two months from the date of the receipt of the notice in the ordinary course of transmission. The registration referred to is not granted under sub-section (3) or the clauses mentioned after the words "under sub-section (3)", but those clauses have reference to the provisions under which registration is cancelled. It appears that in Rule 17-H the same form of construction was used and the words "under the Act" do not qualify the expression "registration of the insurer", but go with the word "cancel". The rule, therefore, does not confer an independent power of cancellation on the Controller. Besides prescribing for certain other matters it seems to provide that the registration of the insurer may be cancelled under the Act, which in the context should mean the provisions of Section 3(4)(f) of the Act.

18. It is not possible to accept the contention that the intendment of the Legislature was to treat extravagant insurers carrying on general insurance business, in the matter of cancellation of their registration, differently from the other insurers by depriving them of the right of appeal. Against warnings to be given by the Controller under Section 64-M(3) of the Act no appeal is provided. It cannot, therefore, be said that as action for cancellation of the registration is taken only after two warnings have been disregarded the right to appeal should by necessary implication be deemed to have been taken away. The right of appeal to a Court of law is a most valuable right and deprivation of that right is not to be lightly assumed. If the intention was to take away that right in the case of insurers whose registration is cancelled after their disregard of two warnings by the Controller some specific provision would have been made. No such provision was made and there are no provisions in the Act which may by necessary implication lead to any such inference.

19. Another submission of Shri Iyengar was that if cancellation of registration by the Controller in pursuance of Section 64-M(3) of the Act read with R. 17-H of the Rules was intended to fall under Section 3(4)(f) then all the provisions of Section 3, including sub-section (5-C) relating to reviving of registration within six months from the date on which the cancellation took effect, should have applied to such cancellation of the registration. Elaborating his argument the learned counsel urged that as the excess in expenses of management would already have taken place it would not be possible for an insurer to rectify that defect for the past years and, therefore, the provisions for reviving the registration cannot ever apply to an insurer whose registration has been cancelled under Section 64-M(3) read with R. 17-H. The contention, however, has no force. In many cases of revival of registration covered by sub-section (5-C) of Section 3 it is not possible to undo the past default. The directions to be complied with by the insurer in connection with revival of the registration may be, therefore, for the future. There is no reason why registration of an insurer cancelled in pursuance of Section 64-M(3) of the Act may not in a suitable case be revived at the discretion of the Controller.

20. It, therefore, appears that R. 17-H of the Rules does not confer on the Controller of Insurance the power to cancel the registration of an insurer independently of Section 3(4)(f) of the Act. The correct interpretation of clause (a) of that rule seems to be that the certificate of registration granted to an insurer may be cancelled by the Controller in pursuance of sub-section (3) of Section 64-M under the Act, from which it follows that cancellation of the registration of the insurer is to be effected under the provisions relating to cancellation of registration as embodied in the Act.

21. As cancellation of the registration in pursuance of Section 64-M(3) read with Rule 17-H cannot be made independently of Section 3(4)(f) it cannot be said that the Act provides two separate and independent procedures for cancellation of registration and that one of the procedures is more prejudicial than the other. The question of any discrimination or arbitrary discretion on the part of the Controller does not arise.

22. The questions referred to the Full Bench are, therefore, answered as follows:—

(1) First part: No.

Second Part: The question does not arise.

(2) No.

23. The case shall now be laid before a Division Bench for being disposed of in the light of the above answers.

24. L. D. DUA, C. J.:— I have read the judgment prepared by my learned brother Jagjit Singh, J. and I agree with him. I would, however, add a few words on one aspect. Rule 17-H of the Insurance Rules framed under Section 114 of the Insurance Act by the Central Government deals with the action to be taken against Extravagant General Insurers. These Rules were required by Section 114 to be made for carrying out the purposes of the Act. Sub-section (3) of this section is designed to retain legislative control over the rules to be so framed. This seems to be inspired by the recognition of the doctrine of separation of power contained in our Constitution, the problem of delegation of powers being to an extent a refinement of the broader doctrine of separation of powers. The constant increase of social and economic regulation has necessitated as inevitable, for practical reasons, delegation of rule-making power, provided, either the broad guide-lines are stated within which the rule is to be made and is to operate, or legislative control is retained by the Parliament over the rule-making power. This sub-section is an illustration of the latter course of retention of legislative control.

According to it, every rule made under Section 114 is to be laid, as soon as may be, before the Legislature, while it is in session, for the period prescribed therein. If the Legislature agrees in making a modification in the rule, or if it agrees that the rule should not be made, the rule is thereafter to have effect only in such modified form or will have no effect, as the case may be. This provision thus clearly suggests that the Legislature has been given an opportunity of scrutinising the rules made under Section 114 of the Act and it may be assumed that in the case in hand, the opportunity was utilised as intended. Rule 17-H which must, therefore, be deemed to have the implied sanction of the legislature after it was made, deserves to be read as a part of the Act itself. Considerations which weigh in construing a rule made by the executive wing of the Government, pursuant to validly delegated power, but which has not been laid before the legislature, as envisaged in Section 114 of the Act, may not apply with full rigour to a rule which has been so laid and which may, therefore, appropriately be deemed to have the approval of the Legislature itself. A rule of this type being a part of the statute, has to be construed along with the other provisions of the statute and every effort should be made to fit it in with the general statutory scheme which is discernible from the Act read as a whole. The language used in Rule 17-H may be capable of two meanings, but if reasonably permissible, the Court should adopt the one which would render it valid rather than invalid. The Court may more readily be inclined to assume — if necessary — a mistake in drafting rather than to impute to the Legislature an intention to place on the statute book or approve under Sec. 114(3) an invalid or unconstitutional provision. From this point of view, the impugned rule must be so read as to make it lawful, constitutional and consistent with the smooth working of the system which the statute purports to regulate, and there does not seem to be any insurmountable obstacle in so reading it.

25. Article 14 of the Constitution also does not postulate an absolute equality of men before the law. The view taken by my learned brother Jagjit Singh, J. of the statutory provisions would obviously exclude the challenge on the ground of inequality as well.

26. H. R. KHANNA, J.: I agree.

Order accordingly.

AIR 1970 DELHI 95 (V 57 C 21)

HARDAYAL HARDY, J.

B. G. Goswami, Appellant v. State, Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 103 of 1967, D/- 29-10-1969, from order of Spl. J., Delhi, D/-24-5-1967.

Prevention of Corruption Act (1947), Ss. 4(1), 5(2), and 5(1)(d) — Offence under S. 5(2) read with S. 5(1)(d) and S. 161 Penal Code — Presumption under S. 4(1) when can be drawn, indicated — Held on facts that presumption under S. 4(1) applied to the case and guilt of the accused had been established beyond reasonable doubt — (Penal Code (1860), S. 161).

The presumption under Section 4(1) of Prevention of Corruption Act (1947) applies only if it is established that the accused had actually accepted the currency notes. On the other hand, if the prosecution evidence falls short of what is required to prove that fact or if it is found that money had either been planted or foisted on him by means of a deception or a trick then the presumption under Section 4(1) can obviously not be pressed into service for the purpose of establishing his guilt. (Para 6)

In a prosecution for offences under S. 5(2) read with S. 5(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act and S. 161 of the Penal Code the accused contended that he was duped into pocketing the currency notes under the cover of bills and that there was as a matter of fact no acceptance of money at all. He sought to support the contention from the statement of complainant who admitted that the accused refused to have the notes in restaurant in the first instance, but he accepted the same when they were handed over to him along with the bills. But the witnesses who were sitting in the restaurant stated in unequivocal terms that what was passed on by the complainant to the accused was currency notes and the same were clearly visible to them. Recovery of the relevant currency notes by the police from his pocket was not denied by him. It was not the case of the accused that the amount was paid to him by complainant on some other account. The amount could also not be regarded as forming part of the legal remuneration.

Held that the presumption under S. 4 (1) was attracted and the guilt of the accused must therefore be held to have been established beyond reasonable doubt. (Para 9)

The money was evidently being paid by the complainant to the accused in a public restaurant where several other persons were also present. If the accused therefore told the complainant that he would not accept the notes in the restaurant there was nothing unnatural in his conduct. His initial hesitation must have however been overcome when the complainant put those notes inside the folds of the bills. In doing so however the money must have been taken by the complainant from his pocket and put inside the bills and then passed on by him to the accused within the sight of the witnesses. There was thus no escape from the conclusion that the passing of the money by the complainant to the accused was not the result of any deception or trick practised on him and that the currency notes were accepted by the accused with full knowledge of the fact that what was being passed on to him was money that was not legally due to him.

D. R. Kalia, for Appellant; D. R. Sethi, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— The appellant B. G. Goswami was employed as a Storekeeper in the Sewa Kendra run by the Delhi Administration for the benefit of destitutes and beggars. He has been convicted by the Special Judge for an offence under Section 5(2) read with Section 5(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 and has been sentenced to 15 months' R. I. and a fine of Rs. 200/- or in default of payment of fine to further imprisonment for a period of three months. He has also been found guilty under Section 161 Indian Penal Code and has been ordered to suffer 15 months' R. I. for the said offence. The substantive sentences of imprisonment have been ordered to run concurrently. According to the prosecution, Madan Singh complainant (P.W. 1) held a contract for the supply of vegetables to the Sewa Kendra. The accused Goswami told him that if he paid him a bribe of Rs. 50/- all sorts of vegetables supplied by him would be accepted but if he did not do so the vegetables brought by him would be rejected. The complainant promised to pay the bribe after a few days, but he had actually no intention to do so and therefore brought the demand of the accused to the notice of Shri Har Narain Singh, D.S.P., Anti-Corruption, on 7-1-1960.

A raiding party was thereupon organised by the D.S.P. who invited Kewal Ram and Ram Rikh two officials belonging to the Sales-tax Department and some policemen to join the raiding party. Madan Singh produced five currency notes of Rs. 10/- each of the numbers were duly recorded by the D.S.P. in his proceedings. The complainant was then deputed by the D.S.P. to pay the aforesaid amount to Goswami. Kewal Ram and Ram Rikh were instructed to remain close to the spot where the complainant was asked to make payment of the money to the accused and hear the talk which was to take place between him and the accused and to observe the payment of the bribe. They were also instructed to give a signal immediately after the payment was made. A direction was also given to the complainant that he should make payment of the bribe within the sight of the witnesses and to convince them by his conversation that the money was changing hands as illegal gratification.

2. The raiding party then went to Anand Parbat where the Sewa Kendra is situated while the witnesses took their seats in Kiran Restaurant nearby. The complainant went to fetch the accused and brought him to the same restaurant.

dence was over. The defence evidence led by him is also on the point that he had not taken extra passengers.

4. Section 537 (a) of the Code can be relied upon in case of failure to examine the respondent second time in this case, assuming Section 342 is attracted. This section, to the extent it is material for the present purpose, provides that no sentence or order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered under Chapter XXVII or on appeal or revision on account of — (a) any error, omission or irregularity in the order, judgment or other proceeding before or during trial. Mr. Kakodkar is asked to explain how failure to examine the respondent second time caused prejudice to him. He states that if the respondent had been examined second time, after the defence evidence was over, he might have said that the prosecution witnesses had enmity against him and this may have enabled the learned Magistrate to discard the prosecution evidence. This is a hypothetical assumption with which we are really not concerned, apart from the fact that no such enmity was alleged against these witnesses either in cross-examination or in the examination under Section 342. The learned Magistrate would have referred to this allegation in his order. The Court takes no notice of imaginary situations or academic issues.

The provisions of Section 342 were examined by this Court at some length in 'Leofred Lobo v. State', AIR 1967 Goa 60 at p. 76 and the following decisions of the Supreme Court were cited therein:— 'Moseb Kaka Chowdhry v. State of West Bengal', AIR 1956 SC 536; 'Chikkaranga Gowda v. State of Mysore', AIR 1956 SC 731; 'Rama Shankar Singh v. State of West Bengal', AIR 1962 SC 1239 and 'Jaidev v. State of Punjab', AIR 1963 SC 612 at p. 620. The substance of these decisions is that under Section 537 (a) the conviction and sentence are not reversible on account of any error, omission or irregularity in any proceedings during the trial, unless the error, omission or irregularity has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. Mere non-examination or defective examination is not a ground for interference unless prejudice is established. The respondent knew what the prosecution case against him was. He denied he had carried extra passengers. Mr. Kakodkar is unable to satisfy the Court that any prejudice was caused to the respondent because of failure to examine him second time after the defence evidence was over. Real and not fanciful or imaginary prejudice is what is contemplated.

5. Mr. Kakodkar next submits that under Section 112 of the Act the maximum fine for the offence for which the respondent is convicted is Rs. 100/-. In 1970 Goa, Daman & Diu/4 IV G-27 his reference, it appears, through inadvertence, the learned Sessions Judge said that the maximum fine is Rs. 50/-. Mr. G. V. Tamba, holding a brief on behalf of Government Pleader, concedes that the maximum fine is Rs. 100/-. It is common ground that the respondent is not a previous convict. In this view of the matter, the order passed by the learned Magistrate imposing a fine of Rs. 150/- cannot be sustained. The conviction of the respondent is maintained and the sentence of fine imposed by the learned Magistrate is altered from Rs. 150/- to Rs. 100/- and, in default of payment of this fine, the respondent should undergo simple imprisonment for 15 days, as directed by the learned Magistrate. The reference accordingly is accepted. The record and proceedings may be sent back to the learned Sessions Judge for further appropriate action as he deems fit. Order accordingly.

Reference accepted.

State, Applicant v. Naguesh G. Shet Govenkar and another, Respondents.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 27 of 1969 and Criminal Appeal No. 18 of 1969, D/- 28-7-1969.

(A) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 339, 390 — Wrongful restraint— Obstruction to truck from proceeding in direction in which it wanted to proceed — No obstruction to its occupants from proceeding anywhere — No wrongful restraint. (Para 3)

(B) Probation of Offenders Act (1958), S. 4(1) and (2) — Release of accused on probation of good conduct — Consideration of report in terms of S. 4(2) is condition precedent — Word "shall" in S. 4(2) is mandatory.

Before releasing the accused on probation of good conduct under S. 4 (1), it is obligatory on the Court to call for and consider the report of the Probation Officer in terms of S. 4(2). It is a condition precedent to the legality or validity of the order passed under sub-section (1) of S. 4. Nullification of this order is a normal consequence of disobedience of the mandatory requirement in sub-section (2). (Para 9)

It is true that the word "shall" in a statute does not necessarily mean that in every case it will have mandatory effect and not directory. Its meaning will vary in colour and content according to its context. It would involve injustice or inconvenience to offenders governed by sub-section (1) of Section 4 if sub-section

HM/HM/D572/69/DVT/B

(2) of Section 4 is regarded as directory and not mandatory. (Para 7)

The consideration of the report of the probation officer is of the essence of the thing required under S. 4(1). It is a matter of substance and not a matter of mere form. The probation officer is in a better position to know the character and antecedents of the offenders and his report is to be considered before making an order under sub-section (1) of S. 4. Case law discussed. (Para 8)

S. Tamba, Govt. Pleader, for the State (In both the Appeals); Y. H. Kadam, for Respondents (In both the Appeals).

ORDER:— This is an appeal under Section 417(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure directed against the judgment passed by the learned Sessions Judge, whereby he acquitted respondents Nos. (3) to (7) of the offence with which they were charged under Section 395 of the Penal Code. The respondents Nos. (1) and (2) were convicted by him under Section 392 of the Penal Code. They were, however, released on probation of good conduct under Section 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958. The State felt aggrieved by this action and also by the decision directing acquittal of the respondents Nos. (3) to (7). A revision petition under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure accordingly is filed by the State, objecting to the order releasing respondents Nos. (1) and (2) on probation of good conduct under the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958.

2. The prosecution case, briefly stated, is that on 14th June, 1967 at about 6.30 a.m. respondents Nos. (1) to (7) stopped the truck carrying 60 gallons of liquor for distribution to various persons. The truck was prevented from proceeding in the direction intended and liquor was removed from the truck and kept in the balcony of the house of a washerman residing nearby. The Police were informed by complainant Atmaram Revodker about this illegal action on the part of these respondents. The Police after necessary investigation challaned them. They were charged by the learned Sessions Judge, Panjim, under Section 395 of the Penal Code. (Dacoity).

3. I shall first consider the appeal filed by the State against acquittal of respondents Nos. (3) to (7). It is conceded by learned Government Pleader at the Bar that on the evidence led by the prosecution the charge was not established against them either under Section 395 or Section 392. I have carefully gone through the record and I agree with him that as far as these respondents are concerned the ingredients of the offences under Sections 392 and 395 are not proved. It is extremely doubtful whether they participated in the crime. The learned Sessions Judge carefully considered the prosecution evidence and his conclusion that they are not guilty is supported by evidence. The evidence on identity of these accused is unconvincing, apart from the fact that it is vague. Section 390 of the Penal Code states that theft is 'robbery' if, in order to the committing of the theft, or in committing the theft, or in carrying away or attempting to carry away property obtained by the theft, the offender, for that end, voluntarily causes or attempts to cause to any person death or hurt or wrongful restraint, or fear of instant death or of instant hurt or of instant wrongful restraint. It was the prosecution case in the Sessions Court that when these respondents prevented the truck carrying liquor from proceeding in the direction in which it wanted to proceed there was wrongful restraint to the complainant and some other occupants who were in the truck at the time of the incident. It is in evidence that the complainant and other occupants were not prevented from contacting the members of the Panchayat or the Police. What is 'wrongful restraint' is defined in Section 339 of the Penal Code. Under that section, "whoever voluntarily obstructs any person so as to prevent that person from proceeding in any direction in which that person has a right to proceed, is said wrongfully to restrain that person". The admitted position is that the complainant and others were not obstructed from proceeding in any direction in which they wanted to proceed and, therefore, there was no wrongful restraint within the meaning of this section, apart from the fact that participation of these respondents as stated already is not proved.

The word "person" in this section and also in Section 390, where theft is 'robbery', would not seem to include obstruction of a truck when its occupants are not obstructed. This word is to be understood in its ordinary sense. There is a presumption of innocence in favour of these respondents and this presumption is reinforced by an order of acquittal. The appeal fails and is accordingly rejected.

4. There remains the case of respondents Nos. (1) and (2) to be considered. The learned Government Pleader submits that the learned Sessions Judge should have called for the report of the probation officer as required by sub-section (2) of Section 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 before releasing them on probation of good conduct. It is not his contention that the prosecution established the charge against them under S. 395 of the Penal Code. He concedes fairly that in their case also this charge is not pressed. Mr. Y. H. Kadam, learned counsel appearing for these respondents and the respondents acquitted, submits that it was not obligatory on the part of the learned Sessions Judge to have called for the report of the probation officer before releasing the respondents Nos. (1) and (2) on probation of good conduct. He has not been able to support this submission by any reported decision. Be that as it may, I would discuss the scheme of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Act') and endeavour to show that it was obligatory on the part of the learned Sessions Judge to have called for the report of the probation officer before releasing these respondents on probation of good conduct.

5. As will appear from its preamble, the Act was enacted to provide for the release of offenders on probation or after due admonition and for matters connected therewith. Section 2 is a definition provision on usual lines. Clause (b) defines "probation officer" as meaning an officer appointed to be a probation officer or recognized as such under Section 13. Section 3 contemplates release, after due admonition, of any person found guilty of having committed the offences specified thereunder. Sub-section (1) of Section 4 envisages release on probation of good conduct, of any person found guilty of having committed an offence not punishable with death or imprisonment for life. Sub-section (2) of Section 4 provides that before making any order under sub-section (1), the court shall take into consideration the report, if any, of the probation officer concerned in relation to the case. Sub-section (1) of Section 6 imposes restrictions on imprisonment of offenders under twenty-one years of age. Under this sub-section, when any person under twenty-one years of age is found guilty of having committed an offence punishable with imprisonment (but not with imprisonment for life), the Court by which he is found guilty shall not sentence him to imprisonment unless it is satisfied that, having regard to the circumstances of the case including the nature of the offence and the character of the offender, it would not be desirable to deal with him under Section 3 or Section 4, and if the Court passes any sentence of imprisonment on the offender, it shall record its reasons for doing so. Sub-section (2) of this section lays down that for the purposes of satisfying itself whether it would not be desirable to deal under Section 3 or Section 4 with an offender referred to in sub-section (1), the Court shall call for a report from the probation officer and consider the report, if any, and any other information available to it relating to the character and physical and mental condition of the offender.

Section 8 speaks of variation of conditions of probation. Under that provision if, on the application of the probation officer, any court which passes an order under Section 4 in respect of an offender is of opinion that in the interests of the offender and the public it is expedient or necessary to vary the conditions of any bond entered into by an offender, it may, at any time during the period when the bond is effective, vary the bond by extending or diminishing the duration thereof so, however, that it shall not exceed three years from the date of original order or by altering the conditions thereof or by inserting additional conditions therein. The proviso says that no such variation shall be made without giving the offender and the surety an opportunity of being heard. The proviso conforms to the principles of natural justice. Sub-section (3) provides that notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, the court which passes an order under Section 4 in respect of an offender may, if it is satisfied on an application made by the probation officer, that the conduct of the offender has been such as to make it unnecessary that he should be kept any longer under supervision, discharge the bond or bonds entered into by him.

Sub-section (1) of Section 9 relates to procedure in case of offender failing to observe conditions of bond. It provides that if the court which passes an order under Section 4 in respect of an offender or any court which could have dealt with the offender in respect of his original offence has reason to believe, on the report of a probation officer or otherwise, that the offender has failed to observe any of the conditions of the bond or bonds entered into by him, it may issue a warrant for his arrest. Section 13 contemplates appointment of a probation officer by the State Government. Section 14 speaks of duties of probation officers. Section 15 regards probation officer as a public servant by employing a deeming fiction. The other sections are not relevant for the present purpose. As will appear from sub-section (2) of Sections 4 and 6 and Sections 8 and 9, the probation officer plays an important role under the scheme of the Act.

6. In 'Ramji Missar v. State of Bihar', AIR 1963 SC 1088 (1089), their Lordships of the Supreme Court explained the object of the Act in the following words:—

"The object of the Act is to prevent the turning of youthful offenders into criminals by their association with hardened criminals of mature age within the walls of a prison. The method adopted is to attempt their possible reformation instead of inflicting on them the normal punishment for their crime."

It was also stated by their Lordships that this Act is a beneficial statute and, therefore, it is to be given wider interpretation. This decision is not directly to the point, but the above observations on the object of the Act, with respect, are apposite. In 'Rattan Lal v. State of Punjab', AIR 1965 SC 444, the scheme of the Act was considered in the context of Sections 3, 4 and 11 of the Act and it was held in that case that the calling for a report from the Probation Officer is a condition precedent for the exercise of the power under Section 6(1) of the Act by the Court.

"A court cannot impose a sentence of imprisonment on a person under 21 years of age found guilty of having committed an offence punishable with imprisonment but not with imprisonment for life unless it is satisfied that, having regard to the circumstances of the case including the nature of the offence and the character of the offender, it would not be desirable to deal with him under S. 3 or S. 4 of the Act. For the purpose of satisfying itself in regard to the said action, under sub-s. (2) of S. 6 of the Act the Court shall call for a report from the probation officer and consider the report, if any, and any other information relating to the character and physical and mental condition of the offender. After considering the said material the Court shall satisfy itself whether it is desirable to deal with the offender under S. 3 or S. 4 of the Act. If it is not satisfied that the offender should be dealt with under either of the said two sections, it can pass the sentence of imprisonment on the offender after recording the reasons for doing so. It is suggested that the expression "if any" in sub-s. (2) of S. 6 indicates that it is open to the Court to call for a report or not; but the word "shall" makes it a mandatory condition and the expression "if any" can in the context only cover a case where notwithstanding such requisition the Probation Officer for one reason or other has not submitted a report. Briefly stated the calling for a report from the Probation Officer is a condition precedent for the exercise of the power under S. 6(1) of the Act by the Court."

It was also observed by the Supreme Court that:—

"The Act is a milestone in the progress of the modern liberal trend of reform in the field of penology. It is the result of the recognition of the doctrine that the object of criminal law is more to reform the individual offender than to punish him."

In 'Raghunath v. Mrs. T. P. Faria', AIR 1967 Goa 95, this Court also had the occasion to consider the scheme of Sections 3, 4 and 11 of the Act and, in that connection, the following observations are not out of place:—

"The Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, was enacted by Parliament to provide for the release of offenders on probation after due admonition and for matters connected therewith. The Act shifts emphasis from deterrence to reformation and from the crime to the criminal in accordance with the modern outlook on punishment. The emphasis is not on the individualization of acts but on the individualization of human beings. Reformation and rehabilitation of the offenders are the key notes of the Act."

7. The criminal law is concerned with wrongs and not with rights. It regards not the person but society. It results not in a benefit to the party injured but in its satisfaction to the community. The scheme of the Act, however, is an exception where the criminal law regards the offenders governed by the scheme of the Act and also society and not only society. It will appear from the decision of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Ratan Lal's case, AIR 1965 S.C. 444, that the requirement of sub-section (2) of Section 6 is mandatory; in fact, the calling for a report from the probation officer was regarded as a condition precedent for the exercise of the jurisdiction under sub-section (1) of Section 6. As, stated earlier, the probation officer plays an important role under the scheme of the Act. A comparison of the phraseology used in sub-section (2) of Sections 4 and 6 would seem to show that the requirement of sub-section (2) of Section 4 also is mandatory, or imperative. There is an injunction under this sub-section that before making any order under sub-section (1) the Court shall take into consideration the report, if any, of the probation officer concerned in relation to the case. There is a duty imposed on the Court to which relates to a benefit in favour of the offenders governed by Section 4, and sub-section (2) thereof is to be taken as requiring and not authorizing the performance of this duty, which is not intended to be at the discretion of the Court in so far as consideration of the report is concerned. It would involve injustice or inconvenience to offenders governed by sub-section (1) of Section 4 if sub-section (2) of Section 4 is regarded as directory and not mandatory.

Mr. Kadam submits that the words "if any" in sub-section (2) of Section 4 seem to show that it is not mandatory in its nature. This submission is without force. The observations of the Supreme Court in regard to the expression "if any" in the context of sub-section (2) of Section 6 will also seem to apply to the passing of the order under sub-section (2) of Section 4. The legislative command, in effect and substance, is that the Court shall take into consideration the report of the probation officer. For my part, as I see this matter, the word "shall" used in this sub-section is a word of command which is to be taken as mandatory, and not directory. It is true that the word "shall" in a statute does not necessarily mean that in every case it will have mandatory effect and not directory. Its meaning will vary in colour and content according to its context.

In 'Jagan Nath v. Jaswant Singh', AIR 1954 S.C. 210 (214), the provisions of Section 82 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 relating to impleading of parties, were regarded as directory in spite of the word "shall" used therein. This was on the analogy of Order XXXIV, Rule 1, C.P.C. This section was not regarded as mandatory because non-compliance was not made penal. In 'Hari Vishnu v. Ahmad Ishaque', AIR 1955 SC 233 (245), relying on a famous case 'Julius v. Bishop of Oxford', (1880) 5 AC 214, where various rules were laid down for determining when a statute might be construed as mandatory and when as directory, the Supreme Court concluded that Rule 47(1) (a) to (c) of the Representation of the People (Conduct of Elections and Election Petitions) Rules (1951) relating to ballot papers was mandatory. The word "shall" in this rule was not construed as meaning "may". In 'State of M.P. v. Azad Bharat Finance Co.', AIR 1967 SC 276 the provisions of Section 11(d) of the Opium Act, 1878 were regarded by the Supreme Court as directory or permissible and not mandatory or obligatory, notwithstanding the use of the word "shall". In 'Jagdish Gandhi v. Legislative Council, U.P.', AIR 1966 All. 291 (299) the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court observed that the provision regarding the specification of time in Rule 75(1) (b) of the U.P. Legislative Council Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business was directory in spite of the use of the word "shall" therein.

8. As will appear from sub-section (2) of Section 4, the consideration of the report of the probation officer is of the essence of the thing required. It is a matter of substance and not a matter of mere form. The probation officer is in a better position to know the character and antecedents of the offenders and his report is to be considered before making an order under sub-section (1) of Section 4. Mr. S. Tamba cites 'State of Mysore v. Saib Gunda', 1964(1) Cr. L.J. 460 (Mys), in support of his contention that the requirement of sub-section (2) of Section 4 is mandatory. It was held in this case that in the absence of a report from the probation officer under sub-section (1) of Section 4, the Magistrate had no authority to release the accused on probation of good conduct. This decision does not discuss the scheme of the Act in detail but the obiter dicta is relevant for our purpose. This opinion was really not necessary to the decision given, for Section 4 of the Act under which the learned Magistrate convicted the accused and thereafter released them on probation of good conduct was inapplicable in terms. The conviction of the accused was for the offence punishable under Section 326 of the Penal Code. The maximum punishment thereunder being imprisonment for life this section was not attracted.

9. It is common ground that the probation officer was not asked to give his report before directing release of respondents Nos. (1) and (2) on probation of good conduct under Section 4 of the Act. It is thus clear that there was no compliance with the mandatory provision under sub-section (2) of Section 4. It appears consideration of report, in terms of sub-section (2) of Section 4, is a condition precedent to the legality or validity of the order passed under sub-section (1) of Section 4. Nullification of this order is a normal consequence of disobedience of the mandatory requirement in sub-section (2). In this view of the matter the order passed by the learned Sessions Judge is set aside and the revision petition filed on behalf of the State allowed. The learned Sessions Judge is directed to take into consideration the report of the probation officer before deciding the case on its merits.

Petition allowed.

State, Appellant v. Jagdish B. Rau and others, Respondents.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 23 and 24 of 1969, D/- 28-7-1969.

Police Act (1861), S. 34 — Scope and applicability — Notification of State Government extending provisions of S. 34 to whole of territory is not in conformity with requirements of S. 34 — Expression 'whole of territory' would not take within its sweep a town for purpose of S. 34 — "Town", meaning of — In absence of notification specially extending scheme of S. 34 to a town, prosecution for offences under S. 34 committed in that town is not maintainable.

What Section 34 of the Police Act expressly requires is that it should be specially extended by the State Government to "any town" and when such extension takes place, then the enumerated offences committed within the limits of any town can be investigated and tried. Hence a notification of the State Government extending the provisions of S. 34 to the whole of the territory is not in conformity with the requirements of S. 34.

The expression "whole of the territory" in the notification would not take within its sweep a town for the purpose of S. 34. The whole of the territory may be one unit for other purposes but for the purpose of S. 34, it cannot be equated to "any town". The two expressions are different in meaning and content. The word "town" is not the same thing as "territory" for the purposes of this section. It is not defined in the Act. It is not a term of art, and, therefore, it is to be understood in its ordinary sense. The dictionary meaning of "town" is an assemblage of buildings, public or private larger than a village, and having more complete and independent Local Government. AIR 1952 Cal. 753, Rel. on.

Hence in absence of a notification specially extending the scheme of S. 34 to a town, the prosecution for the offences under S. 34 committed in that town is not maintainable. (Paras 5, 6)

JUDGMENT:— The short question for consideration in criminal appeals Nos. 23 and 24 of 1969 is whether the notification dated 3rd August, 1964, published in the local Government Gazette dated 13th August, 1964, is in conformity with the requirements of Section 34 of the Police Act 1861 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Act').

2. The material facts may be stated before the question formulated is answered. In criminal appeal No. 23 of 1969, the broad facts are that Jagdish Rau and 6 others were seen in Panjim at 3 a.m. on 31st March, 1967, throwing burning crackers near the Gomantak Press Office and near some residential premises thereby causing annoyance to the occupants. They were moving about in a bus. They were stopped near the office of the Bank of Baroda, when, according to the prosecution, they started behaving in a disorderly and riotous manner under the influence of liquor. This incident took place following the declaration of the election results of the Assembly constituency of Panjim. The police, after necessary investigation, challaned them under Section 34 of the Act. In support of the prosecution were examined Sub-Inspector Prabhu Desai, Assistant Sub-Inspector Hugo Nazare and some other witnesses. The learned Magistrate tried this case summarily. He came to the conclusion that as Section 34 had not been specially extended to Panjim as required, therefore the prosecution was not maintainable. In this view of the matter he directed their acquittal. In criminal appeal No. 24 of 1969, the respondent was also tried under Section 34 of the Act. The prosecution case against him is that on 3rd December, 1968 at about 22.00 hrs. at Azad Maidan near Theatre Hall, Panjim, he was found misbehaving at the main gate of this theatre. He was sent to the hospital where it was certified that he was under the influence of liquor. He was also seen abusing Assistant Sub-Inspector Noberto Gonsalves. He was arrested. He was thereafter challaned under Section 34 of the Act. This case was also tried summarily. The learned Magistrate after examining the prosecution evidence directed his acquittal on the same ground as in the case against Jagdish Rau and 6 others. The State felt aggrieved by these two decisions dated 25th March 1969 and 26th March, 1969, and filed the present appeals against their acquittal under subsection (1) of Section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

3. The scheme of the Act may be broadly explained. As will appear from the short title and the preamble, the Act was enacted for the regulation and reorganization of the police, in order to make it a more efficient instrument for the prevention and detection of crime.

Section 1 is an interpretation clause on the usual lines. Sections 2 to 29 relate to regulation and reorganization of the police and other allied matters. Sections 30 to 33 deal with regulation of public assemblies and processions etc. Section 34, to the extent it is material for the present purpose, reads as under:—

"Any person who, on any road or in any open place or street or thoroughfare within the limits of any town to which this section shall be specially extended by the State Government, commits any of the following offences, to the obstruction, inconvenience, annoyance, risk, danger or damage of the residents or passengers shall, on conviction before a Magistrate, be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees, or to imprisonment with or without hard labour not exceeding eight days; and it shall be lawful for any police-officer to take into custody, without a warrant, any person who within his view commits any of such offences, namely:—

Sixth — Any person who is found drunk or riotous or who is incapable of taking care of himself."

Sections 35 to 45 relate to matters such as recovery of penalties, fines, etc. Sub-section (1) of Section 46 provides that the Act shall not, by its own operation, take effect in any State or place, but the State Government by an order to be published in the official gazette, may extend the whole or any part of the Act to any State or place, and the whole or such portion of the Act as shall be specified in such order shall thereupon take effect in such State or place. Sub-section (2) provides for rule-making power vested in the State Government for regulating the procedure etc., to be followed by Magistrates and police officers in the discharge of their duties imposed upon them by or under the Act. Section 47 provides for exercise of authority of District Superintendent of Police over village police.

4. The Act as a whole, was extended to the territory under sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Goa, Daman and Diu (Laws) Regulation, 1962, promulgated by the President on 22nd November, 1962. The Act was brought into force in pursuance of sub-section (2) of Section 3 of this Regulation on 15th December, 1963, by notification dated 31st December, 1963, published in the local Government Gazette, dated 9th January, 1964. By notification dated 3rd August, 1964, published in the local Government Gazette, dated 13th August, 1964, in exercise of the powers conferred by Section 34 of the Act, the Lt. Governor extended the provisions of this Section to the whole of the territory, with effect from 13th August, 1964. This notification was relied upon in support of the prosecution against the respondents under Section 34.

5. Section 34 enumerates different kinds of offences which are committed by any person on any road or in any open place or street or thoroughfare within the limits of "any town", to which it is specially extended by the State Government. It is true that this section has been extended to "the whole of the territory" but what it expressly envisages is its extension to "any town" and not to any territory. It is not in dispute that the alleged offences for which the respondents were tried took place within the limits of Panjim. In the memo of appeal it was submitted that the whole territory has been regarded as one unit and therefore the offences committed under Section 34 in Panjim would also be covered by the notification dated 3rd August, 1964. In other words, the extension of the Act to the entire territory would also include extension to the town of Panjim as contemplated by this section. This submission does not seem to be sound. The word "town" is not the same thing as "territory" for the purposes of this section. It is not defined in the Act. It is not a term of art, and, therefore, it is to be understood in its ordinary sense. The primary duty of a Court is to find its natural meaning in its context. The dictionary meaning of "town" is "an assemblage of buildings, public or private larger than a village, and having more complete and independent local Government" (Shorter Oxford Dictionary Vol. II p. 2221). In Belait Sheikh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1952 Cal. 753 the meaning of the word 'town' was considered by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court for the purposes of Section 6 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1932. Under Section 6 of this Act, the State Government has the power to declare by notification its intention to constitute into a municipality, a town with or without a local area or a village, subject to the proviso which is not relevant for the present purpose. Section 8 enables the Government to constitute a municipality by notification. The first requirement was that there must be a town, to be constituted into a municipality. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court observed:—

"The word has however a fairly definite connotation to the ordinary man — the main attributes of a town being the existence of houses in clear proximity, concentration of a large number of people in a comparatively small area, engagement of the bulk of the population in non-agricultural pursuits. We are bound to hold, in the absence of any statutory definition of the word, that the legislature used it in the sense in which ordinary people understand it."

The aforesaid observations are apposite. The notification dated 3rd August, 1964, specially extending Section 34 of the Act to the whole of the territory is not likely to be viewed by ordinary people as an act of extension of this section to Panjim, which is a town in the territory. A general cross-section of the community — the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker — will not regard the town of Panjim as a territory for the purposes of this notification. What Section 34 expressly requires is that it should be specially extended by the State Government to "any town", and when such extension takes place, then the enumerated offences committed within the limits of any town can be investigated and tried. These offences are minor offences for which a fine not exceeding Rs. 50/- or imprisonment not exceeding 8 days is provided. It enables any police officer to take into custody without warrant any person who within his view commits any of these offences. The regulatory powers in Sections 30 to 33 are not confined to towns but they are applied generally to towns and other places. The offences under Section 34 are different in nature and character from the offences under these sections. They seem to be peculiar to towns. Section 34 has to be specially extended to any town before any person committing these offences could be tried and convicted. The words "district", "place" and "territories" employed in Sections 26, 46 and 47 of the Act have a different meaning in their context. These words are not helpful for the purposes of ascertaining the true meaning and ambit of the word 'town'.

6. Mr. G. D. Kamat, learned counsel for the respondent, in criminal appeal No. 24 of 1969, contends that in absence of a notification extending the scheme of Section 34 to the town of Panjim, the prosecutions are not maintainable. This contention is sound. It seems the expression "whole of the territory" in the notification dated 3rd August, 1964, would not take within its sweep the town of Panjim for the purpose of Section 34. The whole of the territory may be one unit for other purposes but for the purpose of Section 34, it cannot be equated to "any town". The two expressions are different in meaning and content. In view of the scheme of the Act in general and Section 34 in particular, the learned Government Pleader concedes that, in absence of a notification specially extending the scheme of Section 34 to the town of Panjim, the prosecution for the offences enumerated therein is not maintainable. The learned Magistrate acted correctly when he directed acquittal of the respondents in both cases under Section 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the ground of failure to comply with the provisions of Section 34. The appeals filed on behalf of the State must fail because of this legal flaw. In this view of the matter it is not necessary to express any opinion on the merits of the prosecution evidence. The appeals are accordingly dismissed. Order accordingly.

Appeals dismissed.

Registrar, Judicial Commissioner's Court, Applicant v. Fr. Sebastiao Francisco Xavier dos Remedios Monteiro and State, Respondents.

Criminal Revn. Appln. 30 of 1969, D/- 16-6-1969.

(A) Foreigners Act (1946), Ss. 14 and 3(2)(c) — Sentence — Accused though born and brought up in Goa choosing to retain his Portuguese nationality after Goa became part of India — Accused deliberately disobeying order under S. 3(2)(c) for second time — Accused contending that in spite of de facto occupation of Government of India, Goa continued de jure as Portuguese territory and by exercising option to continue as Portuguese national he did not become foreigner — Held sentence of simple imprisonment for three months and fine of Rs. 100/- or, in default further imprisonment for 20 days was unduly lenient and manifestly inadequate when accused had been wilfully disregarding law and challenging territorial integrity of India; sufficiently deterrent sentence was called for in the ends of justice — Sentence enhanced in exercise of powers under S. 439(2) of Criminal P. C. (1898) to 12 months simple imprisonment and fine of Rs. 1,000 and in default, further imprisonment for six months. (Paras 6, 7)

(B) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 439(1) and 32 — Principles of punishment — Duty of Court — Enhancement of sentence — Penal Code (1860), S. 53.

There should be an end of all temporal things and that end cannot be achieved with soft-peddling with the question of the sentence. A judge, when administering justice, is as much influenced by the tides and currents of human emotions and passions as other human beings, but yet he is enjoined by the law to restrain and control them, else he will not be qualified to try a criminal case; but, at the same time, he is not expected to act ostrich-like and close his eyes to deliberate disregard or defiance of the law of the land. Judicial detachment is a virtue; but not judicial passivity. (Para 6)

ORDER:— This is one of those exceptional cases where exercise of revisional jurisdiction suo motu under Section 439 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is considered necessary in the ends of justice.

2. The respondent — Fr. Sebastiao Francisco Xavier dos Remedios Monteiro — was served with an order under Section 3(2)(c) of the Foreigner's Act, 1946, requiring him not to remain in India after the expiry of the date of its service. This order, dated 11th April, 1969, was issued by the Lt. Governor of this territory. He did not leave India. He was accordingly prosecuted in the Court of the First Class Magistrate, Mapusa, on 28th April, 1969. The charge was framed against him by the learned Magistrate under Section 14 of the Foreigner's Act. He pleaded not guilty. In support of the prosecution were examined prosecution witnesses Domingos Fernandes (P.W. 1), Shivaji K. Zamaoli (P.W. 2), Cruz D'Souza (P.W. 3), and Vishwanat G. Dessai (P.W. 4). Out of these witnesses three are inspectors of police, while Cruz D'Souza is a Head Constable. The respondent led no defence evidence. In his statement under Section 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, he admitted that he had been served with an order requiring him to leave India. The reason why he did not leave India was that he was born in Goa where he and his ancestors had lived for centuries; that as Goa was a part of Portugal as its overseas province he was a Portuguese national; that the Government of India had occupied this territory forcibly and that in spite of de facto occupation by the Government of India it continued de jure as Portuguese territory; and that he did not become a foreigner when he declared in 1962 that he wanted to retain the Portuguese nationality. The learned Magistrate, after considering the prosecution evidence and this statement of the respondent, convicted him under Section 14 of the Foreigners Act for breach of the order under Section 3(2) (c) issued thereunder. The sentence imposed by the learned Magistrate on 13th May, 1969, was simple imprisonment for three months and a fine of Rs. 100/- or, in default of its payment, to undergo further imprisonment for 20 days. The respondent had previously been convicted in 1965 for contravention of a similar order dated 19th June, 1965, under Section 3(2) (c), by another Magistrate, and was sentenced to undergo simple imprisonment for 30 days and a fine of Rs. 50/-, and, in default, to undergo simple imprisonment for 5 days. The appellant appealed against that decision to the learned Sessions Judge but that appeal was rejected. He then moved this Court in revision, but without success. He felt aggrieved and later sought special leave to appeal against the decision of this Court. This leave was granted by their Lordships of the Supreme Court and after hearing the parties their Lordships dismissed the said appeal by order dated 26th March, 1969. The sentence imposed on 13th May, 1969, was considered grossly inadequate and, therefore, a notice was issued on 27th May, 1969, under Section 439(2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, requiring him to show cause why this sentence should not be enhanced, and also why the imprisonment should not be rigorous. This action was taken suo motu for the purpose of satisfying myself about the correctness or propriety of the sentence imposed, after calling for the record of the criminal proceeding. This, in short, is the background of this case.

3. The respondent, in response to the notice issued to him, reaffirmed that he is innocent. In his own words:—

"I wish to stress that I have love for justice and I am an observer of order and discipline. My attitude was dictated by an effort of love for truth and honesty. It comforts me exceedingly to firmly believe that justice is being done simultaneously outside the human forum as unfaillingly as God exists. I pray to our Lord Jesus Christ that He in the meantime may help me as in the past to overcome the human frailties which usually appear in the disputes of this nature, such as the weakness of hatred and weakness of cowardice. I once again affirm that I am innocent. I believe that my punishment will not be enhanced but on the contrary it will be set aside."

4. The respondent last time was represented in this Court by Mr. Edward Gardner, Q.C., from England, assisted by Mr. Antonio Anastasio Bruto da Costa, local counsel. This time he is not represented by any counsel. He states that no appeal has been preferred by him in the Court of Session, Panjim, and that he has not even applied for a certified copy of the judgment of the learned Magistrate. The learned counsel appearing on behalf of the respondent in the lower court raised the following three objections to the maintainability of the prosecution launched against the respondent: (1) The accused, although a Portuguese citizen, is not a foreigner for the purposes of the Foreigner's Act, since he was born and always lived in Goa; (2) the order of the Lt. Governor is illegal, for the prosecution did not produce in the Court the notification under which the powers to deport foreigners are vested in him; and (3) that the prosecution did not prove, as it should have done, that the signature on the order requiring him to leave India is of the Lt. Governor. The learned Magistrate considered these technical objections carefully and in the light of the previous decisions of the superior courts on similar objections, he came to the conclusion that they were devoid of substance. I shall very briefly deal with these objections. As regards the first objection the respondent is undoubtedly a "foreigner" within the meaning of Section 2(a) (iii) of the Foreigner's Act. It is stated by him in this Court that because he was born and brought up in Goa before liberation therefore he cannot be treated as a foreigner. By way of an analogy he cites the example of a French man who, according to him, if he had been staying here for some time, could have been treated as a foreigner, but his own case is distinguishable. This analogy is not relevant to the point. It was on the basis of the status of the respondent as a foreigner that this Court as well as the Supreme Court maintained the conviction and the sentence imposed on him for contravention of a similar order in 1965. The second objection also is without substance. Mr. S. Tamba, learned Government Pleader, appearing on behalf of the State, produces the notification dated 12th March, 1965, in this Court delegating powers in favour of the Lt. Governor in support of his submission that the Lt. Governor acted under the powers conferred by this notification. In para 2 of my previous decision reported in AIR 1968 Goa 17 this aspect of the matter had been considered and a similar objection raised by the respondent was overruled. At page 17 of the paper book the respondent admitted the legality of the order requiring him to leave India. The delegation in favour of the Lt. Governor was in pursuance of Clause (1) of Article 239 of the Constitution. The notification issued is a "law" within the meaning of Clause (1) of Article 13 of the Constitution. The provisions of definition Section 3(29) of the General Clauses Act 1897, relied upon by the learned Magistrate, do not seem to be applicable, for the simple reason that this Act applies to all Central Acts enacted after it came into force. The Indian Evidence Act of 1872, a Central law, was in existence before this Act and therefore it will not apply. As regards the third objection it is also devoid of substance. The learned Magistrate has carefully considered this objection. It will be seen from the judgment of the learned Magistrate that the respondent is repeating the same objections which had been urged on his behalf earlier in a criminal prosecution arising out of the contravention of a similar order in 1965. I am satisfied that the conviction in this case was properly recorded by the learned Magistrate and the respondent has not been able to satisfy me to the contrary. The respondent has had an adequate opportunity of being heard both as to the correctness of his conviction and also the propriety of the sentence.

5. In 'Bhalchandra Waman Pethe v. State of Maharashtra', Criminal Appeal by special leave No. (62 of 1955) decided on 20-11-1957 (SC), the Supreme Court observed:—

"What sentence should be imposed in a given case is essentially within the discretion of the trial Court. The High Court would not be justified in interfering with that discretion unless it is satisfied that the sentence imposed by the trial Court is unduly lenient or in other words grossly inadequate."

In making these observations reliance was placed by the Supreme Court on the following passage from 'Alamgir v. State of Bihar', AIR 1959 SC 436:—

"It is unnecessary to emphasize that the question of sentence is normally in the discretion of the trial Judge. It is for the trial Judge to take into account all relevant circumstances and decide what sentence would meet the ends of justice in a given case. The High Court undoubtedly has jurisdiction to enhance such sentence under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but this jurisdiction can be properly exercised only if the High Court is satisfied that the sentence imposed by the trial Judge is unduly lenient or, that, in passing the order of sentence, the trial Judge had manifestly failed to consider the relevant facts"

In 'Shivajirao v. State of Maharashtra', Criminal Appeal by special leave No. 173 of 1968 (SC) the Supreme Court said:—

"In a matter of enhancement there should not be interference when the sentence of the trial Court imposes substantial punishment. Interference is only called for when it is manifestly inadequate."

6. As stated by me in the opening paragraph, this is an exceptional case where interference in revision is considered necessary by this Court. There is a deliberate disobedience of the law and this is to be seriously reviewed. This is the second instance of such a disobedience. There should be an end of all temporal things and that end cannot be achieved with soft-peddling with the question of the sentence. A judge, when administering justice, is as much influenced by the tides and currents of human emotions and passions as other human beings, but yet he is enjoined by the law to restrain and control them, else he will not be qualified to try a criminal case; but, at the same time, he is not expected to act ostrich-like and close his eyes to deliberate disregard or defiance of the law of the land. Judicial detachment is a virtue, but not judicial passivity. The respondent is not a citizen of India. He is a Portuguese national and thus a "foreigner" within the meaning of Section 2(a) (iii) of the Foreigners Act. As a foreigner, he has no right to remain in this territory. It is true that he was born and brought up in Goa, but after this territory became part of India, he got an option to become a citizen of India but he chose to retain his Portuguese nationality. The law requiring a foreigner to leave India is not an unjust law so that it could be disobeyed by men of conscience on ethical grounds. One of the earliest examples of disobedience of an unjust law is contained in Sophocles' tragedy 'Antigone'. In this Greek play, Creon, a King, proclaims that no one may bury the corpse of Polynices, a warrior who died attacking the city-state of Thebes. But, according to Greek religion, an absolute duty lay on the family of a dead man to see that his body received burial rites, as without them he might be prejudiced in the next world. Antigone, a sister of the dead man, deliberately disobeys the King's law, so that she may obey the divine law. It is not the case of the respondent that he is disregarding the order of the Lt. Governor requiring him to leave India so that he may obey the divine law. Far from it. The other priests in this territory similarly situated opted for Citizenship of India and they have not been disregarding or disobeying the laws of the land. The traditions of Christianity, both Catholic and Reformed on which Christian culture is based, place due stress on obedience to the laws of the land. They respect the established order. If the respondent had really "love for justice" and further wished to observe "Order and discipline" he should have complied with the order requiring him to leave India, but instead of doing so he has wilfully disregarded it. I have a feeling that he is deliberately disobeying the law of the land at the instance of a certain section of the people who seem to be misleading him. They seem to be pulling strings behind the screen. There is nothing ethical about his stand in wilfully disregarding the order passed by the Lt. Governor requiring him to leave India. His parrot-like 'performance' that Portugal is a de jure sovereign of this territory gives us some insight into his mind. This does not advance his cause nor of others. As a foreigner living here he has no right to question the territorial integrity of this country. He has prayed for blessings of "Our Lord Jesus Christ" to "overcome human frailties", but I wish he had done so for a better cause. Political robe does not befit a priest.

7. The sentence imposed by the learned Magistrate is unduly lenient and manifestly inadequate. This is also the contention of the learned Government Pleader. A sufficiently deterrent sentence therefore is called for in the ends of justice. Crime is contagious. As stated in 'Raghunath Naik v. Mrs. Terezinha Pacheco Faria', AIR 1967 Goa 95, the object of punishment is prevention of crime and every punishment is intended to have a double effect, namely, to prevent the person who has committed a crime from repeating the act and also to prevent others from committing similar crimes. The law is no respecter of persons, be they rich or poor, priests or peasants. In the view taken by me of this case, the conviction of the respondent is maintained but the sentence under Section 14 of the Foreigners Act is enhanced to 12 months simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1000/- or, in default of payment, additional simple imprisonment for 6 months. The maximum sentence under Section 14 is 5 years and also fine.

8. It is a matter of common knowledge that if such wilful disregard of the law had taken place during the Portuguese regime the respondent would have received a very heavy sentence, but every system of law has its own good or bad points. The respondent's case is not concluded by this judgment. If he is aggrieved by the conviction and the sentence now imposed he has the Supreme Court to which he can resort and, for this purpose, he is not without constitutional remedies. Speaking for myself, it would be a matter of comfort to me that if I have erred in enhancing the sentence, my error would be rectified by the Supreme Court. Let me, meanwhile, discharge my duty as I see it. Order accordingly.

AIR 1970 GOA, DAMAN & DIU 59
(V 57 C 12)

V. S. JETLEY, J. C.

Gulabbhai Vallabbhai Desai and others, Petitioners v. H. A. Khan, Collector of Daman and others, Respondents.

Writ Petns. Nos. 11 and 39 of 1967.
D/- 17-10-1969.

KM/LM/F305/69/KSB/M

(A) Evidence Act (1872), S. 115 — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 — Doctrine of approbate and reprobate and principle of constructive res judicata — Applicable to writ proceedings.

In a previous writ petition under Article 32 before the Supreme Court, the case of the petitioner was that he had purchased at auction the whole village R for cultivation under a sale deed which clearly stated that a small area of land had already been sold to another. The Supreme Court held that the village R fell within the inclusive part of the definition of 'an estate' under Art. 31-A(2)(a) (iii) of the Constitution and therefore the validity of the Daman Regulation of 1962 was protected from challenge under Articles 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution. In a subsequent writ petition before the High Court, between the same parties the petitioner's contention was that he was not the holder of the whole village R and as such was not a proprietor as defined in S. 2(h) of the Regulation.

Held (i) that the doctrine of approbate and reprobate which is a species of estoppel applied to the conduct of the petitioner and he should not be permitted to depart from the unequivocal stand taken by him in the Supreme Court and contend that he is not the proprietor of the whole village. AIR 1933 P.C. 167, Rel. on. (Para 3)

(ii) that apart from the doctrine of approbate and reprobate the principle of constructive res judicata would also apply. The petitioner might and ought to have raised the plea before the Supreme Court but having failed to do so he could not be permitted to raise the plea again. AIR 1965 S.C. 1150, Applied. (Para 3)

(B) Tenancy Laws — Daman (Abolition of Proprietorship of Villages) Regulation (1962), Pre, Ss. 2(h), 3, 10(2) proviso & 12 — Reading these provisions prior to Amendment of 1968 a proprietor of a part of village was covered by definition of proprietor in S. 2(h).

The scheme of the Regulation prior to its Amendment in 1968 as appears from Preamble, Ss. 2(h), 3, 10(2) Proviso and 12 shows that a proprietor of a part of village is covered by the definition of 'proprietor' in S. 2(h). It is possible to take the view that when the Regulation speaks of a village as a unit, it also includes a part thereof. The principle that the greater includes the less can be applied to the Regulation, particularly when it does not say in express terms that a village will not include a part thereof. (1954) 1 All. E. R. 408, Rel. on. (Para 4)

The Regulation is a piece of beneficent legislation and is to be liberally construed so as to advance its objects and suppress the mischief aimed at by the law-making authority. A literal construction has only a prima facie preference. (Para 4)

(C) Civil P. C. (1908), Pre. — Interpretation of statutes — Statement of objects and reasons — Can be properly looked into for limited purpose of ascertaining the circumstances prevailing at the time of enactment of Act. (Para 5)

(D) Tenancy Laws — Daman (Abolition of Proprietorship of Villages) Regulation (1962), S. 2 (d) — Definition of village as inserted by Daman (Abolition of Proprietorship of Villages) Regulation (Amendment) Act (1968) — S. 2(d) is not ultra vires the State Legislature and is constitutionally valid — Its validity cannot be challenged under Arts. 14, 19(1)(f) and 31 as it is protected by Art. 31-A of the Constitution. (Constitution of India, Arts. 31-A, 245, Sch. 7, List II, Entry 18) — (Government of Union Territories Act (1963), S. 18).

S. 2(d) of the Regulation defining 'village' as including a part of village is not ultra vires the legislative competence of the State legislature in view of Sch. 7, List II, Entry 18 of the Constitution read with S. 18 of the Government of Union Territories Act, 1963. (Conceded).

(Para 7)

The Regulation of 1962 is no doubt protected by Art. 31-A. The Amendment Act of 1968 was enacted to further the object of the Regulation and cannot be considered in isolation. The amendments brought about by the Act are for carrying out the agrarian reforms contemplated by the Regulation, as would be clear from its tenor and intent. The omission to mention that it was enacted to carry out agrarian reforms is not decisive. The law is well settled that the Legislature has power in proper cases to pass even retrospective legislation. AIR 1959 S.C. 475, Rel. on. The Legislature can legislate prospectively and retrospectively unless there is a constitutional bar. The Act conforms to the pattern followed in other parts of India for giving effect to agrarian reforms, and the argument against its validity on the ground that Section 2(d) is a colourable piece of legislation must fail. The Act including this section is protected by Article 31-A. This section is not a fraud on the Constitution. Far from it, the Act does not attempt indirectly what it cannot do directly. The retrospective effect given to the word "village" by Section 2(d) is not invalid. If the Regulation has the protection of Article 31-A when it applies to a proprietor of a whole village, with equal force, the Act including S. 2(d) will also have the same protection when it applies to a part of a village. AIR 1955 S.C. 41, Rel. on. (Para 7)

(E) Tenancy Laws — Daman (Abolition of Proprietorship of Villages) Regulation (1962), Ss. 4(b) and 12-A — Grass or pasture land of proprietor — Vesting of, in Central Government — Classification of such lands has to be made under authority of law — Under S. 12-A Mamlatdar and Collector have to make a quasi-judicial inquiry after following rules of natural justice — Classification of grass lands on basis of executive inquiry made behind back of proprietor violates Art. 31(1) of the Constitution and principles of natural justice — Writ of Mandamus issued directing authorities to make fresh inquiry according to law — (Constitution of India, Arts. 31(1) and 226) — (Words and Phrases — Grass or pasture lands).

Section 4(b) of the Regulation, does not permit a proprietor to retain pasture or grasslands. He could retain lands under his personal cultivation, not being pasture or grassland. "Land for pasture" has the protection of Art. 31-A(2) (a)(iii) of the Constitution. The inclusive definition of "estate" takes in this category of land expressly but there is no reference in terms to "land for grass" in this provision. In the absence of any definition of 'pasture or grasslands' in the Act these words are to be understood in their ordinary sense. The dictionary meaning of grasslands is 'pasture or grazing land' and pasture land is a piece of land covered with grass. (Para 8)

The law is well settled that even in an administrative inquiry, where the rights of persons are affected resulting in serious consequences the principles of natural justice are to be observed and that no decision can be given against a party without giving him reasonable hearing. AIR 1967 Goa 102 (112) & AIR 1969 NSC 108, Rel. on. (Para 8)

The Regulation and the Rules made thereunder do not provide for an inquiry on the lines of Section 12-A of the Amending Act, which contemplates a quasi-judicial inquiry.

Classification of grasslands has to be by an authority of law before these lands could vest in the Central Government. Art. 31(1) of the Constitution makes this position clear. A party cannot be deprived of these lands on the basis of an executive inquiry. The Mamlatdar and the Collector are not constituted under the Regulation as the final authorities to decide whether particular lands are really grasslands or pasture lands. Whether they are so is primarily a question of fact. The view taken by the authorities that they are grasslands on the basis of an executive inquiry viz., survey inquiry, without conforming to the principles of natural justice and also in contravention of Article 31(1) of the Constitution, has not the support of law. It is not binding on the petitioner. This question now has to be decided by the Mamlatdar and the Collector according to law. (Para 8)

(F) Tenancy Laws — Daman (Abolition of Proprietorship of Villages) Regulation (1962), S. 12F — Section though excludes jurisdiction of Civil Court does not bar writ jurisdiction of High Court.

Section 12-F does not bar the writ jurisdiction of the High Court, but as far as other civil courts are concerned they will have no jurisdiction if the question under consideration is by or under the Regulation required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Mamlatdar or the Collector. The writ jurisdiction of the High Court is also to be exercised according to well-settled principles. (Para 8)

(G) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 31 and 115 — Estoppel by admission — Admission in writ petition before Supreme Court that certain lands in possession of petitioner were pasture lands and that they were used by him for grazing his cattle — It is not open to petitioner in subsequent writ petition before High Court to turn round and say that admission is not correct — He has to abide by that admission. (Para 8)

(H) Constitution of India, Arts. 31-A (2)(a)(iii), 14, 19 and 31 — 'Pasture lands' — Included in definition of estate under Art. 31-A (2)(a)(iii) irrespective of whether they are privately owned or are public pasture lands — Their taking over by Government cannot be questioned on ground of violation of Arts. 14, 19 and 31 in view of protection under Art. 31-A. (Para 8)

R. J. Joshi and B. S. Ramani, for Petitioners (in both Appeals); S. K. Bhabha and S. Tamba, for Respondents (in both Appeals).

ORDER:— The following questions arise for consideration in petition No. 11 of 1967 filed on behalf of the petitioner — Gulabbhai Vallabbhai Desai — under Article 226 of the Constitution:— (1) whether the petitioner is the proprietor of the village 'Regunwada', within the meaning of Section 2(h) of the Daman (Abolition of Proprietorship of Villages) Regulation, 1962; (2) if the petitioner is not the proprietor as defined under the said Section 2(h), whether the Daman (Abolition of Proprietorship of Villages) Regulation (Amendment) Act, 1968, in so far as it retrospectively defines the word "village" in Section 2(d) as including a part of a village, is invalid, Article 31-A of the Constitution being inapplicable; (3) if the petitioner is the proprietor, as defined under the said Section 2(h), whether the 90 acres of the land classified as the grassland and the 20 acres of the land classified as the pasture land, on behalf of the respondents, are really the grass and pasture lands as understood under the Regulation; (4) whether the view taken by the Respondents 1 and 2 that they are the grass and pasture lands is in violation of the principles of natural justice; and (5) whether the proposed action of taking over the said lands is in violation of Article 14 of the Constitution, as similar action is not contemplated by these respondents against other persons similarly situated. Some of these questions also arise in petition No. 39 of 1967 filed on behalf of the petitioners Sunderlall Uttamchand and four others, under Article 226 of the Constitution. They relate to the lands other than the grass and pasture lands. It would be convenient to deal first with the case set out by the parties in petition No. 11 of 1967. The case of the petitioners Sunderlall Uttamchand and 4 others will not take long to dispose of in the light of the conclusions reached in this petition.

2. The scheme of the Daman (Abolition of Proprietorship of Villages) Regulation, 1962, may be broadly explained before considering the questions formulated in their order, (hereinafter referred to as 'the Regulation'). The Regulation was promulgated by the President of India under Article 240 of the Constitution, and it came into force on the 13th of July, 1962. This is "the appointed date" within the meaning of Section 2(b) of the Regulation. Section 2(d) defines the words "to cultivate personally", as meaning to cultivate on one's own account— (i) by one's own labour, or (ii) by the labour of any member of one's family, or (iii) by servant on wages payable in cash or kind but not in crop share or by hired labour under one's personal supervision or the personal supervision of any member of one's family. The explanation to this section is not relevant for the present purpose. "Cultivation" under Section 2(e), means the use of lands for the purpose of agriculture or horticulture. Section 2(f) defines "cultivating tenant" to mean a person who cultivates personally any land belonging to another under an agreement, express or implied, and pays rent therefor in cash or kind or delivers a share of the produce. "Land" under Section 2(d) means every class or category of land and includes— (i) benefits to arise out of such land, and (ii) things attached to earth or permanently fixed to anything attached to earth. "Proprietor", under Section 2(h), means a person who holds any village or villages granted to him or any of his predecessors-in-interest by the former Portuguese Government by way of gift, sale or otherwise and includes his co-sharers.

Section 3 provides for abolition of proprietary rights on and from the appointed date; it says that notwithstanding anything contained in any contract, grant, or other document or in any law for the time being in force, on and from the appointed date; Clause (i) all rights, title and interest of every proprietor in or in respect of all lands in his village or villages shall be deemed to have been extinguished; Clause (ii) all such rights, title and interest shall stand transferred to—and vest in the Central Government free from all encumbrances etc. Clause (iii) is not relevant for the present purpose. Section 4 states that notwithstanding anything contained in Section 3, a proprietor shall, subject to the provisions of Sections 6 to 8, be entitled to retain with effect from the appointed date— (a) homesteads, buildings and structures together with lands appurtenant thereto in the occupation of the proprietor; and (b) lands under the personal cultivation of the proprietor, not being pasture or grass lands. This section is an exception to the vesting provision in Section 3. Sub-section (1) of Section 5 enables the Collector to take charge of all lands and of all rights, title and interest therein of a proprietor vested in the Government under Section 3, and for this purpose, the Collector or any officer authorized by him may take such steps or use such force as may be necessary. Sub-section (2) provides that nothing in sub-section (1) shall be deemed to authorize the Collector to take possession of any land, or of any right of proprietor which may be retained by him under Section 4. This sub-section is a check on the exercise of arbitrary power by the Collector. Section 6 refers to liability of lands for payment of land revenue from the appointed date. Section 7 provides for restoration of possession of any land from which any cultivating tenant had been evicted after the dates mentioned therein. Section 8 deals with the rights of proprietors and cultivating tenants to hold lands as occupants. Sections 9 to 11 provide for the extent of compensation to the proprietors, method of payment of compensation, and payment of compensation. Sections 12 to 14 are ancillary provisions. Section 15 empowers the Administrator to make rules to carry out the purposes of the Regulation. This, in substance, is the scheme of the Regulation.

3. The case of the petitioner Gulabbhai Vallabhbhai Desai in the petition before this Court duly supported by affidavits is that in order to satisfy the definition of the expression "proprietor" under Section 2(h), he should be holding the whole village of Regunwada and not a part thereof and, consequently, the Regulation is inapplicable. The argument of Mr. R. J. Joshi, learned counsel for the petitioner, based on this part of the case of the petitioner, is that what was granted to the petitioner by the former Government of Portugal by way of sale in terms of the sale deed dated 12th February, 1930, was five plots of the land in village Regunwada and that they did not include 15 acres of the land comprised therein belonging to the Parsee community of Daman and, accordingly, the petitioner is not the holder of the whole village of Regunwada. The case of the respondents duly supported by affidavits is that these 15 acres of land had already been sold to the Parsee community of Daman, as will be apparent from this sale deed, and that at the time of the sale to the petitioner, what was granted by way of sale was the whole village of Regunwada consisting of the five plots minus these 15 acres, and, therefore, the petitioner is the "proprietor" as defined. This also is the contention of Mr. S. K. Bhabha, learned counsel for the respondents, assuming the Regulation applies to the whole village and not to a part thereof. Mr. Bhabha also contends that it was the case of the petitioner in November, 1962, in the Supreme Court, in Writ Petition No. 148/1960, that he was the proprietor of the whole village Regunwada and not a part thereof and, therefore, he should not be permitted to set up a different case in this Court, when the parties are the same. The case of the petitioner before the Supreme Court as will appear from the above petition filed by him under Article 32 of the Constitution, was that he had purchased at auction the whole village Regunwada for Rs. 50,051/- in February, 1930. The sale deed stated that this village was sold to him for purpose of cultivation. It contained, on the date appointed under the Regulation, 320 acres of land used for cultivation (180 acres cultivated by the petitioner personally and the remaining 140 acres cultivated by his tenants) and 14 acres covered by roads etc. The Supreme Court observed that this village sold for cultivation to the petitioner, had been put to agricultural use, as is evident from the fact that out of the 334 acres 320 acres are cultivated. The remaining 14 acres represented roads etc. In this state of affairs, the Supreme Court concluded, that this village (as a whole) fell within the inclusive part of the definition of an 'estate' under Article 31-A (2)(a)(iii) of the Constitution and, therefore, the validity of the Regulation is beyond challenge on the ground that it is inconsistent with, or takes away, or abridges any of the rights conferred by Articles 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution. "Gulabbhai Vallabhbhai Desai v. Union of India", AIR 1967 S.C. 1110. It is argued by Mr. R. J. Joshi that the petitioner was not aware when he filed the petition in the Supreme Court that the 15 acres of land comprised in this village belonged to the Parsee community. The petitioner was under the impression that this village, as a whole, belonged to him and, therefore, the plea now taken could not be taken earlier before the Supreme Court. According to Mr. Bhabha the petitioner knew at the time of the sale in February, 1930 that apart from the 5 plots sold to him, the remaining plot in this village had already been sold to the Parsee community, and that this plea is an afterthought. In this connection Mr. Bhabha invites my attention to the notice of auction dated 13th December, 1929 and the sale deed dated 12th February, 1930 in favour of the petitioner. The said notice refers to the sale of this village "either in lots or as a whole". The sale deed following this notice refers to the sale of 5 plots to the petitioner, and it also mentions that another plot in the vicinity belonged to the Parsee community of Daman. This village did not contain any other plot. This sale deed was within the special knowledge of the petitioner. In view of these documents and the unequivocal stand taken by the petitioner in the Supreme Court that he had purchased this village as a whole — submits Mr. Bhabha — the petitioner should not be allowed to approbate and reprobate. This submission, it seems, is not without force.

In this connection Mr. Bhabha cites 'Ambu Nair v. Kelu Nair', AIR 1933 P.C. 167. The facts of this case are that a suit on the mortgage was compromised and a decree dated 2nd January 1899, was passed in accordance with the compromise. The mortgagors were to pay to the mortgagee within three years a sum of Rs. 31,000/- together with a yearly rent in kind; in default of payment of Rs. 31,000/- or of rent, the mortgagee was to be entitled to obtain, by process of execution, possession of the property and to retain the same as usufructuary mortgagee, the mortgagors having the right to redeem in any year thereafter on payment of Rs. 31,000/- and to obtain delivery of the property "by taking out execution." No rent was paid and in March of the following year possession was taken by the mortgagee under the decree. The mortgagee remained in possession as mortgagee. It was contended that the only remedy of the mortgagor was by execution of the compromise decree, and that remedy was long barred. This contention was regarded as untenable. In the words of Sir George Lowndes, speaking on behalf of the Privy Council:—

"On the terms of the compromise decree of 1899 they think that it was not the intention of the parties that the remedy by execution should alone be open to the mortgagors. Seeing that it would, as the Courts have held, be barred after three years, such a construction would manifestly defeat the main object of the compromise which was to leave the mortgagors in possession for three years and if after the expiry of that period the mortgage debt was not paid to allow the appellant to take possession, and again if and after he had so done to entitle the mortgagors to redeem. That the appellant understood this to be the intention is clear from the proceedings in the suit on the simple mortgage, which was based upon the right of redemption being still alive; the prayer of the plaint would on the face of it have allowed both mortgages to be paid off on a sale. It is, their Lordships think, equally clear that it was upon the same understanding that the respondent came in and paid off the decree in this suit, and that the appellant accepted the payment. On no other view of the facts could he have realized the decretal amount. Having thus, almost in terms, offered to be redeemed under the usufructuary mortgage in order to get payment of the other mortgage debt, the appellant, their Lordships think, cannot now turn round and say that the redemption under the usufructuary mortgage had been barred nearly 17 years before he so obtained payment. It is a well accepted principle that a party cannot both approbate and reprobate. He cannot, to use the words of Honeyman, J., in Smith v. Baker, 8 C.P. 350:

"at the same time blow hot and cold. He cannot say at one time that the transaction is valid and thereby obtain some advantage to which he could only be entitled on the footing that it is valid, and at another say it is void for the purpose of securing some further advantage."

Applying the principle underlying this decision I agree with Mr. Bhabha, that the petitioner should not be permitted to depart from the unequivocal stand taken by him in the Supreme Court on the basis of the above documents. Having taken that stand he cannot now turn round and say that he is not the proprietor of the whole village. I cannot help saying that the plea now taken is not fair to this Court. It has the attraction of legal ingenuity but not the support of true facts. The pleadings are not to be deliberately inconsistent, relying on the theory that the end justifies the means. The doctrine of approbate and reprobate is a species of estoppel and it applies to the conduct of the petitioner in this case. It is also submitted by Mr. Bhabha that the principle of constructive res judicata would also apply in this case, and in support of this submission, he relies on Devilal v. Sales Tax Officer, AIR 1965 S.C. 1150 (1152). Gajendragadkar C. J., speaking on behalf of the Supreme Court, observed:—

"The general principle underlying the doctrine of res judicata is ultimately based on consideration of public policy. One important consideration of public policy is that the decisions pronounced by Courts of competent jurisdiction should be final, unless they are modified or reversed by appellate authorities; and the other principle is that no one should be made to face the same kind of litigation twice over, because such a process would

"In the circumstances, I hereby serve you with six calendar months' notice of determination of the above mentioned agreement to be computed from the 1st day of October, 1955, and if you do not convey your acceptance of the above said charges and take steps to execute a tripartite agreement on the standard form within one month, then on the expiry of the notice period the said sidings shall be cut off and dismantled which please note and acknowledge."

This para 5 of the letter Ex. 21 makes it quite clear that this plaintiff was given an option to accept the revised charges otherwise, after the expiry of the period of the notice, the sidings shall be cut off and dismantled. This was six months' notice given as per the old agreement. It is thus evident that by that notice he was not asked to pay the revised charges from 5-11-1951 as has been done in the other suit.

21. Ex. 22 is another important document which is material for our purposes in this appeal. It is a letter written by the Divisional Railway Superintendent, Baroda, dated 24-1-1957, to the plaintiff. It has been specifically mentioned therein that these revised charges will have effect from 3rd September, 1955, the date of the General Manager's letter quoted above. The letter quoted is the letter, dated 3rd September, 1955, Ex. 21. It is thus abundantly clear that by this letter it was made clear that the plaintiff had to pay the revised charges from 3rd September, 1955. It is further mentioned therein:—

"As the charges at the old rate have been paid by you for the period ending 30-9-1956, due credit for them will be given to you in the revised bill for the various charges indicated above which will be furnished to you on your approval of these revised charges."

Copies of the standard form of agreement were also sent along with this letter. Two copies duly signed were to be sent to the Railway in token of approval. It is significant to note that the plaintiff was also asked to pay Rs. 75/- to meet with the stamping charges. It was also recited in para 7 of this letter that in case those instructions were not complied with, within 15 days, Permanent Way Inspector, Petlad was ordered to disconnect the siding on the expiry of the period. Ex. 23 was a reminder, dated 21st February, 1957, stating that no extension of time limit can be allowed. The plaintiff was again asked to signify its approval or face the disconnection of the siding from 1-3-1957. The plaintiff ultimately signified its approval and duly signed the copies of the standard form of agreement and sent them along with the stamping fees of Rs. 75/- by its letter Ex. 24, dated 25th February, 1957. It is, therefore, evident that the plaintiff accepted this offer made by the Railway and signed the agreement on 25th February, 1957 and sent the copies duly signed to the Railway authorities as instructed. It is, therefore, evident that a valid agreement came into force on that day. That agreement is Ex. 34. In that agreement, there is a clause 13 which runs as under:—

"Notwithstanding anything herein or in the said conditions contained this agreement is entered into on the express understanding that either party hereto shall be at liberty to terminate this agreement by giving to the either of them at any time six calendar months' previous notice in writing of their intention so to do without assigning any reason therefor and giving of such notice by the Administration shall not entitle the licensee to any claim for compensation for or by way of damages by reason of the termination of this agreement. On the expiry of such notice, it shall be lawful for the Administration to remove the permanent-way materials....."

It is thus evident that if the Railway Administration felt that it had committed some mistake in not demanding the revised rates from 5th November, 1951, as was done in the case of other plaintiff who was given siding facilities and uniform policy was thereby not pursued, the course open to the Railway Administration was to give such a notice terminating this agreement and give an alternative offer to the plaintiff that if it wants to continue to have the facility of assisted railway siding, it should pay the revised rates from 5-11-1951 or it may decide not to have this facility and the facility will be eventually withdrawn. That is not the course that has been followed by the Railway Administration. What the Railway authority did was that it had given a notice Ex. 26, dated 22-1-1958, stating that the revised charges advised to the plaintiff, vide letter, dated 3-9-1955 Ex. 21, had come into vogue from 5-11-1951, the date of integration of Ex. B.B. & C.I. Railway into the Western Railway and, there being a uniformity applied in all the cases including the facility allowed to the plaintiff, it was not possible to make an exception in this case. As such the plaintiff was requested to pay the revised charges with retrospective effect, i.e., from 5-11-1951. The plaintiff was accordingly given a revised bill. It is significant to note that in para 2, it has been specifically mentioned that the plaintiff had conveyed its approval to the railway terms and conditions by its letter dated 25-2-1957. It is further recited therein that this railway is ready to continue the facility, provided the plaintiff agrees to the payment of arrears indicated in para 1. By para 3, it was mentioned that a substitution be made in previous letter, dated 24-1-1957, i.e., charges will have effect from 5-11-1951, i.e., the date of integration of Exs-B.B. & C.I. Railway into the Western Railway. This letter also does indicate that the plaintiff had already accepted the offer made by its letter, dated 25-2-1957 and that was as per the terms and conditions suggested in the letter of the Railway, dated 24-1-1957. It was only after some-time, that this letter was written by the Railway asking the plaintiff to signify its approval to pay the revised rates from 5th November, 1951. This letter was written after a valid agreement had come into force between the parties. The plaintiff paid this amount under protest, stating clearly that the defendants were not entitled to make such demands and were not entitled to recover it legally. It is, therefore, evident that the plaintiff paid this amount under compulsion. If the plaintiff did not pay, the plaintiff would have lost the facility of siding, to which it was entitled as per agreement Ex. 34 till that agreement was terminated by giving a legal notice as contemplated by clause 13 of the Agreement. That having been not done, it could be said without any doubt that the amount was not legally payable and the plaintiff was required to pay it under compulsion and the defendants were not in a position to show that they had a right to recover this amount from the plaintiff under law. It is, therefore, evident that so far as this appeal is concerned, the plaintiff is entitled to repayment of this amount. The learned Extra Assistant Judge had committed a mistake in regard to this case as probably, he disposed of both the appeals together by a common judgment and did not notice this difference in the facts of the two cases.

22. The learned Extra Assistant Judge has referred to the decision in the case of Hardie and Lane Ltd. v. Chilton, (1923) 2 K. B. D. 306. Scrutton Lord Justice, in his judgment at pages 313 and 314, made the following observations which are relevant for our purposes:—

"If a trader may withdraw his custom without breaking any law, he may with equal legality express his intention of withdrawing it unless his wishes are met, subject always to the condition that the purpose of the threat is to forward his trade interests and not wilfully and ultra-neously to injure the trade of another." And he refers to certain authorities. Lord Dunedin in the same case says, 1925 A. C. 700 at p. 730:—

'Expressing the matter in my own words, I would say that a threat is a pre-intimation of proposed action of some sort. That action must be either per se a legal action or an illegal, i.e., a tortious action. If the threat used to effect some purpose is of the first kind, it gives no ground for legal proceeding; if of the second, it falls within the description of illegal means, and the right to sue of the person injured is established.'

If we judge the facts of these two cases from the aforesaid test, we find that so far as the facts of Appeal No. 452 of 1961 are concerned, the case would fall within the first category. No doubt, a threat was given by a letter, dated 21st June, 1957 that in case the plaintiff is not agreeable to the payment of revised rates from 5-11-1951, agreement would be terminated after the expiry of the period of the notice. The Railway authority had under the old agreement such power to terminate the agreement after giving a requisite six months' notice without assigning any reasons. No doubt, a threat was used to effect some purpose. But it was the purpose of the first kind. It was a lawful act. The plaintiff of that case, therefore, has no ground for a legal proceeding and the plaintiff is not entitled to repayment of the amount paid.

23. So far as the facts of appeal No. 463 of 1961 are concerned, the case falls under the second category. At the time when the notice, dated 3-9-1955 was given, it was not stated that the plaintiff has to pay the revised rates from 5-11-1951 and in case he is not agreeable to those terms and conditions, the agreement will be terminated after the expiry of the period of notice. Even in the letter, dated 21st April, 1957, the plaintiff was asked to pay the revised rates from 3-9-1955. In case it was not agreeable to it, the agreement was to be terminated after the expiry of the period of notice. The plaintiff ultimately agreed to those terms and conditions and duly signed the copies of the standard form and sent them on 25-2-1957 and sent the stamping charges also as demanded. It means that a new agreement came into force between the parties. No doubt, that agreement, the Railway could have terminated by giving a notice of six months' as required by clause 13 of that agreement. No such notice was given. The plaintiff had shown its approval. That fact has been also acknowledged in the letter Ex. 26, dated 22-1-1958 by the Railway. The Railway had, therefore, no authority in law to make such a demand of payment of the revised rates from 5-11-1951 and in the event of the plaintiff's failure to do so, to withdraw the facility of railway siding. That action of the railway was illegal. The Railway could have resorted to the action contemplated by clause 13. That having been not done, it is clear that this amount was received by the Railway by illegal means. The plaintiff had paid that amount under compulsion. The defendants have not been able to show that they had a right to recover it from the plaintiff in law. It is, therefore, evident that the plaintiff in that appeal is entitled to repayment of that amount.

24. At pages 317 and 318 in the aforesaid judgment, the relevant observations have been made:—

“(1) Where the money is not legally due without an agreement, but is due under an agreement obtained by the threat to do an act which may be lawfully done, if the agreement is not made, both the agreement and the threat are lawful; the direction would make them unlawful. If the agreement is unlawful, or the threat inducing it is to do an unlawful act, the case would be different. In the present case it was unlawful to put a member who broke the rules on the stop list; it was lawful to say one was going to do it; it was lawful or not unlawful, to agree not to exercise the legal right to put a man who broke the rules on the stop list, if a more lenient alternative in the shape of a payment of money was exercised; (2) which is a minor form of the same point, in my opinion, the direction is wrong if it assumes that to threaten to do what you have a legal right to do can ever be a ground for obtaining back money alleged to be paid under duress. A man lawfully claims a lien on property of which you are in urgent need; because of your urgent necessity you pay, the necessity disturbing your power of judgment. Is it suggested you can recover the money back? To do so, you must prove the lien unlawful.”

Relying upon these observations, the learned Extra Assistant Judge has disposed of these two appeals. But as said above, he missed one important fact so far as second appeal No. 463 of 1961 is concerned. That was probably the reason why he came to an erroneous decision in that appeal, though he had made a correct statement of law. The result is that the appeal in Second Appeal No. 463 of 1961 succeeds. The appeal in Second Appeal No. 452 of 1961 fails.

25. Second Appeal No. 463 of 1961 is allowed. The decree passed in Civil Appeal No. 232 of 1960 is reversed and the decree passed by the trial Court in Civil Suit No. 213 of 1959 is restored. The respondents-defendants are ordered to bear the costs of the appellant in this second appeal as well as in the District Court Civil Appeal No. 232 of 1960. Second Appeal No. 452 of 1961 is dismissed with costs.

Spl. Civil Appln. No. 1061 of 1963, D/- 11-12-1968.

Imported Foodgrains (Prohibition of Unauthorised Sale) Order (1958), Cls. 2(a) and 3 — Petitioner authorised dealer under Cl. 2(a) — Authorisation cancelled on ground of misconduct of petitioner — Contractual power of termination of authorisation not exercised — Cancellation order is penal and can be passed only in accordance with principles of natural justice — Writ petition filed against cancellation order — Petition clearly competent — No statutory rule or standing order available requiring elaborate inquiry by recording evidence — Petitioner not demanding copies of statements of witnesses recorded at preliminary inquiry — Gist of such statements however given in show cause notice — No attempt made by petitioner to rebut materials sought to be relied upon against him — Petitioner heard in appeal against cancellation order — Principles of natural justice are satisfied in such a case — Writ petition hence not maintainable— (Essential Commodities Act (1955), S. 3)—(Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Grounds of Certiorari).

Where the petitioner is an authorised dealer under Cl. 2(a) of the Imported Foodgrains (Prohibition of Unauthorised Sale) Order and the authorisation is cancelled on ground of misconduct of the petitioner and not in exercise of the contractual power of termination of the authorisation, the cancellation order is penal and it can be passed only in accordance with the principles of natural justice. A writ petition filed against such a cancellation order is clearly competent. When no statutory rule or standing order is available requiring an elaborate enquiry by recording evidence and the petitioner does not demand copies of the statements of witnesses recorded at the preliminary enquiry but a gist of those statements had been given in the show cause notice and no attempt is made by the petitioner to rebut the materials sought to be relied upon against him and he is heard in appeal against the cancellation order, the principles of natural justice are satisfied in such a case. Hence the writ petition is not maintainable. (Paras 4 and 6)

The authorisation issued to the petitioner has its source in the statutory Imported Foodgrains (Prohibition of Unauthorised Sale) Order. This authorisation is not a mere contractual one but it enures for the purpose of that Order.

EM/IM/C121/69/JRM/T

Once this authorisation is cancelled, the petitioner's fundamental right to trade in imported foodgrains will come to an end and he will be hit by the prohibition under Cl. 3 of that Order. When the cancellation of the authorisation is not in exercise of the contractual power of termination but is under the disciplinary jurisdiction on ground of misconduct of the petitioner, the cancellation order is a penal one. If the rule of law is to prevail, it is implicit that the State Executive cannot act in such matters arbitrarily or on mere humour or caprice. Such a penal order can only be passed in accordance with the principles of natural justice. In the matter of licence and allotment of quota in pursuance of executive schemes under the relevant control legislation, the orders of the authorities are subject to judicial review when those orders result in serious consequences. Those authorities must act judicially in deciding such serious questions affecting the rights of the persons concerned. When such a cancellation order is challenged by a writ petition, it cannot be said that the petitioner is enforcing contractual rights. Such a petition is thus clearly competent.

Further, in such cases, a refusal to record oral evidence will not necessarily mean a contravention of the principles of natural justice. In the absence of relevant statutory rules all that is necessary is that the person must be given an opportunity to be heard and no material should be used against him unless he is given an opportunity to explain or controvert that material. Therefore, when there are no statutory rules or standing orders requiring any elaborate oral inquiry by recording evidence and the petitioner does not demand copies of the statements of witnesses recorded at the preliminary enquiry but a gist of those statements had been given to him in the show cause notice and no attempt is made by him to rebut the materials sought to be relied upon against him and he is heard in the appeal against the cancellation order, the principles of natural justice are satisfied in such a case. If he does not demand any copies the authorities are not bound to supply them. In any event, when he has been given due opportunity to tender all his explanation and he had actually submitted his reply, the cancellation order cannot be said to be in contravention of the elementary principles of natural justice. Therefore, the writ petition against such cancellation order is not maintainable. ORDER:— The petitioner Chitranjan Manilal Shah challenges in this petition the appellate order passed by respondent No. 2, Director of Civil Supplies, on 29th November 1963, who confirmed the order passed by the Collector on 6th August 1963 cancelling the fair price shop authorisation of the petitioner and forfeiting the full amount of his deposit on the ground that he had illegally disposed of rice from the approved shop and this act amounted to serious misconduct.

2. The petitioner's case is that the Gujarat Foodgrains Dealers Licensing Order, 1963, issued under Section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955, he is a licensed dealer. Under a subsequent order known as the Imported Foodgrains (Prohibition of Unauthorised Sale) Order, 1958, issued on 1st November 1958 by reason of clause 3 thereof, no person other than the authorised dealer could sell or store or offer for sale imported foodgrains in any quantity. Authorised dealer was also defined under clause 2(a) as a dealer authorised by the Central Government or a State Government or by a duly authorised officer of the Central Government or the State Government, to run a fair price shop or ration shop at which imported foodgrains are or may be sold. The petitioner's fair price shop was accordingly authorised by an authorisation which was issued to the petitioner. In 1958 on his executing agreement, Ex. 13, dated 6-10-1968 and it was from time to time renewed every year. His licence under the Licensing Order, 1963, and the authorisation under the aforesaid order were valid at the relevant time. On 30th November 1962 a notice was issued to the petitioner as after taking delivery of American long rice on his permit through his broker Hemaji, the said rice had not been sold from the fair price shop on cards to the card-holders but was directly sold and delivered to private merchant Jayantilal Shah in breach of the orders of the authority issued in this connection. In the said notice a reference was made to the statements made by the broker Hemaji Navaji, the other broker Bhutaji Premaji and other labourers to the effect that said rice was delivered in a truck to the shop of Jayantilal. Such rice was found from Jayantilal's shop on search in a huge quantity and as a result of which a criminal complaint was filed against him. Even the huge sale of American rice on 13th and 14th in the stock register convinced the authority that the petitioner had misused the authorisation licence and had illegally sold the said rice given to him by the Government. The petitioner was, therefore, called upon why his authorisation should not be cancelled and the deposit forfeited. The petitioner gave an explanation denying the charge that he had illegally sold away the American rice to Jayantilal Shah and not to the card-holders. His explanation was that he did not know broker Bhutaji and had no relation with him and the statements made by those persons must be under threats of the police. The erasures in the stock register were explained as by way of mistakes and the heavy sale on those days was explained on the ground that there was great rush of customers on those days. The Collector refused to accept this explanation and he accordingly cancelled the authorisation and forfeited the deposit by the order, dated 6th August 1963. In appeal the respondent No. 2 having confirmed the order, the petitioner has filed this petition to challenge these two orders.

3. At the outset the learned Assistant Government Pleader Mr. G. T. Nanavati raised a preliminary objection that such a petition was not legally competent. The scheme of fair price shops is a distribution scheme undertaken by the State Government which is not a statutory scheme. The petitioner was merely holding authorisation as per the terms of the agreement and for enforcement of this contractual agreement or contractual rights therein no such writ petition is competent. The learned Assistant Government Pleader in this connection relied upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Lekhraj v. Dy. Custodian, Bombay, AIR 1966 S.C. 334 at page 336. The Supreme Court in terms pointed out that a writ of mandamus may be granted only in a case where there is a statutory duty imposed upon the officer concerned and there is a failure on the part of that officer to discharge that statutory obligation. The chief function of the writ is to compel the performance of public duties prescribed by statute and to keep the subordinate tribunals and officers exercising public functions within the limits of their jurisdiction. In that case the Supreme Court found that the appointment of the appellant as a manager by the Custodian by virtue of his power under Sec. 10(2) (b) of the Administration of the Evacuee Property Act, 1950, was contractual in its nature and there was no statutory obligation as between him and the appellant. The Supreme Court further observed that any duty or obligation falling upon a public servant out of a contract entered into by him as such public servant cannot be enforced by the machinery of a writ under Art. 226 of the Constitution. The learned Asstt. Govt. Pleader also relied upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Dr. Bool Chand v. Chancellor, Kurukshetra University, AIR 1968 S.C. 292 at page 296. The Supreme Court in terms approved the view taken by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Francis v. Municipal Councillors of Kuala Lumpur (1962) 3 All E. R. 633, and in Barber v. Manchester Regional Hospital Board, 1958 (1) All. E. R. 322 and in Vidhyodaya University of Ceylon v. Silva, 1964-3 All. E. R. 865. In these cases the authority appointing a servant was acting in exercise of statutory authority but the relation between the person appointed and the employer was contractual and it was held that the relation between the employer and the person appointed being that of master and servant, termination of relationship will not entitle the servant to a declaration that his employment had not been validly determined. This is no doubt a normal principle that unless there is a right to an office the contract of employment could not be specifically enforced and, therefore, no such petition for a declaration that the employment had not been validly determined and the person continued in office could be filed. In Dr. Bool Chand's case, AIR 1968 S.C. 292, however, the Supreme Court pointed out that the power to appoint Vice-Chancellor had its source in the University Act. At page 297 it was, therefore, held that once the appointment is made in pursuance of a Statute, though the appointing authority is not precluded from determining the appointment, the decision of the appointed authority to terminate the appointment may be based only upon the result of an inquiry held in a manner consistent with the basic concept of justice and fairplay. The Supreme Court followed the decision in Binapani Dei's case, AIR 1967 S.C. 1269 where it was observed:

"It is one of the fundamental rules of our constitutional set-up that every citizen is protected against exercise of arbitrary authority by the State or its officers. Duty to act judicially would, therefore, arise from the very nature of the function intended to be performed; it need not be shown to be superadded. If there is power to decide and determine to the prejudice of a person, duty to act judicially is implicit in the exercise of such power. If the essentials of justice be ignored and an order to the prejudice of a person is made, the order is a nullity. That is a basic concept of the rule of law and importance thereof transcends the significance of a decision in any particular case."

In those circumstances it is held that the power to appoint a Vice-Chancellor has its source in the University Act; investment of that power carries with it the power to determine the employment but the power is coupled with duty. The power may not be exercised arbitrarily, it can be only exercised for good cause, i.e., in the interests of the University and only when it is found after due inquiry held in manner consistent with the rules of natural justice, that the holder of the office is unfit to continue as Vice-Chancellor. The nature of the inquiry even in such cases of termination of office of the Vice-Chancellor has been therefore, held to be quasi-judicial. The case falling in the third category of cases considered by the House of Lords in Ridge v. Baldwin, 1964 A.C. 40 and the tenure of the office of the Vice-Chancellor could not be interrupted without first informing him of what was alleged against him and without giving an opportunity to make his defence or explanation. The Supreme Court confirmed the order on the ground that while making an inquiry all the relevant material was disclosed and the Vice-Chancellor was given an opportunity to controvert the material used against him. Therefore, the nature of the inquiry is as per the test adopted by Lord Loreburn L. C. in Board of Education v. Rice, 1911 A.C. 179 and not an elaborate inquiry by way of oral hearing by examining witnesses.

4. These decisions would not help the learned Assistant Government Pleader in this case to contend that the petitioner had only a contractual right which cannot be protected under the Essential Commodities Act, 1955. Under S. 3 the Central Government had issued the Imported Foodgrains (Prohibition of Unauthorised Sale) Order, 1958. Clause 3 provided for prohibition of unauthorised sale of imported foodgrains or storing or offering it for sale in any quantity except by authorised dealers who were authorised to run a fair price shop at which imported foodgrains could be sold under Clause 2 (a). Therefore, the authorisation which was issued to the petitioner for giving him imported foodgrains had its source in this statutory order. This authorisation was not a mere contractual authorisation but it enured for the purpose of the Imported Foodgrains (Prohibition of Unauthorised Sale) Order, 1958. Once this authorisation is cancelled, the petitioner's fundamental rights to trade in the imported foodgrains would come to an end and he would be hit by the prohibition under cl. 3 of that Order. Under the scheme of authorisation which is issued to the petitioner Ex. A, the authorities have a right under clause 3 to cancel it in accordance with the terms of the agreement, Annexure 'B', or at the discretion of the Collector. This contractual power has not been exercised and so it is not necessary to go into that question. In the present case the authorities acted upon clause 8 of this authorisation at Ex. A which provides that the holder of the authorisation shall be liable for departmental action, prosecution or both, as the case may be, for any contravention of the terms of the agreement or directions or orders issued by the Collector or any officer duly authorised by the Collector, Ahmedabad. Therefore this is a penal order passed against the authorised dealer in terms of clause 8 which entails such serious penal consequences in case of such a cancellation of the authorisation which is issued to the petitioner in pursuance of the aforesaid Control Order, 1958. If rule of law is to prevail it is implicit that the State executive cannot act on such matters arbitrarily or on mere humour or caprice. The order passed against the petitioner which visits with such serious consequences and which is a penal order can only be passed in accordance with the principles of natural justice as laid down by the Supreme Court in Binapani Dei's case, AIR 1967 S.C. 1269. This position is now well settled by some of the recent decisions of the Supreme Court in this connection. In Union of India v. Anglo Afghan Agency, AIR 1968 S.C. 718, the question arose as to whether the authorities could reduce the import licence entitlement which the petitioner earned on making the exports under the Export Promotion Scheme as per the promises held out by the Government. At page 725 the Supreme Court pointed out that the effect of the decision in various cases discussed was that the Court was competent to give relief in appropriate cases if contrary to the scheme, the authority declined to grant a licence or import certificate or the authority acted arbitrarily. The Supreme Court even assumed that the scheme was not legislative but only executive in nature, even so the Government and its officers were not entitled at their whim to ignore the promises made by the Government. The Textile Commissioner could not be deemed to be the sole judge of the quantum of import licence to be granted to an exporter, and that the Courts were not powerless to grant relief, if the promised import licence is not given to an exporter who has acted to his prejudice relying upon the representation. To concede to the departmental authorities that power would be to strike at the very root of the rule of law. At page 726 the Supreme Court in terms pointed out that what the petitioners were doing was not to enforce any contractual right but they were really seeking to enforce compliance with the obligation which was laid upon the Textile Commissioner by the terms of that scheme and even if the scheme was executive in character, the persons aggrieved by the failure to carry out the terms of the scheme were entitled to seek resort to the Court and claim that the obligation imposed upon the Textile Commissioner by the scheme be ordered to be carried out. The claim was sought to be raised only on equitable grounds and even in such case when the order was passed without any inquiry it was held to have been rightly quashed. Again, in Bharat Barrel & Drum Mfg. Co. v. L. K. Bose, AIR 1967 S.C. 361 a question arose before the Supreme Court as regards the order of the Iron and Steel Controller cancelling the allotment orders in favour of the petitioner. When the matter was questioned in a writ petition at an earlier stage, a consent order had been arrived at under which the Controller was to hear the parties and ascertain as to whether the petitioner was at fault. At page 365 the Supreme Court observed that it was well settled that while considering the question of breach of the principles of natural justice, the Court should not proceed as if there were any inflexible rules of natural justice of universal application. The Court, therefore has to consider in each case whether in the light of the facts and circumstances of the case, the nature of the issues involved in the inquiry, the nature of the order passed and the interests affected thereby a fair and reasonable opportunity of being heard was furnished to the person affected. The Supreme Court considered a number of earlier decisions at page 366 and pointed out that mere refusal to record oral evidence did not necessarily mean contravention of the rules of natural justice. The Supreme Court in this connection distinguished the decision in Union of India v. T. R. Varma, AIR 1957 S.C. 882 on the ground that the Court in that case was concerned with an inquiry held under Art. 311 of the Constitution and the observations made in that case, therefore, would bear no analogy to the inquiry held by the Controller in the aforesaid case. Further proceeding at page 367 the Supreme Court observed that the Controller was not a judicial tribunal in the sense of a Court of law and though inquiry held by him was a quasi-judicial inquiry it certainly was not a trial. The inquiry was confined to one question only viz. whether he should reconsider the order made by him in favour of the petitioner by determining as to whether he was at fault. The consent order even provided for hearing, but it did not contemplate that the Controller should follow any elaborate procedure. It did not lay down any such procedure or any procedure at all with the consequence that the Controller was left to devise his own procedure. So long as the procedure devised by him gave a fair and adequate opportunity to the parties to put forward and explain their respective cases such procedure would be sufficient and could not be challenged on the ground of any contravention of natural justice. Therefore, according to these decisions in the matter of such licence and allotment of quota in pursuance of the executive schemes under the relevant Control Legislation, the orders of the authorities which affect are held to be subject to judicial review when such orders result in such serious consequences. Even the principles of natural justice are held to be applicable and the authorities must act judicially in deciding such serious questions affecting the rights of the persons concerned. The Supreme Court has also clarified the nature of such inquiry when there is a duty to act judicially by pointing out that a refusal to record oral evidence would not necessarily mean a contravention of principles of natural justice. In the absence of the relevant statutory rules all that is necessary is that the person must be given an opportunity to be heard by making his representation and no material should be used against him unless he is given an opportunity to explain or controvert that material. Therefore, the learned Assistant Government Pleader's contention cannot be accepted that in this matter the petitioner was enforcing any contractual right. What the petitioner is challenging is that his authorisation which is issued to him in pursuance of the Control Order, 1958, is purported to be terminated by the void order which is in contravention of all principles of natural justice and, therefore, he continues to hold such authorisation. Such a petition is clearly competent, especially when the authorities have also not exercised the contractual power of termination of the authorisation licence but have chosen to exercise disciplinary jurisdiction against the petitioner by cancelling his authorisation on the ground of misconduct committed by him. The order being a penal order, it can be passed only in accordance with the principles of natural justice.

5. The controversy, however, centres on the question as to whether the principles of natural justice would require any elaborate procedure taking the oral evidence or the inquiry fulfilling Lord Loreburn's test would be sufficient. This question also stands concluded after the decision of the Supreme Court in AIR 1967 S.C. 361. Even in Dr. Bool Chand's case, AIR 1968 S.C. 292, where the office of the Vice-Chancellor was terminated, the principles of natural justice were held not to have been contravened if the inquiry satisfied Lord Loreburn's test. Mr. Desai, however, relied upon the decision of the Supreme Court in AIR 1957 S.C. 882. That decision is distinguished by the Supreme Court in Bharat Barrel & Drum Mfg. Co.'s case, AIR 1961 S.C. 361 at page 367 by, in terms, observing that in that case the inquiry was one under Article 311 of the Constitution and it could not bear analogy to the inquiry held by the Controller in that case. Mr. Desai next relied upon the decision of the Supreme Court in State of Mysore v. Shiv Basappa, AIR 1963 S.C. 375 which is also the case of a Government servant. Finally, Mr. Desai relied upon the decision under the Industrial law in Keshavram Cotton Mills Ltd. v. Gangadhar, AIR 1964 S.C. 708 at page 716. Just like Art. 311 even the Industrial law makes a departure from the ordinary law and the principles evolved in industrial adjudication for a just inquiry in case of industrial employees could not be invoked in the present case. The disciplinary control in the present case was sought to be exercised against the authorised dealer. There were no statutory rules or standing orders which required any elaborate oral inquiry by recording evidence. In the absence of any such elaborate procedure laid down by the statutory rules or standing orders, the requirements of natural justice would be fulfilled if the inquiry is held as per Lord Loreburn's test.

6. Mr. Desai argued that even in this view of the matter the present inquiry has contravened principles of natural justice, in that (1) the copies of the ex parte statements relied upon against the petitioner had not been supplied and, (2) no witness was examined in the presence of the petitioner. The petitioner has in terms pleaded these two infirmities and even in the reply filed by the authorities these allegations are not disputed. It must, however, be kept in mind that the petitioner had not demanded copies of the statements of the witnesses recorded at the preliminary inquiry. He was given the gist of the statements even in the show cause notice, dated 30-11-1962. The statements of the brokers and the labourer has been specifically mentioned but the petitioner in his explanation merely denied having any relation with the broker Bhutaji Premaji. As regards the other broker Hemaji Navaji who had actually under the petitioner's instructions delivered these goods to the merchant Jayantilal has not disowned. There was only the bare allegation that these statements were under pressure of the police which theory was discarded in view of the fact that the statements were taken in the preliminary investigation by the authorities themselves. No attempt was made by the petitioner to rebut the materials sought to be relied against him. Even as regards huge rise in the sales on those two days 13th and 14th and the erasures in the stock register the petitioner's explanation could not be relied upon by the authorities. The authorities are, therefore, right in stating in their affidavit that the petitioner never insisted on examining a witness and had not even asked for any opportunity to lead any evidence. In fact, after the order of the Collector, the petitioner was heard even in the appeal. Therefore, the relevant material used against him has been disclosed to the petitioner. If the petitioner never asked for any copies the authorities were not bound to supply those copies. In any event when the petitioner was given due opportunity to tender all his explanation and he had actually submitted his reply and when he had not led any evidence to rebut this serious charge against him for which prima facie material was disclosed to him, the order cannot be said to be one in contravention of the elementary principles of natural justice even if the inquiry were to comply with Lord Loreburn's test. Therefore, on this ground the petitioner has failed to make out any case. No other ground is urged in this petition.

7. In the result this petition fails. Rule is discharged with costs.

SHELAT, J.:— x x x

9. Two points arise to be considered in this appeal. The first is whether the trial Court was in error in holding that the plaintiff-appellant was not entitled to claim the rights of the first mortgagee-defendant No. 1-respondent No. 1 in respect of the suit property having regard to the provisions contained in Section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act. The other point is whether the suit is barred by reason of the withdrawal of Civil Suit No. 15 of 1953 by the plaintiff having regard to the provisions contained in Order 23, Rule 1, or under the provisions contained in Order 2, Rule 2, clause (3) of the Civil Procedure Code as urged by the learned advocate for the respondents. In respect of other points on which findings have been recorded by the learned Judge, it is conceded that they do not affect or bar the remedy sought for by the plaintiff in the suit and they do not, therefore, require to be considered.

10. The contention in respect of the first point made out by Mr. Nanavaty, the learned advocate for the plaintiff-appellant, is that the plaintiff is one of the persons referred to in Section 91(a) of the Transfer of Property Act — he having pre-existing charge on the property and since he has paid off Rs. 21,500/- in all in full satisfaction of the claim of the defendant No. 1 under his first mortgage-deed Ex. 10 dated 12-2-1946 in respect of the suit property, he acquires the right to subrogate and gets all the rights of the first mortgagee-defendant No. 1 under Section 92, paragraph (1) of the Transfer of Property Act (hereinafter referred to as 'the Act'). According to him, the learned Judge has not taken into account his having a pre-existing charge on the suit property arising out of his claims under the deeds Exs. 11 and 12, and that way his finding that his case was governed by paragraph (3) of Section 92 of the Act was erroneous. This right is said to have been acquired on 12-8-1952 when he paid off the balance of Rs. 8000/- due to defendant No. 1. His alternative contention is that by reason of his having advanced the amount to defendant No. 3 under the deed Ex. 15 dated 12-5-1952, out of which amount he paid off the dues of defendant No. 1, and later on even his having passed on his equity of redemption in his favour under a deed Ex. 16 dated 12-6-1952, and possession of the property delivered to him, it has to be assumed, though no specific recital is there in any of these deeds, that he agreed to his being entitled to claim benefits of the first mortgagee-defendant No. 1 on redeeming the property which he has done on 12-8-1962. He therefore subrogates to the claim under paragraph (3) of Section 92 of the Act and gets the right of defendant No. 1 against the property in possession of defendant No. 2. In other words, either under the first paragraph, or third paragraph of Section 92 of the Act, he becomes entitled to be reimbursed by defendant No. 2 before he can validly become owner thereof by purchasing the same in Court auction. He takes subject to his claim which he is entitled to enforce against that property in his possession. On the other hand, it was urged by Mr. Desai, the learned advocate for defendant No. 2, that it is not enough that by merely having a pre-existing interest or charge on that property and his having paid up the dues of the first mortgagee in full that he is entitled to claim subrogation under paragraph (1) of Section 92 of the Act. He has further to show that not only he must have paid his own money for the protection of his right, but that the payment was not made under any covenant with the mortgagor so as to say that he paid up the amount out of the mortgagor's money. The test, according to him, was as to whose money he paid for redemption of the first mortgage. If it was mortgagor's money, in no case he can claim the right to subrogate under paragraph (1) of Section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act. If it was out of mortgagor's money that he paid under the covenant in the deed Ex. 15, he cannot be said to have redeemed it, and in that event, a specific registered agreement giving such a person a right to subrogate in place of the first mortgagee must be shown to have been passed by the mortgagor-defendant No. 3 in the case. There is no such agreement alleged at any time before and none proved so as to claim that right under paragraph (3) of Section 92 of the Act.

11. In order to consider the rival contentions of the parties, it would be necessary to set out the relevant provisions contained in Sections 91 and 92 of the Act. Section 91 reads thus:—

"91. Besides the mortgagor, any of the following persons may redeem, or institute a suit for redemption of, the mortgaged property, namely:—

(a) any person (other than the mortgagee of the interest sought to be redeemed) who has any interest in, or charge upon, the property mortgaged or in or upon the right to redeem the same;

xx xx xx"

Then comes Section 92 which was inserted by the Amending Act 20 of 1929. The equitable principle which prevailed before, came to be incorporated in Section 92 by the Amending Act 20 of 1929, at the same time repealing the old Section 74 of the Act. Section 92 reads thus:—

"92. Any of the persons referred to in Section 91 (other than the mortgagor) and any co-mortgagor shall, on redeeming property subject to the mortgage, have so far as regards redemption, foreclosure or sale of such property, the same rights as the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems may have against the mortgagor or any other mortgagee.

The right conferred by this section is called the right of subrogation, and a person acquiring the same is said to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems.

A person who has advanced to a mortgagor money with which the mortgage has been redeemed shall be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage has been redeemed, if the mortgagor has by a registered instrument agreed that such persons shall be so subrogated.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to confer a right of subrogation on any person unless the mortgage in respect of which the right is claimed has been redeemed in full."

On a plain perusal of these two provisions, one thing becomes clear that Section 91 recognises also persons other than the mortgagor having a right to redeem or institute a suit for redemption. The right to redeem a property by a mortgagor is specifically provided in Sec. 60 of the Act. The right of subrogation in Section 92 is, however, given to other persons referred to in Section 91, and that excludes the mortgagor. That is very significant and a vital distinction in regard to a right of redemption when a claim by principle of subrogation is made, for such a right is denied and cannot be had to the mortgagor to set at naught his own deeds passed and defeat their claims of priority. In other words, it is clear that the first paragraph of Section 92 allows persons referred to in Section 91 and co-mortgagors to get that right of subrogation, and in no case to a mortgagor. The words in brackets 'other than a mortgagor' therefore restrict such a right or benefit to such persons or co-mortgagors. The expression in that paragraph is that 'he redeems', and not as 'has been redeemed' in paragraph (3) of Section 92 of the Act. That emphasizes the fact that 'that person' must redeem and that person shall be such a person referred to in the section but he shall be other than a mortgagor. In paragraph (3) also redemption is required to be by a person other than a mortgagor and he may be any person having advanced money to the mortgagor and not necessarily a person falling under Section 91 of the Act and that way coming under paragraph (1) of Section 92 of the Act. That is so provided as he gets the right by virtue of a clear agreement under a registered instrument by the mortgagor. Now it is easy to think that when a mortgagor is excluded from that section, any person on his account or on his behalf or who acts in terms of agreement with him would also be excluded. The intention of the Legislature could not be otherwise. If a mortgagor is excluded, all such persons getting right through him or acting on his account either as an agent or representative, or under any such covenant remain also excluded. Otherwise the mortgagor can creep in by such a method and defeat the rights of mortgagees created by him which in law he cannot be allowed to do unless the case is covered by the clear position arising out of Section 92.

12. Now, the claim of the plaintiff-appellant in the first instance is that he falls under paragraph (1) of Section 92 of the Act by reason of his being one of those persons referred to in Section 91(a) and since he has redeemed in full the first mortgage in respect of the suit property by paying off the dues of defendant No. 1, he becomes entitled to the same right as defendant No. 1 had in respect of that property. According to Mr. Nanavati, all that he is required to show is that he had a pre-existing interest or charge on the property and that way falls under Section 91(a) of the Act, and secondly that he has paid off the dues of the first mortgagee-defendant No. 1 and has thus redeemed the same in full, and not as to how and whose money was paid. On the other hand Mr. Desai for the respondent No. 2 urged that he must further show that he redeemed it not only for his own benefit or protection of his interest, but that the money paid by him for redemption was not that of the mortgagor. In other words, according to him, the payment for the purpose of redeeming the property must be purely on his account and that it cannot be on account of the mortgagor or by way of paying off the amount under a covenant entered into between them from the mortgagor's money in his hands.

13. Before we turn to the authorities cited at the Bar, it may be stated that for the purpose of showing that he had pre-existing interest or charge, reliance was placed by Mr. Nanavaty on his claim arising under the two mortgage-deeds Exs. 11 and 12 in the case. Both the deeds are of the same date as of 29-7-'48. The properties specifically mortgaged therein are other than the suit property. The claim is on the basis of a certain recital in both the deeds whereby the defendant No. 3 had created a general charge over his properties in Junagadh, other than those given in mortgage thereunder for the amounts remaining due under those deeds. In a suit filed by the defendant No. 2 for recovering his mortgage dues under his mortgage, this plaintiff had put up his claims arising under Exs. 11 and 12 dated 29-7-1948, and as would appear from the judgment Ex. 13 dated 13-12-1951 recorded in that suit No. 152 of 1949 a charge in respect of Rs. 7000/- arising only under the deed Ex. 12 was recognized. Since that charge was prior to that of defendant No. 2, the amount was required to be paid before he can realise his amount by sale of the suit property. So far as the claim of Rs. 9000/- under the other deed Ex. 11 is concerned, it appears clear from that judgment that it was negatived by the Court. Obviously therefore, it would not be open to the plaintiff to re-agitate any such claim of Rs. 9000/- against defendant No. 2, who along with defendant No. 3, were parties to that suit. It can, therefore, be taken that before the plaintiff can be said to have redeemed the suit property he had a pre-existing interest or charge in that property by reason of the judgment and decree passed in Civil Suit No. 152 of 1949 for a sum of Rs. 7000/- and interest thereon. Thus, on that basis, he has to be taken as a person falling under Section 91(a) of the Act, and that way fulfilling the first condition contemplated in the first paragraph of Section 92 of the Act.

14. The other condition required to be fulfilled relates to his having redeemed that property which was subject to the mortgage of defendant No. 1 and that redemption must have been in full. Now it appears that in the first instance the defendant No. 1 did resist the claim of the plaintiff in that regard by saying that he was not paid in full and that the property was not redeemed by him with the result that he had no right to claim any subrogation under paragraph (1) of Section 92 of the Act. The case of the plaintiff was that he had paid in full and that way he can be said to have redeemed the property in full. It is now no longer in dispute that Rs. 13,500/- were paid by him to defendant No. 1 on 9-6-1950 and Rs. 8000/- on 11-8-1952. During the course of the hearing of the suit, however, the defendant No. 1 gave up that challenge by saying that he has been paid in full and that no other amount has been due from him under his mortgage. In those circumstances, as found by the trial Court, he can be taken to have paid up the amount due to defendant No. 1 in full on 11-8-1952. It is the payment in full of the mortgagee's dues that matters and when that is made, he can be said to have redeemed his mortgage. An attempt was made by Mr. Desai to urge that the plaintiff has not redeemed the property in full inasmuch as it is not shown that the other property called "Jayendra Theatre" comprised in the mortgage deed Ex. 10 is redeemed by paying off the dues of the defendant No. 1 in that regard. That right is one and indivisible and he cannot therefore claim to have satisfied that condition required under Section 92 of the Act. Now apart from any such contention not having been raised in the written statement or his having sought for an issue in the matter, even if such a point is allowed to be raised being one of law arising on the material that stands on record, it cannot be said that the plaintiff who has purchased the mortgagor's right under the deed Ex. 16 is not entitled to redeem a part of it, and more so, when a specific agreement has been provided in that regard. Now the right to redeem any of the two properties by the mortgagor remained with the defendant No. 3 by an express term in the mortgage-deed Ex. 10. Thereby he was given a right to redeem this particular suit property by payment of Rs. 20,000/- to defendant No. 1. It was, therefore, not necessary for him to also redeem the other property before he can be said to have redeemed in full the property in question. The second condition can, therefore, be said to have been fulfilled by him.

15. The dispute, therefore, centres round the third condition referred to above while setting out the contentions of the learned advocates for the parties. While Mr. Nanavati says that no such condition is further required to be established by the plaintiff and that in fact it should be presumed that he paid off to redeem the property for himself and for protection of his own interest. The question thus is whether any such condition is required to be gone into viz. as to whose money was paid by the plaintiff viz. of himself or that of the mortgagor before claiming benefit under para (1) of Section 92 of the Act. We have already pointed out hereabove, on an analysis of Section 92 that the redemption of the property of the mortgagee claiming a right of subrogation under the first paragraph of Section 92 must not be on behalf of or on account of the mortgagor as the mortgagor and that way his agent or a representative has been excluded from any such persons referred to therein. If, therefore, the plaintiff pays off the money for redemption of any mortgagee's right, he must do so, and redeem it with his own money and not out of the money retained by him under an agreement with the mortgagor for paying off the same i.e., out of the consideration of the amount to be paid to him. Thus apart from authority, it appears clear that the Court has to be satisfied on the evidence on record that he did not pay for the mortgagor in redeeming the property or out of his money to claim a right of subrogation under paragraph (1) of Sec. 92 of the Act.

16. Mr. Nanavaty for the appellant, however, urged that while paragraph (1) of Section 92 of the Act relates to the character of a person who redeems, paragraph (3) relates to the character of money. While considering the applicability of paragraph (1) of Section 92, according to him, once he is a person referred to in Section 91 i.e., when the character of a person entitled to redeem is not in question, the question as to how and from where the money was paid becomes irrelevant. As to how and wherefrom the amount for redeeming the property came would be a matter only falling under paragraph (3) of Section 92 of the Act. In other words, according to him, once it is shown that he had a pre-existing interest or charge on the property and had redeemed the property in full, he would fall under Section 92 paragraph (1) of the Act. Both the paragraphs, he urged, are mutually exclusive. He took support for that proposition by a reference to the notes on Section 92 from Mulla's Transfer of Property Act, Fifth Edition, at page 595, which flow from various decisions on the point. They read thus:—

"The right of authority clearly seems to be in favour of the view that the two paragraphs are mutually exclusive and that the first paragraph deals with persons who having a pre-existing interest in the property redeems a prior mortgage to protect his own interest, and that a person who acquires interest only by advancing money with which the prior mortgage is satisfied does not come within the first paragraph even though he secures his advance by a mortgage or becomes a purchaser. Such a person comes within the third paragraph and can only claim subrogation if there be an agreement between him and the mortgagor in writing registered. The right of subrogation is denied to such a person on a variety of grounds, e.g., that such a person when he pays over the retained money either himself or through the mortgagor does not pay his own money and cannot be said to redeem the prior mortgage himself or that he only performs his own obligation under his covenant, and covenant includes subrogation, or that he pays the mortgagor's money as his agent and the redemption is by the mortgagor. But the real reason seems to be that such a person having no pre-existing interest does not come within the first paragraph and that although he is a person who comes within the third paragraph he cannot claim subrogation because there is no registered agreement giving him that right as required by that section. Prior to the amendment such a person could only claim not legal but only conventional subrogation, i.e., subrogation based on agreement express or implied and after the amendment he cannot claim legal subrogation as laid down in the first paragraph but can only claim conventional subrogation as modified by the third paragraph if he satisfies the requirements of that paragraph. The third paragraph has by requiring the agreement to be in writing registered has restricted the application of the doctrine of equitable or conventional subrogation."

17. Mr. Desai for the respondents has referred to a decision in which the distinction has been brought out by a reference to the decisions of the Madras and Allahabad High Courts by Subba Rao, J. in AIR 1950 Mad. 186, Dadi Appala Naidu v. Kolluru Shivalingam. While considering the effect of the previous decisions of the Madras High Court, he has first referred to the observations of Varadachariar, J. in Lakshmiammal v. Sankaranarayana Menon, AIR 1936 Mad. 171 (F.B.) in the following passage:

"There is a well established distinction between cases in which a person who has a pre-existing interest in property pays off a prior charge on that property for the protection of his own interest and cases in which a person acquires an interest in property only by reason of his advancing money to pay off an existing mortgage debt. It seems to me that clause (1), S. 92 must be held to relate to the first type of cases above referred to and clause 3 to the second type." Venkataramana Rao, J. states the law to the same effect but in different terms. He says:

"The first clause enunciates no new principle (Vide S. 74, Transfer of Property Act, since repealed). It applies to all persons who have an interest in the equity of redemption and are under no personal obligation to discharge prior incumbrances. Clause 3 has been enacted to confer a benefit on persons who advance money to discharge an incumbrance only 'if the mortgagee has by a registered instrument agreed that such persons shall be subrogated'. The clause is intended to apply to all persons who acquire an interest in the mortgaged property by advancing moneys to discharge prior incumbrances and there is no warrant for restricting the scope of that clause to persons other than purchasers or mortgagees."

Then as observed in that case, in view of certain observations in Srinivasulu v. Damodaraswami Naidu, AIR 1938 Mad. 779, some doubt on the correctness of those observations was thrown. They came to be, therefore, considered by Venkataramana Rao, J. in greater detail in his judgment reported in Subbarayudu v. Lakshminarasamma, AIR 1939 Mad. 949. After exhaustively considering the case-law on the subject, he adhered to the view expressed by him in the Full Bench judgment in AIR 1936 Mad. 171 (F.B.). The Madras view came to be followed in Hira Singh v. Jai Singh, AIR 1937 All. 588 (FB). Before that in Tota Ram v. Ram Lal, ILR 54 All. 987 = (AIR 1932 All. 489), the view taken was that puisne mortgagee was entitled to subrogation viz. by his coming under the persons referred to in Section 91. This is precisely what Mr. Nanavati wants us to go by. But this decision was disapproved by the Bench of five Judges of the same Court by holding that a puisne mortgagee if he was using mortgagor's money and not his own, he acquires no right by himself by his payment. That decision is contained in AIR 1937 All. 588 (FB). Sulaiman, C. J. after accepting the law as enunciated in the Madras decisions has set out the broad propositions. They are as under—:

"Now it is well known that subrogation can arise in two ways, (1) by agreement and (2) by operation of law. Paragraph 1 deals with subrogation arising by operation of law and paragraph 3 deals with subrogation by agreement. It is necessary that there should be an agreement for subrogation, that the agreement should be in writing and that it should be a registered instrument. It would be impossible to hold that these two paragraphs overlap each other, for, paragraph 3 requires certain stringent conditions which are not found in paragraph 1. They must therefore be mutually exclusive. The basic difference underlying these two paragraphs consists in this that paragraph 1 refers to a person redeeming property and the paragraph 3 to a person who advances money with which a mortgage is redeemed." Then come the material observations and they are:—

"Where a person himself redeems a mortgage, that is to say, pays the mortgage money out of his own pocket and not merely discharges a contractual liability to make the payment, he is entitled to the rights of subrogation under paragraph 1 if he is one of the persons enumerated in S. 91. But where the person does not himself redeem the mortgage, that is to say, does not himself pay the money out of his own pocket in excess of his contractual liability but advances money to a mortgagor and the money is utilised for payment of a prior mortgage, whether the money is actually paid through the hands of the mortgagor or is paid through the hands of the mortgagee, the latter acquires the right of subrogation only if the mortgagor has by a registered instrument agreed that he shall be so subrogated He is really not himself redeeming the mortgage but redeeming it as the agent of the mortgagor."

Similar view has been expressed by the Patna High Court in Bansidhar Dhandania v. Kaloo Mandar, AIR 1938 Pat. 532. The material observations are:—

"The first paragraph of S. 92 would undoubtedly have entitled the appellant as purchaser of the equity of redemption to subrogation if he had redeemed the prior mortgages on his own account and independently of any agreement with the mortgagor who is specifically excluded in this paragraph; but, the appellant paid off the prior mortgagees with moneys that were left with him for the purpose by the vendors-mortgagors."

The same view was also expressed by the Calcutta High Court in Mukaram Marwari v. Muhammad Hossain, AIR 1936 Cal. 42. The observations therein are to the effect that it is well settled on authorities, that, if the debt is the debt of the person who paid, or is a debt which he has covenanted to pay, his payment of it raises no right of subrogation, but is simply a performance of his own obligation or covenant. It would thus appear that apart from these authorities, even Mulla's Commentary does say that the person falling under Section 91 must be redeeming a prior mortgage to protect his own interest and that excludes a case where he does it not for his benefit or interest but for the mortgagor or on his account. That distinction has to be there, for, by express words in Section 92 paragraph (1) the person excluded from getting a right of subrogation is the mortgagor. Thus not only he must be a person falling under Section 91(a) having pre-existing interest or charge, he must not be redeeming the property as a nominee or agent of the mortgagor as the mortgagor cannot have a right to subrogate. The decisions referred to by different High Courts amply support that proposition. Reverting back to the decision in AIR 1950 Mad. 186 (supra), a similar argument was advanced, as done by Mr. Nanavati before this Court, and that was negatived. The argument advanced was that when defendants Nos. 2 and 3 purchased the property under Ex. D-11 on 7th October 1933, they had a pre-existing interest in the property being the puisne mortgagees under Ex. D-2 dated 29th June 1930, and therefore they would be entitled to the right of subrogation under the first paragraph of Section 92. Learned counsel said that the existence of an interest in the property on the date of the sale-deed was sufficient and it did not matter whether a prior mortgage was discharged not to protect his interest but only pursuant to an agreement entered into with the vendor. If this argument was accepted, as observed by Subba Rao, J., it would be destructive of the principles on which he purported to rely upon. Then he has observed as under:—

"The distinction between legal subrogation and conventional subrogation is that in the case of the former the person having the pre-existing interest discharges the prior mortgage to protect his interest and by meeting an obligation in excess of his liability; whereas in the latter case he would be discharging only an obligation he had undertaken under a specific agreement."

This view has been also accepted by the High Court of Bombay in Vithaldas Bhagvandas Darbar v. Tukaram Vithoba Khatri, 43 Bom. L. R. 225=(AIR 1941 Bom. 153). The pertinent observations are that "inasmuch as part of the consideration for sale of land 5/2 was retained by the plaintiff for the discharge of incumbrances on the land, that money should be regarded as the money of R and there the plaintiff was not entitled to subrogation under the first part of the section." That was followed in another case of Narayan Divakarappa Hubli v. Parameshvarappa Bhimappa Yarcad, 44 Bom. L. R. 20=(AIR 1942 Bom. 98), wherein it was observed that as the plaintiff used the mortgagor's money when he paid off the first mortgage, he got no right, by his payment, to subrogate to the first mortgagee. In other words, the view taken in the earlier decision of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in ILR 54 All. 897=(AIR 1932 All. 489) (FB) was no good law and was not followed by the Allahabad High Court in certain circumstances. In fact a contrary view was taken in AIR 1937 All. 588, by a Bench of five Judges and it was held that if towards the part of the consideration a puisne mortgagee was using the mortgagor's money and not his own, he acquires no right by himself. In view of all these decisions, it can be easily held that a redemption of the mortgaged property must have been made by the plaintiff so as to fall under paragraph (1) of Section 92 of the Act by his own money and not that of the mortgagor. He has to pay out of his own pocket with a view to protect his own interest and not merely by having to discharge the contractual liability to make that payment on behalf of the mortgagor. What matters, therefore, is, with whose money the payment was made and the property redeemed? If it is clearly and purely the money of the plaintiff and that has nothing to do with the mortgagor, he would fall under paragraph (1) of Section 92 of the Act. If that is not so, he can be said to be acting for and as an agent or a representative of the mortgagor. Since the mortgagor is excluded from having any such right of subrogation under Section 92(1), any such redemption made on behalf of and on account of the mortgagor would be tantamount to saying that the mortgagor had himself redeemed it. In the case of Sita Ram v. Sharda Narain Singh, AIR 1950 All. 682, the Full Bench of seven Judges held as under:—

"A vendee from mortgagor who pays off the prior mortgage out of the money left with him by the vendor mortgagor, and is bound to pay it under the terms of the contract, cannot claim to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whom he pays off without a registered instrument expressly creating such rights of subrogation being executed by the mortgagor-vendor."

In paragraph (47) of the judgment which has been delivered by Lal, J. the position that we made clear at the outset by referring to the provisions contained in Section 92 itself is well brought out. The observations are:—

"The respondent is certainly a person enumerated in S. 91. He can claim subrogation provided he is not the mortgagor or his agent. But one finds that the money with which he paid off the prior encumbrance had been left with him by the mortgagor. It is that money which he paid in satisfaction of the mortgage. Nothing was paid by him out of his own funds. In the circumstances I am of the opinion that the view taken by the Full Bench case of 1937 All. L. J. 659=ILR (1937) All. 880=AIR 1937 All. 588 (FB), which says that in a case like the present, the person paying off the mortgage debt is the agent of the mortgagor, is correct. Since the respondent has made the payment as the agent of the mortgagor, he is in a position no better than that of a mortgagor. As such he cannot claim subrogation."

The real position of law, therefore, is that in addition to the two requisite conditions about the plaintiff having a pre-existing interest or charge on the property and about his having redeemed the same in full, he has further to show that he was paying the amount from his own pocket and his own money for the protection of his own interest and not out of the amount retained by him — as of the mortgagor — for that purpose under a covenant so as to be said that he acted and redeemed the property as an agent or a representative of the mortgagor. That is an essential condition to be fulfilled before falling under paragraph (1) of Section 92 of the Act. While therefore the distinction pointed out between the two paragraphs is true, before one can fall under Section 92(1) of the Act, he has to show that he was not redeeming it on account of the mortgagor.

18. A reference was made by Mr. Nanavati to a decision in the case of Champalal v. Y. Nabi Khan, reported in AIR 1960 Mys. 289. In that case, the appellant had purchased the suit property in execution of a money decree subject to prior encumbrances. The respondent had purchased the same property prior to the Court auction from the judgment-debtor and had discharged a prior usufructuary mortgage on the property out of his own funds. The respondent obstructed delivery of possession to the appellant. On those facts it was held that the respondent as the purchaser of the mortgaged property had sufficient interest therein within the meaning of Section 91 (a) and on redemption of the prior mortgage was entitled to subrogation. His case fell within the first part of Section 92. The head-note appears to be rather misleading. If we peruse that judgment, we find that the finding of the Court below was that "the money which has been paid to Adiramaiah, the mortgagee, belonged to the first respondent himself and not to the mortgagor. As such, it cannot be said that first respondent is the representative of the mortgagor". In other words, it was found that the money with which the property was redeemed was of that person himself and in no way he was the representative of the mortgagor. It is that which is said to be the essential condition before one can claim to get any right of subrogation under para (1) of Section 92 of the Act.

20. It was urged by Mr. Nanavati that redemption of the mortgage property by paying off the dues of defendant No. 1 must be presumed to have been made for the protection of his right or interest in that property and there has been no positive material on record to negative or rebut the same. He invited a reference to a decision in the case of Braham Prakash v. Manbir Singh, AIR 1963 SC 1607, where it was observed that the ordinary rule is that "a man having a right to act in either of two ways, shall be assumed to have acted according to his interest". In other words, it was said that his paying off the dues of the defendant No. 1 can well be taken to have been for the protection of his interest which already existed under the general charge created as per the deed Ex. 12, which later on merged in the decree passed in Suit No.

152 of 1949. Normally speaking, that would no doubt be so. But any such presumption is always rebuttable. In the present case apart from the fact that there is nothing to show about his having paid defendant No. 1 for the protection of any such pre-existing interest, his own deed Ex. 15 dated 13-5-1952 read with the agreement of sale Ex. 14 shows otherwise viz. by saying that he shall pay defendant No. 1 out of the consideration amount which otherwise he would have received. Instead, the plaintiff retained that amount and paid off the dues of defendant No. 1. It was thus the mortgagor's money which he paid, and it does not matter through whose hands the money was paid. He thus acted for and on behalf of the mortgagor. The person who thus redeemed the property by paying off defendant No. 1's dues under his first mortgage was no other than the mortgagor. His case, therefore, would not fall under paragraph (1) of Section 92 of the Act — any such mortgagor is excluded from persons getting a right of subrogation thereunder. His case would fall under paragraph (3) of Section 92 — as person having advanced money to the mortgagor for paying off the dues of the first mortgagee-defendant No. 1 and when that is so, the necessary requirements contemplated in that paragraph have to be fulfilled viz. of having obtained a writing duly registered from defendant No. 3 for getting any such right of subrogation in place of defendant No. 1 on his redeeming the same.

24. The contention made out by Mr. Desai, the learned advocate for the defendant No. 2, was that this very plaintiff had filed a Civil Suit No. 15 of 1953 in the Court of the Civil Judge (J.D.) at Junagadh, wherein it was prayed that the property in suit was not liable to sale in pursuance of a decree passed in favour of defendant No. 2 on the allegations that the property was purchased by him and that he was in possession thereof by virtue of his ownership in pursuance of an agreement dated 6-10-1948. This suit was filed against defendant No. 2 and defendant No. 3 of the present suit. The suit was required to be filed as his application given in Darkhast No. 270 of 1952 filed by defendant No. 2 for sale of the suit property had come to be dismissed by the Court on 7-10-1952. The suit was then filed on 28-1-53. In the meantime, it appears that the suit property was sold in a Court auction and it came to be purchased by defendant No. 2. That led the plaintiff to withdraw the suit — it being, in his view infructuous — by giving an application Ex. 81 on 29-1-54 wherein he stated that the right, title and interest of the suit property has been sold away and that, therefore, he does not think it proper to prosecute his suit. He has then stated that he may be permitted to withdraw his suit without prejudice to his lawful rights and remedies in the suit. The Court permitted him to withdraw the suit directing him to pay the costs of defendant No. 2. It was urged by Mr. Desai that this was a withdrawal pure and simple and the order passed thereon did not give him any permission to file a fresh suit on the same cause of action or in respect of the same subject-matter in the suit. Such a suit, according to him, will be hit by the provisions contained in Order 23, Rule 1(3) of the Civil Procedure Code. Rule 1 of Order 23 provides as under:—

"1. (1) At any time after the institution of a suit the plaintiff may, as against all or any of the defendants, withdraw his suit or abandon part of his claim.

(2) Where the Court is satisfied—

(a) that a suit must fall by reason of some formal defect, or

(b) that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the subject-matter of a suit or part of a claim, it may, on such terms as it thinks fit, grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from such suit or abandon such part of a claim with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of such suit or such part of a claim.

(3) Where the plaintiff withdraws from a suit, or abandons part of a claim, without the permission referred to in sub-rule (2), he shall be liable for such costs as the Court may award and shall be precluded from instituting any fresh suit in respect of such subject-matter or such part of the claim.

It was, thus, urged that the plaintiff was precluded from instituting the present suit which, according to him, was in respect of the same subject-matter since he had not obtained any such permission as required under Order 23, Rule 1, clause (2) of the Civil Procedure Code. This contention was resisted by Mr. Nanavati on various grounds. He tried to urge in the first instance that both the application and the order passed thereon must be read together and that when the permission for withdrawal from the suit was granted by the Court, it should be taken or deemed to have been in view of the prayer made in the application itself. In support thereof, he invited a reference to the case of Khudi Rai v. Lalo Rai, AIR 1926 Pat. 259, where it was held as follows:—

"Where an application is made by a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on which an order is passed giving the permission to withdraw from the suit, although nothing tioners were not well advised in taking up such extreme positions." Their Lordships had something to say about reservation for sportsmen and other classes of citizens, but as this point does not arise for decision in this case, we would refrain from dealing with it.

12. The aforesaid judgment was noticed in a decision of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in AIR 1968 Andh. Pra. 165 and the Mysore decision was cited with approval. The same view has been taken by Jaswant Singh J. in Writ Petns. 99 and 120 of '68—(AIR 1969 J. & K. 136), Kushma Joshi v. Pro Vice-Chancellor, J. & K. University, wherein the learned Judge observed as under:—

"It would thus be clear that besides the reservations which are specifically provided for in Arts. 15(3) and (4) and 16(4) of the Constitution of India reservations on the basis of reasonable classification under Art. 14 of the Constitution can be made. I am fortified in this view by a direct authority of the Mysore High Court in AIR 1966 Mys. 40 where a Division Bench of the Court upheld the reservations of seats in the Medical Colleges under the management of the Government for the children or wards of the men in armed services, and ex-servicemen including those who were in the armed services during the second World War."

13. We find ourselves in complete agreement with these observations.

14. No decision taking a contrary view has been cited by the Counsel for the petitioners.

15. Our attention was also drawn to a decision of the Patna High Court in AIR 1968 Pat. 3 (FB) where reservation made for employees of the University was struck down. This decision, however, is clearly distinguishable and we are not in a position to equate children of the army personnel with the children of the University employees for the reasons that we have already given.

16. Thus the reservation made by the Government for the children of the army personnel was valid and they were entitled to a preferential treatment by being selected for admission to the Medical College even though they had secured lesser marks than some of the petitioners. It is, however, not suggested that there has been discrimination inter se between the children of the army personnel.

17. It was next contended that reservation for persons belonging to Ladakh or to the Scheduled Castes was also not proper. This argument, however, is to be stated only to be rejected, because Art. 15(4) specifically authorizes the State to make special provisions for the advancement of socially and educationally backward classes of citizens or members of the Scheduled Castes. In the instant case the Government has indicated the data on the basis of which it reached the conclusion that members belonging to the district of Ladakh and those belonging to the Scheduled Castes were backward classes of citizens. The materials on the basis of which the Notification of the Government was passed have not been challenged before us, nor has it been shown to our satisfaction that persons coming from Ladakh are not backward. In AIR 1968 SC 1012 (P. Rajendran v. State of Madras) reservation on the ground that certain candidates belonged to a particular district which was backward was upheld, provided the reservation was not made purely on the basis of the place of birth. In this connection their Lordships observed as follows:—

"Even though there may be some substance in the charge that all this complicated and confusing method has been provided in order to get over the prohibition in Art. 15(1) by a camouflage we cannot say that there is a clear violation of Art. 15(1) for the district which the candidate may claim does not depend upon the place of his birth. We cannot therefore, strike down R. 8 on the ground that it discriminates on the basis of the place of birth of the candidate concerned."

18. In this case, no doubt, their Lordships did not approve of the allocation or distribution of seats districtwise, but that has not been done in the present case. Ladakh happens to be only one of the districts of the State and the citizens belonging to this area have been declared by the Government to be socially and educationally backward so as to come within the protection given by Art. 15(4) of the Constitution of India. Thus the reservation made by the Government for candidates from the Ladakh district and members of the Scheduled Castes is perfectly valid and cannot be struck down as being violative of Arts. 14, 15 or 29 of the Constitution of India.

19. Barring the cases of persons for whom reservation has been made, it is conceded that there has been no discrimination between the candidates who have been selected for admission to the Medical College and the petitioners. In view of our clear finding that reservation made for various classes of citizens was good and valid, there does not seem to be any good ground for our interference with the admission of the respondent candidates to the Medical College at Srinagar.

20. It was faintly suggested by the counsel for some of the petitioners that even though they had fetched higher marks they were not even interviewed and were selected to Medical Colleges situate outside the State instead of being given a chance in the Medical College of the State. The case of Amina Akhtar was cited as glaring instance of such an arbitrary selection. We have already pointed out that regarding candidates who have been selected to Colleges outside the State, no relief can be given by us because they having been admitted by colleges which fall beyond the territorial jurisdiction of this court, their admission cannot be touched by any order passed by us. Unlike Art. 226 of the Constitution of India, S. 103 of the State Constitution is couched in the same language as that of the unamended provisions of Art. 226 which had not given extra-territorial jurisdiction to the High Courts. For these reasons we are unable to interfere with the selections made by the Government of candidates to Colleges outside the State. Lastly when it seems to us that the data laid down by the Government by setting up the Selection Committee consisting of responsible persons and the guidelines indicated by the Government for selection to the Medical College contains the quality of objectivity, the selection of the respondent candidates to the Medical College cannot be assailed on the ground that the selection was not objective. In fact we are satisfied that the selection of the respondent candidates was made in accordance with the tests laid down by us in AIR 1967 J. & K. 106 (Supra).

21. For the reasons given above, the writ petitions fail and are dismissed, but in the circumstances without any order as to costs.

22. ANANT SINGH, J.:— I fully agree with Hon'ble the Chief Justice.

23. I may only add that, in future, selection of the candidates for admission into the Colleges outside the State, should also be made on merits inter se only among those candidates who opt for outside the State so as to provide a safeguard against any hostile discrimination between such candidates.

24. As for the reservation for the children or wards of service or ex-servicemen of the Defence Personnel, I wholly associate myself with all the reasons of Hon'ble the Chief Justice. These men fully deserve as a class a special treatment in the matter of admission of their children, and wards into educational institution, and I would add, similar institutions, regard being had to the difficult conditions of their services. They are all doing yeoman's National service, always at the personal risk of their lives, and any one who grudge them this small concession is only betraying his selfish end, and unpatriotic feelings. Any favour shown to these people will always be small. During the British days, the sons and blood relations of Army men were given special preference even in the matter of appointments to public service.

The concession extended to their children by making the reservations is fully protected under the Constitution as has been elaborately dealt with, if I may say so with respect by Ali, C. J.

Petitions dismissed.

Bakshi Rughnath, Appellant v. Custodian General and others, Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 7 of 1966, D/- 4-6-1969 against order of S. M. Fazl Ali, J., D/- 29-8-1966.

(A) J. & K. State Evacuees' (Administration of Property) Act (6 of 2006), S. 30(5) — Order of Custodian General — Review of — Successor in office can review — (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 47, R. 1).

The words "his own order" in S. 30(5) do not refer to a particular person who is holding the office but to a particular office which the officer concerned is holding. In other words, what this section contemplates is that an order passed by the Custodian can be reviewed only by the Custodian and not by any other authority. The word "own" does not refer to a particular person who is holding the office for the time being and is wide enough to include the successor of the officer concerned. AIR 1966 J. & K. 12 & AIR 1952 Pepsu 82 & AIR 1963 Bom. 110, Rel. on.

(B) J. & K. State Evacuees' (Administration of Property) Act (6 of 2006), S. 30 and R. 27(6) of the Rules under the Act — Review application — Limitation — Application has to be filed within 30 days.

The period of limitation for a review of an order by the Custodian General on the basis of Rule 27 (6) of the Rules under the Act is 30 days from the impugned order as the time within which ordinarily an application for review should be presented before the Custodian General.

(C) J. & K. State Evacuees' (Administration of Property) Act (6 of 2006), S. 30 — Civil P. C. (1908), O. 47, R. 1 — Power of review — It is analogous with O. 47, R. 1.

The three terms 'appeal, review and revision' have received more or less a definite and precise meaning which on the face of it suggests itself to anybody conversant with the functioning of Courts of Law. In Section 30 the three remedies 'appeal, revision and review', are put in together and the hierarchy of the officers competent to hear appeals from orders of subordinate officers are clearly indicated. Similarly under sub-sec. (4), the Custodian General, Custodian, Addl. Custodian etc., have been given the power to revise orders passed by their subordinates and under sub-section (5) the same officers have been given powers to review their orders which shows that this word 'review' has been used more or less in a well recognized legal sense and is lumped together in the same section which pertains to appeal and revision. Therefore, the power to review should be analogous to those given by the Code of Civil Procedure. Case law discussed. (Para 8)

BHAT, J. (with Mian Jalal-ud-Din, J.)

— This is a Letters Patent appeal against the judgment of Justice Ali (as his Lordship then was) dated 29-8-1966 whereby he has dismissed the writ petition of the present appellant. When this appeal was argued before two of us, we thought it desirable that the appeal should be heard by Full Bench of the court because the points raised in this appeal may be of common recurrence and an authoritative pronouncement was necessary from this Court on points raised.

2. We need not discuss the facts of this case because in the first place that is unnecessary and secondly because this appeal can be disposed of only on some points of law. But however to appreciate the points of law raised, some relevant facts may be mentioned.

3. 9 kanals and 5 marlas of land in village Sai Ralewalan belonged to one Bakshi Yugraj. He executed an agreement to sell this land on 25-11-1995 in favour of one Siraj-ud-din. This Bakshi Yograj brought a suit for possession of this land in the Court of Munsiff Jammu on 5-1-2003 and an ex parte decree was passed therein on 25-10-2004. This property was declared to be evacuee property by the Custodian. Yograj died some time before 2008 and his son Rughnath, the present appellant, took possession of this land. This land was however allotted by the Custodian to the Respondents Bir Singh and Man Singh in the year 1951. An application under Section 8 of the Evacuee Administration of Property Act (hereinafter referred in this judgment as 'the Act') filed by the appellant Bakshi Rughnath was rejected by the Custodian on 20-11-1960. A revision was filed to the Custodian General who set aside the order of the Custodian by his order dated 15-4-1961. An application for review was presented by the Respondents 2 and 3 before the successor of the previous Custodian General on 18-4-1962 which was accepted by the present Custodian General by his order dated 22-4-1965. It may be mentioned that against the order of the Custodian General dated 15-4-1961 a writ petition was presented in this Court, which was dismissed as not pressed on 20-6-1962. Against the last order of the Custodian General dated 22-4-1965 a writ petition was presented in the High Court which was heard by the learned Hon'ble Chief Justice (Ali J.) who dismissed the writ petition by his order under appeal.

4. As we said earlier we need not go into the factual aspects of this case. May be the present Custodian General by means of his order 22-4-1965 may have done substantial justice to the parties, as remarked by the learned Single Judge but the important point for determination is what was the nature of the proceedings before the learned Custodian General, which were started with the application of the respondents 2 and 3 dated 18-4-1962 and what were the powers of the Custodian General in disposing of that petition. The petition has been described by the respondents 2 and 3 as a review petition. The Custodian General who had decided the revision on 15-4-1961 was no more the Custodian General on 18-4-1962. The present Custodian General states in the body of the judgment that:

"..... I feel that the present application does not fulfil the conditions of a review. It can at best be treated as a miscellaneous application seeking relief from a gross injustice done to the applicants

After recording this finding towards the end of his judgment, he says that:—

"..... I accept the contention raised in the application which I treat as miscellaneous application in the shape of a review. Therefore the order issued by my learned predecessor-in-office on 16-4-1961 is superseded by this order of today"

From this it is quite clear that the learned Custodian General treated this application of 18-4-1962, which was in fact an application for review, as a miscellaneous review application. In the first place we have not been able to understand the significance of the word 'miscellaneous'. Either it can be a review application pure and simple or a miscellaneous application for which we do not find any provision in the Act. The Act lays down specifically the various applications that can be made under the Act and we need not go into the various categories of applications mentioned in the Act; but apart from certain specific classes of applications, there is no provision for a miscellaneous application. So the only name that could be given to the application of the respondents 2 and 3 dated 18-4-1962 would be a review application and it has been substantially treated as such by the learned Custodian General. The short question, therefore, for determination in this appeal, which is of some importance and may crop up in many other cases, is what are the powers of the Custodian General to review an order, more so passed by some other gentleman holding the same office. The relevant section of the Act is Section 30 which pertains to appeal, revision and review. It lays down that an appeal from an order of the Deputy or an Assistant Custodian shall lie to the Custodian; from that of the Custodian, an Addl. Custodian or an Authorised Deputy Custodian to the Custodian General; and from the order of the Custodian General to the High Court if there is judgment of variance. Under sub-sec. (4) the Custodian General, Addl. Custodian, or Authorised Dy. Custodian has been given power of revising any orders passed by an officer subordinate to him. Sub-section (5) of this Section 30 is the relevant section which comes for consideration in this appeal and it reads like this:—

"The Custodian General, Custodian, Addl. Custodian, or Authorised Deputy Custodian, but not a Dy. or an Assistant Custodian may, after giving notice to the parties concerned, review his own order."

Sub-section (6) further lays down that:

"Subject to the foregoing provisions of this section, any order made by the Custodian General, Custodian, Addl. Custodian, Authorised Dy. Custodian, Dy. Custodian or Assistant Custodian shall be final and shall not be called in question in any court by way of appeal or revision or in any original suit, application or execution proceedings".

The argument of the learned Counsel for the Custodian General and the respondents 2 and 3 is that the Custodian General has unlimited powers of review, he is not bound by any of the limitations as prescribed under Order 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In other words the argument of the learned counsel for the respondents is that the Custodian General and other officers mentioned in sub-section (5) of Section 30 of the Act can review an order passed by himself or by his predecessor. He is not fettered by any limitations in the exercise of this power. There is no time limit within which he should be moved, he can be moved to exercise his powers after any lapse of time. The learned counsel for the appellant on the other hand argues that the Custodian General or the Officers mentioned in sub-section (5) can only review an order passed by him personally and not by his predecessors. Secondly a review is warranted only on such conditions as are given in Order 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and thirdly the period of limitation prescribed for review petitions under the Limitation Act should govern such applications.

5. We shall consider these points separately. First we take up the point whether it is necessary for the Custodian General exercising the powers of review to be the same gentleman who passed the order sought to be reviewed or he can review an order passed by his predecessor also. This point is not very difficult and is governed by the authority of this Court namely 1965 Kash. L. J. 258=(AIR 1966 J & K 12). In that authority his Lordship Justice Ali (as he then was) who wrote the Judgment of the Division Bench has held that:—

"The words 'his own order' do not refer to a particular person who is holding the office but to a particular office which the officer concerned is holding. In other words, what this section contemplates is that an order passed by the Custodian can be reviewed only by the Custodian and not by any other authority. The word 'own' does not refer to a particular person who is holding the office for the time being and is wide enough to include the successor of the officer concerned."

The same view has been taken in AIR 1952 Pepsu 82 and AIR 1963 Bom. 110. In the last authority it was held that:

"..... the word 'own' occurring in the expression 'review his own order' does not mean that the power to review is available only to the officer who made the order and not to his successor. The word 'own' has been necessary since the power is given to several officers of varying authority to review the order. In the absence of the word 'own' the Dy. Custodian might be called upon to review the order of a Custodian and an Addl. Custodian may be called upon to review the order either of a Dy. Custodian or a Custodian a thing which was likely to introduce chaos in the administration of law, in order to confine each one within his own authority, the word 'own' has been used."

Therefore, we do not find any force in the argument of the learned counsel for the appellant that the present Custodian General could not review the order passed by his predecessor.

6. Next we turn to the scope and limits of the authority of review by the officers mentioned in sub-section (5) of Section 30 of the Act. It is true that this sub-section does not mention any circumstances under which a review application can be entertained or upon what grounds a review petition lies. There is not consensus of authority on this point. We have the following authorities: AIR 1954 Pat. 43, AIR 1960 J & K 125 and AIR 1967 J & K 8 on the one hand and AIR 1963 Bom. 110 and AIR 1952 Pepsu 82 on the other hand. The two sets of authorities take apparently contrary views. Before we discuss these authorities, a reference may be made to a Supreme Court authority referred to by the learned counsel for the respondents namely AIR 1953 SC 298. In that authority it was laid down that Section 141 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to the Custodian as he is not a Court; though the proceedings held by him are of a quasi-judicial nature. The provisions relating to substitution were held therefore, not applicable to proceedings before the Custodian. This decision does not however, throw any light on the matter in dispute in this case; because in that case the point for consideration was only whether substitution should be ordered after the death of some party in proceedings before the Evacuee authorities.

7. A further argument of the learned counsel for the Custodian General is that the Code of Civil Procedure has been specifically applied in a limited manner to proceedings before the Evacuee authorities. He has referred to Section 3 of the Act, which lays that:—

"The provisions of this Act and of the rules and orders made thereunder shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any other law for the time being in force or in any instrument having effect by virtue of any such law."

And Section 29 of the Act expressly lays down that the Civil Procedure Code shall apply to the proceedings under the Act in respect of enforcing the attendance of any person and examining him on oath, compelling the discovery and production of documents and in other prescribed matters. The review powers are not prescribed either under the Act or in the rules. This argument also does not clinch the matter because the argument is not that the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure should be applied to the proceedings before the Evacuee authorities. On our part, we also do not propose to lay down that the Act or the rules framed thereunder anywhere suggest that the grounds of review should be the same as mentioned in the Code of Civil Procedure strictly speaking. But our decision stands on entirely different grounds namely the ground relating to interpretation of statutes and sound principles which would govern the administration of justice whether by Courts of civil origin or by the authorities under the Act. It is not disputed that the authorities under the Act hold quasi-judicial powers and have to decide cases after hearing parties, after giving them notice and questions relating to important matters affecting the evacuee property have to be decided by them between different persons appearing before them. Therefore the interpretation to be put on some sections of the Act where no specific provision to the contrary is laid down, should be similar to those applied or acted upon in day to day administration of justice in Courts of civil jurisdiction. In the first place it is a well recognized principle of interpretation that any interpretation which leads to absurdity or which makes the implementation of some enactment difficult or will result in chaos or anomalies or inconveniences should be avoided. Maxwell in the Interpretation of Statutes (8th Edition) on page 202 states:

"Whether the language of a statute, in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction leads to a manifest contradiction of the apparent purpose of the enactment, or to some inconvenience or absurdity, hardship or injustice presumably not intended, a construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the words, and even the structure of the sentence."

To the same effect is AIR 1927 Cal. 415. Another principle of interpretation is that a rational meaning is to be given to the language of a statute. In Emperor v. Somabhai Govindbhai, 178 Ind. Cas. 588 = (AIR 1938 Bom. 484) (FB) Beaumont C. J. observed that:—

"But I protest against the suggestion that a Judge construing an Act of Parliament, is a mere automation whose only duty is to give out what he considers to be the primary meaning of the language used. A Judge must always consider the effect of any construction which he is asked to put on an Act of Parliament, and if he comes to the conclusion that a particular construction leads to a result which he considers irrational or unfair he is entitled and indeed bound, to assume that the Legislature did not intend such a construction to be adopted and to try to find some more rational meaning to which the words are sensible."

If we accept the interpretation put by the learned counsel for the respondents one has to come to the conclusion that the Custodian General or for that matter the other officers and authorities mentioned in sub-section (5) of Section 30 can review any order either of their own or any of their predecessors without any justification and without any fetters as to the limitations or finality of the decisions given by themselves or by their predecessors. In matters where rights of parties are to be adjudicated some sort of finality must be attached to the decisions of the authorities legally competent to decide; otherwise it is not unlikely that two gentlemen exercising the same powers may come to opposite conclusions on the same facts. If individual opinions are allowed to have their sway; so many decisions solemnly arrived at after spending years and years can be set aside at any time by any officer at any time, and thus leave society and the decisions of such tribunals in a chaotic and perilous state. On this principle alone when a matter is decided by one competent authority it should not be allowed to be disturbed unless there is clear law authorising the same; otherwise there will be no finality to any decision or action of any tribunal or authority.

8. Now coming to the matter strictly in question i.e., the power of review, here again it is a well established principle of law that although words are primarily to be construed in their popular sense, terms of art must be taken in their technical or legal sense, rather than be restricted or enlarged according to their popular meaning, unless a contrary intention appears". See Halsbury's Laws of England, (3rd Edition), Volume 36, page 393. Similarly Lord Coleridge in (1885) 15 QBD 403, Barlow v. Teal, at pages 404-405 says that:—

"Whatever may have been the intention of the legislature we can only decide this case on general principles, and one of those general principles is, that where cases have been decided on particular forms of words, in Courts, and Acts of Parliament use those forms of words which have received judicial construction, in the absence of anything in the Acts showing that the legislature did not mean to use the words in the sense attributed to them by the Courts, the presumption is that Parliament did so use them."

In 1893-1 QBD 25, Jay v. Johnstone, the same Lord Chief Justice Coleridge observed at page 28 that:—

"There is a well-known principle of construction sanctioned, if sanction were necessary, by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Greaves v. Tofield (1) that where the legislature uses in an act a legal term which has received judicial interpretation, it must be assumed that the term is used in the sense in which it has been judicially interpreted....."

In Robinson Bros. Ltd. v. Houghton and Chester-le-Street Assessment Committee, 1938-2 All. E. R. 79, at page 87 it is said that:—

".....where Parliament in re-enacting legislation uses language which has been the subject of judicial interpretation, it must be presumed to have used that language in the sense in which it has been judicially interpreted....."

The term 'review' is a term of art and has received judicial recognition. Aiyar's Law Lexicon defines 'review' as "a proceeding which exists by virtue of statute. It is in the nature of new trial of the issue previously tried between the parties. The cause of action being brought into Court again for trial by new petition. The proceedings in some respects resembles a writ of error and also a new trial". In judicial pronouncements these three terms 'appeal, review and revision' have received more or less a definite and precise meaning which on the face of it suggests itself to anybody conversant with the functioning of Courts of Law. In Section 30 the three remedies 'appeal, revision and review', are put in together and the hierarchy of the officers competent to hear appeals from orders of subordinate officers are clearly indicated. Similarly under sub-section (4), the Custodian General, Custodian, Addl. Custodian etc., have been given the power to revise orders passed by their subordinates and under sub-section (5) the same officers have been given powers to review their orders which shows that this word 'review' has been used more or less in a well-recognized legal sense and is lumped together in the same section which pertains to appeal and revision. Therefore, in our opinion the power to review should be analogous to those given by the Code of Civil Procedure.

In this view we are supported by the authorities mentioned earlier namely AIR 1954 Pat. 43, AIR 1960 J & K 125, AIR 1967 J & K 8. In AIR 1954 Pat. 43 a Division Bench of that Court held that:—

"When the legislature has deliberately used a term which has a known legal significance in law, it must be taken that the legislature has attached to that term that known legal significance. The expression 'review' used in S. 26(2), Administration of Evacuee Property Act must be construed not in a grammatical sense but it must be construed to have the same legal meaning as in O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C. In that view the Custodian has no jurisdiction to review the order of his predecessor, in absence of any fresh material or in the absence of any mistake or error apparent on the face of the record."

This was a case under the Administration of Evacuee Property Act. This view has been accepted as correct by our Lord the Chief Justice Mr. Ali in AIR 1967 J. & K. 8 wherein his Lordship says that:—

"The Custodian General has been given power to review his own order under the Act. Although the grounds of such review have not been specified in Sec. 30 on the principle that when a statute uses a term of well-known significance the Legislature must be presumed to have the intention of attaching to that term that known legal significance, the Custodian General is required to review his order only on certain specified grounds as provided for in Order 47, Rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code that is, only when there is an error of fact apparent on the face of the record or where there is a discovery of new and certain matters or the like." His Lordship has referred to AIR 1954 Pat. 43 also. The same view was expressed by Justice Nazir in AIR 1960 J & K 125.

9. Against this view we have to consider only two authorities namely AIR 1952 Pepsu 82. In that case review proceedings were started by the very Custodian who had made the original order. It was held that the review proceedings would not be without jurisdiction if the succeeding Custodian took additional evidence. The other authority AIR 1963 Bom. 110 is a judgment of a single Judge of that court. It has no doubt held that the word 'review' should not be given a restricted meaning either narrower than that contained in the Civil Procedure Code or larger. It has been further held that:—

"..... Larger power of review seem to have been vested in the officers concerned to set the matters right, where injustice was caused to any party....." But the same authority at the same time lays down that:—

"..... this wider meaning of the word 'review' does not mean that merely because a succeeding officer takes a contrary view that he is entitled to set aside that order"

Some reasons have been given why the power of review should be construed liberally in the case of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act; but the authority read as a whole supports the view we have taken namely that under the garb of possessing unlimited powers of review an order passed by his predecessor cannot be set aside by a succeeding authority simply because he has contrary views on the matter. Therefore taking all these authorities and the well-known rules of construction of statutes, the scope and ambit of the Act, the absurdities and hardships and anomalies that would arise by interpreting the word 'review' as giving unlimited powers to an officer, into consideration, we are clearly of the opinion that the grounds on which a review application can be entertained by the Custodian General or any other officer empowered to exercise such powers under the Act, should be analogous to those given to a Civil Court under the provisions of Order 47, Rule 1, C.P.C. In this case the learned Custodian General has himself after discussing the law relevant to review application, come to the conclusion that 'the application before me did not fulfil the conditions of a review'. Therefore, there was no justification for him to have set aside the order passed by his predecessor, notwithstanding the fact that the latter order did substantial justice.

10. The second point for consideration is that of time. In this case the review petition has been presented after one year and three days. The order of the previous Custodian General was dated 15-4-1961 and this review petition was presented on 18-4-1962. Before discussing this point of limitation it is necessary to observe that as the order of the Custodian had been reversed by the previous Custodian General by means of his order dated 15-4-1961, a further appeal lay to this court under the provisions of Section 30(1) (c) of the Act. But no such appeal was preferred. On the other hand a writ petition was presented which also was withdrawn as not pressed.

11. Ordinarily under the Limitation Act a review petition under the Code of Civil Procedure can be presented within 30 days (Articles 160 and 161). Even an application for review of the judgment of the High Court in its original jurisdiction can be preferred within the same period (Article 162) and the maximum period for a review petition under Article 173 is 90 days from the order. In this case a review has been entertained after over a year and no cogent grounds have been mentioned why delay should be condoned nor has any reason been given by the Custodian General in his order under discussion on what grounds he has condoned the delay. Even if we assume that no specific period for bringing in review application under such circumstances is prescribed yet reason and justice demand that the maximum period allowed for review i.e., 90 days should be construed to be the period of limitation within which such review petitions should ordinarily be presented. For preferring a revision under the Civil Procedure Code no limitation is prescribed but it has been held by the Courts in India that a revision application should be presented ordinarily within the same period as is provided for an appeal. This Court also had occasion to consider this point and it has been held in a Division Bench case that a revision petition should be presented within the time limit provided for an appeal.

12. Applying the same principles to a review under the Act, it should have been presented within the same period. As that has not been done, therefore also the order of the Custodian General dated 22-4-1965 is liable to be set aside.

13. The result is that the appeal is accepted and the order of the learned single Judge of this court dated 29-8-1966 and that of the Custodian General dated 22-4-1965 are set aside. There will be no order as to costs.

14. ANANT SINGH, J.:—I fully agree with my learned brother Bhat J. I may only add that the Custodian General, when he himself conceded that the application before him in substance was one for review, and it "did not fulfil the condition of a review", he manifestly acted in excess of his jurisdiction in setting aside the order of his predecessor-in-office, dated 16-4-1961. The scope of the application for review would not be enlarged by merely labelling it as a 'miscellaneous application', as the Custodian General would seem to think, so as to give him the requisite authority to set aside the order. The change in the nomenclature of the application could not enhance its scope. It continued to be an application for review, and before it could be granted, the conditions must have been found to have been existing.

15. It is true that the Evacuee Administration of Property Act, has not prescribed its own terms for a review of any order while making a provision for it in Section 30. But for this reason alone, the well-known legal connotation attached to the term, review, as in Order 47, Rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, has to be given to it for the interpretation of the term used in this Act as well. If any Act or Rule uses any term of legal phraseology without defining it, and if such phraseology has been defined in any other enactment, and has been largely recognized, the same interpretation has to be given to it, when it is not specifically defined otherwise. A wider interpretation must be avoided, where the term is not defined. Brother Bhat J. has referred to the authorities in this regard, and I need not repeat them.

16. I may, however, also add that even if the Custodian General could be conceded to include any other ground, not provided for in Order 47, Rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code for review, he had no other valid ground either. The order of his predecessor-in-office was based on the recognition of a Civil Court decree in favour of the appellant's father. The present Custodian General had no authority to ignore and act against the civil court decree, which had become final, and was binding on him. He could not ignore it in law even by invoking the provision of the Big Landed Estates Abolition Act 2007, as he seems to have been done in supersession of the Civil Court decree in favour of the appellant's father. The provisions of Big Landed Estates Abolition Act have to be enforced against any owner of Big Estates within the scope of this Act, and by the authorities prescribed therein. The Custodian General has acted without jurisdiction in setting aside the order of his predecessor-in-office, and that also against the law of limitation, as has been worked out by brother Bhat J., although, it may be conceded that there was no bar, to his reviewing the order of his predecessor-in-office within the meaning of sub-section (5) of Section 30 of the Evacuee Administration of Property Act, if there had been valid grounds for it.

BY THE COURT

17. After this Bench announced judgment on 30-12-1968 in this case, the learned Additional Advocate General brought to our notice the provisions of Rule 27(6) made under the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, which read as under:—

"An application for review of any order may be made within thirty days of the date of such order and shall be presented either in person or through a legal practitioner or a recognized agent." This rule was not cited at the bar at the time of arguments nor were these rules available in the High Court library so that they could be made use of at the time of writing judgment. This rule provides a limitation of 30 days for a review petition. After this rule was brought to our notice, we ordered that the case would be re-heard on this point. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties.

18. Under this Rule 27(6) of the Rules under the Evacuees' (Administration of Property) Act, 2006, as already indicated a period of limitation for a review petition is 30 days. In our judgment of 30th December, 1968, we had decided this point on general principles as no period of limitation for a review petition was brought to our notice at the time of arguments. Therefore our judgment dated 30th December 1968 stands amended on the point of limitation for review. The application for review before the learned Custodian General was presented after one year and three days. Obviously it was time barred. There was no attempt at getting the delay condoned nor was there any reason given by the learned Custodian General for condoning the delay. Therefore also the order of the Custodian General was bad in the eye of law and had to be set aside.

19. Some sort of a written memorandum called 'submissions' on behalf of the respondents 2 and 3 on the merits of the case have been placed on the file by Mr. Joginder Singh Advocate but he was not present to press these at the time of re-hearing. We have gone through the submissions also but in our opinion they are not relevant for the disposal of this petition. Therefore our order dated 30th December 1968 stands.

20. It is modified only to this extent that instead of holding 90 days as the period of limitation for a review of an order by the Custodian General we hold that on the basis of Rule 27(6) of the Rules under the Act 30 days from the impugned order as the time within which ordinarily an application for review should be presented before the Custodian General.

21. The result is that the appeal is accepted and the order of the learned Single Judge of this Court dated 29-8-1966 and that of the Custodian General dated 22-4-1965 are set aside. There will be no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

AIR 1970 JAMMU & KASHMIR 57
(V 57 C 14)

FULL BENCH

S. M. FAZL ALI, C. J., J. N. BHAT AND ANANT SINGH, JJ.

Lal Chand Pargal and others, Petitioners v. Director NES and others, Respondents.

Writ Petns. Nos. 61, 87, 88, 126 and 127 of 1967, D/- 24-4-1969.

(A) Civil Services — Jammu and Kashmir Civil Services (Classification, Control & Appeal) Rules (1956), Rr. 2(a), 2(b), 2(c), 2(d), 2(h), 2(j), 2(k), 25(2) and 25(3) — Extent, scope and application of Rule 25, sub-rr. (2) and (3) — Principles governing promotion stated — Distinction between ordinary servants and Government servants pointed out.

Per Majority (Bhat J. contra) — Sub-rr. 25(2) and (3) deal with the promotion of Government servants in their own service and has no application when there is a transfer of a member of one service to another. Even if by such transfer the Government servant gets into a higher category it will be really an appointment by transfer rather than a promotion in the service. Promotion conceives appointment from a lower category to a higher category of the same service or an allied service because the words "such service" mentioned in Rule 2(h) clearly denote that service must be the same. The order of the Government classifying various gazetted services dated 19-10-1955 cannot be taken as a guide or a basis for the interpretation of the rules. (Para 8)

Rule 25(2) merely incorporates the general desire of the employer to promote efficiency and integrity in the services so that a real impetus is given to meritorious persons in the matter of promotion. The words used in sub-rule (2) are of a very wide amplitude and cover almost every category of service so that the general rule contained herein is that promotion should be made on the basis of merit and ability alone, seniority to be considered only where merit and ability are approximately equal. Thus this rule contains what is known as the merit cum seniority formula. To begin with, the words, "promotion to a service" includes also promotion to all groups of posts declared by Government to be a service and thus it includes every category of the post borne on the cadre of a service. Such an interpretation is in consonance with the definition of the word "service" as given in Rule 2(k). The word 'class' includes not only promotion from one class to another but also promotion between classes inter se, that is to say, even if there are posts belonging to the same class but carrying different scales of pay and one class is superior to another in the matter of status and emoluments, then promotion even between the same class would be governed by Rule 25(2). (Paras 9, 10)

Sub-rule (3) of Rule 25 would apply only to such cases which are not covered by sub-rule (2) and it is the residuary rule which would apply if a residue is left, otherwise not. It would apply to such cases where there is promotion from one grade to another, though the posts may be of the same nature or character though with slightly different emoluments. Thus if there is promotion from one grade to another, it may be covered by sub-rule (3) and would have to be governed by seniority alone, until and unless promotion is withheld by way of penalty or when some other member is given promotion for extraordinary merit and ability. Writ Petn. No. 175 of 1966, D/- 3-3-1967 (SC) Foll. (Para 11)

Every Government is guided by the sole consideration of improving the efficiency, integrity and stability of the services and in order to promote these qualities in services, it is only necessary that in the matter of promotions merit and ability should be given topmost preference. This should be the first consideration present in the mind of the appointing authority if efficiency is to be brought about in the services. This is the anxiety not only of the Government but of any master regarding the servants which he employs. The relationship between the Government and its servants is similar to that of an ordinary master and servant with the difference that the conditions of service of Government servants are governed by statutory rules or constitutional safeguards contained in the Constitution. Excepting this prominent feature the other incidents are the same. Once a person enters a Government service, he has no right to be appointed to a higher post only on the basis of his seniority if he does not possess any merit. Indeed if promotions are made on the basis of seniority alone then it will be difficult to promote efficiency in the services and there will be no tendency for any person to improve his quality because the Government servant would know that he would be promoted when his turn comes whether he deserves it or not, whether he improves his quality or not. He would get into the higher post merely by virtue of his seniority. Such a method of promotion is not consistent with the notions of a civilized society. (Paras 9, 12)

(B) Civil Services — Jammu & Kashmir Civil Services (Classification, Control & Appeal) Rules (1956), Rr. 8, 25, sub-r. (2) and (3), 30(3) — Reasons for making promotion — Appointing authority is required to give — Subjective satisfaction of appointing authority in the matter of promotion cannot be questioned—(Constitution of India, Art. 226) — AIR 1957 J. & K. 31 & AIR 1957 J. & K. 8 (FB), Partly Dissented from.

The words 'shall be made on the ground of merit and ability' in Rule 25(2) clearly postulate that the order of the appointing authority must show ex facie that the considerations mentioned in the rule were present in the mind of the appointing authority at the time of making promotions and the word 'ground' implies that these considerations should be stated in the order so that anybody reading the order may know that action has been taken under Rule 25(2) of the Rules. The question of promotion depends largely on the subjective satisfaction of the appointing authority and the assessment of the appointing authority regarding the work and the performance of the Government servant cannot be questioned, unless it is shown to be tainted by a mala fide or colourable intention; yet the statutory rules do require that the considerations which had weighed with the appointing authority must find place in the order of promotion and then alone it would be a compliance with the provisions of Rule 25(2). It is not that in every case the appointing authority should write a detailed order dealing with the merits and demerits of the promotion of a Government servant but what is contemplated by sub-rule (2) is a bare statement of the grounds on the basis of which promotion is made. (C) Civil Services — Jammu & Kashmir Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules (1956), Rr. 25(2), 30—Promotion cannot be claimed as a matter of right — Appointing authority is not required to give opportunity of being heard before promotion is refused — (Constitution of India — Natural justice).

A promotion bypassing the senior servant may take place in either of the following two ways:— (i) A junior person may be appointed on the basis of merit and ability superseding the senior man. In such a case the senior man has no right at all because merit prevails over seniority. (ii) A junior man may be promoted to a higher post by superseding a senior man because the senior man though equal in merit to the junior servant is guilty of negligence or other laches as a result of which his promotion is withheld. In a case falling in the latter class, the appointing authority under Rule 30 is bound to hear the Government servant before withholding his promotion. Thus under Rule 25(2) promotion cannot be claimed as of right. The principles of natural justice cannot be applied to matters of promotion which are purely administrative in nature unless the rule itself requires, and do not deal with the right of citizens, and there is no question of giving a reasonable opportunity to the Government servant concerned of being heard before promotion is refused to him unless the appointing authority withholds promotion by way of penalty. Case law discussed. (Paras 24, 29)

The rules regarding promotion provide sufficient guarantee against any arbitrary exercise of power inasmuch as they lay down, that reasons for promotion must be given and secondly where promotion is withheld by way of penalty, a reasonable opportunity to the Government servant concerned of being heard in the matter is also provided for.

(D) Civil Services — Jammu & Kashmir Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules (1956), R. 25(2) & (3) — Grant of promotion on merits — No infringement of Art. 16, Constitution of India — (Constitution of India, Arts. 16 and 226).

In granting promotion to a Government servant in accordance with the conditions prescribed in Rr. 25(2) and 25(3), Art. 16 of the Constitution of India is not infringed in any way. Indeed, if the appointing authority acts contrary to the rules or where its action is mala fide amounting to an arbitrary or colourable exercise of jurisdiction, the aggrieved Government servant can always approach the Court for an appropriate remedy. AIR 1968 SC 81 & AIR 1960 SC 384, Rel. on. (Para 32)

Concept of equality contained in Art. 16 of the Constitution of India cannot be attracted where a promotion of Government servant is made on the basis of merit. Before this Article would apply, it must be established that the Government servants are similarly circumstanced and have been selected for hostile discrimination. Where the rule provides for promotion to be made on the basis of merit and ability and when he is not similarly circumstanced with his junior who is of a superior merit, then in the event of the junior being promoted, the senior cannot take shelter under the infraction of Art. 16 of the Constitution of India. AIR 1962 SC 36, Rel. on. (Para 29-A)

(E) Civil Services — Jammu & Kashmir Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules (1956), R. 24 — Inter se seniority of Government servants — Principle governing determination, stated.

Seniority is to be governed with reference to service, class, category or grade which is held by the Government servant and has to be determined by the date of his first appointment to such service, class, category or grade. The words 'first appointment' have been further defined as relating to the date of the first substantive appointment, that is to say, the date of the permanent appointment against a clear vacancy. If two persons are appointed in the same class on the same date, then the date on which one of these persons has been confirmed or rather has secured the permanent appointment would be the date from which his seniority would run. The proviso to Rule 24 lays down that in cases where persons have been appointed on the same date, their inter se seniority would be determined in the following manner:— (i) in the case of those promoted by their relative seniority in the lower service, class, category or grade from which they have been promoted, their seniority would be governed by CL (a) of the proviso which refers to the date of their permanent or substantive appointment. (ii) In the case of employees recruited direct their seniority will be governed according to the positions attained by them or assigned to them in the competitive examination or on the basis of merit, ability etc. In such cases there is no difficulty in determining the seniority of the Government servant.

(iii) As between some persons promoted and others recruited direct their seniority will be governed by the order in which appointments have to be allocated for promotion and direct recruitment as prescribed by the rules. The difficulty may arise where the rules do not prescribe the date of allocation. In such a case it is obvious that the principles governing CL (a) would naturally apply and the promotee will be deemed to be senior to the direct recruit unless there is a rule to the contrary. T. R. Bhasin, R. N. Bhalgotra, Joginder Singh and O. N. Tikku, for Petitioners;

Addl. Advocate General, Advocate General and V. S. Malhotra, for Respondents.

FAZL ALI, C. J.:— These writ petitions arise out of various orders passed by the appointing authority against the petitioners regarding their promotion to the next higher post. As these petitions involve substantial questions of law of far-reaching consequences, they have been referred to us for an authoritative pronouncement. Unfortunately, however, no particular question has been framed by the Bench concerned. It has therefore become necessary for us to frame questions involved in the light of the arguments of the parties, the principles involved, and the facts common to all the cases. The questions which we have formulated are as follows:—

(1) The extent, scope and application of Rule 24, Rules 25(2) and 25(3) of the Jammu and Kashmir Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1956, as also the principles governing promotion of Government servants under these provisions.

(2) Whether or not the appointing authority is required to give reasons for making promotion, and if so, to what extent?

(3) Whether or not the Government servants have a legal right to promotion under the rules so as to make the act of promotion a judicial act requiring an objective consideration?

(4) Whether or not the appointing authority is to follow the principles of natural justice by giving a reasonable opportunity to the Government servants of being heard before promotion is decided upon?

(5) Whether in granting promotion to one Government servant and not to the other rights of equality under Art. 16 of the Constitution of India are infringed?

(6) The principle governing inter se seniority of Government servants as contained in the rules.

1-A. We would take up the points formulated by us ad seriatim.

Question 1. The extent, scope and application of Rule 24, Rules 25(2) and 25(3) of the Jammu & Kashmir Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1956, as also the principles governing promotion of Government servants under these provisions.

2. In the State of Jammu & Kashmir the service conditions of most of the Government servants are determined by the Jammu & Kashmir Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules 1956 (hereinafter to be referred to as the Rules). These rules were published in the Government Gazette by Government Order No. 952-C of 1956 dated 14-6-1956. The rules deal with a variety of subjects regarding the conditions of service of Government servants beginning from their appointment right upto the punishment or penalties that may be imposed upon them, and the mode prescribed therefor. We might state here that these rules are not only statutory in character but have also the authority of the Constitution because under the proviso to S. 124 of the State Constitution these rules have been directed to be continued to be effective subject to the provisions of any law made by the legislature after the coming into force of the Constitution. Since on the points involved in this case no such law has so far been made by the State legislature, it follows therefore that these rules would be deemed to be effective under the provisions of the Constitution referred to above.

3. In order to understand the scope and the ambit of Rule 25 of the Rules it will be necessary to analyse the real import of the various terms defined in the Rules. Rule 2(a) defines cadre as the sanctioned strength of class, category or grade. Rule 2(b) defines category as the posts borne on the cadre of a service or class, but imposes two conditions before the posts can be said to fall within the same category. These conditions are:—

(i) That the duties of the posts must be of the same character and importance.

(ii) That they must be known by the same designation and the scales of pay should also be the same.

In other words, category is a sub-division of a particular post borne on the cadre of a service, carrying the same emoluments and known by the same designation. Class has been defined thus:—

"Class means the posts borne on the cadre of a service between which and the other posts borne on the cadre of the same service promotions and transfers are not ordinarily admissible."

In order, therefore, to satisfy the definition of a class two attributes must be fulfilled. In the first place the posts of the same class must belong to the same service; secondly promotions and transfers between these posts forming a class are not ordinarily admissible.

4. Promotion has been defined thus:—

"Promotion means the appointment of a member of service or class of a service, in any category or grade to a higher category or grade of such service or class." It would thus appear that under the Rules promotion tantamounts to the appointment of a member of a service or a class of service to a higher category, grade or class of the same service. The words 'such service' clearly indicate that promotion contemplates appointment to a higher post of the same service.

5. Rule 2 (i) which defines recruitment by transfer runs thus:—

"A candidate is said to be recruited by transfer to a service when at the time of his first appointment thereto he is either a member or a probationer in another service."

6. Service is defined as a group of posts declared by Government to be a service.

7. We have taken pains to give detailed definition of some of the terms because there appears to be serious divergence between the argument of the counsel for the parties with respect to the import and connotation of these terms. We shall now take up Rule 25 (2) and (3) which run thus:—

All promotions shall be made by the appointing authority.

(2) Promotions to a service or class or to a selection category or grade in such service or class shall be made on grounds of merit and ability and shall be subject to the passing of any tests that Government may prescribe in this behalf, seniority being considered only where the merit and ability are approximately equal.

(3) All other promotions shall be made in accordance with seniority and subject to any test or special qualifications prescribed by Government unless—

(a) the promotion of a member has been withheld as a penalty or

(b) a member is given special promotion for conspicuous merit and ability."

The learned counsel for the petitioners submitted that sub-rule (3) is the general rule of promotion, whereas sub-rule (2) of Rule 25 is a rule which applies to exceptional cases covered by or mentioned in sub-rule (2). The Addl. Advocate General on the other hand submitted that sub-rule (2) is the general rule under which promotions have to be made, whereas sub-rule (3) is the residuary rule which will cover cases not falling within the ambit of sub-rule (2) of Rule 25. The Addl. Advocate General initially submitted that the word 'promotion' as used in Rule 25(2) is wide enough to cover and include promotion from one service to another, though the two services may be of different kind altogether. Subsequently the Addl. Advocate General changed his stand and argued that promotion means an appointment to a higher category of either the same service or an allied service. In our opinion the altered stand taken by the Addl. Advocate General is absolutely correct. We have pointed out from the definition of the word 'promotion' that promotion conceives appointment from a lower category to a higher category of the same service or an allied service because the words 'such service' mentioned in Rule 2(h) clearly denote that service must be the same.

In fact if we accept the argument of the petitioners that Rule 25(3) is wide enough to cover promotion from one service to another, even if the two services are absolutely different, then such a conclusion would lead to most anomalous results. For instance it may so happen that the appointing authority of one service and that of the other are not the same and the two may not agree in which case the promotion will not be possible at all. Furthermore where there is service of a technical kind, for instance, the Engineering service, it will be absurd to expect that an Overseer or an Asstt. Engineer would be promoted to another service, say the judicial service and be appointed a Sub-Judge or a District Judge. In our opinion such a state of affairs was never contemplated by the rules and that is why Rule 2(j) clearly defines recruitment by transfer. The definition of this term signifies that a member of one service may be transferred to another service.

It is obvious therefore that a member of one service is transferred to another service only if the transfer is possible and not otherwise. For these reasons therefore sub-rs. 25(2) and (3) deal with the promotion of Government servants in their own service and has no application when there is a transfer of a member of one service to another. Even if by such transfer the Government servant gets into a higher category it will be really an appointment by transfer rather than a promotion in the service.

8. Reliance was however, placed by the Addl. Advocate General as also by the counsel for the petitioners on an order of the Government classifying various gazetted services where a number of services have been mentioned, enumerating the class or the category. This classification was made on 19-10-55 that is to say long before the rules came into force. Furthermore this classification has been made in order to describe the status of a Government servant, the emoluments to which he is entitled, and the T.A. that he is entitled to draw. This classification has nothing to do with the interpretation of the rules. In fact clause 4 of the preface to the rules makes this position absolutely clear by providing as follows:

"Nothing however, in this classification should be taken to convey any change in the conditions of service of a post or a group of posts in regard to their permanent or temporary nature of their being pensionable or non-pensionable. Such conditions will be determined by the general or special rules pertaining to a service or its class or category or the sanction under which a particular post has been created."

It is therefore manifest that we cannot interpret the terms mentioned in the rules with reference to the classification of gazetted services made by the Government which has been done for a very different purpose. Furthermore this classification has now become out of date because it is conceded by the Addl. Advocate General that a number of additional posts have come into being which do not find place in the said classification and some of the posts mentioned in the classification have ceased to exist. For all these reasons therefore we are not in a position to take the aforesaid classification as a guide or a basis for the interpretation of the rules.

9. We would now take up the first question, namely the scope and the ambit of R. 25(2) and (3). In our opinion every Government is guided by the sole consideration of improving the efficiency, integrity and stability of the services and in order to promote these qualities in services, it is only necessary that in the matter of promotions, merit and ability should be given topmost preference. This should be the first consideration present in the mind of the appointing authority if efficiency is to be brought about in the services. This is the anxiety not only of the Government but of any master regarding the servants which he employs. The relationship between the Government and its servants is similar to that of an ordinary master and servant with the difference that the conditions of service of Government servants are governed by statutory rules or constitutional safeguards contained in the Constitution. Excepting this prominent feature the other incidents are the same. In our opinion, therefore, Rule 25(2) merely incorporates the general desire of the employer to promote efficiency and integrity in the services so that a real impetus is given to meritorious persons in the matter of promotion.

The words used in sub-rule (2) are of a very wide amplitude and cover almost every category of service so that the general rule contained herein is that promotion should be made on the basis of merit and ability alone, seniority to be considered only where merit and ability are approximately equal. Thus this rule contains what is known as the merit cum seniority formula. To begin with, the words "promotion to a service" includes also promotion to all groups of posts declared by Government to be a service and thus it includes every category of the post borne on the cadre of a service. Such an interpretation is in consonance with the definition of the word 'service' as given in Rule 2(k) referred to above. The word 'class' includes not only promotion from one class to another but also promotion between classes inter se, that is to say even if there are posts belonging to the same class but carrying different scales of pay and one class is superior to another in the matter of status and emoluments, then promotion even between the same class would be governed by Rule 25(2).

10. The learned counsel for the petitioners, however, submitted that the word 'class' used in sub-rule (2) of Rule 25 postulates promotion from one class to another and not promotions within the same class. We do not find any warrant for this view because no such distinction has been laid down in the rules for delimiting the scope of the word 'class'. Furthermore such an interpretation does not appear to be consistent with the definition of the word 'class' in Rule 2(d). According to the definition class means the posts borne on the cadre of a service between which and the other posts borne on the same service promotions and transfers are not ordinarily admissible. For instance in the classification of gazetted services produced by the Addl. Advocate General, the Chief Secretary and the Commissioner have been placed within same class but they carry different emoluments. It is obvious that promotions between these two members of the class are neither admissible nor can a member of one category in the class be transferred to another. In other words it cannot be said that a Commissioner can be transferred as Chief Secretary and a Chief Secretary as Commissioner.

Similarly in the Kashmir Judicial Service Sub-Judges and Munsiffs are shown as belonging to the same class, but it cannot be urged with any show of force that Munsiffs can be transferred as Sub-Judges and Sub-Judges as Munsiffs. Such transfers cannot be done until the Munsiffs are promoted to the rank of Sub-Judges. The emoluments of these two posts and the scales of their pay are also different. It is therefore clear that the word 'class' used in Rule 25(2) is wide enough not only to include promotion from one class to another but also promotions within the same class.

11. The third contingency contemplated by sub-rule (2) is that promotions should be made to a selection category which is defined in Rule 2(c) as a category declared to be a selection category by the appointing authority. Thus analysing the provisions of this rule it would appear that the rule governs all cases of promotion to a service, that is to say (1) between the posts belonging to a particular service (2) to posts contained either in the same class or to posts from one class to another; and (3) to posts which are declared by the appointing authority to be a selection category. In the case of all these promotions, the rules lay down that the primary consideration for promotion should be merit and ability and such tests as may be prescribed, seniority to be considered only when merit and ability are equal. In other words the rule clearly contemplates that where a junior member of the service is superior in merit and ability to his senior, he is entitled to be promoted in preference to the senior on the grounds of merit and ability. The senior member has no right to promotion unless he can show that he is equal in merit and ability to the junior member. If this criterion is adopted, it will improve the efficiency and integrity of the services and give an impetus to the members of the services to improve their quality.

Sub-rule (3) would apply only to such cases which are not covered by sub-rule (2) and it is the residuary rule which would apply if a residue is left, otherwise not. The question which arises for our serious consideration is as to what cases would be covered by sub-rule (3) if we hold sub-rule (2) to be the general rule. There is however no difficulty in finding an answer to this question. Sub-rule (3) would apply to such cases where there is promotion from one grade to another, though the posts may be of the same nature or character though with slightly different emoluments. For instance in the State we have two grades of clerks (Junior Assistants), Rs. 65-130 and Rs. 75-150. Assistants working in both the grades bear the same designation. Thus if there is promotion from one grade to another, it may be covered by sub-rule (3) and would have to be governed by seniority alone, until and unless promotion is withheld by way of penalty or when some other member is given promotion for extraordinary merit and ability. We might mention here that the Supreme Court in case of Ghulam Nabi Shora v. the State of Jammu & Kashmir, Writ Petition No. 175 of 1966, D/- 3-3-1967 (SC) appears to have gone into this question and interpreted the language of Rr. 25(2) and 25(3).

In this case their Lordships were considering the promotion of Munsiffs to the rank of Sub-Judges and their Lordships clearly held that such a promotion was covered by Rule 25(2) and not by R. 25(3). Their Lordships observed as follows:—

"It is common ground that in the matter of promotion Munsiffs are governed by the J. & K. Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules 1956..... Under Cl. (2) of R. 25 promotion is to be made strictly on merit and ability and the petitioners cannot claim as of right to be promoted merely on the ground that they were placed higher in rank in the list of appointees to the posts of Government Prosecutors than respondents 4 to 9..... It was somewhat faintly suggested on behalf of the petitioners that Cl. (3) of R. 25 which is the residuary rule applies to the case of the petitioners..... Prima facie it appears that in appointing Munsiffs to the post of Subordinate Judges the State promotes them to a selection category of in any case to a class within the meaning of R. 25(2). The expression 'class' is defined in R. 2(d) as meaning the posts borne on the cadre of a service between which and the other posts borne on the cadre of the same service, promotions and transfers are not ordinarily admissible. It is not suggested that Munsiffs and the Subordinate Judges are borne on the cadre of the same service and promotions and transfers are not ordinarily admissible."

These observations of their Lordships fully fortify the view taken by us that Rule 25(2) is the general rule which governs all promotions and Rule 25(3) is the residuary rule which governs only those cases which are not covered by Rule 25(2).

12. It was however contended on behalf of the petitioners that if promotions are made by and large on the basis of merit and ability ignoring seniority, it would lead to demoralization in the State services. We are, however, unable to agree with this argument. Once a person enters a Government service, he has no right to be appointed to a higher post only on the basis of his seniority if he does not possess any merit. Indeed if promotions are made on the basis of seniority alone then it will be difficult to promote efficiency in the services and there will be no tendency for any person to improve his quality because the Government servant would know that he would be promoted when his turn comes whether he deserves it or not; whether he improves his quality or not. He would get into the higher post merely by virtue of his seniority. Such a method of promotion is not consistent with the notions of a civilized society such as ours. For these reasons we answer the first question accordingly.

13. Question No. 2:— Whether or not the appointing authority is required to give reasons for making promotion, and if so, to what extent?

13-A. It was urged by the counsel for the petitioners that the language of sub-r. (2) and (3) of Rule 25 makes it incumbent on the appointing authority to give reasons for the promotion of a Government servant indicating the grounds on which the promotion is made. The Addl. Advocate General however contended that the sub-rules nowhere expressly lay down the requirements of giving any reasons for the promotions to be made but only mention the considerations that should govern the appointing authority in making promotions. In support of his submission the learned Addl. Advocate General relied upon a decision of the Punjab and Haryana High Court in 1968 SLR (Service Law Reports) 764=(AIR 1969 Punj. 101), and drew our attention to the following observations made in that case:—

"It is patent that regulation 5(3) does not require any reason to be recorded for holding any person to be of exceptional merit and suitability..... In any case when once the committee has arrived at an opinion to the said effect regarding a candidate's exceptional merit and suitability the statute in its wisdom has thought it expedient to respect that opinion..... It would therefore be treating a dangerous ground to go behind the clear expression of subjective satisfaction and the expression of opinion following thereto which had been expressly averred to in the written statement on behalf of the Committee."

It is true that Rule 25(2) does not in so many words express any reasons to be recorded for promotion to be granted to a member of the service, but the language of this rule is essentially different from that of the Indian Administrative Service Rules which was being considered by the Punjab and Haryana High Court. To begin with it would appear from the judgment in the case (Supra), that R. 5(5) of the Indian Administrative Service Rules expressly required reasons to be recorded in writing whereas Rule 5(3) which almost immediately preceded the said rule did not mention anything about reasons being given. In view of this strange placing of the language of the statute their Lordships rightly held that the previous provision namely Rule 5(3) did not require any reasons to be recorded. Furthermore the language of Rule 5(3) in that case was as follows:—

"The names of the officers included in the list shall be arranged in order of seniority in the State Civil Service.

Provided that any junior officer who in the opinion of the committee is of exceptional merit and suitability may be assigned a place in the list higher than that of officers senior to him."

14. It is therefore clear that Rule 5(3) (Supra) merely requires a list to be prepared in order of seniority, whereas the proviso mentions that a junior officer could be considered in view of his exceptional ability. The language of Rule 25(2) in the present case is quite different. The words 'shall be made on the ground of merit and ability' clearly postulate that the order of the appointing authority must show ex facie that the considerations mentioned in the rule were present in the mind of the appointing authority at the time of making promotions and the word 'ground' implies that these considerations should be stated in the order so that anybody reading the order may know that action has been taken under R. 25(2) of the Rules. In other words while we fully agree with the principle that the question of promotion depends largely on the subjective satisfaction of the appointing authority and that the assessment of the appointing authority regarding the work and the performance of the Government servant cannot be questioned, yet we cannot help feeling that the statutory rules do require that the considerations which had weighed with the appointing authority must find place in the order of promotion and then alone it would be a compliance with the provisions of Rule 25(2).

15. There is yet another circumstance that lends support to this view. Under Rule 30(3) withholding of promotion amounts to a punishment and it can be resorted to only after giving a notice to the delinquent servant and giving him an opportunity of defending himself. There may be cases where an appointing authority in the garb of promoting a junior man acts under sub-rule (2), whereas his real intention is to act under Rule 30(3) by withholding promotion. But in order to deprive the delinquent servant of an opportunity of being heard a junior is promoted under the cover of merit and ability so that the delinquent servant is not in a position to know whether he has been bypassed by a junior, because the junior possessed superior merit and ability or because the appointing authority chose to withhold promotion of the senior member by way of penalty. Where the order of promotion specifies the grounds mentioned in Rule 25(2), there can be no confusion on this account and the order of promotion being a speaking order would apprise the Government servant of the actual situation. This is yet another reason why we think that the rule-makers intended that the appointing authority must give at least the grounds on the basis on which promotion is made under sub-rule (2).

By laying stress on the appointing authority to give reasons we do not mean to suggest that in every case the appointing authority should write a detailed order dealing with the merits and demerits of the promotion of a Government servant but what is contemplated by sub-rule (2) is a bare statement of the grounds on the basis of which promotion is made, that is to say, the appointing authority must say specifically in its order that a person is being promoted because in its opinion he is superior in merit and ability to the other member of the service who is being superseded. In other words what Rule 25(2) requires is only to record grounds by the appointing authority and no more. Such a requirement would serve two purposes: it would guard the appointing authority against making promotions on the basis of favouritism or nepotism and secondly it would apprise the person bypassed with the reasons why he has

O. P. No. 5325 of 1968, D/- 19-2-1969.

Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Principles of natural justice — Duty of executive authorities — Opportunity to delinquent to explain action should be real and fair — Reasons for orders passed is necessary requirement — Discretionary matters — Power of High Court in writ proceedings — Suggestion to educate Officers minimum needs of natural justice and obligations under Arts. 14 and 19 of the Constitution.

The doctrine of natural justice is a part of the humanist discipline of the executive authorities who affect rights of citizens by their acts. Even when an executive body is given the power to decide something in its discretion, the Courts would still keep it in the leading strings of fair procedure. Opportunity to explain any action or conduct of the delinquent should be real and not ritualistic, effective and not illusory and must be followed by a fair consideration of the explanation offered and the materials available, culminating in an order which discloses reasons for the decision sufficient to show that the mind of the authority has been applied relevantly and rationally and without reliance on facts not furnished to the affected party. (Para 6)

Natural justice operates in the field of administrative action, ordinarily, only when there is a duty to act judicially. Quasi-judicial obligation involves giving of reasons for orders, and failure to give reasons ordinarily voids the order. AIR 1963 SC 1430 and AIR 1967 SC 1606 Relied on. (Paras 7, 8)

Giving reasons for orders is certainly a requirement of natural justice, but this does not mean that every incidental or interlocutory or other similar orders must contain elaborate reasons. That would make the canon of natural justice unnatural and unjust. It may be that the granting of adjournment is a purely discretionary matter and the exercise of that discretion cannot be dissected by the writ Court. But the circumstances of the case must also be borne in mind. If counsel, engaged by a party, without informing his client, requests for an adjournment which is turned down, the dismissal of the appeal visits a punishment on the party which may be neither fair nor just.

Administrative agencies, intend on doing justice and acting expeditiously and enthusiastically, get tripped unwittingly on account of their ignorance of the nuances or even the minimum needs of natural justice and of the obligations under Articles 14 and 19 of the Constitution. It would, therefore, be proper that Administrative Officers charged with the duty to pass orders and a fortiori those in the higher echelons of authority, affecting the civil rights of citizens, should be educated in administrative law, particularly in the basic requirements of natural justice. ORDER:— This writ petition, which I propose to allow, underscores the need of the administrator to be aware of the new frontiers of natural justice, now more than ever before, since on the one hand a welfare-oriented, activist government does, and has necessarily to exercise powers affecting the civil rights of the citizen in a plurality of ways, and on the other, our democratic Constitution entitles every member of the community to expect observance of the rule of law which implies the essential norms of administrative propriety summed up in the expressive, though hackneyed, phrase natural justice.

2. The facts, relevant to explain the issues raised in the present petition, are few. A co-operative society whose affairs were committed to the management of a Board, was faring ill and so the Deputy Registrar, after a preliminary probe, submitted a report which revealed several, serious irregularities in the functioning of the society. Alerted thus, the Joint Registrar, who has statutory responsibilities of supervisory action, proceeded to supersede the Board under Section 42 of the Travancore-Cochin Co-operative Societies Act. In response to his notice (Ext. P1) to the affected party, the Board, an explanation was submitted refusing the charges seriatim (Ext. P2) which, however, did not satisfy the authority and he therefore, passed the order Ext. P3. This order is impugned in the writ petition. It bodily reproduces the irregularities set out in Ext. P1, the 'show cause' notice, and runs on:

"The explanation filed by the President on behalf of the committee to the notice that as first paper above is found to be not at all satisfactory. The explanation on the various points are either false or unreasonable. From the above facts it is clear that the committee of the Society has been, and is, mismanaging the affairs of the Society. Further, I am convinced that the present committee is not functioning properly and that any attempt to set right matters with the present committee in office, will do no good. The Deputy Registrar of Co-operative Societies, Trivendrum have recommended to supersede the present committee at an early date.

In the circumstances do hereby order under Section 49(1) of the T. C. Co-operative Societies Act, 1951 (Act X of 1952) that the committee of the Palode Service Co-operative Society Ltd., No. 792 be superseded for a period of six months from the date of this order." (The mistakes are seen in the Exhibits marked).

Although the facts set out in Ext. P1 are controverted in Ext. P2 no further enquiry is seen conducted nor additional material collected and put to the delinquent Board. The 'item by item' consideration of the charges and the indication of the conclusion on each are absent. Nor are any reasons given why the charges are held proved and the explanation unacceptable. The Officer merely dismisses the Board's pleas on the various points by four indifferent, indolent and unconvincing words 'either false or unreasonable'. Which are false and why? Which unreasonable and how? Such an unspeaking order is clearly insufficient when we see serious accusations made in Ext. P1 against presumably responsible persons. The graver the charges the greater the circumspection and to act quickly is not to act carelessly. What is more, there is a dark reference to the Deputy Registrar having recommended supersession. Therefore, the authority which decides must consider on the merits and not merely act on recommendations of subordinates; more serious is the violation when it is asserted by the petitioner that a copy of this report has not been furnished to the Board and there is no reference to it in Ext. P1 (show cause notice).

3. Anyway, the aggrieved petitioner appealed to the Government, through advocate under S. 50 of the Act whereupon notice (Ext. P. 4) was given to the advocate, that his appeal had been posted for hearing by the concerned minister on 11-12-1968 at 11 a. m. However, the advocate sent in a written request dated 11-12-1968 (Ext. P 6) couched in the following words:

"Since I am laid up I am unable to appear and argue the appeal. Hence it is prayed that an adjournment be given."

One of the members of the Society, anxious to save the institution from the harmful grip of the delinquent Board, chose to petition Government to implead and hear him through Advocate. This request was allowed but the appellant's prayer for adjournment was rejected. Eventually, the appeal was dismissed by order dated 16-12-1968 (Ext. P7) which I may usefully read here:

"This is an appeal petition filed by Shri A. Ebrahim Kunju, President of the Palode Service Co-operative Society Ltd., No. 792 against the orders of the Joint Registrar of Co-operative Societies (Credit) No. CR3-55042/67 dated 1-11-1968 superseding the Managing Committee of the Palode Service Co-operative Society Ltd., No. 792 for a period of 6 months and appointing a Rectification Officer for the said period. Shri K. Krishnan, a Member of the Society, has filed a petition opposing the appeal petition.

This case was taken up for hearing. Neither the appeal petitioner nor his advocate was present. The Advocate for the petitioner has sent a petition requesting for an adjournment. The request is declined. Shri K. Krishnan a member of the Society opposed the appeal petition. His counsel appeared and argued the case on his behalf. His arguments were heard and the records were perused.

It is seen that the committee of the Society was ordered to be superseded by the Joint Registrar of Co-operative Societies in his proceedings dated 1-11-1968 for very grave irregularities detected in the working of the Society including misappropriation from the funds of the Society. Government do not therefore consider it necessary to interfere with the orders passed by the Joint Registrar of Co-operative Societies appealed against. The stay granted in letter No. 82722/C2/68/AD dated 8-11-68 against the implementation of these orders is vacated. The appeal petition is dismissed."

4. This order is attacked by the petitioner on several grounds in the above O. P. Primarily his contention is that Ext. P3 is a nullity, being violative of natural justice and Ext. P7 also is void for similar reasons. So, the contours of this canon require to be clearly delineated to see if there is any contravention.

5. What are the defects urged against Exts. P3 and P7? The Joint Registrar's order (Ext. P3) is bad because (1) it relies on no materials to prove the alleged irregularities, (2) it fails to consider the explanation of the affected party, (3) it relies on a report or recommendation of Deputy Registrar without furnishing a copy thereof to the Board against which it was perhaps used, (4) it fails to give reasons to support the order. Likewise, Ext. P7 is void because (1) it does not advert to the merits of the charges, (2) gives no reasons to uphold the order (3) unjustly and arbitrarily declined an adjournment requested by the advocate, giving no opportunity to the party to engage another advocate. Let me consider the merits of these contentions.

6. I may permit myself a prefatory observation. However irritating to the administrator the application of this expensive doctrine may be the battle for natural justice in administrative actions has already been fought and won in the Courts of countries where the rule of law is respected so that we may take it as well settled in India also as part of the humanist discipline of the executive authorities who affect rights of citizens by their acts. This obligation has to be tattooed on the administrator's conscience, as it were. If doubts existed on the question they have been dispelled by the rulings in Ridge v. Baldwin, 1964 AC 40, State of Orissa v. Dr. Binapani Dei, AIR 1967 SC 1269 and Appukuttan Nair v. State of Kerala, 1969 Ker LT 96 (FB). The wide observations in Guptan v. State of Kerala, 1963 Ker LJ 1200, set out in para 6 thereof viz., "An important question of administrative law is whether some principles of procedure are not so universal as to apply to all wielding of power, whether judicial or administrative. And the answer that the Courts have given over the years is that even when an executive body is given the power to decide something, in its discretion, the courts would still keep it in the leading strings of fair procedure" are not an over-statement of the law, in the light of the rulings of the House of Lords, the Supreme Court of India and the Full Bench of the Kerala High Court referred to above. The principles of natural justice are neither new nor limited in their applicability and indeed even God, — and certainly therefore civilised man made after his image — is bound by it. Fortescue J. in R. v. Chancellor of Cambridge, 1723-1 Strange 557 (I quote from Marshall on Natural Justice, pp. 17, 18) observes:

"The laws of God and man both give the party an opportunity to make his defence, if he has any. I remember to have heard it observed by a very learned man upon such an occasion, that even God himself did not pass sentence upon Adam, before he was called upon to make his defence. Adam (says God) where art thou? Hast thou not eaten of the tree, whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat? And the same question was put to Eve also."

Of course, opportunity to explain has preceded Exts. P3 and P7; but such opportunity should be real and not ritualistic, effective and not illusory and must be followed by a fair consideration of the explanation offered and the materials available, culminating in an order which discloses reasons for the decision sufficient to show that the mind of the authority has been applied relevantly and rationally and without reliance on facts not furnished to the affected party.

7. Natural justice, I must warn, cannot be perverted into anything unnatural or unjust and cannot therefore be treated as a set of dogmatic prescriptions applicable without reference to the circumstances of the case. The question merely is, in all conscience have you been fair in dealing with that man? If you have been arbitrary, absent-minded, unreasonable or unspeaking, you cannot deny that there has been no administrative fair play.

8. Certainly, natural justice operates in the field of administrative action, ordinarily, only when there is a duty to act judicially.

"The rule that a party to whose prejudice an order is intended to be passed is entitled to a hearing applies alike to judicial tribunals and bodies of persons invested with authority to adjudicate upon matters involving civil consequences. . . Duty to act judicially would, therefore, arise from the very nature of the function intended to be performed: it need not be shown to be superadded. If there is power to decide and determine to the prejudice of a person, duty to act judicially is implicit in the exercise of such power. If the essentials of justice be ignored and an order to the prejudice of a person is made, the order is a nullity. That is a basic concept of the rule of law and importance thereof transcends the significance of a decision in any particular case."

If this be the law, what facets of natural justice have been violated in the present case? The contention that there has been no application of the mind to the explanation submitted by the Board sounds in natural justice, as has been pointed out in Appukutty v. Sales Tax Officer, Kozhikode, ILR 1965 (2) Ker 240=(AIR 1966 Ker 55). Neither Ext. P3 nor Ext. P7 indicates, ex facie, consideration of the materials or the explanation furnished by the Board nor have reasons been given in these two orders as to why the alleged irregularities are held to have been proved. Ext. P7 merely states that the Joint Registrar has ordered the committee of the Society to be superseded for very grave irregularities and that "Government do not therefore consider it necessary to interfere with the orders passed by the Joint Registrar of Co-operative Societies appealed against." This is an abdication of the appellate power rather than an exercise of it and from the point of view of the appellant it is doing injustice to natural justice. Quasi-judicial obligation involves giving of reasons for orders, since justice is not expected to wear the inscrutable face of a sphinx. A Division Bench of the Kerala High Court in Joseph v. Superintendent of Post Offices, 1960 Ker LT 1304=(AIR 1961 Ker 197) spoke emphatically and at length on this point, as follows:

"That apart, there are judicial pronouncements, which insist on administrative orders assigning reasons for the conclusions, and such pronouncements have received legislative recognition. Thus, in the United States S. 8(b) of the American Administrative Procedure Act, requires Administrative decisions to be accompanied by findings and conclusions, as well as the reasons or basis thereof, upon all the material issues of law or facts presented on the record. Also S. 12 of the English Tribunals and Inquiries Act, 1958, requires reasons for such a decision as is mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b) of sub-section (1) of the section; whether given in pursuance of that sub-section or of any other statutory provision; which reasons shall be taken to form part of the decision and accordingly to be incorporated in the record. It follows that when Rule 4 requires findings and the grounds thereof to be given by the punishing authority, it is providing for what has become the accepted rule of administrative procedure. Even where there be no express provisions, and administrative authorities be discharging quasi-judicial functions, judicial pronouncements insist on reasons being given for the order. There are a series of such observations in America. Thus, in Wichita Railroad & Light Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, (1922) 67 Law Ed 124 at p. 130, it has been held that a valid order of the commission under the Act, must contain a finding of fact after hearing and investigation, upon which the order is founded and that, for lack of such a finding, the order in the case was void. So the absence of a finding by the requisite officer, in Mahler v. Eby, (1923) 68 Law Ed 549 at p. 560, on the undesirability of residents sought to be deported as undesirable aliens, was held fatal to the validity of the warrant for deportation. In Florida v. United States, (1930) 75 Law Ed 291 it was held that the Inter-State Commerce Commission must have appropriate finding upon evidence to be supported. Again, it was held in United States v. Chicago M. St. P. & Co., (1934) 79 Law Ed. 1023 at p. 1032 that the Court must know that a decision means before the duty becomes theirs to say whether it is right or wrong. The English rule we find not to be different; for, Lord Cairns in Overseers of the Poor of Walsall v. London and North Western Railway Co., (1878) AC 30 at p. 40, has observed:

'But supposing that the Court of Quarter Sessions did not adopt that course, there was still another mode by which any question of law which appeared to the court of Quarter Sessions doubtful, might be left open for the exercise of the judgment of a higher Tribunal. All that was necessary was that the Court of Quarter Sessions, in making its order should not make it unspeaking or unintelligible order, but should, in some way state upon the face of the order, the elements which had led to the decision of the Court of Quarter Sessions. If the Court of Quarter Sessions stated upon the face of the order by way of recital, that the facts were so and so, and the grounds of its decision were such as were so stated, then the order became upon the face of it, a speaking order; and if that which was stated upon the face of the order, in the opinion of any party, was not such as to warrant the order, then, that part might go to the Court of Queen's Bench and point to the order as one which told its own story, and ask the Court of Queen's Bench to remove it by certiorari, and when so removed to pass judgment upon it, whether it should or should not be quashed.'

'Speaking order' in the aforesaid observation, has been explained by Lord

'When Lord Cairns, L. C., speaks of an unspeaking or unintelligible order he obviously means an order which gives no reasons, or does not explain in any way why the Court made the order but simply states that the Court made such and such a conviction, order for removal or for quashing the poor rate, or other order of that sort, giving no reasons for doing so. It may not be unintelligible in one sense, but it is unintelligible in that it does not tell the superior court why the inferior court made that order.'

In this country, Subba Rao J., has in M. U. M. Services Ltd. v. R. T. Authority, Malabar, AIR 1953 Mad 59, held that order under S. 57(7) of the Motor Vehicles Act, requires reasons to be given for issuing a permit and in such a manner that an Appellate Court may be in a position to canvass the correctness of the reasons given. In M. Ramayya v. State of Andhra, AIR 1956 Andhra 217, it was held that the orders of the tribunals must 'ex facie' disclose the reasons, which operated on them in granting or refusing a permit. It follows that where the order by administrative authorities be quasi-judicial, it must be 'speaking order', and absence of reasons in it, would be fatal to its legality. The complaint by the petitioner is that he was suspended in 1952, and had not been allowed to do any work thereafter; that the criminal complaint against him has been found not to be established; that he has been thereafter dismissed for unsatisfactory conduct; but he does not know what that conduct is, and is not, from the record, in a position to exercise properly the right of appeal, which the Rules give him. We feel there is substance in the complaint, for, where one does not know the facts, on which the conclusion against one is drawn, it would be impossible to challenge it or lead rebuttal."

In a different context, but in a manner relevant to our present purpose, the Supreme Court pointed out in a ruling reported in Chandra Deo Singh v. Prokash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430 while dealing with a complaint that reasons were not given by the Magistrate while dismissing a complaint under Section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as follows:—

"It is possible to say that giving of reasons is a pre-requisite for making an order of dismissal of a complaint and absence of the reasons would make the order a nullity The complainant is entitled to know why his complaint has been dismissed with a view to consider an approach to a revisional Court. Being kept in ignorance of the reasons clearly prejudices his right to move the revisional Court"

A later ruling of the Supreme Court in Bhagat Raja v. Union of India, AIR 1967 SC 1606 contains observations very pertinent to our point:

"Let us now examine the question as to whether it was incumbent on the Central Government to give any reasons for its decision on review. It was argued that the very exercise of judicial or quasi judicial powers in the case of a tribunal entailed upon it an obligation to give reasons for arriving at a decision for or against a party. The decisions of tribunals in India are subject to the supervisory powers of the High Courts under Art. 227 of the Constitution and of appellate powers of this Court under Art. 136. It goes without saying that both the High Courts and this Court are placed under a great disadvantage if no reasons are given and the revision is dismissed curtly by the use of the single word "rejected", or, "dismissed". In such a case, this Court can probably only exercise its appellate jurisdiction satisfactorily by examining the entire records of the case and after giving a hearing come to its conclusion on the merits of the appeal. This will certainly be a very unsatisfactory method of dealing with the appeal. Ordinarily, in a case like this, if the State Government gives sufficient reasons for accepting the application of one party and rejecting that of the others, as it must, and the Central Government adopts the reasoning of the State Government, this Court may proceed to examine whether the reasons given are sufficient for the purpose of upholding the decision. But, when the reasons given in the order of the State Government are scrappy or nebulous and the Central Government makes no attempt to clarify the same, this Court, in appeal may have to examine the case de novo without anybody being the wiser for the review by the Central Government. If the State Government gives a number of reasons some of which are good and some are not, and the Central Government merely endorses the order of the State Government without specifying those reasons which according to it are sufficient to uphold the order of the State Government, this Court, in appeal, may find it difficult to ascertain which are the grounds which weighed with the Central Government in upholding the order of the State Government. In such circumstances, what is known as a 'speaking order' is called for."

It is thus clear that failure to give reasons ordinarily voids the order.

9. Another point has been taken that the refusal of adjournment by the Government without assigning reasons. was arbitrary and therefore unjust. Giving reasons for orders is certainly a requirement of natural justice, but this does not mean that every incidental or interlocutory or other similar order must contain elaborate reasons. As I said earlier that would make the canon of natural justice unnatural and unjust. At the same time, there is force in the contention that the party had no opportunity to engage another advocate and argue his appeal as he had no knowledge that his advocate had not appeared and had only moved for adjournment which eventually was rejected. It may be that the granting of adjournment is a purely discretionary matter and the exercise of that discretion cannot be dissected by the writ Court. But the circumstances of the case must also be borne in mind. If counsel, engaged by a party, without informing his client, requests for an adjournment which is turned down, the dismissal of the appeal visits a punishment on the party which may be neither fair nor just. It may, perhaps be proper in the interests of justice to give the client some time, however, short, to engage a counsel. While this wholesome procedure might well have been adopted by the Government in this case. I am not prepared to strike down the order Ext. P7 for that reason alone.

10. A few other points also have been mentioned before me, but counsel for the writ petitioner ultimately said that he did not press his objection on the grounds of natural justice to the validity of Ext. P3. None of the alleged infirmities in Ext. P3, he assures me, he proposes to urge in appeal before the Government if Ext. P7 were to be quashed and a re-hearing of the appeal were to be allowed. He undertakes that he will confine himself to the merits of the charges of irregularities and not to put forward any other contentions before the appellate authority. Nor has he any objection to respondent Krishnan being impleaded or heard in appeal but not behind his back. Of course, if Government proposes to use the report of the Deputy Registrar or any other material not already mentioned in Ext. P1, it is only reasonable that it should be put to the appellant.

In this state of things, I am not called upon to quash Ext. P3 order and I do not do so. This relieves me from considering more fully the arguments of counsel for the State and for the 4th respondent to sustain Ext. P3. But, for reasons already stated, I quash Ext. P7 order and direct Government to re-hear the appeal de novo. I dare say that the appellant will be allowed to urge his contentions on the merits and will be given an opportunity to meet any additional material Government may seek to rely upon. It will not be a pious hope, I fancy, that the Government will consider the materials on record in a fair manner and give reasons for its conclusions.

It is far from me to suggest anything on the merits of the charges, but it may not be out of place to record my view that even correct conclusions and orders are upset in Courts, because there has been violation of natural justice or non-compliance with important procedural requirements. This is because of our national creed, in law and in life, that we should reach right ends through right means. I venture to suggest that all administrative officers charged with the duty to pass orders and a fortiori those in the higher echelons of authority, affecting the civil rights of citizens, should be educated in administrative law, particularly in the basic requirements of natural justice. Administrative agencies, intend on doing justice and acting expeditiously and enthusiastically, get tripped unwittingly on account of their ignorance of the nuances or even the minimum needs of natural justice and of the obligations under Articles 14 and 19 of the Indian Constitution. The present case, perhaps, is an instance in point. If the average administrative officer had been better informed about his procedural obligations, many an order of his would not have been a casualty on judicial scrutiny and many an unwanted babe in the writ jurisdiction would not have been born; After all, ephemeral victories ultimately do nobody any good.

11. I allow the O. P. to the extent indicated above by striking down Ext. P7 and further direct the State Government to re-hear the appeal in accordance with law. Since the matter is of some gravity and urgency I direct Government to dispose of the appeal within three weeks of the receipt of this order. No costs.

AIR 1970 KERALA 70 (V 57 C 15)

S. Gopalan Nair, Appellant v. State of Kerala, Respondent.

Writ Appeal No. 157 of 1967, D/- 16-12-1968, against judgment of single J., Kerala in O. P. No. 2505 of 1965.

Civil Services — Kerala Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal), Rules, 1960, R. 10(1) — Suspension — When ceases — Circumstances under which it is passed decided — (Constitution of India, Art. 309).

GM/HM/C857/69/TVN/P

A Government servant subject to Kerala Civil Services (Classification, Control, and Appeal) Rules can be suspended only under any one or all of the three circumstances mentioned in sub-rule (1) of R. 10 of the above Rules. Suspension under clause (a) is in contemplation of a disciplinary proceeding or pending a disciplinary proceeding. It would cease to exist, when the contemplated proceeding is abandoned or when the proceeding is completed, as the case may be. Suspension under clause (b) is when a case against a Government servant in respect of a criminal offence is under investigation or trial. In such a case, the suspension would cease to exist, when the investigation is finally abandoned or the criminal proceeding is concluded. Cl. (c) relates to suspension pending final orders in disciplinary proceedings in the interest of public. Suspension is an interlocutory action in a penal proceeding pending against a Government servant; and an order of suspension either ceases to exist or merges with the final order in that proceeding. (Para 3)

The appellant working as a Block Development Officer was suspended by an order of the State Government dated 20-11-57 pending investigation into two cases of misappropriation of money detected in his office. The case was investigated by the Police. The appellant was convicted by the Special Judge, but the same was set aside by the High Court in appeal by its judgment dated 16-8-60. The appellant moved the Government for reinstating him in service, which was turned down. On the other hand, on 20-11-62 proceedings were started against him under the Service Rules on charges of misappropriation of money and negligence of duty. The tribunal found him not guilty of misappropriation but held him to be guilty of gross negligence. It recommended compulsory retirement from service. The Government accepted the recommendation and on 27-7-65 it ordered that the appellant be compulsorily retired with effect from date on which he was placed under suspension i. e. from 20-11-57. The appellant challenged the order and pleaded that in any event he could be retired only with effect from 27-7-65 and not from 20-11-57. It was argued that the order of suspension dt. 20-11-57 ceased to exist on his being acquitted by the court and there being no fresh order of suspension thereafter, he must be deemed to be on duty and his removal could not be made with retrospective effect from 20-11-57.

Held, (1) that the order of suspension dt. 20-11-57, was made not in pursuance of any disciplinary proceedings (R. 10(1)(a)) but was one falling under Cl. (b) of R. 10

(1) of the Service Rules and therefore ended with the conclusion of the Criminal prosecution against the appellant on 16-8-60 which resulted in his acquittal.

(Para 3)

and (2) that though so, the conduct of the Government in refusing to reinstate him and starting disciplinary proceedings against him on 20-11-62 amounted to suspension from 29-11-62, the date on which the said cause of action was communicated to him or when he must be deemed to have no notice of Govt's refusal to reinstate him. He must be deemed to be under suspension with effect from 29-11-62 pending disciplinary proceedings and hence the appellant stood removed from service with effect from that date viz., 29-11-62, or from the date of his retirement on superannuation, if earlier.

T. N. Subramania Iyer, for Appellant;
Govt. Pleader, for Respondent.

ISAAC, J. :— This is an appeal by the petitioner in O. P. No. 2505 of 1965 from the judgment of a learned Single Judge of this Court.

2. The appellant, while he was working as a Block Development Officer at Mavelikara, was placed under suspension by an order of the State Government dated 20-11-1957 pending investigation into two cases of misappropriation of money detected in his office. The case was investigated by the police, and the appellant and his Head Clerk were prosecuted for misappropriation of Government money. Both of them were convicted by the Special Judge who tried them; but the appellant's conviction was set aside by this Court in appeal by judgment dated 16-8-1960. Thereafter the appellant moved the Government for reinstating him in service; but the Government did not accede to his request. On the other hand, they started proceeding against the appellant under the Kerala Civil Services (Disciplinary Proceedings Tribunal) Rules, 1960 on charges of misappropriation of money and negligence of duty.

Ext. P-1 dated 29-1-1962 is the memo of charges served on the appellant. The Tribunal in its report, Ext. P-5 dated 18th November 1964, found that the appellant was not guilty of misappropriation; but he was guilty of gross negligence; and it recommended to the Government that the appellant be compulsorily retired from service. The report was duly considered by the Government which accepted the finding of the Tribunal. The Government by their proceedings, Ext. P-9 dated 27th July 1965, ordered that the appellant be compulsorily retired from service with effect from the date on which he was placed under suspension. The Original Petition was filed to quash the aforesaid order of the Government. The appellant also claimed that, in any event, he could be removed from service only from the date of Ext. P-9, and not from 20-11-1957 on which date he was actually placed under suspension. This claim was put forward on the ground that the order of suspension ceased to exist with the termination of the criminal proceeding, which ended in the acquittal of the appellant by the High Court, and that thereafter there was no order suspending the petitioner from service. The learned Single Judge rejected both the contentions and dismissed the Original Petition.

3. The appellant's learned counsel did not contend before us that Ext. P-9 should be quashed as a whole. He only contended that the direction in Ext. P-9 that the removal from service would take place with retrospective effect from the date of the appellant's suspension was illegal and should be quashed. Dealing with this contention, the learned Single Judge stated as follows:—

"I do not think it is possible to accept the contention that there has been no order of suspension. Factually, the order of suspension passed on 20-11-1957 continued to be in force. Whether there was justification for keeping the petitioner under suspension after 15-8-1960 is a matter prima facie for the State Government to decide."

It appears to us that the question that actually arises for consideration was not properly placed before the learned Judge. The question for decision is not whether there is any justification to continue the order of suspension after the acquittal of the appellant, but whether it survived after the final termination of the criminal proceeding with the acquittal of the accused. This depends to a large extent in what context the suspension was made, and what the order of suspension actually said. Unfortunately, this order is not part of the records in this case; but it was read over to us by the learned Government Pleader who appeared for the respondent. It is clear therefrom that the suspension was made pending investigation into certain irregularities mentioned in the said order. There is no dispute that the suspension order was passed in exercise of the Government's power under R. 10 of the Kerala Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1960. Sub-rule (1) alone is relevant, and it reads as follows:—

10. Suspension:— (1) The appointing authority or any authority to which it is subordinate or any other authority empowered by the Government in that behalf may at any time place a Government servant under suspension,

(a) where a disciplinary proceeding against him is contemplated or is pending; or

(b) where a case against him in respect of any criminal offence is under investigation or trial; or

(c) where final orders are pending in the disciplinary proceeding, if the appropriate authority considers that in the then prevailing circumstances it is necessary, in public interest that the Government servant should be suspended from service."

A Government servant can be suspended only under any one or all of the three circumstances mentioned in the above sub-rule. The suspension of the appellant does not admittedly fall under clause (c) of Rule 10(1). Suspension under clause (a) is in contemplation of a disciplinary proceeding, or pending a disciplinary proceeding. It would cease to exist, when the contemplated proceeding is abandoned, or when the proceeding is completed, as the case may be. Suspension under clause (b) is when a case against a Government servant in respect of a criminal offence is under investigation or trial. In such a case, the suspension would cease to exist, when the investigation is finally abandoned or the criminal proceeding is concluded. Suspension is an interlocutory action in a penal proceeding pending against a Government servant; and an order of suspension either ceases to exist or merges with the final order in that proceeding.

If the appellant's suspension was made under clause (a) of Rule 10(1), it would remain in force until the disciplinary proceeding against him was finally disposed of. In this case it was finally disposed of by Ext. P-9 dated 27-7-1965. But if the appellant's suspension was under clause (b), it would remain in force until the final disposal of the criminal prosecution against him; and it was finally disposed of by the acquittal of the appellant on 16-8-1960. If the suspension was both under clause (a) and clause (b), it would remain in force until both the proceedings, namely, the disciplinary proceeding and the criminal proceeding are finally terminated. We have, therefore, to consider whether the suspension was under clause (a) or clause (b) or under both the clauses. The order of suspension does not say that it was being made in contemplation of any disciplinary proceeding against the appellant. The X-Branch of the Police started investigating a crime against the appellant for misappropriation of Government money, either immediately before his suspension or immediately after that; and as already stated, the police instituted a prosecution against him before the Special Judge as a result of that investigation. If the prosecution ended finally in the conviction of the appellant, there would have been no question of initiating any disciplinary proceeding against him. The necessary disciplinary punishment would have been awarded to him on the basis of the finding of the court in the criminal proceeding. It is not, therefore possible to say that the suspension of the appellant was in contemplation of any disciplinary enquiry. Disciplinary enquiry was contemplated only after the prosecution failed; and it was more than four years after the appellant was suspended. The order of suspension does not, therefore, fall under clause (a) of Rule 10(1); and it falls only under clause (b). Hence it would end with the conclusion of the criminal prosecution instituted against the appellant. The result is that the appellant's suspension ceases to exist on 16-8-1960, when this court acquitted him of the offences for which he was tried.

4. The learned Government Pleader contended that the order of suspension continued in force until the disciplinary enquiry is concluded, unless the suspension is cancelled earlier. In support of that contention, he relied on a decision of the Supreme Court in Balvantrai Ratilal Patel v. State of Maharashtra, (1968) 2 Lab LJ 700 = (AIR 1968 SC 800). In that case the appellant who was a medical officer in the service of the State of Bombay was "suspended pending further orders", at a time when an investigation by the Anti-corruption Branch of the Police into an offence of receiving illegal gratification was pending against him. The police instituted a prosecution; but it finally ended in the acquittal of the appellant. Then a disciplinary enquiry was started against him, as a result of which he was dismissed from service. No fresh order of suspension was passed against the appellant after the acquittal of the criminal charge. It was contended that the order of suspension came to an end with the acquittal of the appellant, and that the appellant should be deemed to be on duty until he was dismissed from service. This contention was repelled by the Supreme Court. The learned Government Pleader submitted that the case before us is exactly similar to one decided by the Supreme Court, and that the contention of the appellant's learned counsel in this case that the appellant's suspension came to an end with his acquittal cannot be sustained. It is better that we quote the following passage from the judgment of the Supreme Court which contains the contention advanced by the appellant in that case and the reasons stated by the Court for rejecting the same;

"It was contended on behalf of the appellant that he was suspended pending an inquiry into the charge for the criminal offence alleged to have been committed by him and as the proceedings in connexion with that charge ended with the acquittal of the appellant by the High Court on 15 February 1952, the order of suspension must be deemed to have automatically come to an end on that date. We see no justification for accepting this argument. The order of suspension dated 13 February 1950 recites that the appellant should be suspended with immediate effect "pending further order". It is clear therefore that the order of suspension could not be automatically terminated but it could have only been terminated by another order of the Government. Until therefore a further order of the State Government was made terminating the suspension; the appellant had no right to be reinstated to service."

This passage shows that the suspension would automatically come to an end with the termination of the criminal proceeding, in the absence of a provision to the contrary in the order of suspension. In the case before the Supreme Court, the suspension was "pending further orders", and the Supreme Court held that the suspension did not terminate until the Government passed further orders. The above decision does not, therefore, help the learned Government Pleader. It only lends support to what we have already stated.

5. The next question for consideration is whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the appellant is to be deemed to be on duty from 16-8-1960. It is admitted that the Government did not thereafter pass any order suspending the appellant from service. But after the appellant was acquitted by this Court he applied to the Government for reinstatement in service. The Government refused to do so; but they instituted the disciplinary proceeding against him as per Ext. P-1 dated 29-11-1962. The learned counsel for the appellant contended that, as there was no fresh order of suspension, the appellant should be deemed to be on duty, as he was willing to work and it was not due to any fault on his part that work was not allotted to him. We are unable to accede to this contention. We agree with the learned counsel that the Government was bound to reinstate the appellant in service when his suspension ended with his acquittal by this Court, unless they again suspended him on some valid ground. But in our opinion the Government's refusal to reinstate him in service followed by initiation of disciplinary proceeding amounts to suspension.

from the date on which the said cause of action was communicated to him. There is nothing to show when the appellant was informed that his request for reinstatement could not be allowed and that a disciplinary enquiry was contemplated against him. The disciplinary enquiry was started against him as per Ext. P-1 on 29-11-1962, and this gives the appellant notice of the Government's refusal to reinstate him in service pending the disciplinary enquiry, though he was acquitted in the criminal prosecution. We, therefore, hold that the appellant would be deemed to be under suspension with effect from 29-11-1962 pending the disciplinary enquiry.

6. In the result, we hold that the appellant would stand removed from service as per Ext. P-9 with effect from 29-11-1962, or from the date of his retirement on superannuation, if earlier. The judgment appealed from is modified to the above extent; and the appeal is dismissed in other respects. In the circumstances of the case, we make no order as to costs.

Appellant v. V. Gopinathan Nair and others, Respondents.

Second Appeals Nos. 1120 and 1287 of 1964. D/- 23-10-1968 from order of Dist. Court, Alleppey in A. S. Nos. 237 and 235 of 1962.

(A) Negotiable Instruments Act (1881), Ss. 85, 85A, 131, 131A — Protection under Ss. 85, 85A, when available stated — Negligence of drawee in cashing the draft held established — Protection under Ss. 131, 131A, when available stated — Protection held not available to collecting bank — (Civil P. C. (1968), Ss. 100-101 — Question of fact — Negligence).

Under the Act, a banker is protected only if he pays the amount in due course, that is, not only in accordance with the apparent tenor of the instrument but also in good faith and without negligence, and to a person, under circumstances not affording a reasonable ground for believing that he is not entitled to receive the payment.

In this matter, the law in India seems to be stricter than in England, and the protection afforded to the banker is not so wide.

The question whether there was negligence in making the payment is a question of fact. (1877) 47 LJ QB 303 (305) and AIR 1920 PC 88 (91), Ref.

Plaintiff purchased a demand draft from A branch of defendant bank (defendant 1) at Calcutta drawn on C Branch of defendant 1. It was payable to "Hurry Dass Auddy". Hurry Dass Auddy was a firm name of which P. W. 2 was the sole proprietor. The draft was sent to P. W. 2. But it was intercepted during transit and was presented by 3rd defendant for collection to S. Branch of the 2nd defendant, with a forged endorsement in his favour purporting to be that of payee Hurry Dass Auddy. The 2nd defendant credited the amount in the account of the 3rd defendant and cashed it from C Branch of defendant 1. It was established that the account of the firm "Hurry Dass Auddy" was being operated by P. W. 2, the proprietor and "Hurry Dass Auddy" was a fictitious person. This was known to the C Branch of defendant 1, where P. W. 2 had his account in the name of "Hurry Dass Auddy". Endorsement on the draft by the first payee was an endorsement in full. It was partly in manuscript and partly in a rubber stamp impression. It was as follows: "please pay to Esmitter & Co. Hurry Dass Auddy". The words "please pay to" were in manuscript while "Esmitter & Co." were in a rubber stamp impression.

Held that now "Hurry Dass Auddy" got the rubber stamp of "Esmitter & Co." of which the 3rd defendant claimed to be the proprietor, was something which should normally excite suspicion in the mind of a careful banker. The fact that the endorsement by the 3rd defendant was in the same rubber stamp impression should naturally have put the 1st defendant on enquiry as to how "Hurry Dass Auddy" got the rubber stamp. By a course of conduct, the C Branch of the 1st defendant bank had come to know that Hurry Dass Auddy is the name of the business concern of a customer of theirs, namely, P. W. 2. The Bank should therefore have been put on enquiry when they found that the signature of the payee as "Hurry Dass Auddy". The 1st defendant did not succeed in proving good faith and absence of negligence on its part in paying the amount to the 2nd defendant. (Paras 15, 16)

Held further the liability of the 2nd defendant (the collecting banker) had to be decided with reference to the provisions of Sections 131 and 131A of the Act. In determining the question whether a collecting Banker had or had not been negligent in a particular case it was necessary to take into consideration many factors, such as the customer, the account and surrounding circumstances. The burden of proving absence of negligence was on the 2nd defendant. The test of negligence under Section 131 was whether the payment, considered in the light of the circumstance antecedent and present, was so much out of ordinary course, that it ought to have aroused doubt in the banker's mind and caused him to make enquiries; and that primarily the enquiry should be to find out whether there was negligence in collecting a cheque and not in opening the account but if there was any antecedent or present circumstance which aroused the suspicion of the banker then it would be his duty before he collects the cheque to make the necessary enquiry; and undoubtedly one of the antecedent circumstance would be the opening of the account. AIR 1956 Cal 399 (409) and AIR 1948 Bom 1, Rel. on; AIR 1920 PC 88 and AIR 1946 Bom 482, Ref. (Paras 17, 18, 19)

The protection under Sections 131 and 131-A is afforded only if the Banker has received the payment on behalf of a customer in good faith and with due diligence. The draft was crossed generally. The evidence showed that the 2nd defendant Bank obviously treated the 3rd defendant as a favoured constituent or customer. All these facts may show that even though the 3rd defendant had a current account with the 2nd defendant Bank, it was doubtful whether he could be treated as a 'customer' for the purpose of Section 131 of the Act. The current account was opened and operated upon in flagrant violation of the rules of the Bank. No enquiry was made as regards the regularity of the endorsements in favour of "Esmmitter & Co." Hurry Dass Auddy, the payee under the draft was not admittedly a customer of the 2nd defendant. In the light of these facts, the 2nd defendant should have made an enquiry as to how the 3rd defendant came into possession of the draft and the circumstances under which 'Hurry Dass Auddy' happened to endorse the same in his favour. Such an enquiry was rendered all the more necessary in the face of the endorsement in full purported to have been made by the payee, 'Hurry Dass Auddy', on the draft partly in writing and partly by using the rubber stamp of the 3rd defendant. The 2nd defendant was not entitled to get the benefit of Section 131-A.

(B) Negotiable Instruments Act (1881), S. 131 — "Customer" who is, stated — (Words and Phrases — "Customer of bank").

The term customer is not defined in the Negotiable Instruments Act. Broadly speaking, a customer is a person who has the habit of resorting to the same place or person, to do business. So far as banking transactions are concerned he is a person, whose money has been accepted on the footing, that the Banker will honour up to the amount standing to his credit, irrespective of his connection being of short or long standing.

P. Krishnamoorthy and P. C. Chacko, for Appellant; V. Rama Shenoi and R. Raya Shenoi, for Respondent (No.1); P. K. Kurien, V. Desikan and K. A. Nayar and K. Sukumaran, for Respondent (No. 2).

JUDGMENT:— These appeals are directed against the decree and the judgment in O. S. No. 19 of 1954 of the District Court, Alleppey, subsequently renumbered as O. S. No. 229 of 1956 of the Alleppey Sub-court. The 1st defendant is the appellant in S. A. No. 1120 of 1964 and the 2nd defendant in S. A. No. 1287 of 1964.

2. The suit was for recovery of the amount covered by Ext. P-1, a demand draft, and the interest thereon, from defendants 1 to 3.

3. The plaintiff is the proprietor of a business carried on at Alleppey in the name and style of "The Pioneer Trades". Rama Prasad Auddy, P. W. 2 carried on a business at Calcutta in the name and style of M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy. M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy was a customer of the New Market branch of the Central Bank of India, Ltd., the 1st defendant.

4. The plaintiff used to purchase goods from M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy from 1953 onwards and pay the price thereof sometimes by purchasing demand drafts from the Alleppey branch of the 1st defendant-Bank on its New Market branch at Calcutta payable to Hurry Dass Auddy or order and delivering the same to M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy through P. W. 1, a friend of the plaintiff at Calcutta. Ext. P-1 is one such draft purchased by the plaintiff from the Alleppey branch of the 1st defendant-Bank for Rs. 4,000. It was drawn on the New Market branch of the 1st defendant at Calcutta and was payable to 'Hurry Dass Auddy'. It was sent by the plaintiff to P. W. 1 to be delivered over to M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy. It was intercepted during transit, and was presented before the Shambazar branch of the 2nd defendant by the 3rd defendant for collection, with a forged endorsement in his favour purporting to be that of the payee. The 3rd defendant endorsed Ext. P-1 in favour of the 2nd defendant. The 2nd defendant credited the amount covered by Ext. P-1 in the account of the 3rd defendant and cashed it from the New Market branch of the 1st defendant-Bank on 2-11-1953. The plaintiff's case was that (the appearance of) the endorsement on Ext. P-1 draft, purported to have been made by the payee, was sufficient to put the 1st defendant on enquiry, that the payment to the 2nd defendant by the 1st defendant was not a payment in the course, that the 1st defendant is liable to the plaintiff for the amount and the interest thereon, and that defendants 2 and 3 are guilty of conversion of the amounts, and are equally liable to the plaintiff for the amount and interest.

5. The 1st defendant contended that the 2nd defendant presented Ext. P-1 on 2-11-1953 through the clearing house and that the amount was paid in good faith and without negligence in accordance with the apparent tenor of the instrument; and claimed immunity under Section 85-A of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 (Act 26 of 1881), hereinafter referred to as the Act. The 2nd defendant contended that the amount covered by Ext. P-1 was collected on behalf of its customer, the 3rd defendant, in good faith and without negligence; and claimed protection under Section 131-A of the Act. The 3rd defendant did not contest the case.

6. The trial court held that the payment of the amount to the 2nd defendant by the New Market branch of the 1st defendant-Bank was not a payment in due course, and therefore, the 1st defendant was not protected by Section 85A of the Act. The Court also held that since the 2nd defendant collected the amount on behalf of its customer, the 3rd defendant, in good faith and without negligence, it is entitled to get the protection envisaged by Section 131-A of the Act. The suit was therefore decreed as against defendants 1 and 3, but dismissed as against the 2nd defendant.

7. The correctness of the judgment and the decree was challenged in A. S. No. 235 of 1962 by the plaintiff and by the 1st defendant in A. S. No. 237 of 1962 before the District Court.

8. The District Court agreed with the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge, and held that the 1st defendant is not entitled to claim immunity under Section 85A of the Act as the payment was not in due course, but differed from the finding of the trial court, and found that the 2nd defendant was not entitled to the protection under Section 131-A of the Act, and decreed the suit as against it also.

9. Both the courts below have found that M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy is a business concern of P. W. 2, that the concern had a current account in the New Market branch of the 1st defendant at Calcutta, that previous to Ext. P-1, two demand drafts were purchased by the plaintiff from the Alleppey branch of the 1st defendant on its New Market branch at Calcutta, payable to 'Hurry Dass Auddy,' that they were endorsed by P. W. 2 on behalf of the payee in his capacity as the proprietor of M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy, that the amounts due thereunder were credited in the account of M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy, that the 1st defendant therefore had reason to believe that the payee in Ext. P-1, namely, Hurry Dass Auddy was the business concern known as M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy and that P. W. 2 its sole proprietor, that the 1st defendant acted without due care and therefore the payment made by it to the 2nd defendant was not a payment in due course.

10. The main contention urged on behalf of the 1st defendant was that the payment made by the 1st defendant to the 2nd defendant was a payment in due course. In other words, the argument was that 'Hurry Dass Auddy' was the payee under Ext. P-1, that there was an endorsement on the instrument by a person purporting to be the payee, that the 1st defendant had no reason to suspect that 'Hurry Dass Auddy' was a fictitious person, or that the endorsement on the instrument was not an endorsement made by him, that there was no negligence in its thinking that the signature of payee was genuine and therefore it is entitled to the protection envisaged by section 85A of the Act.

11. Sections 85 and 85A of the Act read: "85(1) Where a cheque payable to be endorsed by or on behalf of the payee, the drawee is discharged by payment in due course.

(2) Where a cheque is originally expressed to be payable to bearer, the drawee is discharged by payment in due course to the bearer thereof, notwithstanding any endorsement whether in full or in blank appearing thereon, and notwithstanding that any such endorsement purports to restrict or exclude further negotiation.

85A. Where any draft, that is, an order to pay money, drawn by one office of a bank upon another office of the same bank for a sum of money payable to order on demand, purports to be endorsed by or on behalf of the payee, the bank is discharged by payment in due course."

12. Under the Act, a banker is protected only if he pays the amount in due course, that is, not only in accordance with the apparent tenor of the instrument but also in good faith and without negligences, and to a person, under circumstances not affording a reasonable ground for believing that he is not entitled to receive the payment.

"The corresponding English Section (S. 60) provides that the banker must in order to entitle him to protection pay the cheque in good faith and in the ordinary course of business; and under Section 90 of the Bills of Exchange Act, a thing is said to be done in good faith where it is done honestly, whether negligently or not. It would seem, therefore, that in English law, however negligent a banker might have been, provided he acts honestly, he is protected if the payment is one made in the ordinary course of business. Negligence does not necessarily preclude the protection of Section 60 of the English Act. In this matter, the law in India seems to be stricter than in England and the protection afforded to the banker is not so wide." (See the Negotiable Instruments Act by Bhashyam and Adiga — 11th Edition — page 410).

13. The question whether there was negligence in making the payment is a question of fact. In Metropolitan Railway Co. v. Jackson, (1878) 47 LJQB 303 at p. 305, Lord Chancellor Cairns said:—

"The Judge has to say whether any facts have been established by evidence from which negligence may be reasonably inferred; the jury has to say whether from those facts, when submitted to them, negligence ought to be inferred."

14. In Commissioners of Taxation v. English Scottish and Australian Bank Ltd., AIR 1920 PC 88 at p. 91. Lord Dunedin said that the question of negligence is one of fact and that a finding by a Judge is not liable to be interfered with unless it is not supported by any evidence.

15. The concurrent finding of the courts below on the question of negligence is clear. They have found that the branch of the 1st defendant-Bank at New Market, Calcutta, had reason to believe that 'Hurry Dass Auddy' is really the business concern known as "M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy", that P. W. 2 is its sole proprietor and that the payee in Ext. P-1 is really M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy of which P. W. 2 is the proprietor. That finding, I think, is supported by evidence. The endorsement in Ext. P-1 by the first payee is an endorsement in full. It is partly in manuscript and partly in a rubber stamp impression. It is as follows:

"please pay to Esmitter & Co. Hurry Dass Auddy". The words "please pay to" are in manuscript while 'Esmitter & Co.' are in a rubber stamp impression. How 'Hurry Dass Auddy' got the rubber stamp of 'Esmitter & Co.' of which the 3rd defendant claims to be the proprietor, is something which should normally excite suspicion in the mind of a careful banker. The fact that the endorsement by the 3rd defendant is in the same rubber stamp impression should naturally have put the 1st defendant on enquiry as to how 'Hurry Dass Auddy' got the rubber stamp.

16. Ext. P-29 is the folio of the ledger kept by the New Market branch of the 1st defendant in respect of demand drafts drawn by the Alleppey branch on the New Market branch of the 1st defendant. The demand drafts purchased by the plaintiff in favour of Hurry Dass Auddy are the only drafts included in the folio. Prior to the presentation of Ext. P-1 demand draft two other drafts Nos. 17/1 and 17/2 drawn on 3rd and 21st October respectively had been presented for encashment at the New Market branch of the 1st defendant by Rama Prasad Auddy (P. W. 2), the sole proprietor of the business concern M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy. He was having a current account in the New Market Branch for the last 20 years. P. W. 2 has sworn that he signs cheques and drafts as "For M/s Hurry Dass Auddy, Ramprasad Auddy, sole proprietor," and that the two demand drafts drawn in favour of "Hurry Dass Auddy" had been sent by him to the New Market branch of the 1st defendant for crediting their proceeds in Ext. P-30, the current account of M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy and that the amounts covered by the drafts have been credited. Ext. P-3 is the folio of the telegraphic transfer issue register of the Alleppey branch of the 1st defendant-Bank. From Ext. P-3 it is clear that from 5th August 1953, the plaintiff made remittances of amounts by T. T. to M/s Hurry Dass Auddy, Ext. P-28 is the corresponding T. T. register of the New Market branch of the 1st defendant-Bank. Ext. P-31 series are the T. T. receipts kept by the New Market branch of the 1st defendant-Bank in respect of Ext. P-3 remittances. Some of these receipts would show that the remittances were to "Hurry Dass Auddy." In all the receipts, P. W. 2 has signed "for M/s. Hurry Dass Auddy" describing himself as the sole proprietor. So, by a course of conduct, the New Market branch of the 1st defendant-Bank had come to know that 'Hurry Dass Auddy' is the name of the business concern of a customer of theirs, namely, P. W. 2. The 1st defendant's branch at New Market dealt with the two demand drafts drawn prior to Ext. P-1 in the same month. The Bank should therefore have been put on enquiry when they found that the signature of the payee as "Hurry Dass Auddy". No person employed in the New Market branch of the 1st defendant has been examined in the case to show the circumstances in which the payment under Ext. P-1 has been made to the 2nd defendant. I think, the 1st defendant has not succeeded in proving good faith and absence of negligence on its part in paying the amount to the 2nd defendant.

17. Then, the further question is whether the 2nd defendant is liable to the plaintiff. The liability of the 2nd defendant, has, to be decided with reference to the provisions of Sections 131 and 131-A of the Act. They read:—

"131. A banker who has in good faith and without negligence received payment for a customer of a cheque crossed generally or specially to himself shall not, in case the title to the cheque proves defective, incur any liability to the true owner of the cheque by reason only of having received such payment.

Explanation:— A banker receives payment of a crossed cheque for a customer within the meaning of this section notwithstanding that he credits his customer's account with the amount of the cheque before receiving payment thereof.

131-A. The provisions of this Chapter shall apply to any draft, as defined in Section 85A, as if the draft were a cheque."

In determining the question whether a collecting Banker has or has not been negligent in a particular case it is necessary to take into consideration many factors, such as the customer, the account and surrounding circumstances.

18. In Brahma v. Chartered Bank, AIR 1956 Cal 399 at p. 409, the Calcutta High Court observed:

"Now in finding out whether a collecting banker has or has not been negligent in a particular case, it becomes necessary to take into consideration many factors such as the customer, the account and the surrounding circumstances"

The burden of proving absence of negligence is on the 2nd defendant. In the above referred case, the Calcutta High Court said:

"The onus of proving "good faith" and "absence of negligence" is on the banker claiming protection under Section 131, Negotiable Instruments Act."

19. In Sanyasilingam v. Exchange Bank of India, AIR 1948 Bom 1, the Court held that the test of negligence under Section 131 is whether the payment, considered in the light of the circumstance antecedent and present, was so much out of ordinary course, that it ought to have aroused doubt in the banker's mind and caused him to make enquiries; and that primarily the enquiry should be to find out whether there is negligence in collecting a cheque and not in opening the account; but if there was any antecedent or present circumstance which aroused the suspicion of the banker then it would be his duty before he collects the cheque to make the necessary enquiry; and undoubtedly one of the antecedent circumstances would be the opening of the account. The Court said that where the account of the customer was opened without obtaining a reference and without any enquiry and where the manner in which the account was operated upon was peculiar, and where there was something in the endorsement to the customer which would excite suspicion, then it must be held that the bank failed to prove that it was not guilty of negligence in collecting the amount of the draft.

20. Counsel for the 2nd defendant referred to the decision in AIR 1920 PC 88, and said that there was no negligence on the part of the 2nd defendant.

The facts there were: One A. Friend of Sydney, put a cheque drawn by himself on the Australian Bank of Commerce for £786.13.3 into an envelope, along with some other cheques drawn by other members of his family, and addressed the envelope to the Commissioners of Taxation, George Street North, Sydney. This cheque was in payment of an assessment for income-tax. It was crossed with the word "Bank", that is to say, generally not specially. This cheque was stolen by some person unknown and was never cashed by the Commissioners of Taxation. On the following day a man who gave his name as Stewart Thallon entered the head office of the respondents' Bank at Sydney and stated that he wished to open an account. The Accountant took his name and address which this man gave at certain well known residential chambers in Sydney. He then handed in a sum of £20. The Accountant filled up the 'paid-in' slip and the account was duly opened and a cheque book issued to Thallon. On the following day the stolen cheque was handed in by Thallon; and on the next day Thallon withdrew three sums of £483.16.6, £260.10.0, and £50.12.6 by cheques drawn by himself. Thallon was never seen again and it was found that no person of that name lived at the address he had given.

The Commissioners of Taxation then filed an action from which the appeal went to the Privy Council against the Bank for conversion of the cheque. The Supreme Court for New South Wales held that the bank was not guilty of negligence.

In discussing the question of negligence, their Lordships of the Privy Council are at pains to point out that the negligence with which the Court was concerned was not in opening the account but "in collecting the cheque" though the circumstances connected with the opening of an account may shed light on the question whether there was negligence in collecting the cheque, and the test of negligence which their Lordships adopted was whether the transaction of paying in any given cheque coupled with the circumstances antecedent and present was so out of the ordinary course that it ought to have aroused doubts in the bankers' mind and caused them to make enquiry. Their Lordships emphasized that negligence was a question of fact and they rejected the argument of the learned Chief Justice of the Supreme Court that the care that the bankers should take should not be less than a man invited to purchase or cash such a cheque for himself might reasonably be expected to take. Their Lordships thought that it was no part of the business or ordinary practice of individuals to cash cheques which were offered to them, whereas it was part of the ordinary business or practice of a bank to collect cheques for their customers.

The argument that was presented to the Board was that the bank was negligent in collecting the cheques for a customer who was of recent introduction and about whom the bank knew nothing. Their Lordships then pointed out that there was nothing suspicious about the way the account was opened; they were of the opinion that there was nothing suspicious in the fact that a cheque was paid into that account for collection one day after the account had been opened; they further pointed out that if it was laid down that no cheque should be collected without a thorough inquiry as to the history of the cheque, it would render banking business as ordinarily carried on impossible; customers would often be left for long periods without available money. But their Lordships do say that if the cheque had been for some unusually large sum, perhaps suspicion might have been aroused; but whether the cheque is or is not for an unusually large sum is really a question of degree. Their Lordships finally point out that in the cheque presented by Thallon there was no note of alarm or of warning which could have aroused the suspicion of the Bank. Under the circumstances their Lordships dismissed the appeal and held that the Bank was not negligent.

21. Counsel also strongly relied on the decision of the Bombay High Court in Bapulal v. Nath Bank Ltd., AIR 1946 Bom 482 and said that the only question for consideration is whether there was negligence on the part of the 2nd defendant in collecting the draft and that the question whether there was negligence in opening an account in the name of the 3rd defendant was immaterial and relied on the observations of Chagla J. (as he then was):

"Primarily enquiry as to negligence must be directed in order to find out whether there is negligence in collecting the cheque and not in opening the account; but if there is any antecedent or present circumstance which aroused the suspicion of the banker then it would be his duty before he collects the cheque to make the necessary enquiry and undoubtedly one of the antecedent circumstance would be the opening of the account. In certain cases failure to make enquiries as to the integrity of the proposed customer would constitute negligence. But it would depend upon the facts and circumstances attendant upon the opening of an account by the new customer whether an enquiry about him was necessary and called for or not. There is no absolute and unqualified obligation on the Bank to make enquiries about the respectability of the proposed customer. It is true that modern banking practice requires that a customer should be properly introduced and it would be wiser and more prudent for a Bank not to accept a customer without some reference. But it cannot be suggested that after a Bank has been given a proper reference with regard to the proposed customer and although there are no suspicious circumstances attendant upon the opening of the account it is still incumbent upon the bank to make further enquiries with regard to the customer, and the bank cannot be held to be guilty of negligence in having failed to make any such further enquiries so as to disentitle it to the protection given by Section 131." (see the headnote).

The question whether negligence could be inferred from the circumstances in which an account was opened for a customer and the manner in which it was operated upon was considered in Lloyds Bank Ltd. v. Savory & Co., 1933 AC 201 at p. 236 Lord Wright said that:

"It is true that the question of absence of negligence must be considered separately in regard to each cheque, but it is also true that the matter must be considered, as Lord Dunedin says in Commissioners of Taxation v. English, Scottish and Australian Bank Ltd., 1920 AC 683 at 689, in view also of all the circumstances antecedent and present. There may thus be relevant negligence in connection with the opening of the customer's account by the banker. It is now recognised to be the usual practice of bankers not to open an account for a customer without obtaining a reference and without inquiry as to the customer's standing; a failure to do so at the opening of the account might well prevent the banker from establishing his defence under Section 82 if a cheque were converted subsequently in the history of the account: this rule was applied by Bailhache J. in Ladbroke v. Todd, (1914) III LT 43 who on that ground held that the banker had not made out his defence under Section 82. The matter is now so well appreciated by bankers that the appellants have a printed rule saying that no new current account is to be opened without knowledge of or full enquiry into the circumstances and character of the customer."

The passage would indicate that what goes into an account calls for as much careful scrutiny as what goes out and the circumstances in which an account is opened and operated upon are relevant to the enquiry.

22. In the light of these decisions, let us see whether there was negligence on the part of the 2nd defendant in collecting the draft. The protection under Sections 131 and 131-A is afforded only if the Banker has received the payment on behalf of a customer in good faith and with due diligence. Ext. P-1 shows that it is crossed generally. The term "customer" is not defined in the Act. Broadly speaking, a customer is a person who has the habit of resorting to the same place or person, to do business. So far as banking transactions are concerned he is a person, whose money has been accepted on the footing, that the Banker will honour up to the amount standing to his credit, irrespective of his connection being of short or long standing. The 3rd defendant, in this case, opened an account which the Shambazaar branch of the 2nd defendant-Bank on 27-11-1952. The account was opened by depositing Rs. 300. Ext. B is a copy of that account. After the account was opened, the 3rd defendant deposited on 29-11-1952 another sum of Rs. 300 by cheque. Thereafter, till the 31st of December, 1952 he withdrew amounts from the Bank in piecemeal. The balance he had to his credit on the 1st of January, 1953 was only Rs. 236. From 28th of April, 1953 the 3rd defendant began to withdraw amounts by cheque for less than Rs. 10. He had only a balance of Rs. 8 on the 31st of December, 1953. The balance to his credit was nil on the 25th November, 1954. Ext. I is the current account rules of the 2nd defendant-Bank, which would show that a current account is to be opened with not less than Rs. 500. It also would show that no agent of the Bank is authorised to open a current account for a sum of less than Rs. 500. The rules are also clear that the balance in the current account should not be allowed to fall below Rs. 300 at any time and that no cheque shall be drawn for a sum of less than Rs. 20 for payment over the counter.

It is clear from the evidence that no less than 12 cheques for less than Rs. 10 were honoured by the 2nd defendant-Bank obviously treating the 3rd defendant as a favoured constituent or customer. All these facts may show that even though the 3rd defendant had a current account with the 2nd defendant-Bank, it is doubtful whether he could be treated as a "customer" for the purpose of Section 131 of the Act. The current account was opened and operated upon in flagrant violation of the rules of the Bank as embodied in Ext. 1.

The testimony of D. W. 2 would reveal that before Ext. B account was opened, the 3rd defendant was not properly introduced. Ext. C is the application filed by the 3rd defendant for opening Ext. B account. The 3rd defendant, who is Sudhir Kumar Mithra as disclosed by Exts. P-20 and P-20(a) has described himself in Ext. C as Sudhir Kumar Mitter. The account was opened in the name of the firm "Esmmitter & Co." doing Hardware and Chemical business. The person who introduced the 3rd defendant is mentioned in Ext. C application as one K. Chakravathy. This person was never contacted by D. W. 2 or by any other officer of the 2nd defendant-Bank before the account was opened. The testimony of D. W. 2 would also show that the only person contacted was the brother of the 3rd defendant, Sushil Kumar Mithra, who is said to be a customer of the 2nd defendant-Bank. Barring the statement of D. W. 2, absolutely no record has been produced for making cut that Susil Kumar Mithra was a customer of the 2nd defendant-Bank. It is clear from Ext. C application that the name of Susil Kumar Mithra was not written at the time when the name of Sri K. Chakravathy was written. The name of Susil Kumar Mithra is written in a different hand and ink. Susil Kumar Mithra also does not figure as a witness in the case. It is difficult therefore to accept the testimony of D. W. 2 when he says that Ext. B account was opened after enquiries with Susil Kumar Mithra. The 3rd defendant, who is Sudhir Kumar Mithra and is also the brother of Susil Kumar Mithra has sworn his name in Exts. C

(B) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 132 and 148 and S. 28 — Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 91(a) — Puisne mortgagee not in possession of mortgaged property — His right to recover mortgage money becoming barred by limitation under Art. 132 — He has no subsisting right to redeem prior mortgage within S. 91(a) T. P. Act — Suit for redemption of prior mortgages even though not barred under Art. 148 is not maintainable. AIR 1925 Mad 76 & (1909) 5 Ind Cas 877 (Cal) & AIR 1933 Bom 25, Diss. from. (Travancore Limitation Act, S. 29, Arts. 119 and 136).

A puisne mortgagee who is not in possession of the mortgaged property and whose right to recover the mortgage money has become barred by limitation under Art. 132 Limitation Act has no right to sue for redemption of prior mortgages even though such right has not become barred by limitation under Art. 148 of the Limitation Act. AIR 1930 All 416 & AIR 1951 Trav-Co. 17 & AIR 1952 Trav-Co. 295 & AIR 1957 Trav-Co. 174 Dist. (Paras 10, 13)

With regard to a person to whom money is due charged on property he has two distinct remedies. He can either sue for the money due to him at any time within the period prescribed under the Limitation Act for that purpose or if he comes into possession of the property within that period retain possession of it and at the time of surrender of possession insist on payment to him of time barred debts charged on it also. The latter remedy is in character only a shield. This is not a rule peculiar to cases where there are several charges in respect of a property. It applies equally well to a case where there is only one mortgage in respect of a property. To recover the money due to him charged on property a mortgagee with possession has only 12 years under Art. 132 of the Limitation Act. But even after that right has become barred by limitation he can retain possession of the mortgaged property until the mortgage is redeemed, for which there is 60 years under Art. 148. If a suit for redemption is filed after the expiry of 12 years but within 60 years of the mortgage the mortgagee is entitled to get the mortgage money due to him before surrender of possession of the property although the right to recover that amount through suit has become barred. But such a right can be availed of only if the mortgagee or charge-holder gets into possession of the property before the right to recover the money charged on it becomes barred by limitation. (Para 11)

It is true that section 28 of the Limitation Act only provides for extinction of right to property where suit for recovery of possession of that property is not filed within the period mentioned in the Act and consequently has no application to omission to file suits for money charged upon property. The right to bring the mortgaged property to sale through court is the essence of the life of a charge. When that is lost by the bar of limitation if the mortgagee is not in possession of the mortgaged property nothing survives the barred charge except an imperfect legal right not constituting an interest in the property sufficient to attract Section 91(a) of the T. P. Act and consequently unenforceable in action. The right of redemption given to puisne mortgagee is only ancillary to his right of sale and when that right is lost by limitation the right of redemption also becomes lost. P. Subramanian Potti, S. A. Nagendran,
P. A. Mohammed and C. P. Sudhakara
Prasad, for Appellant; G. Vishwanatha Iyer and S. Bhagavathilekshmi Ammal, for Respondents.

NARAYANA PILLAI, J. :- The suit filed on the strength of Ext. F, a hypothecation bond dated 12-3-1923, for redemption of 2 earlier mortgages dated 29-4-1909 and 11-2-1910 of the same properties and copies of which are Exts. XI and XII, was dismissed by both the lower Courts and it is from these decrees that the present Second Appeal has been filed by the plaintiffs.

2. The transactions took place in the erstwhile Travancore State. Under Art. 119 of the Travancore Limitation Act, 6 of 1100 (M. E.), the appellants had 12 years' time to recover through suit the money due under Ext. F. That was not availed of by them. According to the learned Advocate General who appeared for them Ext. F was a mortgage by conditional sale, it had worked itself out as a sale and therefore they as owners of the properties had a right to redeem the earlier mortgages even though the right to claim the amount due under Ext. F had become barred by limitation. He argued that even if Ext. F had become barred under the Limitation Act that bar related only to recovery of money due under Ext. F and not to the other rights including the right of redemption of the earlier mortgages that the appellants had under Ext. F, that the right of redemption could be lost only after the expiry of the period provided for redemption in the Limitation Act, that that period not having elapsed on the date of suit they were competent in the present suit to redeem the earlier mortgages for that reason also and that the suit was not barred by limitation. These in brief were the points pressed by him when this appeal was heard.

3. We must now deal with the question whether the appellants can be allowed to redeem the earlier mortgages on the ground that Ext. F was a mortgage by conditional sale and that it had worked itself out as a sale. The document is styled as a "Sthreedhana Eedadharam". It was executed for 14,000 Fanams by one Meeran Pillai in favour of his daughter Pathummal and her husband Peerukannu. The consideration for the document was the Stridhanam amount agreed to be paid by Meeran Pillai to Pathummal and Peerukannu at the time of their marriage. It is stated in the document that it was being executed as Meeran Pillai was not in a position to pay the amount ready cash. He agreed to pay the hypothecation amount within a year. If it was not paid within that time he further agreed that Pathummal may enjoy the properties as full owner. According to the learned Advocate General as Meeran Pillai did not pay the hypothecation amount within the time stipulated in Ext. F the transaction had become a sale of the properties.

4. The Transfer of Property Act, for short the T. P. Act, had no statutory force in the erstwhile Travancore State. Nevertheless, the courts there were freely following many of the principles laid down in that Act. In this connection the following observations in Velandy Vadhiar v. Sankarapandian Mudaliar, 1943 Trav-Co. LR 425 of Sankarasubba Iyer, J. who was for long a Judge of the High Court there and who had wide experience with regard to the conditions prevalent and the state of the law there are entitled to great weight:

"It cannot be said that the prevailing view in a neighbouring Presidency will not have affected the people of the State in so far as their legal relations are concerned. The Transfer of Property Act became law in British India in 1882. This Court has been accepting the provisions of the Act and acting upon them, when they are in accordance with justice and equity, even though the enactment is of no statutory force in the State. It is therefore probable that mortgages in Travancore, executed at least after 1882, when the Transfer of Property Act became statute law in British India, might have been executed in accordance with the principles contained there rather than on the basis of an archaic rule embodied in the Hindu Smritis."

The conditions laid down in Section 58 (c) of the T. P. Act which defines a mortgage by conditional sale were applied to the transaction in dispute in 1943 Trav-Co. LR 425 to find out whether it was really a mortgage by conditional sale. In Padmanabha Pillai v. Umamaheswara Iyer, 1948 Trav-Co. LR 556 also the Travancore High Court freely followed the principles in the T. P. Act for construing the documents which came up for interpretation there to find out whether they were mortgages by conditional sale. From all these it has to be taken that even in the erstwhile Travancore State a transaction after 1882 could be treated a mortgage by conditional sale only if it satisfied the conditions laid down in Section 58(c) of the T. P. Act.

5. Section 58(c) read thus:—

"Where the mortgagor ostensibly sells the mortgaged property — on condition that on default of payment of the mortgage-money on a certain date the sale shall become absolute, or on condition that on such payment being made the sale shall become void, or on condition that on such payment being made the buyer shall transfer the property to the seller, the transaction is called a mortgage by conditional sale and the mortgagee a mortgagee by conditional sale:

Provided that no such transaction shall be deemed to be a mortgage, unless the condition is embodied in the document which effects or purports to effect the sale."

It shows that in order that a transaction can be treated as a mortgage by conditional sale it should, to begin with, have the resemblance of a sale. That is implied in the expression "ostensibly sells" at the beginning of the definition. Where the transaction has, to start with, the appearance of only a mortgage it cannot come under S. 58(c). In such a transaction provision to treat it as a sale if the mortgage amount is not paid within a stipulated period is a clog on the right of redemption and cannot be given effect to. No doubt the provision to treat the transaction as a sale in a mortgage document is also an agreement between the parties. But is there consideration for it in order to treat it also as a valid contract? It is a special agreement in the contract of mortgage. Let me take Ext. F in the instant case. The consideration for the mortgage was 14,000 Fns. It got itself exhausted by the contract of mortgage. The special agreement to treat the transaction as a sale if the mortgage amount was not paid within a particular time was really outside the contract of mortgage. Time of payment is not of the essence of a mortgage transaction. Consequently non-payment of the mortgage amount within the period stipulated in the mortgage document cannot be deemed a detriment furnishing the consideration for the special agreement to treat the transaction as a sale of the mortgaged property. Really there was no consideration for that special agreement.

6. Without attempting to survey all the cases dealing with the subject of mortgage by conditional sale the following may be referred to now as being representative:

(1) In 1943 Trav-Co. LR 425 one of the questions which had to be considered was whether Ext. A in that case was a mortgage by conditional sale. It was a hypothecation bond which provided for payment of the principal amount and interest before a particular date. If the money due under it was not paid within the stipulated period the transaction was directed to be treated as a sale of the property covered by the hypothecation bond. It was held by a Full Bench that the document could not be treated as a mortgage by conditional sale.

(2) 1948 Trav-co. LR 556 is also a decision of a Full Bench. There it was interpretation of certain mortgage transactions with possession that arose for consideration. In them also there were provisions for treating them as sales if the mortgage amounts were not paid within the periods prescribed. They were not treated as mortgages by conditional sale.

(3) In Mathen v. Kottayam Bank Ltd., 1956 Ker LT 63, the document that came up for interpretation was styled as a "Sthreedhanam udampady." It was provided in it that if the amount mentioned in it was not paid within 2 years the property covered by it was to be enjoyed by the person in whose favour it was executed with full proprietary rights. The amount was not paid within the stipulated period. It was held that the document was only a mortgage with possession.

(4) In Mrs R. F. Gomez v. P. V. Chelammal, 1957 Ker LT 495, with regard to the stipulation in a mortgage deed that if the mortgage was not redeemed within a certain period the transaction had to be treated as a sale it was held that it was a clog on redemption and was invalid.

(5) In Mehrban Khan v. Makhana, AIR 1930 PC 142 it was the interpretation of a mortgage deed that provided for the mortgagees becoming owners of the mortgaged properties if the mortgage was not redeemed within 19 years that came up for interpretation. The mortgage was not redeemed within that time. The case arose from a decision of the Judicial Commissioner in the erstwhile North West Frontier Province where the T. P. Act had no statutory force. It was held that that matter had to be decided by equity and good conscience and that that meant that the rules of English law applied. Applying those rules it was held by the Privy Council that the provision in the document stipulating the mortgagees becoming owners of the mortgaged property if the mortgage was not redeemed within the prescribed period was a clog upon the equity of redemption and that consequently it was void.

(6) In Thumbuswamy Moodelly v. Hos-sain Rawthen, (1876-78) ILR 1 Mad 1 (PC) a mortgage deed provided for the income from the mortgaged properties being utilised for payment of Government revenue and similar other things by the mortgagee and thereafter the balance being utilised by him for the liquidation of the mortgage debt. It also provided that after the period prescribed in the document if on settlement of accounts it was found that money was still due to the mortgagee he was to become the purchaser at a fixed value of so much of the land as would satisfy such balance. The Privy Council construed it as a mortgage. It was observed in that case that the distinction between a sale with a condition for repurchase and mortgage by conditional sale was dependent upon the intention of the parties and that such intention could be proved by oral evidence.

(7) In Sheoram Singh v. Babu Singh, AIR 1926 All 493 a mortgage deed which provided for that document being treated as a sale deed if the mortgage amount was not paid within the time stipulated was construed as a mortgage by conditional sale.

7. Except in the last mentioned case in all the other cases referred to above a transaction which originated as a mortgage was not treated as a mortgage by conditional sale. In (1876-77) ILR 1 Mad 1 (PC) it was observed that allowing the parties to adduce oral evidence to prove their intention to ascertain whether a transaction was a mortgage by conditional sale would open a wide field of litigation. It was also observed that the state of the law as it stood was unsatisfactory and that it called for the interposition of the Legislature. It was a few years thereafter that the T. P. Act was passed. One of the decisions followed in AIR 1926 All 493 was (1876-77) ILR 1 Mad 1 (PC). With great respect to the learned Judges who decided AIR 1926 All 493 it has to be stated that due importance does not appear to have been given by them in that decision to the principle that a transaction can be treated as a mortgage by conditional sale only if, to begin with, it was ostensibly a sale.

"Art. 132. To enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property.

Twelve years

When the money sued for becomes due."

"Art. 148. Against a mortgagee to redeem or to recover possession of immoveable property mortgaged.

Sixty years

When the right to redeem or to recover possession accrues : "

8. According to the learned Advocate General besides the right to recover the money due under Ext. F the appellants being puisne mortgagees had also a right

I respectfully disagree with that decision and agree with the other decisions referred to above. On an examination of the provisions of Ext. F in the light of the principles and the decisions discussed above I hold that Ext. F is not a mortgage by conditional sale and that the condition in it for the mortgage working itself out as a sale is a clog on the right of redemption and as such invalid.

8. I turn now to the question whether the appellants can be allowed to redeem the mortgages, Exts. XI and XII, treating Ext. F as a pure mortgage without possession. Art. 119 of the Travancore Limitation Act, corresponding to Art. 132 of the Indian Limitation Act, 9 of 1908, provided for 12 years from the date the money became due for institution of suits for recovery of money due charged on property. The right to recover the money due under Ext. F, had become barred by limitation long before the institution of the present suit. Art. 136 of the Travancore Limitation Act fixed a period of 60 years for redemption of mortgages. The corresponding provision in the Indian Act, 9 of 1908, is Art. 148 which provided a period of 60 years for institution of suits for redemption of mortgages. Section 29 of the Travancore Limitation Act corresponding to Section 28 of the Indian Limitation Act, 9 of 1908, provided that at the determination of the period mentioned in the Articles for a person for institution of a suit for recovery of possession of property his right to such property would get extinguished. It was agreed by learned counsel appearing for both sides when this appeal was heard that the right to redeem the prior mortgages, Exts. XI and XII, had not become barred by limitation on the date of suit. For convenience reference is being made hereafter only to the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act and wherever the words 'Limitation Act' are mentioned they are with reference to the Indian Act, 9 of 1908. We shall now read Section 28 and Articles 132 and 148 of the Limitation Act:

"Section 28. At the determination of the period hereby limited to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any property, his right to such property shall be extinguished."

under Section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act to redeem the prior mortgages and the latter right had not become barred by limitation on the date of suit.

Even as regards the former right for recovery of the money due under Ext. F only the right to recover it through suit had become barred on the date when the present suit was filed. There is nothing in the Limitation Act to indicate that on the expiry of the period fixed in it for enforcement through suit of the right to recover money charged on property that right is lost to the mortgagee for being used in other manners also. Section 28 of the Limitation Act which provides for extinction of rights in property applies only to omission to institute within the prescribed period suits for possession of property and not to suits for recovery of money charged on property. If a mortgagee is in possession of property and money is due to him on other accounts charged on that property he can recover all those amounts on settlement of accounts at the time of redemption. That is an instance to show that although a suit to recover the money charged on property may be barred under Art. 132 of the Limitation Act it could still be recovered if the person entitled to it was in possession of that property. That indicates that even if the right to recover the money charged on property is barred under Art. 132 the charge-holder has still an interest in the property and any interest in the property is sufficient to entitle him to claim redemption of prior mortgages under Section 91 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, which reads as follows:—

"Besides the mortgagor, any of the following persons may redeem, or institute a suit for redemption of, the mortgaged property, namely:—

(a) any person (other than the mortgagee of the interest sought to be redeemed) who has any interest in, or charge upon, the property mortgaged or in or upon the right to redeem the same;"

In the present case on the date of suit the period prescribed for redemption of the prior mortgages had not become barred by limitation. Therefore the suit by the appellants on the strength of Ext. F for redemption of the prior mortgages was competent and had not become barred by limitation. So goes the interesting and apparently logical argument of the learned Advocate General.

10. I shall now examine the decisions cited by him in support of the position he has taken. Joikhu Bhunja v. Sitla Baksh Singh, AIR 1930 All 416; Varaha Devaswom v. Ummer Sait, AIR 1951 Trav-Co. 17; and P. Neelakantan v. Umminnui Pillai 1952 Ker LT 129=AIR 1952 Trav-Co. 295 are cases in which on settlement of accounts at the time of the redemption mortgagees were directed to be paid not merely the money due under the mortgages which were sought to be redeemed but also time-barred debts charged on the mortgaged property.

In other words, the time-barred debts charged on the mortgaged property were allowed to be tacked on to the mortgage amount at the time of redemption of the mortgage. In all those decisions it was while the mortgagee was in possession of the mortgaged property that the debt due to him charged on the property became barred by limitation. In In Re Hepburn; Ex Parte, Smith, 1884-14 QB 394 Cave, J. said:—

"There is in law no right without a remedy; and, if all remedies for enforcing a right are gone, the right has in point of law ceased to exist. In the case of a debt the ordinary and universal remedy is by action against the debtor. There may, however, and sometimes does exist another remedy, not by action against the debtor, but arising out of the possession of property of the debtor which by law or contract may be detained by the creditor until the debt is paid. This latter remedy may exist, although the remedy by action is barred; and in that case the debt continues to exist so far as is necessary for the enforcement of this right of lien but not for enforcing the remedy by action. When the debt is barred by the statute and the creditor has no lien, the debt is gone for all purposes."

This was one of the decisions followed in AIR 1951 Trav-Co. 17 and Mariyakutty v. Chaladean Syrian Bank Ltd., Trichur, AIR 1957 Trav-Co. 174. In the latter case a person in possession of pledged goods was held entitled to hold those goods until he was paid the money due to him in respect of those goods even though the right to recover that money through suit had become barred by limitation. These decisions have application only to cases where the charge-holder in respect of a property comes into possession of it before the creation of the charge or before the right to recover the money charged on it becomes barred by limitation and not to cases where he comes into possession of it after the right to recover the money has become barred by limitation.

11. With regard to a person to whom money is due charged on property he has two distinct remedies. He can either sue for the money due to him at any time within the period prescribed under the Limitation Act for that purpose or if he comes into possession of the property within that period retain possession of it and at the time of surrender of possession insist on payment to him of time-barred debts charged on it also. The latter remedy is in character only a shield.

This is not a rule peculiar to cases where there are several charges in respect of a property. It applies equally well to a case where there is only one mortgage in respect of a property. To recover the money due to him charged on property a mortgagee with possession has only 12 years under Art. 132 of the Limitation Act. But even after that right has become barred by limitation he can retain possession of the mortgaged property until the mortgage is redeemed, for which there is 60 years under Art. 148. If a suit for redemption is filed after the expiry of 12 years but within 60 years of the mortgage the mortgagee is entitled to get the mortgage money due to him before surrender of possession of the property although the right to recover that amount through suit has become barred. But such a right can be availed of only if the mortgagee or charge-holder gets into possession of the property before the right to recover the money charged on it becomes barred by limitation. If the rule was otherwise a charge-holder whose right to recover the amount due to him becomes barred by limitation, by taking an assignment of the rights of a mortgagee with possession and getting into possession of the property can retain possession of it until the time-barred debt also is paid. But that is not the law.

12. The decisions dealing with the question as to whether the mortgagee who is not in possession of the property and whose right to recover the mortgage amount has become barred by limitation has a subsisting right to redeem an earlier mortgage in respect of the property can now be considered. In Lakshmanan v. Sella Muthu, AIR 1925 Mad 76 the Court was concerned with two mortgages in respect of the same properties in favour of two different persons. Each of the mortgagees obtained a decree on his mortgage without impleading the other and in execution purchased the equity of redemption. The puisne mortgagee after purchasing the equity of redemption in execution of the decree obtained by him sued for redemption of the prior mortgage. Following Nidhiram Bandopadhyaya v. Sarbessur Biswas, 5 Ind Cas 877=14 Cal WN 439 it was held that it was Art. 132 and not Art. 148 of the Limitation Act that applied to the case and that as the suit was filed more than 12 years after the date of the puisne mortgage it was barred by limitation. In Sayamali v. Anisuddin, AIR 1929 Cal 609 (FB) a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that if it was supposed that it was decided in (1909) 5 Ind Cas 877=14 Cal WN 439 that a suit for redemption was governed by Art. 132 then it was wrongly decided. In Sundar Das v. Beli Ram,

AIR 1933 Lah 503 it was held following AIR 1929 Cal 609 (FB) that it was Art. 148 and not Art. 132 that applied to a suit by a puisne mortgagee to redeem a prior mortgage. No doubt in that case the suit by the puisne mortgagee was filed more than 12 years after the date of his mortgage. But the question as to whether he had a subsisting right to redeem the earlier mortgage was not considered. That was because the suit happened to be disposed of by the trial Court on the question of limitation and the other questions involved in the suit had to be decided by the trial Court after remand. In Ramjhari Koer v. Kashi Nath, AIR 1926 Pat 337 the learned Judges who decided that case differed from the view taken in (1909) 5 Ind Cas 877=14 Cal WN 439 and holding that it was Art. 148 that applied to a suit by a puisne mortgagee to redeem a prior mortgage decreed redemption. No doubt in that case the suit was filed more than 12 years after the date of the second mortgage. But the question as to whether the puisne mortgagee in that case had a subsisting right to redeem was not specifically considered there. Priya Lal v. Champa Ram, AIR 1923 All 271 (2) was also a suit by a puisne mortgagee for redemption of a prior mortgage. In that case each of the mortgagees had obtained a decree on his mortgage without impleading the other and purchased the mortgagor's right in court auction. It was held that the suit for redemption by the puisne mortgagee was governed by Art. 148 and not Art. 132 of the Limitation Act. In Ram Adhar v. Shankar Baksh Singh, AIR 1935 Oudh 139 it was observed that although a puisne mortgagee's right to recover the mortgage amount would be lost by efflux of time if he omitted to bring a suit for sale or foreclosure within the statutory period of 12 years his right as a mortgagee would not get extinguished by Section 28 of the Limitation Act. That was because that section was confined to suits for possession. It was held in that case that when a puisne mortgagee after his right to recover the mortgage amount had become barred by limitation instituted a suit for redemption of the prior mortgage it was governed by Art. 148 and not 132 of the Indian Limitation Act. Nevertheless, the suit in that case was dismissed on the ground that he had no subsisting right to redeem. The reason given was that the right given to a puisne mortgagee for redemption of a prior mortgage was for the protection of his right to recover the mortgage amount and that when the remedy available to him in respect of that right had been lost by limitation he was left with nothing which required protection. In Nathmal v. Nilkanth, AIR 1933 Bom 25 also the suit for redemption was filed after the right of the puisne mortgagee to enforce his claim for the mortgage amount had become barred by limitation. Although the suit was dismissed on other grounds it was observed in that case that even though the puisne mortgagee's right to enforce his mortgage under Art. 132 of the Limitation Act had become barred he was nevertheless entitled to redeem the prior mortgage. This view was dissented from by the Cochin High Court in the Full Bench decision in George v. Raghava Menon, 39 Cochin LR 480. It was observed there that if the puisne mortgagee did not sue within 12 years for the mortgage amount the foundation of his right to redeem itself disappeared. It was further observed that the words "interest in or charge upon" occurring in Section 91 of the T. P. Act meant subsisting interest or charge.

13. A suit by a puisne mortgagee for redemption of a prior mortgage is governed by Art. 148 and not Art. 132 of the Limitation Act. I respectfully disagree with the decisions which have taken an opposite view. The question as to whether a puisne mortgagee has a right to redeem an earlier mortgage depends upon the construction of Section 91(a) of the T. P. Act. According to that section any person 'who has an interest in or charge upon' the mortgaged property can sue to redeem. The expression 'any interest in or charge upon' necessarily implies a subsisting interest or subsisting charge. A mortgagee without possession of the mortgaged property and whose right to recover the mortgage money has become barred by limitation cannot be considered as a person who has a subsisting interest in or charge upon the mortgaged property. It is true that Section 28 of the Limitation Act only provides for extinction of right to property where suit for recovery of possession of that property is not filed within the period mentioned in the Act and consequently has no application to omission to file suits for money charged upon property. It is also true that if a mortgagee does not sue for recovery of the mortgage amount due to him within the period fixed in the Act only his right to recover the mortgage amount through suit becomes barred by limitation and that there is nothing in the Limitation Act or any other law to show that his other rights under the mortgage transaction would get extinguished. But has he rights in the mortgaged property other than the right to get the mortgage amount? The right to bring the mortgaged property to sale through court is the essence of the life of a charge. When that is lost by the bar of limitation, if the mortgagee is not in possession of the mortgaged property nothing survives the barred charge except an imperfect legal right not constituting an interest in the property sufficient to attract Sec. 91 (a) of the T. P. Act and consequently unenforceable in action. The right of redemption given to a puisne mortgagee is only ancillary to his right of sale and when that right is lost by limitation the right of redemption also becomes lost. I respectfully disagree with the decisions which have taken a different view in this respect, also.

14. As the right to recover the money due under Ext. F had become barred by limitation before the institution of the present suit the appellants have no right to redeem the mortgages, Exts. XI and XII.

In the result, this appeal is dismissed with costs.

15. ISAAC, J. : I agree with the conclusions of my learned brother on the two points raised in this appeal, and that it should accordingly be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(A) Panchayats—Kerala Panchayats Act (32 of 1960), Ss. 96, 97 — Constitution of India, Art. 246, Sch. 7, List 1, Entry 52 and List 2, Entry 6 — Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act (1958), Ss. 5, 6 and 2 — Validity of Ss. 96, 97 of Kerala Act — State legislature held competent to enact law contained in these sections.

Sections 96 and 97 of the Kerala Panchayats Act and the Rice-Milling Industry (Regulation) Act deal with entirely different matters. Sections 96 and 97 of the Panchayats Act relate only to matters mentioned in Entry 6 of the State List; and they do not trench on Entry 52 in the Union List. Therefore, the State Legislature was competent to enact the law contained in these sections. (Para 8)

having regard to other relevant factors. The object of Section 96 of the Kerala Panchayats Act is to regulate the use of places within the Panchayat for purposes which in the opinion of the Government are likely to be offensive or dangerous to human life or health or property. Section 97 of this Act shows that its object is to control and regulate the establishment of factories, workshops and workplaces and installation of machineries and manufacturing plants within the Panchayat. The Rules made under the Panchayats Act would show that what is relevant in the grant of permission under the above section is the safety of the establishment and the persons employed therein as well as considerations of public health and sanitation. (Para 8)

(B) Panchayats — Kerala Panchayats Act (32 of 1960), Ss. 96, 97, 76 — Kerala Panchayats (Licensing of Dangerous and Offensive Trades and Factories) Rules (1963) — Validity of — Provisions relating to levy of fees are invalid — Issue of licenses and grant of permissions being conditional upon payment of such fees, provisions relating to issue of licenses and grant of permissions also become invalid — (Constitution of India, Art. 265).

The provisions contained in Sections 96 and 97 of the Panchayat Act and the Rules relating to levy of fees are invalid. As the issue of licenses and grant of permissions is conditional upon payment of such fees, the provisions relating to the issue of licenses and grant of permissions also become invalid. (Para 9)

There is no case that levy of fees is related to actual service, if any, rendered to the class of persons who pay the same, or that the total collections on this account are earmarked for rendering any service for those persons. On the other hand, the levy is admittedly for augmenting the general revenue of the Panchayat. Section 76 of the Panchayats Act expressly provides that all moneys received by the Panchayat shall constitute a fund called the Panchayat Fund, and that all taxes, duties, cesses, surcharge and fees levied under the Act or other law shall be included in the said fund. Such a levy is not a fee. Case law discussed. (Para 9)

A legislature should be presumed to have acted within its powers; and if a statutory provision would yield to two constructions, one of which would make it beyond the power of the legislature and the other construction would bring it within that power, it has to be construed in the latter manner. M. U. ISAAC, J. :— These three cases are the sequence of a criminal complaint which the Executive Officer of Elavally Panchayat, (hereinafter referred to as the appellant) instituted as C. C. No. 248 of 1967 in the Sub-Magistrate's Court, Chowghat against one Smt. Rosa (hereinafter referred to as the respondent).
2. The respondent is the owner of a rice mill. The rice-milling industry is regulated by the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act, 1958. She got a permit under Section 5 and a license under Section 6 of the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act for the establishment of a rice mill within the Elavally Panchayat; and accordingly she established a rice mill. Section 96 of the Kerala Panchayats Act, 1960 provides that the Panchayat may with the previous approval of the Director notify that no place in the Panchayat area shall be used for any of the purposes specified in the rules made in this behalf being purposes for which in the opinion of the Government, are likely to be offensive or dangerous to human life or health or property, without a licence issued by the executive authority and except in accordance with the conditions specified in such license. Section 97 of this Act provides, among other things, that no person shall, without the permission of the Panchayat and except in accordance with the conditions specified in such permission, instal in any premises any machinery, not being a machinery exempted by rules. Section 98 empowers the Government to make rules in respect of matters mentioned in Sections 96 and 97. Section 129 of the Act contains the general rule making power. In exercise of the powers conferred by the aforesaid sections of the Panchayats Act, the Government made the Kerala Panchayats (Licensing of Dangerous and Offensive Trades and Factories) Rules 1963, (hereinafter referred to as the Rules.). The rules provide for the issue of licenses under Section 96 and the issue of permits under Section 97. Schedule I to the Rules specifies the purposes which in the opinion of the Government are likely to be offensive or dangerous to human life or health or property.

3. The Elavally Panchayat has notified under Section 96 of the Kerala Panchayat Act that no place within its limit shall be used for any of the above purposes without a license from the executive authority. Item 83 in Schedule I to the Rules is "Machinery — Used for industrial Purposes."; and item 94 is "Paddy — Boiling or husking by machinery (for other than domestic use)". Rice mills fall under both the above items. So, under the Panchayat Act and the Rules a person has to take a license and also obtain a permit for establishing a rice mill within the limits of the Elavally panchayat. The respondent did not obtain from the appellant any license for use of the mill premises. She applied for permission, to which she did not get a reply; and she started the mill without either the license or the permission. Section 109(3) of the Panchayats Act provides that, if orders on an application for a license or permission are not communicated to the applicant within 30 days or such longer period as may be prescribed in any class of cases, after the receipt of the application by the executive authority, the application shall be deemed to have been allowed. Section 132 of this Act provides, among other things, that whoever contravenes any of the provisions of the Act mentioned in Schedule III thereto shall be punishable with fine which may extend to the amount mentioned therein. Sections 96 and 97 are included in the above Schedule.

4. In the light of the above provisions of the Panchayat Act and the Rules, the appellant instituted C. C. 248 of 1967, charging the respondent with offences under Sections 96 and 97 of the Act. The trial court found the respondent guilty under Section 96 and sentenced her to pay a fine of Rs. 20/-. It acquitted her of the offence under Section 97, holding that, for failure of the executive authority to communicate its orders on the application for permission within the prescribed period, the respondent should be deemed to have been granted the permission. The appellant filed the present Criminal Appeal from the acquittal of the accused under Section 97 of the Panchayats Act. The respondent filed an appeal before the District Magistrate, Trichur from the order of conviction under Section 96. The appeal was dismissed; and the Criminal Revision Petition has been filed from the judgment of the District Magistrate. The respondent has stated several grounds in the Revision Petition; but at the hearing, the learned counsel urged only two points of law which she has raised against the maintainability of the prosecution. They are:—

(i) Sections 96 and 97 of the Kerala Panchayats Act, in so far as they relate to rice-milling industry, are beyond the legislative competence of the State Legislature, as rice mill industry falls under entry No. 52 in List I of the VII Schedule to the Constitution, and Parliament alone has the power to make any law in respect of that matter; and

(ii) The issue of licenses under Section 96 and permissions under Section 97 of the Panchayats Act is conditional upon payment of prescribed fees. What is prescribed as "fees" is not really fees; and the provisions relating to the issue of licenses and permissions under the Act and the Rules are, therefore, invalid.

The respondent has also filed the Original Petition for a writ of mandamus or other appropriate writ or order directing the appellant not to insist on the respondent to take out a license under Section 96 or to obtain the permission under Section 97 of the Kerala Panchayats Act, on the ground that these sections, in so far as they relate to rice-milling industry, are beyond the legislative power of the State Legislature. Therefore, the only question which arises for decision in the Original Petition is the first point raised in the Criminal Revision Petition. This point also arises for decision in the Criminal Appeal. The State of Kerala is also a respondent in the O. P.

5. I shall now consider the first point. Article 246 of the Constitution provides as follows:—

"246. Subject-matter of laws made by Parliament and by the Legislatures of States.—

(1) Notwithstanding anything in clauses (2) and (3), Parliament has exclusive power to make laws with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List I in the Seventh Schedule (in this Constitution referred to as the "Union List").

(2) Notwithstanding anything in clause (3), Parliament, and, subject to clause (1), the Legislature of any State also have power to make laws with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List III in the Seventh Schedule (in this Constitution referred to as the "Concurrent List").

(3) Subject to clauses (1) and (2) the Legislature of any State has exclusive power to make laws for such State or any part thereof with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List II in the Seventh Schedule (in this Constitution referred to as the "State List").

(4) Parliament has power to make laws with respect to any matter for any part of the Territory of India not included in a State notwithstanding that such matter is a matter enumerated in the State List."

Entry 52 in List I of the VII Schedule to the Constitution reads:

"Industries the control of which by the Union is declared by Parliament by law to be expedient in the public interest."

The Rice-milling Industry (Regulation) Act 1958 was enacted by Parliament to regulate the rice-milling industry. Section 2 of this Act declares that it is expedient in the public interest that the Union should take under its control the rice-milling industry. Consequently, rice-milling industry fell within entry No. 52 in List I. By virtue of Article 246 of Constitution, Parliament alone has power to make laws in respect of this matter; and the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act is such a law made by Parliament. Section 5 of this Act deals with grant of permits for establishment of a rice mill. It reads as follows:—

"5(1) Any person or authority may make an application to the Central Government for the grant of a permit for the establishment of a new rice mill; and any owner of a defunct rice mill may make a like application for the grant of a permit for recommencing rice-milling operation in such mill.

(2) Every application under sub-section (1) shall be made in the prescribed form and shall contain the particulars regarding the location of the rice mill, the size and type thereof and such other particulars as may be prescribed.

(3) If, on receipt of any such application for the grant of a permit, the Central Government is of opinion that it is necessary as to do for ensuring adequate supply of rice, it may, subject to the provisions of sub-section (4) and sub-section (5), grant the permit specifying therein the period within which the mill is to be established or, as the case may be, the mill is to re-commence rice-milling operation and such other conditions as it may think fit to impose, in accordance with the rules, if any, made in this behalf.

(4) Before granting any permit under sub-section (3), the Central Government shall cause a full and complete investigation to be made in the prescribed manner in respect of the application and shall have due regard to —

(a) the number of rice mills operating in the locality;

(b) the availability of paddy in the locality;

(c) the availability of power and water supply for the rice mill in respect of which a permit is applied for;

(d) whether the rice mill in respect of which a permit is applied for will be the huller-type, sheller-type or combined sheller-huller type;

(e) Whether the functioning of the rice mill in respect of which a permit is applied for would cause substantial unemployment in the locality;

(f) such other particulars as may be prescribed.

(5) In granting a permit under this section the Central Government shall give preference to a defunct rice mill over a new rice mill.

(6) A permit granted under this section shall be effective for the period specified therein or for such extended period as the Central Government may think fit to allow in any case."

Section 6 of the above Act deals with grant of licenses for carrying on rice-milling operation and that section reads as follows:—

"6(1) Any owner of an existing rice mill or of a rice mill in respect of which a permit has been granted under Section 5 may make an application to the licensing Officer for the grant of a licence for carrying on rice milling operation in that rice mill.

(2) Every application under sub-section (1) shall be made in the prescribed form and shall contain the particulars regarding the location of the rice mill, the size and type thereof and such other particulars as may be prescribed.

(3) On receipt of any such application for the grant of a licence, the licensing officer shall grant the licence on such conditions (including, in particular, conditions relating to the polishing of rice), on payment of such fees and on the deposit of such sum, if any, as security for the due performance of the conditions as may be prescribed.

(4) A licence granted under this section shall be valid for the period specified therein and may be renewed from time to time for such period and on payment of such fees and on such conditions as may be prescribed."

The above two sections show that the location of the rice mill is a relevant and important factor in the matter of granting the permit and the licence. The permit is given for establishing a rice-mill in a certain locality, and the licence is given for operating that mill in that locality.

6. The contention of the respondent is that Sections 96 and 97 of the Kerala Panchayats Act are so wide in language as to apply to rice-milling industry, and that, in so far as they would apply to that industry, they are beyond the legislative power of the State, or those sections should be construed in such a way as not to apply to rice-milling industry. A legislature should be presumed to have acted within its powers; and it is a well settled canon of construction that if a statutory provision would yield to two constructions, one of which would make it beyond the power of the legislature and the other construction would bring it within that power, it has to be construed in the latter manner. I shall now read Sections 96 and 97 of the Kerala Panchayats Act;

"96. Purpose for which places may not be used without a licence — The Panchayat may with the previous approval of the Director notify that no place in the Panchayat area shall be used for any of the purposes specified in the rules made in this behalf being purposes which in the opinion of Government, are likely to be offensive or dangerous to human life or health or property, without a licence issued by the executive authority and except in accordance with the conditions specified in such licence:

Provided that no such notification shall take effect until the expiry of sixty days from the date of its publication.

97. Permission for the construction of factories and the installation of machinery. — No person shall, without the permission of the Panchayat and except in accordance with the conditions specified in such permission —

(a) construct or establish any factory, workshop or work-place in which it is proposed to employ steam power, water power or other mechanical power or electrical power; or

(b) instal in any premises any machinery or manufacturing plant driven by any power as aforesaid, not being machinery or manufacturing plant exempted by the rules."

The Panchayats Act deals with matters falling under entries 5 and 6 in List II of the VII Schedule to the Constitution; and these entries read:—

"5. Local Government, that is to say, the constitution and powers of municipal corporations, improvement trusts, district boards, mining settlement authorities and other local authorities for the purpose of local self-Government or village administration.

6. Public health and sanitation; hospitals and dispensaries".

The power of a State Legislature to make laws on any of the matters enumerated in List II is subject to the power of the Parliament to make laws on any of the matters enumerated in List I. This is expressly stated in Article 246 of the Constitution. So, there can be no doubt that, if Section 96 or 97 of the Panchayats Act contains a law in respect of rice-milling industry, that law would be beyond the legislative power of the State Legislature. The learned counsel appearing for the appellant and the State of Kerala contended that Sections 96 and 97 of the Panchayats Act relate entirely to matters mentioned in entry 6 in List II, and that they do not relate to any matter mentioned in Entry 52 in List I, even though the provisions contained in the said sections may incidentally refer to a matter falling under Entry 52 in List I. They submitted that the above two Entries are entirely different, that the application of Ss. 96 and 97 of the Panchayats Act to a matter falling under Entry 52 in List I was only incidental, and that such incidental application would not make them a law on a matter mentioned in entry 52.

7. Disputes with regard to the legislative spheres of the Parliament and the State Legislature are inevitable in the federal character of our Constitution, even in spite of the non-obstante clause in Article 246 (1). Dealing with this problem, Sir Maurice Gwyer C. J. stated in the matter of C. P. Motor Spirit Act, AIR.1939 FC 1:

".....an endeavour must be made to solve it, as the Judicial Committee have said, by having recourse to the context and scheme of the Act, and a reconciliation attempted between two apparently conflicting jurisdictions by reading the two entries together and by interpreting, and, where necessary, modifying the language of the one by that of the other. If indeed such a reconciliation should prove impossible, then, and only then, will the non obstante clause operate and the federal power prevail: for the clause ought to be regarded as a last resource, a witness to the imperfections of human expression and the fallibility of legal draftsmanship.

It has been shown that if each legislative power is given its widest meaning, there is a common territory shared between them and an overlapping of jurisdictions is the inevitable result; and this can only be avoided if it is reasonably possible to adopt such an interpretation as would assign what would otherwise be common territory to one or the other. To do this it is necessary to construe this legislative power defined or described by one entry or the other in a more restricted sense than, as already pointed out, it can theoretically possess."

The principles stated in the above passage have been approved by the Privy Council and our Supreme Court. In Calcutta Gas Co. (Proprietary) Ltd. v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1962 SC 1044, the question arose whether the West Bengal Oriental Gas Company Act, 1960, which the State Legislature enacted, was void, on the alleged ground that it related to a matter mentioned in Entry 52 of List I. The State contended that it related entirely to the matter mentioned in entry 25 in List II. This entry reads:—

"Gas and gas works".

Dealing with these apparently overlapping entries, Subba Rao, J. in his judgment of the Court, said:—

"The power to legislate is given to the appropriate Legislatures by Art. 246 of the Constitution. The entries in the three Lists are only legislative heads or fields of legislation; they demarcate the area over which the appropriate Legislatures can operate. It is also well settled that widest amplitude should be given to the language of the entries. But some of the entries in the different Lists or in the same Lists may overlap and sometimes may also appear to be in direct conflict with each other. It is then the duty of this Court to reconcile the entries and bring about harmony between them."

After examining the relevant provisions of the Constitution, the learned Judge held:—

"It is, therefore, clear that the scheme of harmonious construction suggested on behalf of the State gives full and effective scope of operation for both the entries in their respective fields while that suggested by learned counsel for the appellant deprives Entry 25 of all its content and even makes it redundant. The former interpretation must, therefore, be accepted in preference to the latter. In this view, gas and gas works are within the exclusive field allotted to the States. On this interpretation the arguments of the learned Attorney-General that, under Art. 246 of the Constitution, the legislative power of State is subject to that of Parliament ceases to have any force, for the gas industry is outside the legislative field of Parliament and is within the exclusive field of the Legislature of the State. We, therefore, hold that the impugned Act was within the Legislative competence of the West Bengal Legislature and was, therefore, validly made."

Reference may be made to two more decisions of the Supreme Court. In State of Rajasthan v. G. Chawla, AIR 1959 SC 544 the question arose whether the Ajmer (Sound Amplifiers Control) Act, 1953 was void being a law falling under Entry 31 of the Union List. This entry reads:—

"Post and Telegraphs; Telephones, Wireless, broadcasting and other like forms of communications."

The State contended that it was a law in respect of the matter mentioned in entry 6 of the State List and that it was within the power of the State Legislature. Entry 6 in the State List reads:—

"Public Health and Sanitation; hospitals and dispensaries."

Upholding the contention of the State, Hidayatullah J. delivering the judgment of the court, said:—

"On a view of the Act as a whole, we think that the substance of the legislation is within the powers conferred by Entry No. 6 and conceivably Entry No. 1 of the State List, and it does not purport to encroach upon the field of Entry No. 31 though it incidentally touches upon a matter provided there. The end and purpose of the legislation furnishes the key to connect it with the State List. Our attention was not drawn to any enactment under Entry No. 31 of the Union List by which the ownership and possession of amplifiers was burdened with any such regulation or control, and there being thus no question of repugnancy or of an occupied field, we have no hesitation in holding that the Act is fully covered by the first cited Entry and conceivably the other in the State List."

In the Hingir Rampur Coal Co. Ltd. v. State of Orissa, AIR 1961 SC 459, the validity of the Orissa Mining Areas Development Fund Act, 1952 which was passed by the State Legislature, was attacked on the ground that it related to a matter falling under Entry 52 of the Union List. The State contended that the Act related to a matter in Entry 23 of the State List, and that it was, therefore, within the power of the State Legislature. This entry reads—

"Regulation of mines and mineral development subject to the provisions of List I with respect to regulation and development under the control of the Union."

In dealing with above contention, Gajendragadkar J. who delivered the majority judgment of the Court, examined the relevant provisions of the State Act and also of the Industries (Development and Regulation) Act, 1951 which the Parliament has made in respect of the matter in Entry 52 of the Union List; and he held that the object of the State Act was the development of mining area in the State while that of the Central Act was to regulate the scheduled industries with a view to their development, and that these Acts, therefore, occupied different fields. The validity of the State Act was upheld on the above ground.

8. I shall now examine the constitutional validity of Sections 96 and 97 of the Kerala Panchayats Act. The Parliamentary declaration contained in Section 2 of the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act shows that it was made in the public interest to take rice-milling industry under the control of the Union. Section 5 of this Act, which deals with grant of permits for establishing rice-mills, shows that the relevant considerations in the matter are the number of rice-mills operating in the locality, availability of paddy in the locality, availability of power and water for the mill, extent of unemployment that may be caused by the establishment of the mill etc., and that the permit is granted only if the Central Government is of opinion that it is necessary to do so for ensuring adequate supply of rice in the locality. Section 6, which deals with grant of licenses, shows that the relevant considerations are the location of the mill, the size and type thereof and other prescribed particulars; and they are granted subject to conditions relating to the polishing of rice. So the object of the Rice-Milling Industry (Regulation) Act is to regulate the establishment of rice-mills in India for ensuring the adequate supply of rice, having regard to other relevant factors. The object of Section 96 of the Kerala Panchayats Act is to regulate the use of places within the Panchayat for purposes which in the opinion of the Government are likely to be offensive or dangerous to human life or health or property. Section 97 of this Act shows that its object is to control and regulate the establishment of factories, workshops and work-places and installation of machineries and manufacturing plants within the Panchayat. The Rules would show that what is relevant in the grant of permission under the above section is the safety of the establishment and the person employed therein as well as considerations of public health and sanitation. Therefore, Sections 96 and 97 of the Panchayats Act and the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act deal with entirely different matters. Sections 96 and 97 of the Panchayats Act relate only to matters mentioned in Entry 6 of the State List; and they do not entrench on Entry 52 in the Union List. I, therefore, hold that the State Legislature was competent to enact the law contained in these sections.

9. The next question for consideration is whether Sections 96 and 97 of the Kerala Panchayats Act and the provisions of the Rules relating to issue of licenses and grant of permissions are valid, as they are made conditional on payment of the prescribed fees. There is no case that levy of fees is related to actual service, if any, rendered to the class of persons who pay the same; or that the total collections on this account are earmarked for rendering any service for those persons. On the other hand, the levy is admittedly for augmenting the general revenue of the Panchayat. S. 76 of the Panchayats Act expressly provides that all moneys received by the Panchayat shall constitute a fund called the Panchayat Fund, and that all taxes, duties, cesses, surcharge and fees levied under the Act or other law shall be included in the said fund. It is well settled by the decisions of this Court, and also by a very recent decision of the Supreme Court that such a levy is not a fee — vide City Corporation of Calicut v. Sadasivan, 1968 Ker LT 589 = (AIR 1969 Ker 99) (FB). Travancore Tea Estates Co. Ltd. v. Executive Officer, Elappara Panchayat, 1968 Ker LT 776 (FB), Arya Vaidya Pharmacy Ltd. v. Health Officer, Ernakulam, 1968 Ker LT 789 and Municipal Council, Cannanore v. C. T. Raman Nambiar (Decision of the Supreme Court dated 10-12-1968 in C. A. No. 186 of 1966 (SC)). The provisions contained in Sections 96 and 97 of the Panchayats Act and the Rules relating to levy of fees are, therefore, invalid. As the issue of licenses and grant of permissions is conditional upon payment of such fees, the provisions relating to the issue of licenses and grant of permissions also become invalid.

10. In the light of my decision on the above two points, O. P. No. 2349 of 1968 should be dismissed; and I do so. Criminal R. P. No. 143 of 1968 is allowed; and Criminal Appeal No. 26 of 1968 is dismissed. The order of conviction and sentence of fine passed against the respondent is set aside; and the fine, if already recovered, is directed to be refunded to the respondent.

K. M. Joseph, for Appellant; P. N. Sankaranarayana Pillai, for Respondent
(No. 1).

KRISHNAMOORTHY IYER, J. :— The appellant who is the stranger-auction purchaser in execution of the decree in
O. S. 15 of 1964 on the file of the Principal Subordinate Judge's Court, Erna-kulam, complains against the dismissal of
E. A. 813 of 1968 filed by him under Section 151, Order 21, Rules 90 and 91

C. P. C. to set aside the Court sale. The properties of the third defendant were purchased by the appellant in Court auction on 11-11-1968 for Rs. 9280.70 and he deposited Rs. 2321 being 1/4th of the auction amount under Order 21, Rule 84
C. P. C. E. A. 813 of 1968 was filed on 18-11-1968 on the ground that the lease-hold interest created by the 3rd defendant in the property in 1960 was not disclosed in the sale Proclamation and its non-disclosure is an act of fraud practised by the decree-holder and the 3rd defendant on the intending purchasers and the court and therefore the sale is liable to be set aside. In E. A. 813 of 1968 the appellant also prayed for the return of the sum of Rs. 2321 deposited by him. The decree-holder filed his objections on 26-11-1968. Thereafter and within fifteen days from the date of auction the appellant deposited the full amount of the purchase money payable under Order 21, Rule 85 C. P. C. and the amounts required for stamp duty for the issue of sale certificate under Order 21, Rule 94, C. P. C. It was after such deposit that he prosecuted E. A. 813 of 1968 which was dismissed by the execution Court.

2. Though the person alleged to be the lessee of the third defendant was impleaded as a respondent in E. A. 813 of 1968 he was subsequently removed from the party array. The Subordinate Judge took the view that it is not open to an auction purchaser to pray for setting aside a court sale under Section 151 or Order 21, Rule 90 or 91, C. P. C. It has to be pointed that no enquiry was conducted and no finding was given by the execution court on the question whether the properties sold in court auction are subject to any lease granted by the 3rd defendant.

3. There was considerable discussion at the Bar as to the maintainability of
E. A. 813 of 1968 under Order 21, Rule 90.
C. P. C. we shall first examine that question. The counsel for the appellant contended that even though his client had no interest in the property prior to the court sale he is even then a person 'whose interests are affected by the sale' under Order 21, Rule 90, C. P. C. There is a sharp difference of opinion on this issue, among the several High Courts and the question is not free from difficulty. The words 'any person whose interests are affected by the sale' in Order 21, Rule 90, C. P. C. are no doubt of a wider import than the expression 'a person holding an interest in the property sold' occurring in Order 21, Rule 89, C. P. C. The question is whether an auction purchaser has got any interests which are affected by the sale. If the word "interest" occurring in Order 21, Rule 90 C. P. C. is to denote interests independent of the court sale and not those arising by virtue of the Court sale, then the auction purchaser has no right to apply. The reasonable view on a plain reading of the provision is to hold that the "interests" contemplated in Order 21, Rule 90, C. P. C. refer to interests not created by the sale itself but affected by the sale. The difference in the language in Order 21, Rule 89 and Rule 90 cannot have any bearing in this connection. If the decisions which have construed Section 311 of the C. P. C. 1882 are relevant in this connection it is clear in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Birj Mohun Thakur v. Rai Uma Nath Chowdhry, (1893) ILR 20 Cal 8 (PC), that an auction purchaser cannot apply to set aside a sale under Order 21, Rule 90, C. P. C. The expression "person whose immovable property has been sold" in the Code of 1882 was construed in the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in Asmutunnissa Begum v. Ashruff Ali, (1888) ILR 15 Cal 488 (FB) to mean "any person whose interests were affected by the sale" and the legislature adopted these words in the 1908 Code. The non-inclusion of an auction purchaser in Order 21, Rule 90, C. P. C. especially because of the decision in (1893) ILR 20 Cal 8 (PC), is a circumstance that cannot be overlooked. It is an accepted rule of construction as pointed out by the Privy Council in Abdur Rahim v. Abu Md. Barkat Ali, AIR 1928 PC 16. Their Lordships said:—

"It is a sound rule of interpretation to take the words of a statute as they stand and to interpret them ordinarily without any reference to the previous state of the law on the subject or the English law upon which it may be founded, but when it is contended that the Legislature intended by any particular amendment to make substantial changes in the pre-existing law, it is impossible to arrive at a conclusion without considering what the law was previously to the particular enactment and to see whether the words used in the statute can be taken to effect the change that is suggested as intended."

4. The decisions in Gopalakrishnayya v. Sanjeeva Reddi, 38 Mad LJ 228=(AIR 1920 Mad 145) Ravinandan Prasad v. Jagannath Sahu, ILR 47 All 479=(AIR 1925 All 459) and A. I. Railwaymen's Benefit Fund Ltd. v. Ramchand, AIR 1939 Nag 179 would interpret the word "interests" in Order 21, Rule 90 C. P. C. to include the interests of the auction purchaser also. A different view was taken in Surendra Nath Das v. Alauddin Mistry: AIR 1928 Cal 828; K. V. A. L. Chettiar Firm v. M. P. Maricar, AIR 1929 Rang 33(1), Nihal Chand v. Pritam Singh, AIR

1932 Lah 468(2) and Balkrisna v. Sakharan, AIR 1936 Bom 311.

5. In this connection it is necessary to refer to some of the other provisions in the Code. Order 21, Rule 64, provides that the person declared to be the purchaser of immovable property shall pay immediately after such declaration a deposit of twenty-five per cent on the amount of his purchase-money to the officer and in default of such deposit the property shall forthwith be resold. Order 21, Rule 85 provides that the purchaser shall pay the full amount of the purchase money into court on the 15th day from the date of the sale of the property. Order 21, Rule 86 says that if there is default to comply with Rule 85 of O. 21, the deposit may, if the Court thinks fit, after defraying the expenses of the sale, be forfeited to the Government, and the property shall be resold, and the defaulting purchaser shall forfeit all claim to the property or to any part of the sum for which it may subsequently be sold. O. 21, Rule 71, provides that any deficiency of price which may happen on a re-sale by reason of the purchaser's default, and all expenses attending such re-sale, shall be certified to the Court by the officer or other person holding the sale, and shall, at the instance of either the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor, be recoverable from the defaulting purchaser under the provisions relating to the execution of a decree for the payment of money.

6. In Manilal Mohanlal v. Sayed Ahmed, AIR 1954 SC 349 their Lordships of the Supreme Court decided that O. 21, Rules 84, 85 and 86 requiring the deposit of 25 per cent of the purchase-money immediately, on the person being declared as a purchaser, such person not being a decree-holder, and the payment of balance within 15 days of the sale, are mandatory and upon non-compliance with these provisions there is no sale at all. According to their Lordships in the event of a default either under Order 21, Rule 84 or Rule 85 the proceedings for sale are completely wiped out as if they do not exist in the eye of law. This decision has been followed in Ramchand Spg. & Wvg. Mills v. Bijli Cotton Mills (P) Ltd. Hathras, AIR 1967 SC 1344.

7. Persons claiming title paramount to the judgment-debtor or persons claiming to be the purchasers of immovable property sold in court auction from the judgment-debtor prior to the attachment are not qualified to maintain an application under Order 21, Rule 90. The remedy of such a person is either to proceed under Order 21, Rule 58, or under Order 21, Rules 97 to 100, C. P. C. It is not necessary to decide in this appeal whether "interests" in Order 21, Rule 90, mean tor to decide their dispute on merits as well. On the same day, a copy of this agreement was sent to the Central Government for publication. This was followed by a reminder dated February 11, 1966 from respondent No. 2. A reply (undated) was received from the Central Government returning the agreement, as it was not in the prescribed form. On February 21, 1966, an agreement was drawn up afresh in the prescribed form, referring the dispute on merits to the arbitration of Shri F. Jeejeebhoy. On March 12, 1966, this agreement was published by the Central Government. On May 24, 1966, the arbitrator made his award.

6. Aggrieved by this award, this petition was filed for a writ of certiorari.

7. Shri Nanavati, learned counsel for the Company, (respondent No. 2), raised a preliminary objection that an arbitrator, appointed under Section 10-A of the Act, is not a Tribunal, nor a statutory arbitrator but he is a private arbitrator of the choice of the parties, so that he is not amenable to the writ jurisdiction under Article 226 or 227 of the Constitution.

8. It is settled law that an arbitrator, appointed under Section 10-A of the Act, is not a Tribunal. Per Engineering Mazdoor Sabha v. Hind Cycles, (1962) 2 Lab. L. J. 760=(AIR 1963 SC 874). In that case, their Lordships were dealing with the question whether an appeal lies to the Supreme Court under Article 136 of the Constitution from an award of a Section 10-A arbitrator.

9. On the further question whether an arbitrator appointed under Section 10-A of the Act, is a statutory arbitrator, Shri Nanavati relies on R. v. Dispute Committee of Dental Technicians, 1953-1 All E. R. 327. In that case, there was a motion for an order of certiorari to quash an order made by the Disputes Committee of the National Joint Council for the Craft of Dental Technicians declaring that the employers of an infant apprentice were entitled to dismiss him from their employment and for an order of prohibition to prohibit the committee from further proceeding in the arbitration between the employers and the infant apprentice. Lord Goddard, C. J., said:—

"That is simply a reference to an arbitrator, and I have never heard of certiorari or prohibition going to an arbitrator. Arbitration is a very old remedy in English Law, but in all the centuries that have passed since the decisions of English Courts first began there is no trace of an arbitrator being controlled by this Court by writ or either prohibition or certiorari. The bodies to which in modern times the remedies of these prerogative writs have been applied are all statutory bodies on whom Parliament has conferred statutory powers and duties the exercise of which may lead to the detriment of subjects as, for instance, where a statute gives a certain body power for the compulsory acquisition of land and an arbitrator is set up by Parliament to assess the compensation, and it is essential that the Courts should be able to control the exercise of the statutory jurisdiction within the limits imposed by Parliament. There is no instance of which I know in the books where certiorari or prohibition has gone to any arbitrator except a statutory arbitrator, and a statutory arbitrator is a person to whom, by statute, the parties must resort".

That, undoubtedly, is the law in England and there it is well established that a writ of certiorari will lie against statutory arbitrators. See also R. v. Powell, (1925) 1 K. B. 641.

10. An examination of the relevant provisions of the Act shows that the proceedings before a Section 10-A arbitrator are quasi judicial proceedings and that the arbitrator must function within the limits of his powers as defined by the Act and the Rules. Section 10-A was inserted by Act No. 36 of 1955 to enable the parties to voluntarily refer their disputes to arbitration. While under Section 10, reference is compulsory, under Section 10-A, the reference is entirely voluntary. Sub-section (1) of Section 10-A provides that the employer and the employee may agree to refer any industrial dispute to arbitration of any person or persons of their choice. The sub-section conspicuously mentions the presiding officer of a Labour Court or Tribunal or National Tribunal also to be competent arbitrators. Sub-section (1-A) requires the agreement to provide for the appointment of an umpire in case the reference is to an even number of arbitrators, and it is also a statutory requirement of such an agreement that the award of the umpire shall prevail. Sub-section (2) further makes it mandatory that the agreement shall be in writing and shall be in such form and manner as may be prescribed. Under sub-section (3) a copy of the arbitration agreement has to be forwarded to the Government and then the Government has to publish it in the official gazette within one month from the date of its receipt. Under sub-section (3-A), employers and workmen, who are not initially made parties to arbitration agreement, but are concerned in the dispute are also given an opportunity of presenting their case before the arbitrator. Sub-section (4) imposes a duty on the arbitrator to investigate the dispute and submit his award to the Government. Sub-section (4-A) authorises the Government to prohibit continuance of any strike or lock-out in connection with such dispute.

Section 2(b) of the Act defines "award" so as to include an award under S. 10-A. Section 17 enacts that an award must be published by the Government within the prescribed time, and sub-section (2) of that Section gives finality to the award so published. Under Section 17-A, read with Section 18, the award becomes enforceable and binding on the parties on the expiry of 30 days from the date of its publication. Section 19(3) prescribes the period of operation of the award, and under sub-section (6) of that Section, the award continues to be binding on the parties until a notice is given by a party to the other intimating its intention to terminate the award and two months thereafter expire. Under sub-section (7) of that Section, a notice of such termination, in order to be effective, is required to be given by a party representing the majority of persons bound by the award. Further, Section 21 provides for keeping confidential certain matters before the arbitrator, and Section 30 provides for penalty in case of wilful disclosure of confidential information. Section 29 makes it penal to commit the breach of any term of the award. Section 31-C provides for a summary remedy for recovery of dues under the award. Section 36 confers upon the workmen the right to be represented in proceedings before the arbitrator. Section 36-A enables the Government to make a reference to the authorities with regard to interpretation of any provision of an award.

11. It is remarkable that sub-sec. (5) of Section 10-A completely excludes the application of the Arbitration Act to an arbitration under this Section. Therefore, it appears that there is no other appropriate and efficacious remedy against an award made under Section 10-A. This provision makes it abundantly clear that an arbitrator appointed under that Section is not a private arbitrator in the ordinary sense of the term.

12. From all these provisions of the Industrial Disputes Act, it becomes quite clear that the appointment of an arbitrator under Section 10-A is given a statutory recognition; that the agreement to refer an industrial dispute to him has to be in writing and in the prescribed form; that he must conform to the requirements laid down in the Act and the Rules framed thereunder; that the rights and liabilities of the parties, who refer their dispute under Section 10-A, are governed by the provisions of the Act; that the arbitrator is clothed with quasi-judicial powers and his proceedings are regulated by the rules and procedure; that a duty is cast on the arbitrator to submit his award to the Government; and that a duty is cast on the Government to publish the award within the prescribed period. We are clearly of the opinion that an arbitration under Section 10-A has all the essential attributes of a statutory arbitration under Section 10 of the Act. In Rex v. Electricity Commissioners, (1924) 1 K. B. 171, Lord Atkin referred to the genesis and the history of the writs of prohibition and certiorari and held that whenever any body of persons, having legal authority to determine questions affecting the rights of subjects, and having the duty to act judicially, acts in excess of their legal authority they are subject to the controlling jurisdiction of the King's Bench Division.

See also R. v. Northumberland Tribunal (1951) 1 All. E. R. 268. In Rohtas Industries Staff Union v. State of Bihar AIR 1963 Pat. 170, the view taken was that an arbitrator appointed under Section 10-A of the Act, is a statutory arbitrator and, therefore, a certiorari can be issued to quash his award. It was argued that in view of Lord Goddard's unequivocal remark (supra) that a statutory arbitrator is a person to whom, by statute, the parties must resort, an arbitrator under Section 10-A of the Act cannot be held to be a statutory arbitrator in that sense, because an arbitration under that Section is voluntary, by choice of the parties, and they are not bound to resort to such arbitration unlike the compulsory reference under Section 10. Assuming that argument to be correct, that is not the end of the matter. Article 226 of our Constitution gives wide powers to the High Court to issue directions, orders or writs to any person or authority, and is not conditioned or limited by the requirement that writs can be issued only against orders of Courts or Tribunals. It is true that the expression "any person" does not mean any and every individual. In Air Corporations Employees Union v. D. V. Vyas AIR 1962 Bom. 274, it was held that the High Court has, under Article 227 of the Constitution, powers of superintendence over an arbitrator, who functions under Section 10-A of the Act and that the orders passed by such an arbitrator, who acts as a quasi-judicial body, are capable of being corrected by a writ of certiorari, provided there is an error of law apparent on the face of the record.

In (1962) 2 Lab. L. J. 760 = (AIR 1963 SC 874) (supra), it is true, their Lordships were not considering precisely the question whether a writ lies against the award of an arbitrator under Section 10-A of the Act, yet, the following observations fortify our conclusions:—

"Article 226 under which a writ of certiorari can be issued in an appropriate case, is, in a sense, wider than Article 136, because the power conferred on the High Courts to issue certain writs is not conditioned or limited by the requirement that the said writs can be issued only against the orders of Courts or Tribunals. Under Article 226 (1), an appropriate writ can be issued to any person or authority, including in appropriate cases any Government, within the territories prescribed. Therefore, even if the arbitrator appointed under Section 10-A is not a tribunal under Article 136 in a proper case, a writ may lie against his award under Article 226. That is why the argument that a writ may lie against an award made by such an arbitrator does not materially assist the appellants' case that the arbitrator in question is a tribunal under Article 136".

It was held in K. P. Singh v. S. K. Gokhale 1968 M.P.W.R. 733=(1969 Lab. L. C. 725) that if the High Court finds that the requisite procedure as prescribed by the Act was not followed so as to confer necessary jurisdiction on the arbitrator to proceed with the adjudication of the dispute referred to him under Section 10-A, it can, in exercise of prerogative powers issue the necessary writs.

13. Shri Nanavati relies on three decisions, where a contrary view is taken. In A. T. E. M. Employees' Association v. Musaliar Industries (1961) 1 Lab L. J. 81 (Ker), it was observed that the arbitration under Section 10-A itself and the choice of the arbitrator are left to the will of the parties and an arbitrator so appointed does not fulfil any of the characteristics of a statutory arbitrator as laid down in 1953-1 All. E. R. 327 (supra). In A. T. E. M. Employees' Association v. Musaliar Industries (1962) 2 Lab. L. J. 317 (Ker), stress was laid on the heading of Section 10-A "voluntary reference of dispute to arbitration" and on that the arbitrator derives his jurisdiction from a contract. Both these decisions were decided before the decision in (1962) 2 Lab. L. J. 760=(AIR 1963 SC 874) (supra). For the reasons already stated, we are unable to follow these decisions. In P. Koru v. Standard Tile and Clay Works AIR 1963 Ker 324 they have been held to be no longer good law. In Anglo-American Tea Trading Co. v. Its Workmen 1963-2 Lab. L. J. 752 (Mad), the argument advanced before the Madras High Court was that since the authority of an arbitrator appointed under Section 10-A does not depend on any statutory jurisdiction and he is a private tribunal, set up by an agreement no writ of certiorari or prohibition could be issued. But that was not the basis on which the petition was dismissed. It appears to us that that point was not seriously considered and the petition was dismissed on its merits.

14. As a result of the above discussion, we are of the opinion that although an arbitrator appointed under Section 10-A is neither a Tribunal nor is he a statutory arbitrator within the definition given by Lord Goddard, C. J. in 1953-1 All. E. R. 327 (supra), yet having regard to the statutory provisions recapitulated above, an arbitration under Section 10-A of the Act has all the attributes of a statutory arbitration under Section 10. The appointment of an arbitrator under Section 10-A depends on a mutual agreement of the parties and the choice of the arbitrator is also entirely theirs, but the rest is regulated by the Act and the statutory rules. The proceedings before him are quasi-judicial in nature. He has to function within the limits of his powers as defined by the Act and the statutory rules. Therefore, he is a statutory arbitrator in this sense. He is a 'person' within the meaning of Article 226. He is, therefore, amenable to the writ jurisdiction of the High Court and a certiorari will issue to quash his award on well settled principles; for instance, where he acts without jurisdiction or in excess of jurisdiction, or where there is an error apparent on the face of the record, or there is violation of the principles of natural justice.

15. The preliminary objection is rejected.

16. The petitioner's first contention is that the arbitration under Section 10-A of the Act was illegal and void inasmuch as the dispute had already been referred to the Tribunal under Section 10 of the Act. It is true that the dispute had already been referred under Section 10 to the CGIT, Bombay, but it is quite clear from the facts stated above that by consent of the parties and with the permission of the Tribunal, the reference was withdrawn. Once a reference is validly withdrawn, it cannot be said that it is pending. A withdrawal of the reference tantamounts to its having not been made at all, so that it cannot be said that the condition prescribed by the Act "at any time before a dispute has been referred under Section 10" was not fulfilled.

17. It is then argued for the petitioner that the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to make the award, dated January 27, 1965, permitting withdrawal of the reference. The argument is that once a reference is made under Section 10, the Tribunal is bound to decide it on the merits and it has no jurisdiction to allow the parties to withdraw the reference. Reliance is placed on Sital Sukhram v. Central Government Industrial Tribunal 1969 MP L J 33 at p. 35=(AIR 1969 Madh. Pra. 200 at p. 203). In our opinion, that decision does not support the petitioner's contention. All that has been held there is that the Tribunal cannot abdicate its duties of adjudicating upon the dispute and when there is a compromise arrived at between the parties, the Tribunal cannot deal with it like a settlement between the parties to a suit, which may be recorded under Order 23, Rule 3, Civil Procedure Code.

In that case, it has been further observed as follows:—

"Nevertheless it can adopt the compromise entered into by these parties as the foundation of its award after considering whether it is a fair and just settlement of the disputes".

18. In State of Bihar v. Ganguli (1958) 2 Lab. L. J. 634=(AIR 1958 SC 1018), their Lordships said:—

"It is true that the Act does not contain any provision specifically authorising the industrial tribunal to record a compromise and pass an award in its terms corresponding to the provisions of Order XXIII, Rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. But it would be very unreasonable to assume that the industrial tribunal would insist upon dealing with the dispute on the merits even after it is informed that the dispute has been amicably settled between the parties. We have already indicated that amicable settlements of industrial disputes which generally lead to industrial peace and harmony are the primary objects of this Act..... There can, therefore, be no doubt that if an industrial dispute before a tribunal is amicably settled, the tribunal would immediately agree to make an award in terms of the settlement between the parties".

On the basis of this authority, we are of the view that if the Tribunal can act on a compromise, there is nothing in the Act to exclude this particular kind of compromise under which the parties amicably decide upon the machinery and the arbitrator of their own choice for resolving their differences, and seek the sanction of the Tribunal for the withdrawal on such a basis. No doubt, the Tribunal must be satisfied before such a joint request is accepted that there is nothing unfair, improper or unjust. The view that we take was also taken in Krishnakutty Nair v. Industrial Tribunal (1957) 2 Lab. L. J. 45=(AIR 1960 Ker 31). In the present case, several disputes had been pending between the parties and there was an agreement to refer all of them to the private arbitration of Shri F. Jeejeebhoy. He is an ex-President of the Labour Appellate Tribunal of India. If the parties desired to have the benefit of his learning and experience, it cannot be said that their compromise was unfair or unjust. The Tribunal, in its award dated January 27, 1965, clearly said:—

"I am satisfied that it would be in the interest of industrial peace to allow the application of the parties."

Nothing has been suggested to us to show how the compromise under which sanction was sought to withdraw the reference from the Tribunal, was unfair or unjust.

19. For yet another reason, the petitioner's contention must be rejected. It will be patent enough from the facts, which we are going to state in connection with the petitioner's next contention, that the petitioner submitted to the jurisdiction of the arbitration under Section 10-A and took part in the proceedings without objection on the ground that the arbitrator had no jurisdiction. See Pannalal v. Union of India AIR 1957 SC 397.

20. The petitioner's next contention is that the award must be quashed for want of jurisdiction inasmuch as the dispute on merits was not referred to the arbitrator; what was referred was merely the question whether the complaints were maintainable. It is averred in paragraph 25 of the petition that at the hearing before the first respondent, it was urged on behalf of the petitioner that the address was limited to the short question of maintainability of the complaints under Section 33-A of the Industrial Disputes Act and it was further urged that if necessity arose for going into the question of merits of the removal from the service, the matter would have to be investigated afresh by bringing to the notice of the respective workmen individually the allegations and the charges that led to their removal. This averment was emphatically denied in the return and it has been attacked as "factually false" to the knowledge of the petitioner-union and its representative who had sworn the petition. It was emphasised that the Union had not only led oral and documentary evidence on the merits of the discharge orders, but had addressed detailed arguments for several days, contending on their part that the discharge of 10 workmen was not justified on merits. An affidavit was also filed by the arbitrator, where he says that he is not interested in the result of this petition, but he has strongly controverted the averment made in paragraph 25 of the petition and has asserted that the parties had not limited their address or arguments only to the technical question of maintainability of the complaints under Section 33-A, but had led evidence as well as addressed their arguments on the merits of the discharge of the workmen concerned in the dispute.

In his affidavit, Shri F. Jeejeebhoy has clarified the position thus:—

"At first on 3rd November, 1965, an Arbitration Agreement was entered into by the parties appointing me to decide the merits of the dispute and that Agreement was accepted by me, and since the said Agreement was returned by the Central Government in order to comply with the amended prescribed form, the parties signed before me another Arbitration Agreement dated 21-2-1966 which was also accepted by me at their request."

These facts are also asserted in the return filed by the 2nd respondent. No rejoinder was filed by the petitioner to deny these facts. Govindlal Govil, Labour Relations Adviser to the Company has filed with his affidavit, a carbon copy of the application which was filed before the arbitrator on November 3, 1965. It bears the signatures of the representatives of the parties, and also of the arbitrator, along with the words "I agree" written by him. Thus, it is quite clear that as back as on November 3, 1965, the parties referred to the arbitration of Shri F. Jeejeebhoy their dispute on merits: "Whether the discharge of the said 10 complainants from the Company's service is justified on merits and, if not, to what relief, if any, they are entitled, so that the industrial disputes between the parties arising out of their dispute may finally end". Shri Nanavati, learned counsel for the 2nd respondent, makes an unequivocal statement at the Bar that he himself appeared before the arbitrator and that voluminous evidence was produced by the petitioner-Union and recorded by the arbitrator on the merits of the dispute. We accept the affidavit of the arbitrator and Shri Nanavati's statement. We, therefore, hold that the dispute which was referred to the arbitration of Shri F. Jeejeebhoy was not limited to the question of maintainability of the complaints but also the dispute whether the discharge was justified on merits.

21. No other point was urged.

22. This petition is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 150/-.

23. BHAVE, J.:— I entirely agree with the Order proposed by my learned brother Shiv Dayal, J. that the petition may be dismissed with costs. I would, however, like to add a few words more.

24. There is another reason, in my opinion, why this petition should be dismissed. It is clear from the facts stated by both the parties that a number of disputes between the same parties were referred to the Bombay Tribunal under various orders of reference by the Government. During the pendency of those references, the parties with a view to establish goodwill and industrial peace entered into a 'package deal' under which it was agreed between the parties that all the disputes should be referred to the arbitration of Shri Jeejeebhoy, ex-President, Labour Appellate Tribunal of India, Bombay, under Section 10-A of the Industrial Disputes Act. Accordingly, applications were filed before the Bombay Tribunal and awards in terms of the agreement were obtained from the Tribunal in all those matters. Subsequently, all those disputes were referred to Shri Jeejeebhoy as was agreed to between the parties. Out of the various matters, awards on two matters only are being challenged before us on the ground that Shri Jeejeebhoy had no jurisdiction to decide the disputes as a reference was already made under Section 10 to a Tribunal constituted under the Industrial Disputes Act. This the petitioner cannot be allowed to do. The principle of estoppel is clearly attracted in such a case. In any case, this Court must be adverse to exercise its special jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution in such a case. In AIR 1957 SC 397, it was held by their Lordships of the Supreme Court that the petitioners before them were not entitled to invoke the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 32 of the Constitution as the conduct of the petitioners in submitting to the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer, to whom their cases had been transferred, would disentitle them to any relief at the hands of the Supreme Court on the ground that the said Income-tax Officer had no jurisdiction to proceed with their assessment. In other words, their Lordships of the Supreme Court held that a party invoking the jurisdiction of a tribunal or submitting to it without protest cannot be allowed to urge that the tribunal had no jurisdiction. It was, however, urged before us that this principle is applicable only when there is latent want of jurisdiction in the tribunal and not to a case where there is patent want of jurisdiction. Our attention was invited to the discussion by Seervai in his book "Constitutional Law of India" (1957 Edn.) at pages 645 and 646. The case of AIR 1957 SC 397 (supra) has been cited by Seervai with a comment that the observations of the Supreme Court were made without reference to the question whether there was patent lack of jurisdiction or not. The learned author thus desires to suggest that the case of the Supreme Court may be treated to be one of latent want of jurisdiction. Whatever that may be, it is sufficient to observe that the Supreme Court has not confined its observations to any one kind of case only. In this case, however, that question does not arise so much as, in my opinion, the principle of estoppel is clearly attracted that I heavily rely on it for rejecting the petition.

25. On merits also, there is no substance in the petition. The main contention of the petitioners is that a voluntary reference under Section 10-A of the Industrial Disputes Act can only be made "at any time before the dispute has been referred under Section 10". In other words, the right conferred under Section 10-A cannot be exercised once a reference is made by the Government under Section 10 and the only thing left to the parties to the dispute is to abide by the award given on reference made by the Government. In (1958) 2 Lab. L. J. 634=(AIR 1958 SC 1018), their Lordships pointed out that even when a reference was made under Section 10, the parties to the dispute were not precluded from arriving at a private settlement of the dispute and the proper course for the Tribunal in such a case was to make an award in terms of the settlement arrived at between the parties. A situation slightly different came for consideration by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Sirsilk Ltd. v. Government of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1964 SC 160.

In that case, on reference under Section 10 the Tribunal made an award and sent the same to Government for its publication under Section 17 of the Act. After the award was given, but before its publication, the parties to the dispute came to a settlement and sent a joint letter to the Government not to publish the award. The Government expressed their inability to accede to the request of the parties as they thought that the provisions of Section 17 of the Act were mandatory and the Government were bound to publish the award. The parties, therefore, moved the High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution for a writ of mandamus restraining the Government from publishing the award. The matter ultimately was taken to the Supreme Court. Their Lordships held that the provisions of Sec. 17 of the Act were mandatory. It was, however, pointed out that the settlement arrived at between the parties became binding on them under Section 18(1) of the Act and so was the effect of an award published under Section 17. If the award was allowed to be published, two conflicting but equally binding settlements would come into existence and it was, therefore, the duty of the Government to resolve the conflict by not publishing the award. Preference was given by their Lordships of the Supreme Court to the private settlement as against the settlement on adjudication because that was more conducive to industrial peace.

Their Lordships further observed:

"The reference to the tribunal is for the purpose of resolving the dispute that may have arisen between employer and their workmen. Where a settlement is arrived at between the parties to dispute before the tribunal after the award has been submitted to Government but before its publication, there is in fact no dispute left to be resolved by the publication of the award. In such a case, the award sent to Government may very well be considered to have become infructuous and so the Government should refrain from publishing such an award because no dispute remains to be resolved by it."

What I wish to emphasise is that both the decisions of the Supreme Court clearly indicate that reference made by Government under Section 10 of the Act does not take away the right of the parties to settle their dispute in the manner they like best and the whole purpose of the Industrial Disputes Act being to establish industrial peace and harmony, preference must be given to the settlement arrived at between the parties as against an award given on reference. Now, settlement of a dispute may include the mode of settlement of the dispute as well. It, therefore, follows that if the parties before a tribunal decide to settle their dispute by referring the same to the arbitrator of their own choice, that settlement the tribunal is bound to accept as is clearly laid down by their Lordships in Ganguly's case, 1958-2 Lab. L. J. 634=(AIR 1958 SC 1018) (supra). This is exactly what was done by the Bombay Tribunal. The effect of the agreement reached between the parties to refer their dispute to the private arbitrator was to make the proceedings before the Tribunal infructuous. This is the effect of the decision of their Lordships in AIR 1964 SC 160 (supra). In this view of the matter, it must be held that no proceeding was pending before the Tribunal when the reference under Section 10-A was made to the arbitrator; firstly, because the Tribunal had given its award in terms of the agreement reached between the parties; and, secondly, because the proceedings before the Tribunal had become infructuous in view of the agreement reached between the parties. The submission of the petitioners that no reference to arbitrator could be made after the reference under Section 10 was made is, therefore, without any substance. The petition is therefore dismissed with costs. Hearing fee Rs. 150/-.

M/s. Phoolchand Narendra Kumar and others, Petitioners v. State of Madhya Pradesh through Secretary, Govt. of M. P. and others, Respondents.

Misc. Petn. No. 87 of 1969, D/- 15-3-1969.

(A) Essential Commodities Act (1955), S. 3 — M. P. Foodgrains Dealers Licensing Order 1965, Cls. 3 and 7 — Licence — Renewal — Principles.

The renewal of an existing licence of a dealer from year to year, provided the other conditions are fulfilled, has to be granted in the very nature of things, as without such renewal, he cannot deal in foodgrains at all.

Clause 3 of the Order which provides for licensing of dealers does not confer an absolute discretion on the Collector to grant or revoke a licence just as he pleases. The power has to be exercised in a reasonable manner, keeping in view all the considerations that are relevant. No doubt, the provisions of the Order nowhere furnish the grounds upon which the licensing authority can refuse to grant a licence or its renewal. They must, however, be interpreted in the light of the considerations arising from Art. 19(1)(g), read with Art. 19(6) of the Constitution, as otherwise, Cl. 3 will confer unguided discretion to the Collector in the matter of grant or refusal of licences and their renewal. So the grant of a licence or its renewal under the Order should be the normal rule as it is undoubtedly a restraint on the freedom of trade which is guaranteed to any citizen under Art. 19(1)(g) of the Constitution. (Para 6)

(B) Essential Commodities Act (1955), S. 3 — M. P. Foodgrains Dealers Licensing Order 1965, Cls. 3 and 7 — Renewal of licence — Refusal to renew — Consideration.

An order of Collector, refusing to renew Foodgrains Dealers Licence of a firm on the ground that some of the partners of the firm are also partners of other firm holding a separate licence, is liable to be struck down as the refusal of renewal of licence proceeds upon a ground which is wholly extraneous to the requirements of Cl. 7 of the Order. It is true that Cl. 7 does not indicate the nature of reasons on which the grant or refusal of a licence or its renewal may proceed. But the reasons for such grant or refusal must be such as will be in the interest of the general public. A licence to Foodgrain Dealers is issued with the object of preventing them from engaging in any nefarious trade or activities which would defeat any of the objects for which the Essential Commodities Act (Act No. X of 1955) had been enacted or the Madhya Pradesh Foodgrains Dealers' Licensing Order, 1965 had been made. It must necessarily have nexus to the main object and purpose of the legislation, i.e., control of production, supply and distribution of trade and commerce in certain commodities which are essential to the life of the community in general. (Para 8)

Moreover, from the provisions of Cl. 5 (4), which envisages the grant of separate licences to a dealer for each place of his business, it is evident that there will be no justification for refusal to grant separate licences in the names of different firms on the ground that some of the partners are common. (Para 10)

(C) Essential Commodities Act (1955), S. 3 — M. P. Foodgrains Dealers Licensing Order, 1965, Cls. 3 and 7 — Refusing to renew licence — Authority acts quasi-judicially — Principles of natural justice have to be observed.

An order of Collector refusing to renew licence of a foodgrain dealer, without giving any opportunity of hearing to the concerned dealer will be illegal, being in violation of the mandatory provisions contained in Cl. 7 of the Order besides being in breach of the rules of natural justice. It is well settled that, while considering the question of breach of the principles of natural justice, Courts should not proceed as if there are any inflexible rules of natural justice of universal application. Rules of natural justice vary with the varying constitutions of statutory bodies and the rules prescribed by the legislature under which they have to act. The language of Cl. 7 of the Order clearly enjoins that in making an order of refusal of a grant of a licence or its renewal, the Collector is obliged to act quasi-judicially. That the matter does not rest on the subjective satisfaction of the Collector is clear from the consideration that Cl. 10 provides for an appeal to State Government against such refusal of grant of licence or its renewal. P. C. Pathak, for Petitioners; Ku. Rama Gupta, Govt. Advocate, for Respondents.

A. P. SEN, J.:— By this application under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution, the petitioners seek a writ of Certiorari for quashing an order dated 13th December 1968 passed by the Collector of Jabalpur under Clause 7 of the Madhya Pradesh Foodgrains Dealers Licensing Order 1965 (hereinafter referred to as the "Order"), refusing to renew their Foodgrains Dealer's Licence No. 30/65 for the year 1969 and also for a consequential writ of Mandamus for directing its renewal.

2. The facts leading to this petition, shortly stated, are these. The petitioners are a partnership firm trading in foodgrains under the name and style "M/s Phoolchand Narendrakumar" in the city of Jabalpur, under Foodgrains Dealer's Licence No. 30/65 issued by the Collector of Jabalpur under Clause 3 of the Order. The firm is constituted of 3 partners, namely, Narendra Kumar, Devendra Kumar and Nirmal Kumar (Petitioners Nos. 2, 3 and 4 herein), with the minor Lalchand (Petitioner No. 4) admitted to its benefits, and is registered as a partnership firm with the Registrar of Firms, Madhya Pradesh. There is another firm in the City, carrying on business in food-grains styled as "M/s Ramprasad Gokulprasad", Jabalpur. That firm consists of 9 partners, including the three partners of the petitioners' firm, M/s Phoolchand Narendrakumar. The remaining 6 partners are Gokulprasad, Navalkishore, Sunderlal, Surkhichand, Chhotelal and Mst. Jhunkari Bahu, who are all related to them. The minor Lalchand is a beneficiary in that firm as well. That firm is also registered as a partnership firm with the Registrar of Firms, Madhya Pradesh. Both the aforesaid firms are licensed as "dealers" under the Madhya Pradesh Foodgrains Dealers' Licensing Order, 1965 holding Foodgrains Licences Nos. 30/65 and 31/65 respectively from the year 1965 itself when the Order was brought into force, and since then these licences have admittedly been renewed by the authorities from year to year.

3. The Order in question was issued by the State Government of Madhya Pradesh, in exercise of the powers conferred under Section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act (Act No. X of 1955), and it provides, inter alia, by Clause 3 that no person shall carry on business as a dealer in foodgrains except in accordance with the terms and conditions of a licence issued in that behalf, by the Collector who is constituted to be the licensing authority for the purpose. The expression 'dealer' has been defined in Clause 2(a) of the Order, thus:

"2 (a) 'dealer' means a person who is engaged or intends to engage in the business of purchase, sale or storage for sale of paddy in quantity of 10 quintals or more at any one time or in quantity of 4 quintals or more at any time in respect of any one foodgrain other than paddy or in quantity of 25 quintals or more at any time in respect of all foodgrains taken together, whether on one's own account or in partnership or in association with any other person or as a commission agent or arhatiya (excludes Kachha Adatia) and whether or not in conjunction with any other business, but does not include a person—

- (i) who stores any foodgrains produced by him by personal cultivation, and
- (ii) who does not engage in the business of purchase or sale of foodgrains."

4. For the present year 1969, the petitioners' firm, M/s. Phoolchand Narendrakumar, had made a usual application for renewal of their Foodgrains Dealer's Licence No. 30/65, as in the earlier years. Admittedly, that application was made on 19th October 1968 before the Collector, Jabalpur through the Food Officer, more than 30 days before the expiry of the pre-existing licence held by the petitioners, and the authorities issued an acknowledgment on that date in token of having received that application together with a treasury-challan showing payment of the renewal fee along with the licence in original for renewal. It appears that a similar application for renewal of the Foodgrains Dealer's Licence No. 31/65 was also made by the other firm, M/s. Ramprasad Gokulprasad. The Collector, Jabalpur, by his impugned order dated 13th December 1968, has refused to renew the licence of the petitioners' firm for the year 1969, on the ground that the 3 partners constituting their firm, M/s. Phoolchand Narendra Kumar, are also the partners in the other firm, M/s. Ramprasad Gokulprasad, which holds a separate Foodgrains Dealers Licence No. 31/65 in its name.

5. Since the validity of that order is in question in these proceedings, we think it convenient to set it out below:

It would be obvious from the terms of this order that the Collector has not only refused the renewal of the Foodgrains Dealer's Licence No. 30/65 held by the petitioners' firm but also has cancelled it presumably on the hypothesis that separate licences under the Order cannot be had in the names of different partnership firm when some of the partners are common to them.

6. Having heard the counsel, we are satisfied that the reliefs asked for by the petitioners must be granted. The scheme of the relevant Order as embodied in Clause 3 is that no person shall carry on any business as a dealer in foodgrains except under or in accordance with the terms and conditions of the licence issued in that behalf by the licensing authority. Under Clause 4, every application for a licence or renewal thereof shall be made to the licensing authority in Form A, and every licence issued or renewed on such application has to be in Form B, prescribed thereunder. The provisions of the Order nowhere furnish the grounds upon which the licensing authority can refuse to grant a licence or its renewal. They must, however, be interpreted in the light of the considerations arising from Article 19(1)(g), read with Article 19(6) of the Constitution of India, as otherwise, Clause 3 which provides for the licensing of dealers would confer unguided discretion to the Collector in the matter of grant or refusal of licences and their renewal. The grant of a licence or its renewal under the Order should be the normal rule as it is undoubtedly a restraint on the freedom of trade which is guaranteed to any citizen under Article 19(1)(g) of the Constitution. We are, therefore, of the view that Clause 3 of the Order does not confer an absolute discretion on the Collector to grant or revoke a licence just as he pleases. The power has to be exercised in a reasonable manner, keeping in view all the considerations that are relevant.

A fortiori, the renewal of an existing licence of a dealer from year to year, provided the other conditions are fulfilled, has to be granted in the very nature of things, as without such renewal, he cannot deal in foodgrains at all. We understand that the petitioners' firm M/s. Phoolchand Narendrakumar, has a subsisting contract with the State Government of Madhya Pradesh for the supply of foodgrains to the Central Jail, Jabalpur under the agreement dated 25th April 1968 (Annexure H) till the expiry of the financial year 1968-69, and due to the refusal of the authorities to renew their Foodgrains Dealer's Licence No. 30/65 for the year 1969, it has become impossible for them to perform their part of the contract.

7. The learned Government Advocate tried to support the impugned order on the basis that the State Government of Madhya Pradesh has by their Food Department Memo No. 5520/3077/XXX/68 dated 27th July 1968, issued certain executive instructions for the guidance of all Collectors in the State of Madhya Pradesh in the matter of grant or refusal of foodgrains dealers licences under the Order, and the instructions are against the grant of separate licences in favour of different firms where some of the partners are common, as the object in securing such separate licences may be actuated with a mala fide intention. We are not called upon him to pronounce in this case on the effect of these instructions for a variety of reasons. In the first place, the refusal to renew the petitioners' licence by the impugned order, does not rest on the ground that one of the two partnership firms was a fictitious one, or, that the Foodgrains Dealer's Licence No. 30/65 had been procured with any ulterior object. Secondly, the State Government of Madhya Pradesh have not filed any return supporting the impugned action of the Collector on the basis of the aforesaid instructions. Thirdly, such executive instructions cannot in the nature of things, be so framed or utilized in a manner as to override the provisions of the law. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court have stated in Mannalal Jain v. State of Assam, AIR 1962 SC 386, that such a method will destroy the very basis of the rule of law. In their Lordships' words, "it would be the duty of the licensing authority to ignore all instructions which are not in consonance with the provisions of law by which it is to be guided."

8. Now, the provisions of Clause 7 of the Order by which the licensing authority was to be guided nowhere provides that separate licences cannot be issued in the names of different firms where some of the partners are common. It reads:

"The licensing authority may, after giving the dealer concerned an opportunity of stating his case and for reasons to be recorded in writing, refuse to grant or renew a licence."

Thus, it is manifest that the impugned order suffers from a serious infirmity in so far as the refusal of renewal of the licence of the petitioners' firm proceeds upon a ground which is wholly extraneous to the requirements of Clause 7 of the Order, and is, therefore, liable to be struck down on that ground. It is true that Clause 7 does not indicate the nature of reasons on which the grant or refusal of a licence or its renewal may proceed. That provision must, however, be read in the context of the other provisions of the Order. Normally, when a holder of a licence contravenes any of the terms or conditions of the licence, the licensing authority may, without prejudice to any other action that may be taken against him, cancel or suspend a licence by an order in writing under Clause 8. In this case it is not necessary, for us to catalogue the different reasons on which the licensing authority may refuse to grant or renew a licence. Suffice it to say that the reasons for such grant or refusal must be such as would be in the interest of the general public. A licence to Foodgrain Dealers is issued with the object of preventing them from engaging in any nefarious trade or activities which would defeat any of the objects for which the Essential Commodities Act (Act. No. X of 1955) had been enacted or the Madhya Pradesh Foodgrains Dealers' Licensing Order, 1965 had been made. It must necessarily have nexus to the main object and purpose of the legislation, i.e., control of production, supply and distribution of trade and commerce in certain commodities which are essential to the life of the community in general.

9. The learned counsel for the petitioners rightly draws our attention to Clause 5(4) of the Order for his submission that the scheme of the legislation envisages the grant of separate licences to a dealer for each place of his business. That provision reads:—

"A separate licence shall be obtained by a dealer for each place of business". By parity of reasoning, we would unhesitatingly hold that there is no justification for the attitude adopted by the State Government in this case, namely that separate licence cannot be granted in the names of different firms when some of the partners are common.

10. Apart from this, there is also another lacuna which entirely vitiates the impugned order. On a plain reading of Clause 7 ibid, it is manifest that the licensing authority has no power to refuse to grant or renew a licence unless he has (i) given the dealer concerned 'an opportunity of stating his case'; and (ii) recorded his reasons in writing for his refusal to grant or renew a licence. These are the conditions precedent to the exercise of his jurisdiction. There are clear averments in the petition that the order in question was passed without giving any opportunity of hearing to the petitioners and that the impugned action is, therefore, violative of the mandatory provisions contained in Clause 7 of the Order, besides being in breach of the rules of natural justice. These allegations have not been controverted. Neither the State Government nor the Collector, Jabalpur or the Food Officer have cared to file any return or a counter-affidavit denying the facts alleged in the petition. It is now well settled that, while considering the question of breach of the principles of natural justice, Courts should not proceed as if there are any inflexible rules of natural justice of universal application. Rules of natural justice vary with the varying constitutions of statutory bodies and the rules prescribed by the legislature under which they have to act. See, New Prakash Transport Co. Ltd. v. New Suwarna Transport Co. Ltd., AIR 1957 SC 232 and Bharat Barrel and Drum Mfg. Co. v. L. K. Bose, AIR 1967 SC 361. In the instant case, the language of Cl. 7 of the Order, however, clearly enjoins that, in making an order of refusal of a grant of a licence or its renewal, the Collector is obliged to act quasi-judicially. That the matter does not rest on the subjective satisfaction of the Collector is clear from the consideration that Cl. 10 provides for an appeal to the State Government against such refusal of grant of a licence or its renewal. See, Sukhlal v. Collector, Satna, AIR 1969 Madh. Pra. 176.

11. The result is that the petition succeeds and is allowed. The impugned order dated 13th December 1968 made by the Collector, Jabalpur, under Section 7 of the Madhya Pradesh Foodgrains Dealers Licensing Order, 1965 is quashed, and he is directed to renew the Foodgrains Licence No. 30/65 held by the petitioners' firm for the year 1969 on the usual terms, as before. The respondents shall bear their own costs and pay those incurred by the petitioners, to whom the security deposit shall be refunded. Hearing fee Rs. 100/-, if certified.

Petition allowed.

Misc. Civil Case No. 132 of 1955
D/- 11-8-1969.

(A) Stamp Duty — Stamp Act (1899),
Ss. 38 (2), 36, 61 — Court admitting document in evidence — Admissibility of document cannot subsequently be challenged in the same suit on ground of its being not duly stamped — Only remedy open is under S. 61.

An instrument can be sent to the Collector under S. 38 (2) only when it is impounded under S. 33 but is not admitted in evidence on payment of penalty and/or duty with the aid of S. 35, S. 38(2) has no application to a case where the document has been admitted in evidence. Hence, when a document is sent to Collector after admitting it, the Collector acquires no jurisdiction. (Paras 12, 14)

JM/KM/E677/69/SNV/M

In a case where an instrument is tendered and the Civil Court just admits it in evidence, without its being questioned on the ground that it is not duly stamped, such validity cannot, by virtue of S. 36 be subsequently questioned at any stage of the same suit or proceeding on the ground that it is not duly stamped. The only course then open is the one provided in S. 61 of the Act. Under that section, it is the Court, to which appeals lie from, or references are made by, the Court which admitted the instrument in evidence, which may, on its own motion or on the application of the Collector, take into consideration the order of the subordinate Court admitting the instrument in evidence. And, if such (appeal or reference) Court is of the opinion that such instrument should not have been admitted in evidence without payment of duty and penalty under Section 35, or that higher duty and penalty should have been paid, such court may order the instrument to be produced and may impound it when produced. Such Court shall then send the instrument, along with its declaration, to the Collector. (Para 11)

(B) Stamp Duty — Stamp Act (1899), Ss. 29, 40 — Partition deed — Stamp duty — Recovery of — Collector can recover it from any of the executors of deed.

S. 29 and S. 44, in effect, only regulate the liabilities as between the parties inter se. The Collector can proceed to recover the entire duty and penalty from any one or from all those parties in his discretion. This is because the liability to pay stamp duty as between the parties to an instrument on the one hand and the State on the other is joint and several. The parties to an instrument between themselves may have the right to contribution. The Collector is not bound to collect pro rata shares from all the parties. AIR 1956 Mad. 454, Rel. on. (Para 15)

(C) Stamp Duty — Stamp Act (1899), S. 2(15) — Partition deed — Construction of.

In determining stamp duty, the substance of the transaction as disclosed by whole of the instrument has to be looked to, and not merely the operative part of the instrument. The nature of the document can be determined only from the language it employs and the purpose which it is intended to serve. Although it is permissible to look behind the form and at the substance of the transaction, this can be done only by construing the instrument itself and not by taking into consideration any collateral or other evidence de hors the instrument. Hence, where in a document, there is not the slightest indication of any partition having taken place earlier and in fact in so many words it is recorded in it that by that document itself a partition was being effected, it is a deed of partition and not merely a record or acknowledgment of past fact. (1903) 5 Bom. L. R. 103, Rel. on. (Para 6)

(D) Stamp Duty — Stamp Act (1899), S. 40 — Imposition of penalty under — Power of Collector as to, is discretionary. (Para 16)

R. S. Dabir, for Applicant; Ku. Rama Gupta, Govt. Advocate, for Opposite Party.

SHIV DAYAL, J.:— This is a reference under Section 57(1)(a) of the Stamp Act. The questions referred have arisen on the following facts. Balkrishna instituted a suit against Nimasingh in the Court of the Civil Judge, Class I, Khargone, for the recovery of Rs. 1057.50 on foot of four promissory notes executed by him on May 26, 1957, in favour of Balkrishna Biharilal, a joint family firm. By amendment of the plaint, the plaintiff averred that in 1959 there was a partition between him and his sons under which the amount to be recovered on those promissory notes was allotted to him in his share. An issue was framed on July 16, 1962, whether the plaintiff alone had the right to sue. Balkrishna (plaintiff) was examined on July 2, 1963. He produced his Rokad Bahi (cash book) for Samvat 2016 in which there is an entry dated November 5, 1959, purporting to effect a partition and showing the shares allotted to the coparceners. Balkrishna proved this document and it was marked Ex. P-5.

2. When Hiralal (P. W. 2) was in the witness-box on the same day, and the document (Ex. P-5) was put to him, an objection was raised by the counsel for the defendant that it was a deed of partition and, as it did not bear the prescribed stamp, it was not admissible in evidence. There is a "note" saying that the document (Ex. P-5) has not been admitted in evidence and the objection was raised at the appropriate stage. It is not known whether this "note" was the defendant's contention or the Court's observation. After hearing both the parties, the learned trial Judge held that this document is a deed of partition and it requires stamp duty. The plaintiff's counsel then sought 15 days' time to get the document validated by the Collector on payment of such duty or penalty as would be demanded from him. The trial Court accepted the plaintiff's request and gave him time.

3. Then the learned Civil Judge himself wrote a letter to the Collector of Khargone (No. 3743 dated July 5, 1963) with which he sent the document (Ex. P-5) with his remark that it effected a partition of the property worth about rupees one and a half lacs; that the plaintiff's share was Rs. 27,000/-; that it required stamp duty; and that a penalty was also liable to be imposed. He said in his letter that this was his opinion. In conclusion he said that the document (Ex. P-5) was being sent to him (Collector) for taking proceedings for its validation with the request that it be returned after the needful was done.

4. The Collector, purporting to exercise his powers under Section 40(1)(b) of the Stamp Act, passed an order directing the petitioner to pay Rs. 1,350/- as stamp duty and Rs. 13,500/- as penalty for validating the document. Aggrieved by this order, Balkrishna filed a revision before the Board of Revenue, which was dismissed. The plaintiff then moved this Court by a petition in Balkrishna v. The Board of Revenue, M. P. Misc. Petn. No. 318 of 1964, D/- 16-9-1964 (M. P.), under Article 226 of the Constitution. A Division Bench of this Court (Dixit, C. J. and Pandey, J.) held that in its view important questions of law arose and the Board had unreasonably declined to make a reference under Section 57(1) of the Stamp Act. The order of the Board of Revenue was quashed and it was directed to state the case and to refer to this Court the following questions with its opinion thereon:—

"(i) Whether, after admitting Exhibit P-5 in evidence, the Civil Judge was competent to send it to the Collector under Section 38(2) of the Stamp Act?

(ii) Whether the Collector, who had not received Ex. P-5 under the provisions of Section 61 of the Stamp Act, had jurisdiction to pass the order dated 25th March, 1964?

(iii) Whether the plea that Ex. P-5 is merely a record or acknowledgment of a past fact can be shown by evidence aliunde?

(iv) Whether, on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, Ex. P-5 is an instrument of partition within the meaning of Section 2(15) of the Stamp Act?

(v) Whether, in the case of an instrument of partition, the entire stamp duty and penalty can be recovered from any one of the executors or whether only the pro rata share of the amounts can be recovered from each executant?

(vi) Whether the quantum of penalty leviable in a given case is entirely a matter of the Collector's discretion?" Accordingly, this reference was made.

5. We propose to answer the fourth question first. In the entry, Ex. P-5, the names of the coparceners are stated. They are Balkrishna and his five sons. It is stated that they carry on business in the name and style of "Balkrishna Biharilal"; that besides the joint family business, the joint family is possessed of moveable and immoveable properties; that all the coparceners have equal shares; that they are desirous of effecting a partition, which will also be beneficial to Ramakant a minor coparcener, and that according to their books of account, the total assets amount to Rs. 1,77,655/15/3. Then the shares allotted are described. In conclusion it is stated that by these entries they have effected a partial partition of the family assets; that the remaining property would continue to be joint; and that they have effected this partition of their free will and accord and have affixed their signatures in token thereof:

"Uparokta jama kharch dwara hamane hamari abhishta batware ki ichcha ko murtroop pradan kar diya hai. Ewam pariwarik poonji ka anshik batwara kar diya hai. Shesh sampati bhawishya men vibhajan hone tak purwawat sammilit hi rahegi. Yah batwara hamane apni su-ichcha se kiya hai. Iski swikruti ewam pushti apane hastakshar dwara niche mujab kar dete hai."

The contents of the document (Ex. P-5) leave no manner of doubt that it is an instrument of partition within the meaning of Section 2(15) of the Stamp Act.

6. Shri Dabir's contention was that a partition had already taken place a few days earlier, that is, on October 31, 1959, and that the document (Ex. P-5) was merely a record or acknowledgment of a past fact. This argument is wholly untenable, having regard to the language of the document. There is not the slightest indication of any partition having taken place earlier. In fact, in so many words it is recorded in it that by this document itself a partition was being effected.

7. The following principles govern the application of the Stamp Act to instruments:—

(i) The first is that duty is payable on the instrument and not on the transaction. The leading case on this point is Commissioner of Inland Revenue v. Angus (1889) 25 Q.B.D. 579 at p. 589. In that case, Esher, M. R., observed thus:—

"The first thing to be noticed is, that the thing which is made liable to the duty is an 'instrument' It is not the transaction of purchase and sale which is struck at; it is the instrument whereby the purchase and sale are effected which is struck at."

It is not open to the revenue to say that the instrument should be deemed to be that which it is not on the record and that the object of the transaction was to achieve a purpose not disclosed in the instrument.

(ii) The second rule is that the Court is not (sic) by the apparent tenor of the instrument; it is the real nature of the transaction which will determine the stamp duty. See, for instance, Mortgage Insurance Corporation v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue, (1888) 21 Q.B.D. 352; Inland Revenue v. James John Oliver, (1909) A.C. 427 and Deddington Steamship Company, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (1911) 2 K.B. 1001. But the true meaning of this rule is really this that the recitals in the instrument should not be lost sight of merely because the parties gave a particular description of its nature. But the rule does not go beyond this. Here may be recalled the weighty observations of Lord Cairns, who said many years ago in Partington v. The Attorney-General (1869) 4 H. L. 100 at p. 122:—

"As I understand the principle of all fiscal legislation, it is this: If the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law he must be taxed, however great the hardship may appear to the judicial mind to be. On the other hand, if the Crown, seeking to recover the tax, cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is free, however apparently within the spirit of the law the case might otherwise appear to be."

It was observed in Bank of Chettinad v. I. T. Commissioner AIR 1940 P.C. 183:—

"Their Lordships think it necessary once more to protest against the suggestion that in revenue cases 'the substance of the matter' may be regarded as distinguished from the strict legal position." Their Lordships then referred to Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Duke of Westminster, 1936 A.C. 1. See also Board of Revenue v. Narsimhan, AIR 1961 Mad. 504 (FB).

(iii) The third rule is that the Court must look at the document itself as it stands and it is not permissible to show, by evidence, any collateral circumstances. The nature of the document can be determined only from the language it employs and the purpose which it is intended to serve. Although it is permissible to look behind the form and at the substance of the transaction, this can be done only by construing the instrument itself and not by taking into consideration any collateral or other evidence de hors the instrument. In Chandrakant v. Kartickcharam, (1903) 5 Bom. L. R. 103, Peacock, C. J., said:—

"It appears to me that in applying the stamp law the stamp must be paid upon what is stated in the instrument and cannot depend upon collateral evidence....." Thus, the question must be decided essentially with reference to the contents of the instrument and to the intention of the parties which is gathered from the contents.

(iv) The fourth rule is that in determining stamp duty, the substance of the transaction as disclosed by whole of the instrument has to be looked to, and not merely the operative part of the instrument.

(v) The fifth rule is that stamp duty is payable on an instrument according to its tenor and it does not matter that it cannot be given effect to for some independent cause.

(vi) The sixth rule is that there can be no objection to a device effectuating a transaction in a manner that lower rate of duty is attracted. See, for instance, Littlewoods Mail Order Stores Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, (1961) 1 Ch. 210.

8. The answer to the third question is to be found in the third and fourth rules enunciated in the foregoing paragraph.

9. We shall now advert to the first question. Having perused the record of the civil suit and the proceedings of the Court recorded in the order sheet, we have no doubt that the document was admitted in evidence. When Balkrishna was examined and cross-examined as P.W. 1, no objection was taken, either by the defendant or by the Court. Exhibit number was put on the document over the signature of the Presiding Officer of the Court. Objection was taken, for the first time, when Hiralal (P.W. 2) was being examined and the document was put to him in examination-in-chief. But, by virtue of Section 36 of the Stamp Act, admission of an instrument cannot be called in question on the ground that the instrument was not duly stamped.

10. It was an argument that there was no conscious admission of the document by the Court. It was mechanically produced when Balkrishna was in the witness-box and it was mechanically marked as an exhibit. The learned Judge of trial Court also wrote a remark to that effect when objection was taken to the admissibility of the document during the course of recording of Hiralal's evidence. But the law is quite clear on the point. When a document is tendered in evidence and before it is marked as exhibit in a case, the trial Court has to judicially determine whether it is properly stamped or not. Once it has been marked as exhibit in a case and has been used by the parties in examination-in-chief or cross-examination of a witness, Section 36 steps in. See Javer Chand v. Pukhraj Surana, AIR 1961 SC 1655.

11. The scheme of the Act is abundantly clear.

(i) Once an instrument chargeable with duty is tendered in a civil court, it shall impound it, if, after examining it, the Court is of the opinion that it is not duly stamped: Section 33 of the Act. The Court has, however, power under Section 35 of the Act to admit it (barring certain instruments) in evidence on payment of duty with which the instrument is chargeable, or the amount required to make up the deficiency, together with a penalty, limits of which are prescribed in the section. There is no third course open to the Court, once it finds that an instrument tendered in evidence is not duly stamped. The next step, which the Court has then to take, is provided in Section 38. If the Court has admitted in evidence an instrument upon payment of penalty and/or duty, it shall send to the Collector an authentic copy of such instrument together with a certificate stating the amount of duty and penalty levied in respect of that instrument, and shall send such amount to the Collector. This is provided in sub-section (1) of Section 38.

(ii) Then sub-section (2) of Section 38 enacts thus:—

"In every other case, the person so impounding an instrument shall send it in original to the Collector."

This sub-section, therefore, clearly refers to a case where an instrument has been impounded under Section 33 of the Act but has not been admitted in evidence on payment of penalty and/or duty. The Collector has then to follow the procedure as specified in Sections 39 and 40 of the Act, according as the instrument is sent to him by the Civil Court under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) respectively of Section 38.

(iii) But when the Civil Court is of the opinion that an instrument is duly stamped, it does not impound it under Sec. 33 of the Act but admits it in evidence.

(iv) In a case where an instrument is tendered and the Civil Court just admits it in evidence, without its being questioned on the ground that it is not duly stamped, such validity cannot, by virtue of Section 36 of the Act, be subsequently questioned at any stage of the same suit or proceeding on the ground that it is not duly stamped. The only course then open is the one provided in Section 61 of the Act. Under that section, it is the Court, to which appeals lie from, or references are made by, the Court which admitted the instrument in evidence, which may, on its own motion or on the application of the Collector, take into consideration the order of the subordinate Court admitting the instrument in evidence. And, if such (appeal or reference) Court is of the opinion that such instrument should not have been admitted in evidence without payment of duty and penalty under Section 35, or that higher duty and penalty should have been paid, such Court may order the instrument to be produced and may impound it when produced. Such Court shall then send the instrument, along with its declaration, to the Collector.

12. On the above analysis, it is abundantly clear that an instrument can be sent to the Collector under Section 38(2) of the Stamp Act only when it is impounded under Section 33, but is not admitted in evidence on payment of penalty and/or duty with the aid of Section 35. Section 38(2) has no application to a case where the document has been admitted in evidence.

13. The second question referred to us relates to the vires of the order passed by the Collector on March 25, 1964. The opening paragraph of the order makes it abundantly clear that the order was passed on a misconception of the situation which existed in the eye of law. He says:—

"This case emanates out of a reference by the Civil Judge First Class, Khargone, who has impounded the document said to be a deed of partition. The Civil Judge impounded this document which was produced before him in Civil Suit No. 11 of 1960 (M. P.), Balkrishna v. Nemasingh on behalf of one of the co-sharers of the said property. The Civil Judge has observed that this document has not been properly stamped and therefore action under the Indian Stamp Act for recovery of stamp duty with penalty as provided under the Stamp Act be taken.

A notice was given to the non-applicant to show cause why the proper stamp duty and penalty may not be recovered from him."

He then says that after hearing the parties and for the reasons stated by him, he reached the conclusion that the instrument was chargeable under Article 45 of the Stamp Act. He directed a duty of Rs. 1350/- and penalty of Rs. 13500/-, total Rs. 14850/- to be paid for validating the instrument.

14. It is clear from the order of the Collector, dated March 25, 1964, that he had not received the instrument under the provisions of Section 61 of the Stamp Act. From what we have said in answer to the first question referred to us, it follows that the second question must be answered in the negative.

15. Adverting to the fifth question, Section 29 of the Stamp Act enacts that, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the expense of providing the proper stamp in the case of an instrument of partition, shall be borne by the parties thereto in proportion to their respective shares in the whole property partitioned. Accordingly, all the parties to Ex. P-5, in proportion to their respective shares, had to bear the stamp duty. But this section and Section 44, in effect, only regulate the liabilities as between the parties inter se. The Collector can proceed to recover the entire duty and penalty from any one or from all those parties in his discretion. This is because the liability to pay stamp duty as between the parties to an instrument on the one hand and the State on the other is joint and several. The parties to an instrument between themselves may have the right to contribution. The Collector is not bound to collect pro rata shares from all the parties. This was also the view taken in Subramanian v. Revenue Divisional Officer, AIR 1956 Mad. 454.

16. Turning now to the sixth question, the powers of the Collector under Section 40 of the Stamp Act are discretionary in respect of imposition of penalty. There are no provisions in the Stamp Act to guide his discretion. That being so, the general principle of law, that discretion must be exercised according to reason and justification, must be followed.

17. On the above discussion, we answer questions Nos. 1 and 2 in the negative, and questions Nos. 4 and 6 in the affirmative. We answer the first part of question No. 5 in the affirmative and the second part in the negative. Our answer to question No. 3 is as follows. The Court must look at the document itself as it stands and it is not permissible to show by evidence any collateral circumstances.

The nature of the document can be determined only from the language it employs and the purpose which it is intended to serve. The substance of the transaction as disclosed by whole of the instrument has to be looked to and not merely the operative part of the instrument.

The case shall now go back to the Board of Revenue, along with the entire record received from it. No order for costs.

Order accordingly.

JUDGMENT:— This is a Letters Patent Appeal from the Judgment of Mr. Justice Pandey.

2. Nathuram has a field, Khasra No. 490, at village Mohana in Datia District. Siyasharan's field, Khasra No. 489, is adjacent to it. Siyasharan made an application before the Tehsildar on the allegation that Nathuram by constructing a Bandhiya blocked his way which he had been using for long. This application was decided by the Tehsildar in favour of Siyasharan. The Tehsildar directed Nathuram to remove the obstruction and clear the way within 10 days. Nathuram appealed but did not succeed. Eventually, he filed a suit in the Civil Court for declaration that he is entitled to maintain the Bandhiya and for a declaration that the orders of the Tehsildar and the Revenue Commissioner are inoperative and ineffective. Siyasharan challenged the maintainability of the suit in the Civil Court and urged that it was barred. This objection found favour with the trial Court, the first appellate Court, and also the learned Single Judge in second appeal. However, the learned Single Judge certified the case fit for Letters Patent Appeal. Nathuram has preferred this appeal.

3. Siyasharan's application before the Tehsildar was under Section 131 of the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code 1959, (hereinafter referred to as "the Code"). That section runs thus:—

"Section 131 — Rights of way and other private easements:—

(1) In the event of a dispute arising as to the route by which a cultivator shall have access to his fields or to the waste or pasture lands of the village, otherwise than by the recognised roads, paths or common land, including those roads and paths recorded in the village Wajib-ul-Arz prepared under Section 242 or as to the source from or course by which he may avail himself of water, a Tehsildar may, after local enquiry, decide the matter with reference to the previous custom in each case and with due regard to the convenience of all the parties concerned;

(2) No order passed under this section shall debar any person from establishing such rights of easement as he may claim by a civil suit."

Then Section 257 of the same Code provides exclusion of the jurisdiction of civil court in these words:—

"Except as otherwise provided in this Code, or in any other enactment for the time being in force, no Civil Court shall entertain any suit instituted or application made to obtain a decision or order on any matter which the State Government, the Board or any Revenue Officer, is by this Code, empowered to determine, decide or dispose of, and in particular and without prejudice to the generality of this provision, no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction over any of the following matters:—

(c) etc. etc."

In the clauses that follow under the main part of Section 257, Section 131 does not find a place.

4. It is urged for the appellant that this suit was maintainable under subsection (2) of Section 131 of the Code. Alternatively, it is urged that apart from that provision the plaintiff (Nathuram) can enforce his common law right in the Civil Court.

5. As we read Section 131(1) it is clear to us that the Tehsildar has jurisdiction under this section in cases of disputes relating to 'route' by which a cultivator shall have access to his field or to the waste or pasture land of the village; and (ii) to the source from or course by which he may avail himself of water". This Section applies to private rights in contradistinction to public rights, i.e., by the recognised roads, paths and common land including those recorded in the village Wajib-ul-Arz. So far as the right of way is concerned, this section is confined to the private right of way of an individual cultivator through the field of another for the purpose of having access to his field, or to the waste or pasture land of the village. Secondly, it is conspicuous from the scope of enquiry provided in the section that the matter is to be decided with reference to previous custom and with due regard to the convenience of the parties concerned. Thus although the heading of the Section is "Rights of way and other private easements," the section does not speak of rights of easement as are enforceable under the general law i.e., the Easements Act. Under the general law, to establish a right of easement under Section 15 of the Act, for instance, it has to be proved inter alia that the right has been exercised for 20 years as of right and without interruption. But under Section 131 of the Code the Tehsildar is not to enter into an enquiry whether the plaintiff's right has been perfected by prescription. He has merely to decide the dispute with reference to the previous custom and he has to have regard to the convenience of the parties concerned. When a dispute is to be decided on the basis of convenience it is an unperfected right.

6. From the above discussion it will be seen that, irrespective of the fact that the plaintiff has a perfected right of way under the Easements Act or not, he is entitled to approach the Tehsildar under Section 131 of the Code for a decision in his favour on the basis of custom and of the partnership in Malaya; (2) it does not deal with any specific immoveable property and allot it to one or the other of the parties and (3) the Indian Registration Act of 1908, and in particular S. 17 (1) (b) would apply only to India and cannot apply to immoveable properties situate in Malaya.

21. It will be convenient to take up reasons (1) and (2) together. In Bageshwari Charan Singh v. Jagarnath Kuari, ILR 11 Pat 272 = 59 Ind App 130 = AIR 1932 PC 55, their Lordships of the Privy Council approved the view of West, J. in an early Bombay case that the word "declare" occurring in Section 17 (1) (b) will apply only to those instruments which bring about a definite change of legal relation to the property by an expression of will embodied in the document referred to and will not apply where it merely recites the pre-existing facts. In the case before West, J. in Sakharam Krishnaji v. Madan Krishnaji, (1880) ILR 5 Bom 232, the document in question acknowledged the pre-existing title of the eldest brother of M of the executants to the sites on which the brother M was putting up houses. West J. in holding that it did not require registration observed—

"Here, however, the document is not itself one which declares a right in immoveable property, in the sense probably intended by Section 17. There 'declare' is placed along with 'create', 'assign', 'limit', or 'extinguish' a 'right' 'title or interest' and these words imply a definite change of legal relation to the property by an expression of will embodied in the document referred to. I think this is equally the case with the word 'declare'. It implies a declaration of will, not a mere statement of fact, and thus a deed of partition, which causes a change of legal relation to the property divided amongst all the parties to it, is a declaration in the intended sense; but a letter containing an admission, direct or inferential, that a partition once took place, does not 'declare' a right within the meaning of the section." Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed—

"Though the word 'declare' might be given a wider meaning, they are satisfied that the view originally taken by West, J., is right. The distinction is between a mere recital of a fact and something which in itself creates a title. The distinction has been acted on in cases connected with mortgages by deposit of documents of title. . . . In the present case, the statement in the petition of the respondent did not create any right in the Thakur. It merely acknowledged as a fact that such right was his. There was therefore no necessity for registration".

The above decision was followed with approval by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in 1960-2 SCR 209 = 1960 SCJ 416 = (AIR 1960 SC 307) and 1966-2 SCJ 490

= (AIR 1966 SC 1300) already referred to, where the document was construed as merely relating to a fact which had taken place earlier. It will be seen that in the present case there was no dispute at the time of the compromise in O. S. 33 of 1948 about the shares of the parties. Clause 4 there merely recited what was common ground between the parties, and did not bring about any change in the legal relation of the parties with respect to the properties.

22. Secondly Ex. A.5 did not allot any specific item of immoveable property to any of the parties. It does not even say that the properties have necessarily to be divided in specie in the respective shares. It contemplated that the properties might have to be sold and accounts finalised which is the normal mode of working out the rights of partners, as pointed out in 1966-2 SCJ 490 = (AIR 1966 SC 1300) already referred to. According to Ex. A.5, even if it should become necessary to divide the properties in specie, that had to be done by an instrument which has to come into existence later when the accounts were finally settled. It did not therefore create or declare any interest in any particular item of property in any of the parties.

23. Thirdly, it is clear that the Indian Registration Act of 1908, cannot apply to immoveable properties in Malaya. Section 1 (2) of the Act says that the Act extends to the whole of India except the State of Jammu and Kashmir, and it is provided that the State Government may exclude any districts or tracts of country from its operation. The Act therefore does not purport to apply to any immoveable properties outside India. The Scheme of the Act also confirms this. Sec. 17 says that the documents specified therein shall be registered if the property to which they relate is situate in a district in which, and if they have been executed on or after the date on which, the Registration Acts of 1864, 1866, 1871, 1877 or 1908 came or comes into force. Section 5 of the Act says that for the purposes of the Act the State Government shall form districts and sub-districts. Sections 28 to 31 contain important provisions about the place of registration. In the case of documents relating to immoveable properties, they shall normally be presented for registration in the office of the Sub-Registrar within whose sub-district the whole or some portion of the property to which such document relates, is situate. Sections 64 and 65 contemplate that the Sub-Registrar, on receiving a document relating to immoveable property, shall send copies of the registered deed to every other Sub-Registrar in whose jurisdiction any part of such property may lie. The idea is obviously to make the registration complete to anybody who wants to inspect the title. These provisions are reinforced by Sec. 49 which says that no document required by Sec. 17 or by any provision of the Transfer of Property Act 1882, to be registered, shall affect any immoveable property comprised therein, etc. These provisions particularly the provisions about the place of registration, are totally inappropriate in the case of a document like Ex. A.5 dealing with immoveable properties in Malaya. The Indian Registration Act of 1908 does not and cannot prescribe in which place such documents can be registered. The importance of the place of registration can be recognised from the fact that if no part of the properties lies in the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar to whom the document is presented, the document cannot be registered by that Sub-Registrar and, if for the purpose of securing registration some property is fictitiously mentioned, the registration will be void. This has been held by the Privy Council in Harendralal Roy v. Haridasi Debi, ILR 41 Cal 972 = 41 Ind App 110 = (AIR 1914 PC 67). See commentary in Mullah's Registration Act under Section 28. In short, the object of the legislation is only to provide for compulsory registration in respect of immoveable property in India so that the title may be clear, and it is no concern of the Indian Legislature to legislate with respect to the title to immoveable properties in Malaya.

24. This position is also settled in Private International Law. In 36 Halsbury, page 430, the law is stated thus—

"Statutes relating to land are presumed to have been intended to bind all land within the territory to which they extend, but not land situated elsewhere".

As authority for the latter position it has quoted the decision of the House of Lords in British South Africa Co. v. Companhia de Mocambique, 1893 AC 602 HL. There a suit was brought in England by the plaintiff to recover damages for a trespass said to have been committed by the defendant company to the plaintiff's mines situate in South Africa. The reliefs of declaration of title and injunction which had been originally prayed for were given up. The House of Lords held that the question of title to properties situate in South Africa was involved and that the English Court could not try such a suit. Their Lordships quote Story's Conflict of Laws. Story himself quotes the following language of Vattel:

"In such a case, as property of this kind is to be held according to the laws of the country where it is situated, and as the right of granting it is vested in the ruler of the country, controversies relating to such property can only be decided in the state in which it depends".

We have seen that this is also what has been stated in 7 Halsbury at pages 30, 31, etc.

The same position is reiterated in the other leading text books: Craies on Statute law; Maxwell; Dicey's Conflict of laws; and Cheshire's Private International law. Thus in Craies on Statute law, Chapter XVII, page 448, 6th Edn., it is stated—

"All the authorities in England and the United States recognise in its fullest import the principle that real estate or immoveable property is exclusively subject to the laws of the Government within whose territory it is situate. It is subject to the lex situs". Similarly in Maxwell, in Chapter VI it is stated—

"Another general presumption is that the legislature does not intend to exceed its jurisdiction. Primarily legislation of a country is territorial". (see pages 138 etc.) The same position is stated in Dicey's Conflict of Laws, in several places; for instance, (7th Edn.), Introduction page 4, Rule 18, (pages 147 to 152), Rule 85, (page 512 etc.).

In Cheshire, 7th Edn., the law is to be found in pages 503 to 505, among other pages.

It is unnecessary to refer to the other English decisions. Turning to the decisions in India, there seem to be only a few. In Venkatapayya v. Venkataranga Rao, ILR 43 Mad 288 = (AIR 1920 Mad 763), the plaintiffs sued for the recovery of the zamindari of Munagala situated in Krishna District, from the 2nd defendant who was in possession claiming to be the duly adopted son of the daughter of the late zamindar who represented the eldest branch, marked A in the genealogical tree. On the question of adoption it was found by the learned District Judge who tried the suit that there was a written authority to adopt given to the widow of the late zamindar. The late Zamindar and his widow were domiciled in the then Nizam's dominions. The law of Hyderabad did not require registration of the authority to adopt, but it was contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that nevertheless it had to be registered under Section 17 (b) of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, because claim was made to immoveable property in Krishna District in British India on the basis of that written authority to adopt. The learned District Judge found that the authority to adopt was registered in British India within 4 months of its being brought into British India, under the provisions of Section 26 of the Registration Act. The learned District Judge decreed the suit. The plaintiffs preferred the appeal. It was heard by Wallis, C. J., and Sadasiva Aiyar, J. Wallis, C. J., held that the authority to adopt in that case did not require registration under the Indian Registration Act. He observed—

"The first question which arises is, whether the provisions of Section 17 of the Indian Registration Act, which requires authorities to adopt not contained in a will to be registered has any application to an authority to adopt given in Hyderabad, outside British India, by a subject of that State domiciled there. If not, such an authority is not a 'document required by Section 17 to be registered' within the meaning of Section 49 of the Act, and is not affected by the provisions of that section. Now the limits of legislative authority are territorial, and the Indian Legislature in particular has authority to legislate only for British India and British subjects in Native States. Prima facie, therefore, its enactments are not to be construed to apply to acts done outside British India even by British subjects".

At page 302 he observed—

"That Section 17 (3) is a provision affecting status. The Indian Legislature has no authority to legislate as to the status of the subjects of Native States domiciled in such States and this provision cannot in my opinion on the well established rules of construction be read as extending to an authority to adopt conferred in Hyderabad by a subject of that State domiciled there, whose only connection with British India was that his wife owned property there. Questions of validity of adoptions made outside British India by persons who are not British subjects may arise in our Courts, not only in connection with claims to succeed to immoveable properties situate in British India, but also in other ways too numerous to mention, and it would in my opinion be altogether opposed to the accepted canons of construction to attribute to the Indian Legislature when it inserted in the Registration Act what is now Section 17 (3), an intention to interfere in any way with the question of such adoptions which is a matter outside its competence. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the provisions of the Indian Registration Act did not apply to the authority to adopt the second defendant; and that it is unnecessary to consider the further question whether these provisions were in fact complied with."

Sadasiva Aiyar J. also was of the opinion that Section 17 (3) of the Act could not apply to the document in that case and that primarily Section 17 (3) would only apply in respect of authorities to adopt executed by persons domiciled in British India. He further observed—

"As regards the concession given in Section 26 to have certain documents, including an authority to adopt executed out of British India, presented for registration within 4 months after it is brought into British India, it was, in my opinion intended to meet the case of a person domiciled in British India travelling abroad (in Europe or America etc.) or even in a British State on a pilgrimage and suddenly finding himself in a bad state of health, executing an authority to adopt in favour of his wife to be used by her".

25. Though on the above view it would seem to have been unnecessary to consider the further question, the learned Judge considered the further question and agreed with the learned District Judge that the document was presented for registration within British India within 4 months after its arrival in India and that the presentation of the document by the natural father of the second defendant who was then a minor was proper presentation by a representative of the minor for the purpose of the Act (Sections 32, 40).

26. The decision on the last point was affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The decision is reported in Venkatapayya v. Venkataranga Rao, ILR 52 Mad 175 = 56 Ind App 21 = (AIR 1929 PC 24). The appeals of the plaintiffs were dismissed by the Privy Council on that basis. Because the appeals could be dismissed on that short ground, their Lordships did not think it necessary to discuss the further question whether really the authority to adopt did not require registration in India. They observed—

"Neither is it necessary to discuss the important but somewhat abstruse question, whether the respondent being at that time resident in and a subject of the State of the Nizam, can rely upon the unquestioned fact that his status as an adopted child was accepted by the Courts in the Nizam's dominions, as a binding decision on the question of his status precluding all dispute as to the fact and lawfulness of his adoption". From this it cannot be urged that their Lordships meant to throw any doubt on the findings of Wallis C. J. and Sadasiva Aiyar J., that the Indian Registration Act had no extra-territorial jurisdiction. In any case, it is clear that the Indian Registration Act could not prescribe for the registration of a document like Ex. A-5 in so far as it deals with immoveable properties situate in Malaya.

Sukritibala v. Hemantakumar, AIR 1957 Assam 153, was a case where in execution of a money decree, the decree-holder agreed to accept a lesser sum of Rs. 9000 and on behalf of the judgment-debtor, his wife the appellant offered security of her immoveable property. The decree-holder sought to proceed against the appellant in respect of her property. Objection was taken on the ground that the charge created by the compromise had not been registered. The objection was repelled on the ground that the provisions of the Indian Registration Act did not apply to the area where the decree in question was passed or the adjustment was recorded, because that area was the Khasi and Jaintia hill tracts. This is a direct decision on the point.

In Ramanathan v. Somasundaram, ILR (1964) 1 Mad 611 = (AIR 1964 Mad 527), the question was one of limitation in a suit on a mortgage executed and registered in Burma in respect of properties there by persons who were of Indian domicile (Ramana-thapuram Dist.) The creditors gave up their security and claimed only personal relief against them in the District Court of Ramana-thapuram. One of the acknowledgments by the debtors was dated 12-6-1941, and the next acknowledgment was dated 31-3-1947. If Article 115 applied the limitation was three years. But if Article 116 applied, the limitation would be six years. That turned on the question whether the mortgage document could be deemed to be registered within the meaning of Article 116. Ramachandra Iyer C. J. and Ramamurti J. held that the word 'registered' occurring in Article 116 meant 'registered' under the law in force in India and since the document was not registered according to the law, in India, Article 116 would not apply and so the suit was time-barred. This may be taken to be a converse of the case before us, but the underlying principle is of some relevance in the present case.

27. In the result we hold that Ex. A-5 does not require registration. It is admissible and creates a binding contract, namely, that there was a partnership between Ayyachami, Perianna and the 1st defendant, from 19-1-1946 upto 5-4-1949, at any rate. We shall consider the question of limitation on the assumption more favourable to the first defendant, namely, that there was no partnership after 5-4-1949. Article 106 will apply. The suit would normally have to be brought within three years from 5-4-1949, but the suit was filed on 5-4-1957. Section 13 of the Limitation Act will, however, come to the rescue of the plaintiff. It says that the time during which the defendant has been absent from India shall be excluded. Paragraph 25 of the plaint says—

"The plaintiff understands that the 1st defendant has been absent from India in Malaya from 17-3-1947 to 19-5-1948, 25-8-1948 to 29-6-1952, and from 20-1-1955 to 24-12-1956 both days inclusive."

The written statement does not specifically traverse this and hence under Order VIII, Rules 3 to 5 the first defendant must be deemed to have admitted the periods of his absence. Apart from this, the learned Subordinate Judge finds in his judgment, with reference to the several exhibits, as follows (page 10) —

"...the 1st defendant was in Malaya from 17-3-1947 to 19-5-1948. He again left India on 13-8-1949 and returned to India on 29-6-1952. He again went to Siramban on 23-1-1955 and returned to India on 24-12-1956. These particulars are available from Exs. A-30, A-31, A-32, A-20, A-63, A-84 and A-85".

This finding was not challenged before us by the first defendant's learned counsel. We accept it, though the periods are somewhat shorter than the periods mentioned in the plaint. Even taking these reduced periods, it will be seen that they work out to a period of five years, eleven months and nineteen days of absence from India. If this is excluded, the suit is in time, even taking 5-4-1949 as the starting point. Of course, a fortiori the suit would be in time if the partnership had continued till 30-3-1950. We would add that the benefit of this reasoning on the question of limitation will enure for the benefit of the 2nd defendant as well, if she has a share.

28. A minor contention of the learned counsel for the first defendant is that letters of administration have not been taken out for the deceased Solayappa as contemplated in Ex. A-5 and that, till they are taken out, the suit cannot proceed in the Subordinate Judge's Court, Devakottai. Sri Sundara Iyer for the appellant stated that letters of administration had been taken out to the estate of the late Solayappa by the 1st defendant himself. We do not think it necessary to go into that question, because in our view, even if letters of administration have not been taken out so far, that will not be an impediment to the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge's Court, Devakottai. If necessary, letters of administration can be taken from the Malaya Court in due course.

29. A more substantial contention, however, of the learned counsel for the first defendant, is that, even if we should find, on the basis of Ex. A-5, that there was a partnership between Ayyachami, Perianna and the 1st defendant, from 19-1-1946 to 5-4-1949, we should not further find straightway that the first defendant was liable to account. He submits that Ayyachami and Perianna also took part in the management and shared the proceeds. This question has not yet been gone into and must also be remitted for trial by the learned Subordinate Judge.

30. The learned counsel further contends that, as a matter of construction, Ex. A-5 itself provides that the partnership between 19-1-1946 to 5-4-1949 should be wound up by all the parties being in management of the properties without any one being liable to account exclusively. He submits that factually also each of the parties was in possession of some property or the other and that consequently the first defendant is not liable to account. This is contested by the learned counsel for the appellant. This question again is left open.

31. Accordingly, we set aside the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge and we record our findings as follows—

1. The suit is maintainable in the Subordinate Judge's Court of Devakottai.

2. Ex. A-5 constitutes a valid contract on the basis of which the parties must proceed, namely, that there was a partnership between Ayyachami, Perianna and the first defendant even from 19-1-1946 upto 5-4-1949, and that the shares are as indicated in Ex. A-5. Since the first defendant has settled the matter with defendants 3, 4 and 5, the dispute will be outstanding only as between the plaintiff and the second defendant on the one hand, and the first defendant on the other.

3. We find the suit is within time.

The suit is remitted for trial on the further points of dispute between the parties and in particular the following—

1. Whether the partnership continued from 5-4-1949 to 30-3-1950?

2. Which of the parties are liable to account; in particular whether the first defendant is liable to account and if so, from what date?

3. What are the shares of the plaintiffs and the second defendant?

4. To what relief will the parties be entitled?

32. Besides the evidence already on record, the parties will be entitled to adduce further evidence. The suit must be disposed of expeditiously. The parties will bear their own costs in the appeal. The court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal will be refunded to the appellant. Costs in the trial Court will abide the result of the suit. In the meanwhile the first defendant, who is said to have collected the costs from the plaintiff, may pay back the costs to the plaintiff.

Order accordingly.

VEERASWAMI AND ALAGIRISWAMI, JJ.

Madras Motor and General Insurance Co. Ltd., Madras, Appellant v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, Respondent.

Tax Case No. 75 of 1965 (Ref. 24), D/-12-9-1968.

Finance Act (1951), Sch. I, Part B, Proviso (1) — Words “no order has been made under S. 23-A (1) Income-tax Act” — Words do not merely mean physical fact of there being no order under that provision in existence — Rebate may be allowed only after considering applicability of Sec. 23-A, Income-tax Act (1922) and of propriety of making order under that section — Rebate granted without applying mind to the question — Assessment can be reopened on ground that it had been made at too low a rate — (Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 23-A, 34).

The second condition in Sch. I Part B, Proviso (1) of the Finance Act, 1951, that “no order has been made under S. 23-A (1) of the Income-tax Act, 1922” very really bears on the quantum of the total income with reference to which rebate is allowed. Whether or not sixty per cent of the total income as reduced by the reductions permissible under Sec. 23-A of the Income-tax Act, 1922 has been distributed as dividends, the absence of an order under the provision in the particular circumstances leads to precise date by which the amount eligible for rebate is fixed. It stands to reason, therefore, that a rebate may be allowed only after the Income-tax

Officer has considered the applicability of Sec. 23-A and of the propriety of making an order under that section. The words “No order has been made under sub-section (1) of Section 23-A” do not merely mean the physical fact of there being no order under that provision in existence: (1963) 38 ITR 76 at p. 82 (SC), Rel. on. (Para 3)

If the Income-tax Officer in granting rebate made a mistake in assuming that the physical fact of there being no order under Sec. 23-A will suffice or because of the character of the company as he thought it to be that provision would be inapplicable, it would not disentitle him from reopening the assessment on the view that it had been made at too low a rate. So long as the Income-tax Officer had not applied his mind to the question whether it would not be unreasonable to call upon the company to declare a further dividend, but nevertheless he granted rebate under the proviso, it would be a case where he wrongly understood the scope of the proviso in relation to that matter or ignored the requirement of his applying his mind and took it merely for granted that there has been no order under Sec. 23-A in a physical sense. Where this has resulted in assessing the income at too low a rate, the case will squarely fall within the ambit of Sec. 34 of the Income-tax Act, 1922: AIR 1968 SC 124, Rel. on; (1963) 48 ITR 182 (SC), Ref. S. Swaminathan and K. Ramagopal, for Appellant; V. Balasubramaniam and J. Jayaraman, for Respondent.

VEERASWAMI, J.: This is a consolidated reference relating to assessment years 1953-54 and 1954-55. The assessee has been described to be a public limited company, carrying on business in General Insurance. In respect of the said years, the Income-tax Officer originally allowed rebates in the sums of Rs. 4,989-84 and of Rs. 7708-11-0 at the rate of one anna in the rupee on the undistributed profits of the company. On 8-3-1958 the Income-tax Officer, however, passed orders under Section 23-A (1) by which the entire undistributed profits were deemed to have been distributed as dividends to the shareholders. As a consequence, the assessment orders were reopened under Section 34 with the result the rebates granted earlier were withdrawn. The assessee was unsuccessful before the Revenue as well as the Tribunal in his challenge as to the propriety of the order. The Tribunal's view was that Section 23-A created a fiction in respect of distribution of deemed dividends and it was, therefore, clear that the order passed under Section 23-A on 8-3-1958 related back to the anterior period and that further a logical extension of this view would be that at the time of the original assessment, an order under Sec. 23-A (1) had been passed and so the grant of rebate was improper. The assessee has moved for this reference under Sec. 66 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act on the following question—

“Whether, by reason of an order passed on 8-3-1958, under Section 23-A (1) on the assessee company subsequent to the original assessment made on the company, for the years 1953-54 and 1954-55, the rebate of one anna in the rupee on the undistributed profits granted in the original assessment in accordance with Schedule I Part B, Proviso (1) of the Finance Act, 1951 could be withdrawn by a revised assessment?”

We may at the outset state that we do not accept the correctness of the reasoning of the Tribunal above referred to. Nevertheless, we are of opinion that its conclusion should be sustained, though entirely for different reasons. In arriving at that decision, our minds have to a certain extent oscillated from one end to the other, but at the end, we are firmly of the view, that the order of the Income-tax Officer reopening the assessment and withdrawing the rebate was competent and in order.

2. Mr. Swaminathan's argument which undoubtedly has been persuasive, is that grant of rebate under proviso (1) to Part B in Schedule I of the Finance Act postulates that the requisite conditions therefor have, in the opinion of the Income-tax Officer, been satisfied and that if, therefore, he proceeded on the basis that there has been no order made under Section 23-A, it was to that extent, conclusive and could not be reopened or reviewed in exercise of his powers under Section 34. Learned counsel urges that Sec. 23-A does not belong to the realm of assessment, unlike Sec. 34, and it followed, therefore, that when rebate was granted, the decision of the Income-tax Officer that there has been no order under Sec. 23-A should stay, whatever may be the validity of an order passed subsequently under Sec. 23-A. He adds that such a subsequent order will be entirely innocuous for purposes of reopening the assessments under Section 34 and will be futile in withdrawing the rebate. On the other hand, the Revenue, equally persuasively, contends that the application of the proviso in Part B of Schedule I entirely covers the realm of assessment and, therefore, the whole range of it is within the purview of Sec. 34. On that basis, Mr. Balasubramaniam contends that, if the Income-tax Officer on a wrong view of the proviso proceeded merely on the physical fact of there being no order under Section 23-A when he passed the assessment order, and later on he found that he was wrong in doing so and actually made an order under Sec. 23-A, that is a matter which could be reopened under Sec. 34. In applying Sec. 34, to such a situation, the Income-tax Officer is not to be taken as interfering with any order passed under Section 23-A.

3. In order to assess the rival contentions, it is first necessary to notice what precisely is the scope of the proviso. Its particular objective appears to be to encourage retention with the company of the amount that remains of the total income as reduced by the outgoings in the nature of taxes and dividends declared, without that amount also being distributed as dividends, by granting a rebate of one anna in the rupee. Where, however, such amount has also been distributed as dividend, the second clause of the proviso charges additional tax subject to certain limits. In our view, this objective should be kept in mind in delimiting the scope and applicability of the proviso. The body of the proviso visualises that before the question of allowance of rebate is considered, the company concerned has made the prescribed arrangements for the declaration and payment of dividends payable out of the relative profits and has deducted super tax from the dividends in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (3-D) or (3-E) of Sec. 18 of the Act. It is then one can examine whether the conditions for allowance or rebate in clause (1) of the proviso have been satisfied. The conditions are two-fold:

(1) The total income as reduced by seven annas in the rupee and the amount exempt from income-tax exceeds the amount of dividends declared in respect of the whole or part of the previous year and (2) no order has been made under sub-sec. (1) of S. 23-A of the Income-tax Act.

It is on the second condition, the argument on either side has centered. It seems to us to be obvious that this condition very really bears on the quantum of the total income with reference to which rebate is allowed. Whether or not sixty per cent of the total income as reduced by the reductions permissible under Sec. 23-A has been distributed as dividends, the absence of an order under the provision in the particular circumstances leads to precise data by which the amount eligible for rebate is fixed. It stands to reason, therefore, that a rebate may be allowed only after the Income-tax Officer has considered the applicability of Sec. 23-A and of the propriety of making an order under that section. The words “no order has been made under sub-section (1) of Sec. 23-A” do not merely mean the physical fact of there being no order under that provision in existence.

4. In Commissioner of Income-tax v. Afco (Pvt) Ltd., (1963) 48 ITR 76, 82 (SC), the Supreme Court in considering the proviso has made certain observations which appear to support our view:

"The right to rebate arose under those Finance Acts if no order under S. 23-A was made. The Income-tax Officer had therefore to decide even before completing the assessment of the company whether the circumstances justified the making of an order under Sec. 23-A and unless an order under Sec. 23-A was made the assessee became entitled automatically to the rebate of one anna in the rupee. Such a provision led to delay in the disposal of assessment proceedings and caused administrative inconvenience. It appears that the legislature modified the scheme of granting rebate in enacting the Finance Act of 1953, with a view to simplify the procedure and avoid delays".

5. Pitching himself on that position, Mr. Swaminathan urges that once rebate has been granted, it presupposes that a decision has been arrived at by the Income-tax Officer earlier or simultaneously under Sec. 23-A of the Income-tax Act and if that be so, there is no power vested in him under the Act to go back upon that view.

6. The assessment order for the assessment year 1953-54 began by stating that the assessee was a public limited company carrying on business of accident insurance. It was evidently on this view which is not now maintained, the Income-tax Officer thought that Sec. 23-A was inapplicable and, therefore, took it for granted that no order has been passed under that proviso. We are inclined to think that if the Income-tax Officer made a mistake in assuming that the physical fact of there being no order will suffice or because of the character of the company as he thought it to be that provision would be inapplicable, it would not disentitle him from reopening the assessment on the view that it had been made at too low a rate. As has been held by the Supreme Court in Sundaram and Co. (P.) Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-Tax, 66 ITR 604 = (AIR 1968 SC 124), where by reason of wrong allowance of rebate, there has been escapement of tax, it may be considered that the assessment had been at too low a rate and Section 34 would be available in such a case.

But Mr. Swaminathan invites our attention to P. S. Subramania v. Simplex Mills Ltd., (1963) 48 ITR 182 (SC), and contends that the order made under Sec. 23-A subsequent to the assessment orders, would not and could not relate back to the time when the assessments were made and led to an assumption that dividends had been declared to the extent of the amount with reference to which rebate had been given. On that reasoning, he says that Sec. 34 would not be attracted to the situation. We do not think that the authority cited supports him. All that was held in that case was that excess interest paid by the Revenue could not be recovered by an order under Sec. 34 on the strength of an amendment with retrospective effect because it did not relate to a charge of the income and, therefore to an assessment of the income. We do not think that the analogy has application to the instant case. Section 34 is invoked in the present case not to reopen or reconsider an order under Sec. 23-A but to set right an assessment which has been made at too low a rate. If the Income-tax Officer had applied his mind to the conditions necessary for making or not making an order under Section 23-A and then allowed a rebate, whether the position would be different, we are not called upon to consider in this case. There is nothing in the record to show that the Income-tax Officer, before or at the time of making the assessment order applied his mind to the provisions of Sec. 23-A in order to make an order under that provision. It is no doubt true that he proceeded on the basis that the assessee was a public limited company which possibly weighed with him in taking it for granted for purpose of the proviso that there has been no order under Sec. 23-A. But so long as the Income-tax Officer had not applied his mind to the question whether it would not be unreasonable to call upon the company to declare a further dividend, but nevertheless he granted rebate under the proviso, it would be a case where he wrongly understood the scope of the proviso in relation to that matter or ignored the requirement of his applying his mind and took it merely for granted that there has been no order under Section 23-A in a physical sense, and this resulted in assessing the income at too low a rate. Such a case will, in our opinion, squarely fall within the ambit of Sec. 34.

7. We may add that in view of the decision in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Jubilee Mills Ltd., 68 ITR 630 = (AIR 1968 SC 883), there is no substance in the preliminary objection raised by the Revenue to the competence or validity of the reference.

8. In this view, we answer the question against the assessee with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 250.

S. Ramasubramaniam, for Petitioner; P. S. Ramachandran, for Respondent No. 1.

ORDER: The learned Additional District Munsif, Coimbatore, relying upon the decision in Munuswami v. Viswanathan Nair, (1957) 2 Mad LJ 400 = (AIR 1957, Mad 773), allowed a petition under Section 60 (h) of the Civil Procedure Code in execution of a decree for money by attaching the bonus of the respondent who is reported to be a mechanic. But Mr. Ramasubramaniam, brought to my notice the latest judgment of Veeraswami, J., in C. R. P. No. 1952 of 1965 = (AIR 1969 Mad 440), Ganapathi Pillai v. Swaminatha Pillai who held that payment of bonus is a method of payment of wages. He also observed:

"No doubt, payment of bonus is conditional upon payment of wages. But once bonus is paid, it has the true attribute of wages."

Here, he relied upon a decision of the Mysore High Court reported in P. Nathmal v. Dasarath, AIR 1959 Mys 96. It has to be noted that this judgment was rendered after the passing of the Madras Payment of Bonus Act of 1965. There has been chameleonic changes in the law of bonus having regard to the various economic and social strains to accord industrial peace in our country. In this view, the learned Judge, with whom I respectfully agree, was of the opinion that bonus should form part of wage. The order of the Court below cannot stand.

2. Mr. P. S. Ramachandran, however, contended that the petitioner is a mechanic and therefore not a labourer within the meaning of Section 60 (1) proviso (h) of the Civil Procedure Code and the bonus paid to him cannot be deemed to be beyond the pale of attachment. But whether he is a mechanic or a labourer has not been gone into by the Court below, and this has to be ascertained as a question of fact. Both the parties, therefore, agree that there is no material on which I can base my decision whether he is a mechanic or a labourer. It is advisable that this matter is remitted after setting aside the order of the lower Court for a further consideration in the light of the observations made above. Accordingly, the order of the lower Court is set aside and the matter remitted to the file of the District Munsif of Coimbatore for fresh disposal in accordance with law and in the light of my judgment. No costs.

Order accordingly.

Constitution of India, Article 226 — Certiorari. — Who may apply for — Grant of permit to new entrant under Rice Milling (Regulation) Act for establishment of new rice mill — Licensee of existing rice mill is entitled to apply for writ of certiorari. W.P. 2298 of 1966, D/-16-2-1967 (Mad) Reversed. W. P. No. 2332 of 1966 (Mad) and ILR (1964) 2 Mad 869, Overruled — (Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act (1958), Section 5).

An existing rice mill owner who has objected to the installation of a fresh rice mill in the locality and contends that he has been prejudicially affected by the grant of permit under the Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act for installation of a fresh rice mill, has sufficient interest to give him locus standi to make an application for certiorari under Article 226. The Act may or may not provide for appearance and representation by existing rice mill owners in the locality. But the authority under the Act is constrained by the law and rules made thereunder, to have due regard to certain considerations. There is nothing to preclude an existing rice mill owner suo motu placing before the authority these considerations, as failure to have regard to them may affect him prejudicially. An adverse order need not necessarily be against a person, who as of right, is entitled to make representation. W. P. 2298 of 1966, D/- 16-2-1967 (Mad), Reversed. W.P. 2332 of 1966 (Mad.) and ILR (1964) 2 Mad 869, Overruled. W. A. 195 of 1962 (Mad), Expl. and Dist. AIR 1957 Mad 551, Approved; Case law discussed.

When certiorari is sought, the Court generally looks for some personal interest of the applicant in the matter, something more substantial and related to the applicant than due observance of law by authorities, and do not countenance a mere excess of zeal in the observance of law by others. A person who is denied a permit or one who is wrongfully deprived or refused something to which he is entitled, or on whom a legal burden is cast are obvious cases. But that does not exhaust the list. Other persons may be affected and genuinely aggrieved by excess or abuse of powers. The requirements as to the standing of an applicant for certiorari cannot be circumscribed by any narrow limitation. Of necessity it would vary according to the law administered, the illegality alleged, and the grievance suffered. The right to apply for relief deeming himself aggrieved, if that is the test, is one thing, making out a case for the issue of a certiorari is a different thing. That would depend on the judicial scrutiny of the record in relation to and his establishing one or other of the recognised grounds for quashing. The necessity for judicial scrutiny, when a person comes to Court complaining against an act of commission or omission of an administrative authority regulating trade, business or occupation under law which prejudicially affects him, springs from the concept of the supremacy of the rule of law and the authority of the Court to determine the legality of the Act. The fact that the licencing law vests the authority with some discretion in the matter, does not take the act of the authority out of judicial scrutiny. When an authority is entrusted with discretion, the authority must direct himself properly in law. He must direct his attention to matters which he is bound to consider and he must exclude from consideration matters which are irrelevant to what he has to consider. If he does not obey those rules, then he oversteps the bounds of his jurisdiction. In matters that could vitally affect citizens in their normal avocations, trade and business, there is no such thing as absolute discretion in administrative authorities. The law on these matters, to be valid, has to provide guide-lines and the discretion has to be controlled by the guide-lines. (Para 6)

NATESAN, J.: The short question for consideration by the Full Bench in this batch of writ appeals is, whether a licensee of an existing rice mill has locus standi to apply for a writ of certiorari to quash the grant of a permit for the establishment of a new rice mill in the locality, under the Rice-Milling Industry (Regulation) Act, Act 21 of 1958 (hereinafter referred to as the Act.) The appeals have been preferred from the dismissal of petitions for certiorari on the ground that an existing rice mill owner is not a person aggrieved by the grant of permit to another, and has no standing to apply for certiorari. In Kuppusami Pillai v. State of Madras, W. P. 2332 of 1966 (Mad), Kailasam, J., observed that the mere fact that a person who has a mill in close proximity to the one to which licence has been granted is likely to suffer financial loss is not sufficient to make him an aggrieved person entitling to maintain a writ petition challenging an order of the licensing authority granting permit to a new applicant. In taking this decision, the learned Judge considered that the matter was not res integra but governed by the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in Lakshmiammal v. Vaithilingam W. A. 195 of 1962 (Mad). Proceeding the learned Judge held that the decision of Rajagopalan, J., in Abdul Mazid v. State of Madras, 1957-2 Mad LJ 1 = (AIR 1957 Mad 551), taking a contrary view could not, in view of the decision of the Division Bench, be said to be good law. But the contrary view finds confirmation in the observations by another Division Bench in Thiruvengada v. Muthu Chettiar W. A. 150 of 1968 (reported in 1969-1 Mad LJ 143).

2. The Rice Milling Industry (Regulation) Act 1958, is an Act to regulate the rice milling industry in the interests of the general public. Manifestly, it is a restriction in the carrying on of business of rice milling. Section 8 of the Act prohibits the establishment of any new rice mill by any person or authority after the commencement of the Act except under and in accordance with a permit granted under Section 5 of the Act. The permit has to be followed by securing a licence under Sec. 6 for carrying on rice milling operation. There is a prohibition against an owner of a rice mill changing the location of the whole or any part of the rice mill, and against expansion of the rice mill except with permission. Severe penalties, imprisonment and fine, are provided by Section 13 for contravention of provisions of Section 8. Section 5 (1) requires an application to be made to the Central Government for the grant of a permit for the establishment of a new rice mill or for re-commencing rice milling operation in a defunct rice mill. Under statutory powers, the Central Government has delegated its functions to the State Board of Revenue.

Section 5 (4) requires a full and complete investigation to be made in the manner prescribed, before the grant of a permit. The investigation should have due regard to the number of rice mills operating in the locality, the availability of paddy in the locality, the availability of power and water supply for the rice mill in respect of which a permit is applied for and the type of the rice huller type, sheller type or combined sheller huller type. The investigation has also to be directed to ascertain whether the functioning of the rice mill would cause substantial unemployment in the locality and other matters that may be prescribed. The rules made under the Act bring out more clearly the object of the Regulation. They emphasise that the investigation shall be made with a view to ascertaining whether the grant of a permit is necessary for ensuring adequate supply of rice. Information has to be gathered as to the pattern of trade and commerce in rice in the locality, the effect that the operation of the new or the defunct rice mill may have on the local economy, and the necessity or otherwise for an addition to the productive capacity of the existing rice mills in the locality. The enquiry inter alia must be directed to ascertain whether hand pounding industry in the locality is already well organised and whether the establishment of a new rice mill is likely to affect adversely that industry.

The object of the Act, it is manifest, is not to give monopoly in rice mill business, but to regulate the rice milling industry in the interests of the general public. At the same time, it emerges from the statutory provisions and rules that the grant of a permit is not arbitrary, but should have due regard to the local potential for entertaining a new rice mill or what may be called local economic expediency, namely, the availability of paddy in the area to be hulled, the existing number of rice mills which serve the public need, the availability of power and water supply for the efficient running of the rice mills and the adverse effect a new rice mill may have on allied industries like hand pounding industry. Rice milling industry is thus a controlled business and there is a restriction on the citizen's right to carry on the business or occupation of rice milling. The regulation purports to impose reasonable restrictions in the interests of the general public. In the cases before us, the existing rice mill owners carrying on business under the Regulation complain that the regulation or rules made thereunder have been violated by the administrative agencies, authorised to grant permits, by granting fresh permits when not warranted under the regulation and rules made thereunder. This contravention of the regulation or rules, it is their case, prejudicially affects them, the local economy being disturbed.

3. The Full Bench reference is confined to a very narrow question; but counsel would raise other points. Inter alia Mr. V. K. Thiruvengkatachari, learned counsel appearing for the respondent in one of the cases, would contend for invalidating the Act itself. It is said that the Act unreasonably restricts the carrying on of a common occupation and is, therefore, violative of the rights guaranteed under Art. 19(1) (g) of the Constitution. Reference is made to the opinion of the Supreme Court, United States, expressed in New State Ice Co. v. Liebmann 285 US 262 at 277, 279=78 L Ed 747; that a regulation which has the effect of denying or unreasonably curtailing the common right to engage in a lawful private business, such as manufacturing ice, cannot be upheld consistent with the Fourteenth Amendment. It is urged that, if Act 21 of 1958, and rules made thereunder could be utilised by an existing rice mill owner to prevent a competitor from entering into the business, the Act should be struck down as not regulating the rice milling industry, but as precluding persons from engaging in the industry. In view of the limited nature of the question under consideration in this reference, we leave open the question of vires of the Act. Nor is it necessary for us to examine whether existing rice mill owners are entitled to notice on an application for a permit to instal a new rice mill in the locality and whether the authority, when overruling objections raised by existing rice mill owners who intervene must give reasons for doing so.

4. It is not contended for the existing rice mill owners that any of their fundamental rights is violated. They say "we do not have and we are not claiming any monopoly in the business. We are carrying on business under the restrictions imposed by the Act and rules made thereunder. When, without due regard to local economy, availability of paddy and the capacity of existing rice mills, a permit is granted to another person, the grant prejudicially affects our business. But we are not free to adjust our economy. We cannot shift elsewhere at our convenience to maintain the required turnover for profitable business. We are constrained to carry on the business under the Act and the rules thereunder. Even so, let the new entrant be permitted to enter business, if that can be done subject to the same conditions, that is in accord with the Act and rules. Arbitrary grants in breach of the law in a business activity regulated by the statute injures our business. Constrain the authority administering the Act to apply the law and rules current to all and at all stages with an even hand, so that the rule of law may prevail."

The question is whether, when that is the prayer, it is correct for this Court to say, without examining whether in fact there is breach of any rule or the Regulation and whether there is reasonable cause for feeling aggrieved, that the grievance of an existing rice mill owner, if any, is not one which the Court should take cognisance of and grant redress under Article 226 of the Constitution, and turn him away at the threshold. Our answer, as will be presently seen, has to be 'no'.

5. Article 226 of the Constitution confers powers on High Courts in language of the widest amplitude to issue to any person or authority, including in appropriate cases any Government orders or writs, including writs in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto and certiorari, or any of them, not only for enforcement of fundamental rights but also for any other purpose. The Article does not, in terms, provide as to who can apply for writs or orders thereunder. It is pointed out by the Supreme Court in Calcutta Gas Co. Ltd. v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1962 SC 1044 at p. 1047:

"It is implicit in the exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction that the relief asked for must be one to enforce a legal right... The right that can be enforced under Article 226 also shall ordinarily be the personal or individual right of the petitioner himself, though in the case of some of the writs like habeas corpus or quo warranto this rule may have to be relaxed or modified".

In Election Commission, India v. Saka Venkatarao, AIR 1953 SC 210, 212, the Supreme Court observed that power of High Courts for issuing directions, orders or writs for purposes other than fundamental rights was conferred with a view apparently to place all the High Courts in this country in somewhat the same position as the Court of King's Bench in England. In Basappa v. Nagappa, AIR 1954 SC 440 at p. 443 the Supreme Court said:—

"In view of the express provisions in our Constitution we need not now look back to the early history or the procedural technicalities of these writs in English law, nor feel oppressed by any difference or change of opinion expressed in particular cases by English Judges. We can make an order or issue a writ in the nature of certiorari in all appropriate cases and in appropriate manner, so long as we keep to the broad and fundamental principles that regulate the exercise of jurisdiction in the matter of granting such writs in English law."

In the light of the above observations, when on the question as to who may legitimately apply for certiorari, it may not be out of place to examine the broad principles on which the standing of an applicant for certiorari is viewed in English Courts. We are assuming that there is good ground for the remedy. No serious problem of locus standi can properly arise, when a judicial or quasi-judicial order of a lis inter se between parties is sought to be quashed. In such a case manifestly a party could be aggrieved by an adverse decision, and, so, would have status to attack it. Again, if an authority has power to do an act under a statute which will prejudicially affect a citizen, then, even though there are no two parties apart from the authority and the person affected, and the contest is between the administrative authority and a citizen opposing it, clearly the citizen, would be a person aggrieved if the order passed is against him. The question of locus standi acutely arises for consideration, when third parties who oppose such orders are affected by them. Is it open to them, because they have been prejudicially affected, to question the legality of the orders passed on one or other ground on which a writ of certiorari could be issued? The citizen affected may not be able to aver infringement of any common law right or direct violation of his individual right yet the citizen's interests might have been adversely affected by an unreasonable or arbitrary determination of the administrative authority. Keir and Lawson in Cases in Constitutional Law, 5th Edn, page 406, have this to say on the question:

"As has already been said, the direct control of public authorities becomes especially necessary when a subject cannot show that he has suffered the infringement of an actual right. The question therefore arises, what sort of locus standi an applicant for relief must have. The matter has been mainly discussed of recent years in relation to the prerogative orders and the view is generally held that, although the older decisions seem to apply different tests to the various orders, at the present day the matter is entirely in the hands of the Judges, except where the Crown applies for an order and probably also where the applicant, though a subject, can show that an actual right of his has been infringed. This discretionary power of the Judges, since it allows them to refuse an order on general grounds, also makes it unnecessary for them to insist on any proof of locus standi in the applicant; they can in a proper case say that his interest is too remote without giving any special reasons. Thus the prerogative orders can be granted at the instance of any person who has an interest sufficient to satisfy the Judges that he has reasonable grounds for his application; and, for instance, it was once a matter of course for a brewery company to apply for certiorari to quash a licence granted to a rival company. This freedom from strict rules of locus standi would seem to be one of the most valuable characteristics of the prerogative orders."

In our view, this sums up the position in England neatly. To examine some of the leading cases; in R. v. Surrey JJ (1870) LR 5 QB 466, Justices had made an order that the repair of certain unnecessary roads by the parishes should cease and be stopped up. An appeal against the order failed. The statute concerned had provided that notices of the stopping-up should appear at each end of the roads to be stopped up. But notices had appeared only at one end of each of the roads. On certiorari being sought by an inhabitant, to have the order quashed, a question arose as to who should apply for the writ. The following observations of Cockburn C. J. governed the case:

"I entirely concur in the proposition that, although the Court will listen to a person who is a stranger, and who interferes to point out that some other Court has exceeded its jurisdiction, whereby some wrong or grievance has been sustained, yet that is not ex debito justitiae, but a matter upon which the Court may properly exercise its discretion, as distinguished from the case of party aggrieved, who is entitled to relief ex debito justitiae, if he suffers from the usurpation of jurisdiction by another Court."

The expressions certiorari "of right" or "ex debito justitiae" mean only certiorari that cannot be had until due grounds are shown, but then will not be refused unless the grounds shown are answered. In Reg v. Nicholson (1899) 2 QB 455, 471, Vaughan Williams L. J. remarked that, besides the case of an aggrieved person who applies as of right for the writ, there is another case in which the Court has regard to the question whether the applicant is an aggrieved person, and that is where the Court has to exercise its discretion as to the issue of the writ. "In such a case" it is observed, "the Court will consider whether the interest of the applicant is so small, or his grievance so like that of the rest of Her Majesty's subjects, as to have no sufficient ground for the issue of a writ." A. L. Smith L. J. observed that as a matter of discretion the certiorari ought not to go, as the applicants should have shown that they have a peculiar grievance of their own beyond some inconvenience suffered by them in common with the rest of the public. In Rex v. Groom Ex parte Cobbald, 1901-2 KB 157, 162, a case under the Licensing Act relating to sale of intoxicating liquors, Lord Alverstone C. J. after observing that if he could see his way to decide against the applicants for certiorari who were only rivals in trade of the person to whom the licence had been granted and were taking a purely technical objection he should be glad to do so, made the rule absolute as he had to recognise their locus standi. He observed:

"As to the question whether the applicants for the rule are persons aggrieved, there can be no doubt that they have no real grievance arising from the omission to serve the notice in time. That, however, is not the sense in which persons applying for a certiorari are required to be persons aggrieved. It is sufficient if they have a real interest in the decision of the justices, and they have in this case. They took the point now raised before the Justices at the adjourned general annual licensing meeting and when the confirming order was made, and it would be too strong to say that they had not a sufficient interest in the matter to enable them to apply for the rule."

In Rex v. Ex parte Howitt, 1921-1 KB 248, 255, another case under the Licensing Act in respect of sale of liquors, setting out the true principle on which Courts act in the matter of certiorari, the Earl of Reading C. J. observed:

"Here the applicant had an interest distinct from the general inconvenience which may be suffered by the law being wrongly administered."

It was further observed:

"The question whether a person has a particular interest in the subject matter as distinguished from the interest which the general public has must always be a question of degree. Of course, it may be that a person's interest is so slight that the Court will not act upon it, but where, as here, it is substantial the Court is bound to issue the writ when it appears on the face of the order that there has been a wrongful exercise of jurisdiction in the sense of an excess of jurisdiction."

The applicant in that case, it is remarked, did not stand in the same category as a member of the public who could be said to have only a general interest in seeing that the law was properly carried out; but he had a particular interest in the subject matter and that was shown by the fact that he incurred the expense of instructing Counsel to secure if he could, the refusal of the confirmation, and to contend that the confirming authority had no jurisdiction. The applicant for writ in that case was only a licensee of other premises in the same borough. We may here notice that the principle, enunciated in the foregoing two decisions, was accepted by a Full Bench of this Court in S. M. Transport v. Raman and Raman, AIR 1961 Mad 180 at p. 184 (FB). Referring to these decisions, the Full Bench observed—

"The true principle is to determine whether the applicant has an interest distinct from the general inconvenience which may be suffered by the law being wrongly administered."

In Maurice v. London County Council, 1964-2 QB 362, 378, interpreting the words "persons aggrieved" in a statute, Lord Denning M. R. observing that the narrow view that had been given to the words in the Court that it meant a person who had suffered a legal grievance must be rejected adopted the following observations of the Judicial Committee in Attorney General of the Cambia v. N'Jie, 1961 AC 617, 634:—

"The words 'person aggrieved' are of wide import and should not be subjected to a restrictive interpretation. They do not include, of course, a mere busy body who is interfering in things which do not concern him; but they do include a person who has a genuine grievance because an order has been made which prejudicially affects his interests."

A wide interpretation has been given to the words "persons aggrieved", even when they are found in a statute. When an order is passed against a person prejudicially affecting his interest, he may have cause for genuine grievance. The determination need not have arisen between him and the authority; it would be sufficient if he had intervened to protect his interests. In the English cases under licensing Acts cited above, an existing licensee, as a person concerned with the grant or withholding of licence to another public house, was held to have sufficient interest to be a person aggrieved. Another illustration case where the interest was not considered remote to give locus standi is the decision in R. v. Minister of Health ex p. Dore 1927-1 KB 765. There, an auditor had surcharged Borough councillors for overpaying or expending and when the Minister of Health without jurisdiction remitted the surcharge, a person who was only a rate-payer from the District which the Councillors, represented, applied for and had certiorari. In a recent case Reg v. Russell Ex parte Beverbrook Newspapers Ltd., 1968-3 WLR 999 at p. 1003, the question arose whether the proprietors of a newspaper have sufficient standing to apply for certiorari to quash an order in committal proceedings, which lifted the restrictions against publication of the proceedings imposed under the Criminal Justice Act, 1967 to a limited extent only. The Act permitted removal of the restrictions on an application by a person charged, and on the application of one of the five persons involved, the Magistrate lifted the ban limiting its effect to those parts of the proceedings relating to the applicant. The proprietors of the newspapers contended that, in law, in the circumstances, they were entitled to an unlimited order and applied for orders of certiorari and mandamus. On the question whether the newspaper proprietors had a standing to make the application, Parker C. J. observed that the standing of the proprietors of the newspaper to apply for the order was perfectly clear and they were certainly "a person aggrieved" so as to be able to make the application. S. A. De Smith in his Judicial Review of Administrative Action, at p. 313, sums up the position thus:

"...in strict law any member of the public may apply for certiorari to quash an order; in practice no application is likely to succeed except one made by a person aggrieved; the meaning of a person aggrieved is, for this purpose, much wider than in most other branches of the law; but an applicant's personal interest in the subject-matter of an impugned order may be too slight or too remote for him to be tested as a person aggrieved by it."

The broad principles are well established. The interest of the applicant need not be proprietary, but as a claim for certiorari implies a grievance, there must be a grievance — a grievance that the Court would take cognisance of. Having regard particularly to the amplitude of the power of the Court that may be invoked under Art. 226, a scrutiny of the locus standi of an applicant for certiorari is clearly necessary to keep off meddlesome interlopers and professional litigants invoking the jurisdiction of the Court in matters that do not in the least concern them. In Venkatswara Rao v. Government of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1966 SC 828, 833, the Supreme Court observes:

"This Court held in the decision cited supra, (AIR 1962 SC 1044) that 'ordinarily' the petitioner who seeks to file an application under Article 226 of the Constitution should be one who has a personal or individual right in the subject-matter of the petition. A personal right need not be in respect to a proprietary interest; it can also relate to an interest of a trustee. That apart, in exceptional cases, as the expression 'ordinarily' indicates, a person who has been prejudicially affected by an act or omission of an authority can file a writ even though he has no proprietary or even fiduciary interest in the subject-matter thereof."

An existing rice mill owner who contends that he is prejudicially affected by the grant of a permit for installation of another mill in the locality contrary to law would, manifestly under the principles discussed above, be entitled to apply for relief under Article 226. A case where a business rival was held to be a person aggrieved is the recent decision of the Supreme Court in Lakshminarain v. State Transport Authority U. P., AIR 1968 SC 410, 413, a case under the Motor Vehicles Act. Section 47 (3) of that Act provides for determination by the Regional Transport Authority of the number of stage carriages generally or of any specified type for which stage carriage permits may be granted in a region or in any specified area or route within the region. There is no specific provision for representations to be made at an enquiry in the matter by persons already providing transport facilities. A revision is provided for from the order at the instance of a person aggrieved. While answering in the affirmative the question whether a revision would lie at the instance of an existing operator as a person aggrieved, the Supreme Court observed:

"We are unable to say that no existing operator can be aggrieved by an order made under Section 47 (3), increasing or decreasing the number of stage carriages; it would depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. In a particular case it may be to his advantage and he then would not file a revision against it, but if he files a revision when an order made under Section 47 (3) is prejudicial to his interests, there is no ground for denying him the right to approach the revisional authority and seeking its order. An order under Section 47 (3) affects the future working on a route and we are of the view that such an order would have repercussions on the working of the existing operators, whether for their good or not."

Even so the installation of a fresh rice mill would have its repercussions on the working of existing rice mills in the locality. Existing rice mill owners may be affected by the installation of a new rice mill, if the paddy available in the locality is not sufficient to go round for all the mills. It is thus clear, on the legal principles involved and on the authorities, that an existing rice mill owner will have locus standi to approach this Court for certiorari, if he is aggrieved by the grant of a permit for a fresh rice mill in the locality. The Act may provide for appearance and representation by existing rice mill owners in the locality. The Act may not provide for appearance and representation by existing rice mill owners in the locality. But the authority is constrained, by the law and rules made thereunder, to have due regard to certain considerations. There is nothing to preclude an existing rice mill owner suo motu placing before the authority these considerations, as failure to have regard to them may affect him prejudicially. An adverse order need not necessarily be against a person, who, as of right, is entitled to make representation. In Lakshminarain's case, AIR 1968 SC 410, 413, the existing operator had been given no statutory right to make representation. S. A. De Smith in his Judicial Review of Administrative Action at p. 307, referring to authority, states:—

"It would seem that one who has no right to appear or to be represented at a hearing may nevertheless be a person aggrieved by the determination made in consequence of that hearing."

It is relevant, in this connection, to refer to the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in Valliamma v. State of Madras, AIR 1967 Mad 332, 333, where a person applied for certiorari to quash proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act in respect of a land adjacent to his land. When the question of locus standi of the applicant was raised, it was observed by this Court:

"It is not in dispute that the writ appellant has a site immediately adjoining the site proposed to be acquired as a burial and burning ground; if the writ appellant builds a house thereon, and other houses also spring up in the locality, the inmates of those houses may very well claim as the Kala Kshetra authorities previously did, that the proximity of this cremation and burial ground is an injury to health and hygiene. In that sense, the writ appellant is a person affected and it is in accordance with the principles of equity and law, that too rigid an interpretation of that term ought not to be adopted by Courts."

The Court proceeded in the view that the applicant had, by reason of his local situation, a peculiar grievance of his own entitling him to a writ ex debito iustitiae.

6. The decided cases show that when certiorari is sought, the Court generally looks for some personal interest of the applicant in the matter, something more substantial and related to the applicant than due observance of law by authorities, and do not countenance a mere excess of zeal in the observance of law by others. A person who is denied a permit or one who is wrongfully deprived or refused something to which he is entitled, or on whom a legal burden is cast are obvious cases. But that does not exhaust the list. Other persons may be affected and genuinely aggrieved by excess or abuse of powers. The requirements as to the standing of an applicant for certiorari cannot be circumscribed by any narrow limitation. Of necessity it would vary according to the law administered, the illegality alleged, and the grievance suffered. The right to apply for relief deeming himself aggrieved—if that is the test—is one thing; making out a case for the issue of a certiorari is a different thing. That would depend on the judicial scrutiny of the record in relation to and his establishing one or other of the recognised grounds for quashing. The necessity for judicial scrutiny, when a person comes to Court complaining against an act of commission or omission of an administrative authority regulating trade, business or occupation under law which prejudicially affects him, springs from our concept of the supremacy of the Rule of law and the authority of the Court to determine the legality of the act. The fact that the licencing law vests the authority with some discretion in the matter, does not take the act of the authority out of judicial scrutiny. When an authority is entrusted with discretion, the authority must direct himself properly in law. He must direct his attention to matters which he is bound to consider and he must exclude from consideration matters which are irrelevant to what he has to consider. If he does not obey those rules, then he oversteps the bounds of his jurisdiction. In matters that could vitally affect citizens in their normal avocations, trade and business, there is no such thing as absolute discretion in administrative authorities. The law on these matters, to be valid, has to provide guide-lines and the discretion has to be controlled by the guide-lines. We may here adopt the observations of Lord Reading in Ridge v. Baldwin, 1964 AC 40, where the learned Law Lord said—

“...nothing short of a decision of this Court (House of Lords) directly in point would induce me to accept the position that, although an enactment expressly requires an official to have reasonable grounds for his decision, our law is so defective that a subject cannot bring up such a decision for review however seriously he may be affected and however obvious it may be that the official acted in breach of his statutory obligation.”

Of the decisions of this Court on the question under consideration, the earliest directly on the question is that of Rajagopalan J. in 1957-2 Mad LJ 1 = (AIR 1957 Mad 551). It was given under the Rice Mills Licensing Order, 1955, which was replaced by the Rice

Milling Industry (Regulation) Act, 1958. It is not contended that the replacement of the licensing order by the Act makes any difference. The applicant for certiorari in that case was an existing rice mill owner who objected to the grant of a fresh licence in the locality. On the question of locus standi of the applicant, the learned Judge observed—

“In my opinion a statutory right to object to the grant of licence or permission may not be the exclusive test to apply in deciding whether an applicant for a writ of certiorari is an ‘aggrieved’ person entitled to challenge the validity of the order which he seeks to avoid....the petitioner before me certainly had an interest of his own in the question, whether the third respondent should be granted a licence to work a rice mill in close proximity to the petitioner’s. That the statutory rules in the Rice Mills Licensing Order did not specifically confer a right on a trade rival, situate as the petitioner was, to object to the grant of a licence under that order may not in my opinion, affect the real principle to apply in such cases.”

In the next case, Ramasundara Nadar and Co. v. State of Madras, W. P. 644 of 1961, Jagadisan J. having found against the applicant on the merits, considered it unnecessary to examine the question whether the applicant had any locus standi. In Ramanathan Chettiar v. Board of Revenue, 1963-2 Mad LJ 320, when the question of locus standi of existing rice mill owners was raised, Veeraswami J., observed that, as the records established that the authority was satisfied about the surplus position of paddy, before the issue of the new permits, the petition for certiorari need not be dismissed for want of locus standi. There is no express decision on the question of locus standi.

7. W. A. 195 of 1962 (Mad), which Kailasam J. purported to follow and is relied on before us, does not, on our reading of the judgment (one of us was a party to it), decide the question of locus standi. The writ appeal was dismissed, at the admission stage, on an examination of the case on merits. It is observed therein:

“There are no materials to assume that the Commissioner did not consider the relevant matters. Further we are by no means satisfied that by granting the licence to the first respondent any right of the appellant had been affected so as to entitle him to approach this Court by way of a writ of certiorari.”

The reference to ‘right of the appellant’, it is apparent from the context in which the above observation was made is to the factual aspect. Referring to the argument that the productive capacity of the village being limited the running of more than four rice mills for the locality would entail a lessening of the business of the appellant in that only less paddy would come to his mill for husking, it was observed:—

“That argument is based upon several speculative hypothesis, none of which has been made out by the materials available on record."

We are unable to take this decision as determining that an existing rice mill owner has no locus standi to question the grant of a permit for a fresh rice mill in the locality. In Lakshmiamma v. Commissioner for Land Revenue, W. P. 1091 of 1962 = ILR (1964) 2 Mad 869, Veeraswami J., declined to entertain the writ petition, filed by an existing rice mill owner who had opposed the grant of a permit to instal a new rice mill in the area, on the ground that the applicant could not be deemed to be a person aggrieved. On writ appeal, therefrom, ILR (1964) 2 Mad 869 at 871 = W. P. 1091 of 1962, the dismissal of the writ petition was confirmed, but on other grounds on the merits. On the question of locus standi, the learned Judges observed—

"The conclusion reached by the learned Judge can, in our opinion, be supported on the merits of the case as well."

The question of locus standi was not discussed. All the same the learned Judges were not inclined to differ from the view taken by Veeraswami J. The question was not specifically left open. The question of locus standi was the subject of specific discussion and consideration by Kailasam J., in W. P. 2332 of 1966 (Mad), referred to already. The learned Judge proceeded in the view that the mere fact that a person who has a mill in close proximity to the one to which licence has been granted is likely to suffer financial loss is not sufficient to make him an aggrieved person in law. The learned Judge thought that the decision of the Division Bench in W. A. 195 of 1962 (Mad), has held that the grant of a new licence to a person will not entitle an existing rice mill licence holder to approach this Court for a writ of certiorari. In this view, the learned Judge would hold, as already stated, that the decision in 1957-2 Mad LJ 1 = (AIR 1957 Mad 551), cannot be said to be good law. The learned Judge observed that, as the petitioners before him (existing rice mill owners) were not aggrieved persons, they were not entitled to move this Court and 'challenge the orders on any ground'. It may be observed that the learned Judge, however, examined the records produced by the Government, and was satisfied that an elaborate enquiry had been made by the authorities in compliance with the requirements of the Act and rules. The learned Judge, it may be pointed out, in Veerappa Gounder v. State of Madras, W. P. 1042 of 1967 (Mad), quashed an order granting permit, on the application of an existing rice mill licence holder observing:—

"It is no doubt true that this Court has held that an existing rice mill licence holder is not a person aggrieved. But the Court has the discretion to grant a writ at the instance of even a stranger who brings to the notice of the Court that statutory requirements have not been complied with.... This, in my opinion, is a fit case for the issue of a writ, even though the petitioner cannot be called an aggrieved person."

The decision of Kailasam J. (in W. P. 2332 of 1966 etc. batch) was taken up in appeals, Paramasiva v. Pannerselvam batch, W. A. 87 of 1967 (Mad). The writ appeals were dismissed at the admission stage itself. On the question whether existing rice mill owners who had objected to the grant of new permits are aggrieved persons, it was observed that it was not necessary to examine the matter at any length for disposal of the writ appeals. The point particularly pressed in the writ appeals was the absence of reasoning in the order granting a permit and the Court was satisfied that there was an elaborate enquiry, at which all objections of the objectors were duly considered. The Court was inclined to agree with the contention of the objectors that the authorities, while granting the permit, were exercising 'some kind of a quasi-judicial function, if for no other reason, for the sufficing reason that to refuse a permit, may be to abridge or curtail a fundamental right.

8. In the appeal in W. A. 150 of 1968 (reported in 1969-1 Mad LJ 143), Veeraswami O. C. J. and Ramaprasada Rao, J. from a decision of Kailasam J., dismissing an application for certiorari questioning the grant of a permit for installation of a rice mill by the representative of a temple on the ground that the order granting the permit was an administrative order and that in any case the applicant could not be considered to be an aggrieved person, the learned Judges examined the records and felt satisfied that the licensing authority, in making the impugned order under Sec. 5 of the Act, had applied its mind to all the relevant matters enjoined by the statutory provision to be taken into account. On the contention of the Government that the applicant in any case cannot be regarded as an aggrieved person, the Court, while observing that the question did not call for consideration in the case, affirmed the principle laid down by this Court in AIR 1961 Mad 180 (FB) at p. 184, already set out, that the applicant must have interest distinct from the general inconvenience which may be suffered by the law wrongly administered. The learned Judges were inclined to the view that an existing rice mill owner would be a person aggrieved, for they observe, when examining the locus standi of the appellants before them:

"He is not a rival applicant for a rice mill permit, nor is he the owner of a rice mill, nor, as far as we are able to see, is he interested in the matters, specified in Section 5 (4) of the Act."

The decision of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in Venugopala Reddi v. Amara Venkata Narasimhalu, AIR 1962 Andh Pra 363, 368, does not help the respondent, as the grant of permit in that case was found to be in conformity with the licensing provision. It was observed that an existing rice mill owner could not object merely on the ground that there was likelihood of his profits in the trade being diminished, as he had no exclusive monopoly to do the rice milling business in the area though he was entitled to his fundamental right under Art. 19 (1) (g) to carry on his trade or business. Manifestly there was no ground for quashing. The decision of the Madhya Pradesh High Court in Maina Bai v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1965 Madh Pra 247, to which reference was made for the respondent, has no relevancy in the context of the issue now under consideration. The application for certiorari in that case was against an order rejecting an application for the grant of rice milling permit. The question of locus standi as such was not raised and considered.

9. It is not contended for the existing rice mill owners that they have monopoly in their area. Nor do they claim a right to question in certiorari proceedings the installation of a fresh rice mill in their area, if there is no violation or infringement of the rules and regulations governing the grant of fresh permits, merely on the ground that their own trade or business may go down. Clearly if the law is wrongly administered and an existing rice mill owner is prejudicially affected in consequence, his interest in due observance of the law is personal and sufficiently substantial. We are of opinion, that an existing rice mill owner who has objected to the installation of a fresh rice mill in the locality and contends that he has been prejudicially affected by the grant of permit for installation of a fresh rice mill, has sufficient interest to give him locus standi to make an application for certiorari under Article 226. In our view, cases taking the contrary view are not correctly decided. The rejection of the applications for certiorari in the cases now before us on the ground of want of locus standi cannot be sustained. The writ appeals are allowed. The writ petitions will have to be disposed of on merits. Petition for leave to raise additional grounds are dismissed.

10. No order as to costs.

Appeals allowed.

- G. Venkataraman, for Petitioner; T. Selvaraj, for Govt. Pleader and S. Swaminathan and K. Ramagopal, for Respondents.

ORDER:— This petition is filed by the Antiseptic Employees Unit, represented by the Tamilnad Press Workers Union, for the issue of a writ of Mandamus, directing the State Government to refer the dispute relating to all the demands contained in the Order of the State Government in G. O. Rt. 1306 dated 7-7-1966 for adjudication under Section 10 of the Industrial Disputes Act. The second respondent is a Journal represented by its partner one Sri Vyasa Rao. The journal is English medical monthly with a circulation of 14,000 copies under the name and style of 'Antiseptic'. Besides this, a monthly medical journal known as 'Health' is also printed and published by the second respondent with a circulation of 3400 copies monthly. There are 13 clerical staff and about 22 workers employed by the Management. A settlement was arrived at between the management of the Press on the one hand and the clerical staff and the workmen on the other on 27-3-1962, relating to service conditions of the staff, dearness allowance, bonus and gratuity. The agreement provided that the staff and the labourers should be provided with 2½ months bonus a year. The agreement was to be in force for three years. The Madras Press Labour Union on 22-4-1965 made certain claims and the Tamilnad Press Workers Union also came out with certain claims on 7-6-1965. On 13-8-1965, an agreement was reached by the Management with the Madras Press Labour Union for two years regarding the annual increment, dearness allowance, bonus and gratuity. The petitioner Union was not a party to this agreement. Regarding the claims made by the petitioner Union, a failure report was made on 20-1-1966, and the Government declined to make a reference on 7-7-1966. Hence this writ petition is filed for a direction to refer the dispute for arbitration.

2. The impugned order is dated 7-7-1966. It relates to six demands. The petitioner Union confines its relief to demands 1 to 3 in this petition and the other demands, therefore, need not be considered in this petition.

3. Demand (3) refers to payment of bonus. The reason given by the Government for not referring the dispute is stated as follows—

"The bonus issue for the years 1962-63, 1963-64 and 1964-65 is covered by the settlement dated 27-3-1962 entered into by the Management with the Madras Press Labour Union under Section 12 (3) of the Industrial Disputes Act."

Mr. Dolia, the learned counsel for the petitioner submitted that the Bonus Ordinance was passed on 31-5-1965 and the payment of Bonus Act came into force on 20-5-1965. Section 34 (1) of the Act enacts that the provisions of the Act shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent contained in any other law for the time being in force and or in the terms of any award, agreement, settlement or contract of service made before the 29th May 1965. If the Act is applicable, no agreement, settlement or contract of service made before 29th May 1965, can be relied on but the provisions of the Act will have to be applied. Section 22 of the Act enacts that where any dispute arises between an employer and his employees with respect to the bonus payable under this Act or with respect to the application of the Act to an establishment in public sector, then such dispute shall be deemed to be an industrial dispute within the meaning of the Industrial Disputes Act.

Section 3 of the Act provides that where an establishment consists of different departments or undertakings or has branches, whether situated in the same place or in different places, all such departments or undertakings or branches shall be treated as parts of the same establishment for the purpose of computation of bonus under the Act. The proviso states that where for any accounting year a separate balance sheet and profit and loss account are prepared and maintained in respect of any such department or undertaking or branch, then, such department or undertaking or branch shall be treated as a separate establishment for the purpose of computation of bonus under the Act for that year, unless such department or undertaking or branch was immediately before the commencement of that accounting year treated as part of the establishment for the purpose of computation of bonus. The Government have declined to make a reference on the ground that the bonus issue is covered by the settlement dated 27-3-1962. As pointed out, Section 34 (1) of the Payment of Bonus Act makes it clear that an agreement, settlement or contract of service made before 29th May 1965, will not be effective and the provisions of the Act will govern the issue relating to bonus, if the Act is applicable. The Government have not refused to refer the demand relating to payment of bonus on the ground that the Act is not applicable.

The question as to whether the Payment of Bonus Act, 1965 is applicable or not has to be considered with regard to the demand made by the petitioner Union. The reliance on the settlement deed dated 27-3-1962 is an obvious error. The order of the Government refusing to refer the demand for payment of bonus will have to be set aside and is accordingly set aside. The Government is directed to consider the question whether the Payment of Bonus Act, 1965 is applicable or not to the demand and decide the question as to whether a reference should be made or not.

4. Demand (1) relates to enhancement of dearness allowance, and demand (2) relates to revision of grades and wages scales. The Government declined to refer the demand for enhancement of dearness allowance on the ground that the management was prepared to pay the staff the same dearness allowance agreed to be paid under the settlement dated 13-8-1965 under Section 12 (3) of the Act, entered into with the Madras Press Labour Union, and that that rate compared favourably with the rates in other presses. The Government declined to refer the demand for revision of grades and wages scales on the ground that the existing grades and wages compared favourably with those in similar establishments. The law relating to the power of the Government to make a reference has been laid down by the Supreme Court in State of Madras v. C. P. Sarathy, 1953-1 Lab LJ 174 = (AIR 1953 SC 53), State of Bihar v. D. N. Ganguly, 1958-2 Lab LJ 634 = (AIR 1958 SC 1018) and State of Bombay v. K. P. Krishna, 1960-2 Lab LJ 592 = (AIR 1960 SC 1223), and by a Bench of this Court in Govt. of Madras v. Workmen of South India Saiva Sidhanta Works Publishing Society, 1964-1 Lab LJ 228 = (AIR 1964 Mad 468). The above decisions were considered by this Court in Coimbatore Dt. Textile Mill Staff Union v. State of Madras, 1967-2 Lab LJ 407 at page 408 = (1968 Lab IC 832) (Mad) and the position was summed up thus:

"A consideration of the authorities cited above makes it clear that the High Court cannot sit as a Court of appeal on the order passed by the Government. The Government in passing an order under Section 10 (1) read with Section 12 (5), is acting in an administrative character (capacity) and it has the option to make a reference or not to make a reference on the facts, taking into consideration the expediency in each case; the decision is for the Government to take and not for the Courts to interfere. The Government will be justified in refusing to make a reference where the dispute is inconsistent with the agreement between the parties. But the Court will be justified in issuing a writ of Mandamus if the Government did not act bona fide or base its conclusions wholly on irrelevant or extraneous materials or materials which were not germane for deciding the question whether a reference should be made or not."

5. Mr. Dolia, the learned counsel for the petitioner strongly relied on a decision of the Supreme Court in Bombay Union of Journalist v. State of Bombay, 1964-1 Lab LJ 351 = (AIR 1964 SC 1617), where the Supreme Court held—

"It is true that if the dispute in question raises questions of law, the appropriate Government should not purport to reach a final decision on the said questions of law, because that would normally lie within the jurisdiction of the Industrial Tribunal. Similarly on disputed questions of fact the appropriate Government cannot purport to reach final conclusions, for that again would be the province of the industrial tribunal."

This passage is later explained by their Lordships as meaning that the appropriate Government is not precluded from considering even prima facie the merits of the dispute when it decides the question as to whether its power to make a reference should be exercised under Section 10 (1) read with Section 12 (5) or not, and that it must be held that a prima facie examination of the merits cannot be said to be foreign to the enquiry which the appropriate Government is entitled to make in dealing with a dispute under S. 10 (1).

6. Mr. Dolia submitted that the order relating to demand (1) is unsustainable on two grounds, namely, that the staff had not consented to accept the dearness allowance as agreed to by the Labour Union and therefore the settlement dated 13-8-1965 is not binding on the labourers. The Government has said that the management was prepared to pay the staff the same dearness allowance agreed to be paid under the settlement dated 13-8-1965, and that that rate compared favourably with that in other presses. The statement that the rate compared favourably with the rates in other presses was vehemently challenged on the ground that there is no material on record to show that the Government compared the rates prevailing in other presses. I do not think this question can be gone into by this Court, for, as observed by the Supreme Court in 1953-1 Lab LJ 174 = (AIR 1953 SC 53), the Court could not canvass the order of reference closely to see if there was any material before the Government to support its conclusion, as if it was judicial or quasi-judicial determination. The Government has the discretion to make a reference or not. Considering the circumstances of the case there is no material for coming to the conclusion that the Government was not right in coming to the conclusion that the dearness allowance agreed to be paid compared favourably with the rates in other presses.

7. Regarding the second demand for revision of grades and wages scales also, the Government on a consideration of the facts have come to the conclusion that the existing grades and wages compared favourably with those in similar establishments. I do not think in the circumstances, the Court will be justified in examining the materials that were available before the Government for coming to the conclusion. Suffice it to say that there is no material to hold that the Government was in any way influenced by any extraneous material for coming to that conclusion. On these grounds, the order of the Government declining to refer demands 1 and 2 for arbitration should be upheld.

8. Mr. Swaminathan, learned counsel for the respondent, submitted that the order of the Government should be upheld on legal grounds also. He submitted that under Section 19 (2) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, a settlement arrived at shall be binding for such period as is agreed upon by the parties and shall continue to be binding on the parties, after the expiry of the period aforesaid, until the expiry of two months from the date on which a notice in writing of an intention to terminate the settlement is given by one of the parties to the other party to the settlement. On record, there is no material for holding that any such notice as required under Section 19 (2) of the Act was given to the management. In a recent decision of the Supreme Court in Management of the Bangalore Woollen Cotton and Silk Mills Co., Ltd. v. Workmen, AIR 1968 SC 585, it has been held that the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon any claim unless a notice under Section 19 (2) had been given. The Court observed that when there is no notice as required under Section 19 (2), it would follow that there is a subsisting award binding on the parties and the Tribunal will have no jurisdiction to consider the same in a reference.

Mr. Dolia, learned counsel for the petitioner, submitted that the decision will not be applicable to a case where the absence of notice under Section 19 (2) was not raised at the earliest point of time. I am unable to find any support for this contention in the judgment. As seen from the decision, it is clear that if the agreement is not validly terminated under Section 19 (2), it continues to be subsisting and binding on the parties. Learned counsel for the petitioner submitted that the order of the Government cannot be sought to be supported on any ground not mentioned in the order itself, and therefore this ground cannot be taken into account. Even accepting this contention, I find that the order of the Government refusing to reter demands 1 and 2 cannot be interfered with. I am also of the view that as the failure to give notice under Section 19 (2) of the Act, goes to the root of the matter, the order of the Government can be supported on that ground also.

9. In the result, the writ petition is allowed with regard to demand (3), namely, demand for payment of bonus. The Government will consider the question whether the Payment of Bonus Act, 1965 is applicable or not and decide as to whether the demand should be referred to adjudication or not. With regard to demands 1 and 2, the writ petition is dismissed; there will be no order as to costs.

Order accordingly.

Writ Petn. No. 4369 of 1965, D/- 29-7-1968.

(A) Stamp Duty — Stamp Act (1899), Section 56 (1) and (2) — Collector

holding the document to be a sale deed — Party aggrieved invoking power of Revenue Board under Section 56 (1) — Personal hearing also sought — Board confirming Collector's decision without giving personal hearing to party — Board directed to rehear appeal after hearing party, AIR 1951 Mad 276 held doubtful after AIR 1962 SC 1217 — (Constitution of India, Article 226 — Quasi-judicial tribunal — Natural justice.)

The Collector of Madras construed the terms of the document in question and came to the conclusion that it was a sale deed and not a mere agreement regarding a prior completed sale as contended by the party. In an appeal under Section 56 (1) of the Stamp Act, before the Board of Revenue as the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority. The Board of Revenue in an elaborate order agreed with the decision of the Collector and dismissed the appeal without giving the party an opportunity of being heard, though the party in the memo. of appeal had asked for it. By a writ petition the order was challenged on the ground that the personal hearing ought to have been given especially when it was asked for and that therefore there had been non-compliance with the principles of natural justice. The Revenue pleaded that under Section 56 (1) of the Act, the Authority was not exercising quasi-judicial function and therefore, it was not necessary to give a personal hearing before making the order:

Held, that under the circumstances of the case, what was exercised by the Authority was not an administrative function but a quasi-judicial function invoked for the purpose of modifying the orders of the Collector in favour of the aggrieved party. In such a case the authority has to act quasi-judicially, just as in the case under Section 56 (2). This carried with it an obligation to give opportunity to the party of being heard, especially when a large amount of duty and penalty was involved. In the present case the party himself had also asked for a personal hearing in his memorandum of appeal. The Authority was directed to rehear the appeal giving the petitioner opportunity of being heard.

The more reasonable view was that after the Collector had exercised his power under Chapters IV and V by levying stamp duty, and the power of the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority was invoked by the aggrieved party under Section 56 (1) and if thereafter, that Authority proceeded to exercise that power, it must also be viewed as the exercise of a quasi-judicial function. It was immaterial for this purpose whether that power was invoked at the instance of the aggrieved party or at the instance of the Revenue, AIR 1962 SC 1217 and AIR 1966 Mad 36, Foll.; Correctness of AIR 1951 Mad 276 held doubtful after AIR 1962 SC 1217; (1950) 2 Mad LJ 564, Ref. (B) Stamp Duty — Stamp Act (1899), S. 56 — Sub-sections (1) and (2) compared — (Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Quasi-judicial power).

Sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 56 of the Stamp Act vest quasi-judicial power in the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority with this difference, that Section 56 (2) is made applicable when the Collector feels himself a doubt as to the amount of duty payable on the instrument, draws up a statement of the case and refers it with his own opinion for the decision of the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority. Under Section 56 (2) Chief Controlling Revenue Authority is moved to act by the Collector before he takes a decision; under Section 56 (1) he is moved to act by the aggrieved party after the Collector has taken a decision. (C) Stamp Duty — Stamp Act (1899), S. 57 — Nature of power conferred by section—In a proper case, the officer is bound to make a reference — Compulsion by issue of writ possible — (Constitution of India, Art. 226).

The power in Section 57 of the Stamp Act is in the nature of an obligation or is coupled with an obligation, and can be demanded to be exercised also by the party affected by the assessment of stamp duty. The Authority is obliged to make such a reference when an important and intricate question of law in respect of the construction of the document arises. As a public officer it is his duty to make the reference. If he omits to do so, the Court can direct him to discharge the duty in an application under Article 226 of the Constitution. T. Martin, for Petitioner; J. Kanakaraj, for Govt. Pleader, for Respondents.

ORDER: The Petitioner, Ama Stores, represented by its partner M. T. M. Abubacker, has filed this writ petition under Article 226 of the Constitution of India praying for the issue of a writ of certiorari quashing respectively the orders of the Collector of Madras, the 1st Respondent, and the Commissioner of Land Revenue, Prohibition, Excise and Settlement of Estates, Board of Revenue, Madras, the 2nd Respondent. The petitioner contended that a certain document executed by him on 25-10-1963 was an agreement, which merely recited the facts of an already completed sale and also the conditions under which the sale took place. Hence he pleaded that it would suffice, for the purpose of paying the appropriate court-fee under the Stamp Manual, if the document was stamped as an agreement, for which the duty payable is Rs. 2¼. This was the duty actually paid on the document, viz., Rs. 2¼. The petitioner had to bring this agreement before the Registrar of Trade Marks for the purpose of transferring the trade mark; but that officer was of the opinion that the document in question was really a sale deed and sent it to the Collector of Madras for impounding.

For the levy of proper stamp duty the 1st respondent, the Collector of Madras, construed the terms of the document and came to the conclusion that it was a sale deed and not a mere agreement regarding a prior completed sale. The decision of the Collector was that as a sale deed a stamp duty of Rs. 1460-25 should be levied, and in addition a penalty of Rs. 250 should be paid. Aggrieved against the above decision the petitioner filed an appeal to the Board of Revenue, the 2nd respondent, who as the Chief Controlling Revenue authority, has got certain powers conferred under Sec. 56 (2) of the Act. It was this power that was invoked by the petitioner in his appeal against the order of the Collector. The Board of Revenue in an elaborate order passed on 8-10-1965 came to the conclusion that the levy of stamp duty and penalty by the Collector was proper and dismissed the appeal petition of the petitioner.

2. It is contended by the learned counsel for the petitioner in this writ petition, and that is the main ground for the relief that he seeks, that the Board of Revenue as the Chief Controlling Revenue-Authority, whose appellate power the petitioner invoked, ought to have given the petitioner an opportunity for making a personal representation, especially, since in his appeal petition, he had specifically asked for that relief. It is urged for the petitioner that when the Board of Revenue disposed of the appeal only on the grounds set forth by the petitioner in the appeal memo ignoring the specific request made by the petitioner that he should be heard, there was non-compliance of the principles of natural justice.

3. Reliance was placed by the learned counsel for the petitioner on the decision of the Supreme Court in Board of Revenue v. Vidyawati, AIR 1962 SC 1217 and the decision of Srinivasan, J., in Annamalai and Co. v. District Registrar, (1965) 1 Mad LJ 431 = (AIR 1966 Mad 36), for the stand taken that a proper compliance with the duties imposed by the statute on the Board of Revenue as the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority in such a case should be viewed as involving a duty to hear the petitioner in person, especially when a large financial commitment would be imposed on him if his contentions are to be overruled. In the Supreme Court decision cited above the matter came up before the Board of Revenue on a reference by the Collector under Section 56 (2) of the Stamp Act. Such a reference is made by the Collector when without taking a decision himself he feels doubt as to the amount of duty payable. The Supreme Court held:

"The question before the Board under Section 56 (2) being one of construction of an instrument and the application of the Act to it being a pure question of law which may result in payment of large amounts by the executants of the document, it would not in our opinion be improper to hold that for the determination of such a question the Legislature intended that the party affected by the decision of the Board of Revenue should be given a hearing, and that the Board should Act judicially in deciding a pure question of law".

4. The Supreme Court also observed at page 1220 of the judgment:

"It seems to us, considering the nature of the duty cast on the Board of Revenue under Section 56 (2) requiring it to construe instruments submitted to it thereunder and the application of the Act to them which may result in payment of heavy amounts of deficit duty and even heavier amounts as penalty, that the Legislature intended that the Board of Revenue should hear the person executing the document before saddling him with large pecuniary liability."

5. Srinivasan, J., in the second of the decisions cited above had before him a case where the District Registrar, who has got the powers of a Collector under the Stamp Act, construed a certain document and levied a stamp duty of Rs. 1138-80. The executant of the document feeling aggrieved against the District Registrar's Order moved the Board of Revenue under Section 56 (1) of the Act. At the same time the Inspector General of Registration had perused the order of the District Registrar levying duty in that case, and as the matter involved some loss of revenue he referred it to the Board of Revenue under Section 56 (2). Both the petitioner's appeal and the reference were dealt with by the Board of Revenue, and the appeal of the executant of the document was dismissed and the levy made by the District Registrar was confirmed. Srinivasan, J., who dealt with the case in the writ petition observed:

"It is true that the authority is not required under the Madras Stamp Act to furnish his reasons for the conclusion that he reached, and where the matter is put in issue and a dispute is raised and the adjudication is certainly a quasi-judicial one and imposes an onerous liability on the party, one would have expected at least brief reasons in support of the conclusions reached. More than all, as I have pointed out, no opportunity whatsoever was given to the party to make his representations before any of the authorities who dealt with the matter" italics (here in ") mine".

6. There was a decision of this Court given much earlier in 1950 and reported in Shanmuga Mudaliar In re, (1950) 2 Mad LJ 399 = (AIR 1951 Mad 276). Mr. P. V. Rajamannar, the learned Chief Justice, speaking for the Bench observed:

"The only ground on which this writ is sought is that the Board did not give any opportunity to the petitioner to be orally heard. There is nothing in the Act or in the Rules framed thereunder which enjoins on the Board the duty to give an oral hearing to a person who invokes their revisional jurisdiction. All that quasi-judicial Tribunal like the Board of Revenue have to do is to give sufficient opportunity to the persons who approach them for the exercise of their jurisdiction to state their case.....This opportunity has been given to the petitioner, because presumably he has stated all his grounds of objection to the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer in his revision petition."

7. The decision of the Bench of this Court was given in 1950 long prior to the decision of the Supreme Court in AIR 1962 SC 1217. The learned Government Pleader, however submits that the decision of the Supreme Court will not apply to this case because that case dealt with a reference by the Collector under Section 56 (2) of the Act, whereas the present case is an appeal petition by the party to the Board of Revenue under Section 56 (1). In such a case it is urged that the principles laid down by the Bench of this Court in (1950) 2 Mad LJ 399 = (AIR 1951 Mad 276), will apply. I am unable to agree. Section 56 (1) does not mention specifically about any right of appeal or revision to the aggrieved party in such cases. It vests in the Chief Controlling authority a power of control over the decision of the Collector. But both the judgment of this Court in (1950) 2 Mad LJ 399 = (AIR 1951 Mad 276) as well as that of Srinivasan, J. in (1965) 1 Mad LJ 431 = (AIR 1966 Mad 36), have construed that this power of control of the Chief Controlling Revenue authority under Section 56 (1) is a quasi-judicial power which could be invoked at the instance of the aggrieved party. Section 56 (2) also vests a quasi-judicial power in the same authority, namely the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority but with this difference, that Section 56 (2) is made applicable when the Collector feels himself a doubt as to the amount of duty payable on the instrument, draws up a statement of the case and refers it with his own opinion for the decision of the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority. Under Sec. 56 (2) the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority is moved to act by the Collector before he takes a decision; under Section 56 (1) he is moved to act by the aggrieved party after the Collector has taken a decision. But in either case the power exercised by the Chief Controlling Authority is the power of a quasi-judicial tribunal for deciding an issue between the subject on the one hand and the Revenue on the other regarding the interpretation of a document. That interpretation has been held by the Supreme Court as involving a substantial question of law.

The point that arose for decision by the Supreme Court is somewhat different, namely whether on a reference by the party the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority will be obliged to make a reference to the Court under Section 57 of the Stamp Act for its determination of the proper duty payable on instrument. The Supreme Court held that the power in Section 57 of the Stamp Act is in the nature of an obligation or is coupled with an obligation, and can be demanded to be exercised also by the party affected by the assessment of stamp duty. The Authority is obliged to make such a reference when an important and intricate question of law in respect of the construction of the document arises. As a public officer it is his duty to make the reference. If he omits to do so, the Court can direct him to discharge the duty in an application under Article 226 of the Constitution.

8. Srinivasan, J., in (1965) 1 Mad LJ 431 = (AIR 1966 Mad 36), had before him an application by the aggrieved party under Section 56 (1) for collecting the levy of stamp duty and penalty by the Collector, who happened to be the District Registrar in that case. The Inspector General of Registration, the superior officer of the District Registrar, had also applied to the Board of Revenue for determination of the correct amount of stamp duty. The decision involved the question whether the Collector had levied the proper duty, and the learned Judge observed:

"When the Board was thus called upon to ascertain the amount of duty, particularly as there had been a dispute between the petitioner and the registering authority in that regard, the decision which the Board proceeded to render would undoubtedly have been more valuable had it been given after hearing what the affected party had to say in the matter."

Then the learned Judge proceeded to examine the gist of the document and found that the result of the decision of the Board was that the party would have to pay a duty of nearly Rs. 7000. The learned Judge referred to an earlier decision of the Supreme Court in Chief Controlling Revenue Authority v. Maharashtra Sugar Mills, (1950) 2 Mad LJ 564; but the later decision referred to above in AIR 1962 SC 1217, was not cited before the learned Judge. The learned Judge, however, observed:

"...where the matter is put in issue and a dispute is raised and the adjudication is certainly a quasi-judicial one and imposes an onerous liability on the party, one would have expected at least brief reasons in support of the conclusion reached. More than all, as I have pointed out, no opportunity whatsoever was given to the party to make his representations before any of the authorities who dealt with the matter."

9. It is urged by the learned Government Pleader that the Supreme Court in AIR 1962 SC 1217 at p. 1219, proceeded on the footing that they were dealing with the matter under S. 56 (2) and not under S. 56 (1) "on the application filed by the respondents inviting it to exercise its power of control thereunder". The Supreme Court left the question open, as to whether the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority, whose power of control is invoked by the aggrieved party, is exercising a quasi-judicial power or only an administrative power. But it is difficult to hold that the scheme of the Stamp Act leaves the aggrieved party without a right of appeal especially in cases where he is ordered to pay a heavy amount of stamp duty and penalty, on the basis of the interpretation of the nature of a document for the purpose of the stamp law by a Collector, and that the only occasion when the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority is called upon to exercise quasi judicial powers, is when the Collector who feels a doubt as to the amount of duty payable on an instrument asks for his decision under Section 56 (2).

On the other hand, the more reasonable view seems to me to be that after the Collector has exercised his power under Chapters IV and V by levying stamp duty, and the power of the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority is invoked by the aggrieved party under Section 56 (1) and if thereafter, that Authority proceeds to exercise that power, it must also be viewed as the exercise of a quasi-judicial function. It is immaterial for this purpose, whether that power is exercised at the instance of the aggrieved party or the instance of the Revenue. In the present case the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority has taken up the application of the party for disposal as an "appeal" against the orders of the Collector. It has written out an elaborate order canvassing the grounds set out by the party in his "petition of appeal". From the circumstances of the case it has to be held that what was exercised by the Chief Controlling Revenue authority in this case was not an administrative function but a quasi-judicial function invoked for the purpose of modifying the orders of the Collector in favour of the aggrieved party. In such a case it is clear that the authority has to act quasi-judicially, just as in the case under Section 56 (2). This carries with it an obligation to give opportunity to the party for being heard, especially when a large amount of duty and penalty is involved. In the present case the party himself has also asked for a personal hearing in his memorandum of appeal. For the aforesaid reasons I am of the opinion that the requirements of natural justice had to be followed in this case where the Chief Controlling Revenue authority was requested by the aggrieved party to interfere in a quasi judicial capacity. That requirement carried with it an obligation to give the party a personal hearing. I therefore allow the writ petition and quash the order of the second respondent, the Commissioner of Land Revenue dismissing the appeal of the petitioner. The second respondent is directed to restore the appeal to his file and dispose it of after giving an opportunity to the petitioner for a personal hearing. No order as to costs.

Petition allowed.

AIR 1970 MADRAS 152 (V 57 C 40)
RAMAKRISHNAN, J.

A. M. S. and Brothers, represented by A. M. Dawood Shah, Partner, Petitioner v. Union Territory of Pondicherry represented by the Chief of Contribution at Pondicherry and another, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 1088 of 1967 (P.) D/-21-3-1969.

(A) Pondicherry Alcoholic Liquors (Consumption Duty) Amendment Act (5 of 1966), Art. 5—Enhancement of Consumption Duty Act falls within Entry 51 and therefore within competence of State Legislature — Constitution of India, Sch. VII, List II, Entry No. 51.

Where the enhancement of consumption duty on all foreign liquors imported into the territory of Pondicherry was made by way of an amendment called the Pondicherry Alcoholic Liquors (Consumption Duty) Amendment Act, 1966 to the Pre-Constitution Act, viz. the resolution of the General Council in 1906.

Held, the levy was within the competence of the State Legislature. At the relevant period alcoholic liquor was manufactured in Pondicherry also and there was consumption duty on such liquor, what the Amendment provided for was a countervailing duty falling within Entry 51 of List II of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution: AIR 1966 SC 1686, Ref. (Para 3)

(B) Pondicherry Alcoholic Liquors (Consumption Duty) Amendment Act (5 of 1966), Article 5 — Transport of liquor mentioned in permit effected within time granted without violation of permit — Further duty is not to be paid at time of actual movement of goods in carrier across State's frontier.

Where the authorities, under the resolution passed by the General Council in 1906, gave a period of three months for the validity of the "import duty paid permit" thus issued, one can reasonably infer that they intended to consider that the "time of entry" for the purpose of Article 5 of the Amendment Act, 1966 will be a period which could be expected to cover a period of three months commencing from the contract of sale with the foreign dealer or foreign supplier, and ending with the arrival of the goods in the limits of Pondicherry. Because of this period of three months and because of the insistence that duty should be paid before the permit is granted, "the time of entry" has to be given an extended meaning to cover the period of three months from the date of the issue of import duty paid permit without laying stress upon the exact point of time when under the carrier in which the goods are transported crossed the State frontier. The entire period of validity of the permit, namely three months, must be viewed as time of entry for the purpose of the payment of consumption duty. The period must be treated as the estimated period to cover all incidents of actual transport of goods. If the transport is made within the time prescribed in the permit, payment of duty will be valid.

Further, there may be violations which fall within the scope of non-compliance with the permit. But when such violations have not taken place, and the transport of the liquor mentioned in the permit is effected within the time granted in the permit, there is no scope of holding that a further duty has to be paid with reference to the law in force at the time of the actual movement of goods in the carrier, across the State's frontier: AIR 1962 SC 1006,, Disting.; AIR 1961 SC 41, Ref. R. Kesavan Iyengar and K. Yamunar, for Petitioner; Govt. Pleader, for Pondicherry, for Respondents.

ORDER :— The petitioner, A. M. S. and Brothers, is engaged in the business of importing liquors into the Union Territory of Pondicherry from other States in India. Under a resolution passed by the "General Council" in 1906, which has the force of law, the Pondicherry Government was given power to levy tax called "Consumption Duty" on all foreign liquors imported into the territory of Pondicherry as well as on locally manufactured liquor. After the merger of the former French Territory of Pondicherry in the Indian Union, the above consumption duty was collected in advance from importers under a scheme called "Import Duty paid permits". Only after they had obtained such Import Duty paid Permits, were they allowed to import liquor from other parts of India into Pondicherry limits. In other words, advance payment of consumption duty was made as a condition precedent to the issue of the Import Duty paid Permit. The permit so issued was valid for three months from the date of issue, and the transport of the liquor mentioned in the permit should be made within the three months.

2. The petitioner obtained three such Import Duty paid permits on 19-3-1966 for importing specified quantity of Brandy from a Bangalore Dealer. The rate of consumption duty which was at that time prevalent under the resolution was Rs. 675 per hectolitre. The petitioner paid this duty and obtained the permit. By a subsequent amendment called the Pondicherry Alcoholic Liquors (Consumption Duty) Amendment Act, 1966, (Act No. 5 of 1966), the rate of consumption duty payable on imported liquors was increased by 100 per cent with effect from the date when the Amending Act came into force, namely, 1-6-1966. Though the petitioner had entered into an arrangement with the Bangalore manufacturer for getting the consignments under the three aforesaid Import Duty paid Permits, the goods in question reached Pondicherry only after 1-6-1966. It may be mentioned that the period of three months which the party had under the above Import Duty paid Permits ended on 19-6-1966. The goods were transported before that date, but after 1-6-1966. Taking advantage of the doubling of the duty by Act 5 of 1966, in the interval, the respondent in this petition, the Union Territory of Pondicherry insisted that this extra duty should be paid in addition to the duty already paid; in other words insisted on a payment of the consumption duty which was the double of what was already paid. The petitioner demurred to the payment and he has filed this Writ Petition under Article 226 of the Constitution for a Writ of Certiorari for quashing the above demand for extra duty.

3. It was urged by the learned Counsel appearing for the petitioner, Thiru Kesava lyengar, that the levy of this duty itself as a consumption duty is ultra vires, after the Indian Constitution was extended to Pondicherry territory with effect from the date of the de jure transfer of the territory to the Indian Union, in 1962. According to him, the enhancement of the levy was made by way of an amendment to the pre-Constitution Act, namely the resolution of the General Council in 1906, above mentioned. If such levy of consumption duty was beyond the competence of the State Legislature, the effect is that the amendment providing for the enhancement, will be ultra vires even though the pre-Constitution Act for levy of consumption duty at the lower rate may be intra vires. The argument proceeds thus. Entry No. 51 in the State List (List II) of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution gives power to the State Legislature to levy duties of excise on the goods specified against the entry, manufactured or produced in the State and countervailing duties at the same or lower rates on similar goods manufactured or produced elsewhere in India: The entry includes "alcoholic liquors for human consumption". It is urged by the learned counsel that levy of consumption duty is permitted under this entry only if a countervailing duty for the goods in question are levied on the local manufactured product. Learned counsel also placed reliance upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Kalayani Stores v. State of Orissa, AIR 1966 SC 1686 first of all for explaining the meaning of the term "countervailing duty"; secondly for laying down the principle that the protection given under Article 372 of the Constitution to a pre-Constitution Act will not protect the amendment of a pre-Constitution Act if that Act is ultra vires the Constitution if it were to be passed after the Constitution came into force. While the pre-Constitution Act might be saved under Article 372 of the Constitution, the post-Constitution amendment if it is beyond the constitutional power of the State Legislature, will have pro tanto to be struck down. The Supreme Court decision is relied upon for these two principles. As against this it is pointed out by the learned Govt. Pleader of Pondicherry that this is a case really where there is a countervailing duty, because alcoholic liquor is also manufactured in Pondicherry, besides import, and it also suffers consumption duty. The scope of a countervailing duty is explained in the Supreme Court decision above cited, thus:—

"Countervailing duties in Entry 51, List II of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution meant a duty levied with a view to equalise the burden on alcoholic liquors imported from outside the State and the burden placed by excise duties on alcoholic liquors manufactured or produced in the State. It meant that countervailing duties could only be levied if similar goods were actually produced or manufactured in the State on which excise duties were being levied."

In view of the statement of the learned Government Pleader that at the relevant period alcoholic liquor was manufactured in Pondicherry also and there was consumption duty on such liquor, there is no doubt that what the Amendment provided for was a countervailing duty falling within Entry 51 of List II of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution and therefore, within the competence of the State Legislature.

4. The further question is whether the enhancement of the duty on the goods which were actually brought inside the Pondicherry territory after 1-6-1966 and before the expiry of the permit on 19-6-1966 is in accordance with the Act. What is relied on by the respondent for the purpose of bringing the consignments within the scope of the higher duty, is that the date of the entry of the consignments into the territory of Pondicherry will decide the rate of duty payable, and not the date when the Import Duty was paid in advance before the Import duty, Paid Permit was granted. In other words what the learned Government Pleader wants to say is that the same principles which are applied to an import duty must be held applicable to a consumption duty under the Act. He also urges that what was paid for the grant of import duty permit was only a provisional payment of duty, subject to actual levy at the time of import.

5. A perusal of the relevant provisions of the Act, shows that it really provides a consumption duty and not an import duty. The other provisions which prescribe for the method of collection, are intended only to enable effective collection of the duty. Article 5 which is relied upon for this purpose by the respondent, mentions that taxes are collected for imported beverages "at the time of unloading or entry through land" and for alcohols, liquors, liquor wines and duplicate beverages made in the colony at the time of leaving the producing factories. It may be noted that no provision is made for collecting the duty at the exact point of time when the customs frontier is crossed as in the case of an import duty. It appears to me that "the time of entry" prescribed in the Article for the purposes of levy of consumption duty is intended to prescribe in general terms that the levy should be made in the course of import. In other words "Import" for this purpose will include all the integrated transactions that go with the import. The learned counsel Thiru Kevasa Iyengar quotes the analogy of tax on a sale in the course of import. The Supreme Court in Universal Imports Agency v. Chief Controller, AIR 1961 SC 41 at page 47 has given a wider interpretation to 'import' in such terms:

"Applying the said principles to an import sale it may be stated that a purchase by import involves a series of integrated activities commencing from the contract of purchase with a foreign firm and ending with the bringing of the goods into the importing country and that the purchase and resultant import form parts of a same transaction. If so, in the present case the bringing of the goods into India and the relevant contracts entered into by the petitioners with the foreign dealers form parts of a same transaction. The imports, therefore, were the effect of the legal consequence of the 'things done', i.e., the contracts entered into by the petitioners with the foreign dealers."

The authorities when they insisted that a permit should be obtained before the actual import and that the prescribed customs duty should be paid at the time the permit is obtained were obviously intending to levy the customs duty from the point of view of Article 5 of the Act. The permit thus issued was described as "import duty paid permit". When they gave a period of three months for the validity of the "import duty paid permit" thus issued, one can reasonably infer that they intended to consider that the "time of entry" for the purpose of Article 5 will be a period which could be expected to cover a period of three months commencing from the contract of sale with the foreign dealer or foreign supplier, and ending with the arrival of the goods in the limits of Pondicherry. Because of this period of three months given for the validity of the permit and because of the insistence that duty should be paid before the permit is granted, I am inclined to hold the view that "the time of entry" for the purpose of Article 5 has to be given an extended meaning to cover the period of three months from the date of the issue of import duty paid permit without laying stress upon the exact point of time when under the carrier in which the goods are transported crossed the State frontier. Stress on the exact point of time of crossing the frontier would be relevant for the levy of customs duty. But from the way in which a longer period has been incorporated at the time of granting of import duty paid permit, it appears to me that no importance was attached to the exact time of crossing the frontier, in the scheme of levy of consumption duty in such cases. If a different view is to be taken, it will lead to different duty paid permits issued on the same date depending upon the State of Law before 1-6-1966 and after 1-6-1966. This result of an invidious distinction, was not visualised when the import duty paid permit was granted in these cases.

6. Further, the permit itself states that the duty had been paid. It is not described as "Provisional duty" subject to alteration with reference to the circumstances existing at the time of the actual crossing of the State frontier. It is possible on the other hand of the import being in violation of the permit either because the goods imported were larger in quantity, or were of a different description. But such violations will fall within the scope of non-compliance with the permit. But when such violations have not taken place, and the transport is effected within the time granted in the permit, there is no scope for holding that a further duty has to be paid with reference to the law in force at the time of the actual movement of goods in the carrier, across the State's frontier.

7. The decision cited by the learned Government Pleader in M/s. Chotabhai v. Union of India, AIR 1962 SC 1006 dealt with an entirely different state of affairs. It dealt with the validity of the levy of excise duty by a provision in the Finance Act, with retrospective effect. It was held that in such a case, the vires of the Act could not be attacked nor its constitutionality, and for that purpose, the ultimate incidence of the duty was not of importance or relevance. The question that arises here for decision is not a question about retrospectivity or a question of ultimate incidence. It is a question of the interpretation of the provision in Article 5 of the Act for the levy of consumption duty. The question is whether with reference to the terms of the import duty paid permit granted, a restricted view should be taken of the time of entry of the goods as the point when the carrier which transported the goods crossed the State frontier, or whether the time of entry should be interpreted so as to have a larger meaning to include the integrated activities that go with the commencement of the contract entered into and ending with the actual removal of the goods across the State frontier, within a reasonable time which is fixed in the permit the period for that purpose being restricted to the three months mentioned. In my opinion the entire period of validity of the permit, namely three months, must be viewed as time of entry for the purpose of the payment of consumption duty. The period must be treated as the estimated period to cover all incidents of actual transport of goods. If the transport is made within the time prescribed in the permit, payment of duty will be valid.

8. For the above reasons, the writ petition is allowed as prayed for and a writ of mandamus will issue directing the refund of excess duty collected from the petitioner.

Petition allowed.

M. ANANTANARAYANAN, C. J. AND NATESAN, J.

The State of Madras, Appellant v. K. A. Joseph, Respondent.

Writ Appeal No. 45 of 1969, D/-30-1-1969, from judgment of Kailasam J., D/-3-1-1969.

Constitution of India, Articles 226, 311 — Principle of natural justice — Officer cannot be placed under suspension for indefinite period.

There is a very clear and distinct principle of natural justice, that an Officer is entitled to ask, if he is suspended from his office because of grave averments or grave reports of misconduct, that the matter should be investigated with reasonable diligence, and that charges should be framed against him within a reasonable period of time. If such a principle were not to be recognised, it would imply that the executive is being vested with a total, arbitrary and unfettered power of placing its officers under disability and distress, for an indefinite duration.

Govt. Pleader, for Appellant.

M. ANANTANARAYANAN, C. J.: In our view, the learned Judge (Kailasam, J.) had every justification to make an interim order in C. M. P. No. 17995 of 1968 in W. P. No. 4637, of 1968, cancelling the suspension of the concerned Officer, under the circumstances. It is sufficient for us to observe that a period of nearly ten months had elapsed since the Officer was first placed under suspension, and that, on an earlier representation, the Court directed that charges should be framed within three months, and that, if that was not done, the petitioner could approach the Court, again, for redress, and, the outcome is the order from which the writ appeal is sought to be filed.

2. Quite apart from the broad principle that we have reiterated so often in the past, that this Court will not ordinarily interfere by way of appeal, from the exercise of an interlocutory discretion by a learned Judge of this Court, by virtue of his jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution, there is a graver and more basic principle involved, upon which this writ appeal has to be dismissed. If the argument of the learned Government Pleader is to be accepted by us, it would imply that there is no principle of natural justice, under which the executive could be inhibited from indefinitely placing an Officer in the agony and disability of suspension from his office, while the question of the charges is being adumbrated in a most leisurely fashion, and years might elapse before a decision is taken. On the contrary, in our view there is a very clear and distinct principle of natural justice, that an Officer is entitled to ask, if he is suspended from his office because of grave averments or grave reports of misconduct, that the matter should be investigated with reasonable diligence, and that charges should be framed against him within a reasonable period of time. If such a principle were not to be recognised, it would imply that the executive is being vested with a total, arbitrary and unfettered power of placing its officers under disability and distress, for an indefinite duration. We cannot accept this, nor is any such claim supported by any precedent or authority.

3. Under the circumstances, the writ appeal is dismissed. The learned Judge observes that the Officer "will be allowed to resume his post". The learned Government Pleader submits that there may be great difficulty in permitting the Officer to resume duties in the very post, when the performance of those duties by him in the past, had led to the imputation of grave irregularities, we are unable to see any real difficulty in the matter. We clarify the position by stating that it is open to the Government to permit the Officer to resume duty in that identical post, or, any post of equal grade and emoluments, which may be available for making an order of resumption of duty.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1970 MADRAS 156 (V 57 C 42)
VENKATARAMAN, J.

B. S. Ramappa and another, Appellants v.
B. Monappa and another, Respondents.

A. A. O. No. 95 of 1965 and C. M. P. No. 989 of 1968, D/-17-6-1968, from order of Asst. Registrar of Trade Marks, Madras, D/- 20-3-1965.

Trade Marks Act (1940), Ss. 10 (2), 14 (1), 31, 32, 39 — Permission to use trade mark is not assignment of the mark — Partial assignment hit by Ss. 31 and 32 — For registration under S. 10 (2) the claimant should be the proprietor — Under special circumstances of case, Court can suggest further alterations in the mark to make it distinct from the original and to direct registration of such mark — (Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), Ss. 12 (3), 18, 39, 40, 48 and 49).

One B. Ramappa was the founder of a trade mark and was using the same in respect of tiles manufactured in two factories viz., Jayaram Tile Works and Indian National Tile Works. On 17-1-1950, B. Ramappa executed a registered settlement deed in favour of his elder son Monappa whereby he gave away the Indian National Tile Works to the settlee, with all the equipment and implements, movables and immovables, contained in the factory for the manufacture of tiles. The movables included wooden frames and iron press for manufacturing tiles. The presses contained the disc on which was imprinted the trade mark which was not removed by the founder. Monappa claiming to be the owner of the trade mark in respect of tiles manufactured in his factory, began using the above trade mark with slight alterations, which, however, did not sufficiently distinguish the mark from the original as invented by the founder. The founder who retained the Jayaram Tile Works continued to use the trade mark in its original form and that factory subsequently came under the ownership of the founder's younger son B. S. Ramappa who got the trade mark specifically conveyed to him. Whereas B. S. Ramappa and his son Chandrasekhar applied for registration of the trade mark in their favour in 1961, the elder son Monappa applied in 1963. Monappa claimed registration under Section 12 (3) as the owner of the trade mark by virtue of the assignment on 17-1-1950 and stated that he had been honestly and concurrently using the same with the alterations from that time.

Held, (1) that from the facts an intention to pass the trade mark to Monappa under the settlement deed dated 17-1-1950 could not be spelt out especially that the father continued to make use of the same in respect of tiles manufactured in the other factory retained by him. Even the fact that father had expressly permitted Monappa to use the trade mark would not necessarily amount to assignment. Under Section 39 of 1940 Act (Corresponding to Sections 48 and 49 of 1958 Act) the user, in such a case, by the person permitted to use would be user by the proprietor himself.

(Paras 25, 26 and 31)

(2) That even assuming that right to use the trade mark in question was assigned to Monappa, the resulting position, viz., that the father being entitled to use it in respect of his own tiles manufactured in Jayaram Tile Works, stood prohibited by Sections 31 and 32 of the Trade Marks Act of 1940 which applied to the case, the corresponding provisions in the 1958 Act being Ss. 39 and 40.

(Paras 26, 28 and 31) and (3) that Monappa was not entitled to registration even under Section 10 (2) in that he was not the proprietor of the trade mark sought to be registered. Monappa could not also claim to have honestly adopted any mark which would virtually be a replica of the mark of the founder in view of the prohibition contained in Sections 31 and 32.

(Para 32)

and (4) that the circumstances of the case being special and because it would be unjust to deprive Monappa of the right to registration of any mark, the Court could, in exercise of the power conferred by the concluding portions of Sections 10 (2) and 14 (1) of 1940 Act (which correspond to Ss. 12 (3) and 18 (4) of the 1958 Act), suggest further alterations in the mark which was being used by Monappa so as to make it sufficiently distinct from the original trade mark and to direct registration of such altered mark in favour of Monappa.

Section 10 (2) and Section 14 of 1940 Act should be construed so as to harmonise with Sections 31 and 32 of that Act and similarly Sections 12 (3) and 18 of the 1958 Act should be construed so as to be in harmony with Sections 39 and 40 of that Act. If really the Court could say that the variation sufficiently distinguished the mark of Monappa from the founder's mark, the Court would be justified in saying that the use of the new trade mark of Monappa would not be likely to deceive or cause confusion and therefore the bar of Sections 31 and 32 would not apply and Monappa could legitimately be described as the inventor of the new mark and could be considered as the proprietor of the new mark for the purposes of Sections 10 (2) and 14 of Act of 1940 (the corresponding provisions in the Act of 1958 being Sections 12 (3) and 18). Further, in such a case, the Court could also say that the use of the new mark substantially different from the old mark, could be considered as honest within the meaning of Section 10 (2) of 1940 Act and Section 12 (3) of 1958 Act, 1956 RPC 1 and AIR 1967 Mad 148 and (1891) 2 Ch D 186 and 38, Halsbury, Para 909; Kerby on Trade Marks, 9th Edn. K. Raja and Habibullah Badhsa, for Appellants; M. P. Rao and B. T. Seshadri, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT: This is an appeal against the order of the learned Assistant Registrar of Trade Marks, dated 20th March, 1965 registering a trade mark in the name of B. Monappa, the first respondent in the appeal. To understand the points in controversy, it is necessary to have an idea of the background and the events which led to the filing of the Application No. 216880 of Monappa. Monappa and the first appellant B. S. Ramappa are the sons of the late B. Ramappa, Monappa being the elder son. The late Ramappa started the business of manufacturing tiles in or about 1921 in Mangalore and invented the trade mark known as the Taj Double Bavta Mark. Bavta means a flag and the mark itself will be described a little later. He was therefore the founder of the trade mark. He registered it in or about 1936 in the Chamber of Commerce, Madras; but at that time there was no statute for registration in this country, and the first statute was passed in the country only in 1940. He was manufacturing tiles in two factories, one called the Jayaram Tile Works in Kudroli, Mangalore-3 and the other the Indian National Tile Works Hoige Bazaar Bolar, Mangalore-1. The premises of the Indian National Tile works had been taken by him on lease. The premises of the Jayaram Tile Works belonged to him absolutely.

2. In 1946, the younger son, B. S. Ramappa (the first appellant) made an application, No. 126612 for registration of the Taj Double Bavta mark in his own name under the provisions of the Trade Marks Act (V of 1940) claiming to be the proprietor of the Jayaram Tile Works, Kudroli, and of the trade mark. This was really a false claim because the proprietor was the father B. Ramappa, and the junior son was at best only a manager. However, the mark was registered on 12th May, 1950 but the registration dated back to 18th December, 1946, the date of the application under Section 16 (i) of the Trade Marks Act of 1940. Vide Para. 4 of the decision of Ramaswami, J., in Monappa v. Ramappa, AIR 1956 Mad 184.

3. On 17th January, 1950, the father, B. Ramappa, executed a registered settlement deed of the Indian National Tile Works, Hoige Bazaar, Mangalore-1, on the elder son, B. Monappa, with all the equipment and implements contained in the factory for the manufacture of tiles. The deed purports to be in respect of immovable and moveable properties described therein. It is the claim of Monappa that under this deed the trade mark, Taj Double Bavta mark, of the founder also was settled on Monappa so far as the Hoige Bazaar factory was concerned. The deed itself does not expressly refer to the trade mark, but Monappa contends that as a matter of inference and true construction of the document, the trade mark passed to him. This contention is based on the fact that in the list of moveable properties given in the deed, wooden frames and iron press for manufacturing tiles are also mentioned. It is said that these presses contained the disc on which was imprinted the trade mark and that the discs were not removed by the founder.

4. On the above basis Monappa began using the above trade mark with slight alterations. At this stage I may give a brief idea of the mark registered in the name of B. S. Ramappa in 1946 and the slight alterations made by B. Monappa. The registered mark was the original trade mark of the founder and consisted in the main of a label containing the device of a flag and the word 'flag' inside an outline of a shield. Just on the top of the shield there was the device of a crown flanked on either side by the device of flag. At the bottom of the shield there was the legend "Taj Double Bavta" and the numeral '1596'. The alterations made by Monappa were these. At the top of the Crown and the two flags he added the word 'Monappa's.' He shifted the numeral 1596 from the bottom to a place inside the outline of the shield and just above the device of the flag.

5. The younger son, B. S. Ramappa issued a notice on 27th July, 1951 (vide page 24 of the typed set) to Monappa asking him to desist from using the trade mark. B. S. Ramappa claimed to be the proprietor of the trade mark because of the registration in his name in 1946. B. Monappa countered this claim by urging that the registration had been obtained by fraud. Thereupon the younger son obtained a registered deed of settlement dated 8th February, 1953 in his own name from the father in respect of Jayaram Tile Works, Kudroli, specifically conveying the good will and the trade mark appertaining thereto—without however specifying the names of the trade marks. B. S. Ramappa then instituted a suit, O. S. No. 14 of 1953, on the file of the District Court of South Kanara against B. Monappa for an injunction restraining Monappa from using the trade mark. B. S. Ramappa relied on the registration of the mark in 1946 and on the assignment of the trade mark by his father by the deed dated 8th February, 1953.

6. Monappa filed a written statement reiterating that the registration of the mark had been obtained by fraud and contending that under the settlement deed of 17th January, 1950 he himself was entitled to use the trade mark on the tiles manufactured by him in the Indian National Tile Works and that in order to distinguish his mark, he had added the word 'Monappa's' and that there was no likelihood of confusion between his mark and the original mark. Monappa did not stop with this. He filed an application, O. P. No. 65 of 1954 in this Court under Sec. 46 of the Trade Marks Act of 1940 for rectification of the Register of Trade Marks by the removal of the trade mark (No. 126612) which had been registered with effect from 1946 in the name of B. S. Ramappa, on the ground that the registration was obtained by fraud. The application came on for hearing before Ramaswami J. The father was examined as a witness by Monappa and his evidence is to be found at pages 27 to 34 of the typed set in L. P. A. No. 76 of 1964 furnished to me. It is enough to state here the main features of the father's evidence. He asserted that he was the founder of the Taj Double Bavta Mark and he pleaded ignorance of the registration thereof in 1946 in favour of B. S. Ramappa, the younger son. He admitted that he permitted the elder son Monappa to use the trade mark on the tiles to be manufactured by him in the Indian National Tile Works.

7. The learned Judge had no hesitation in holding that the registration in 1946 had been obtained by fraud, but at the same time felt that the remedy was not the removal of the registered trade mark, but a joint registration of the mark in the names of B. S. Ramappa and B. Monappa. The decision of the learned Judge is reported in AIR 1956 Mad 184. The learned Judge took the view that each of the sons was entitled to use the mark under the relevant settlement deed pertaining to him and that the intention of the founder was that neither should exclude the other. The learned Judge felt that the circumstances of the case would constitute 'special circumstances' to enable B. Monappa to claim registration under Section 10 (2) of the Trade Marks Act V of 1940 (which corresponded to Section 12 (3) of the Trade and Merchandise Marks Act XLIII of 1958).

8. B. S. Ramappa preferred an appeal, O. S. A. No. 42 of 1955. The appeal was heard by Rajamannar, C. J., and Panchapakesa Ayyar, J., and their decision is reported in Ramappa v. Monappa, (1956) 2 Mad LJ 469 = ILR (1957) Mad 206 = AIR 1957 Mad 76. The learned Judge concurred with the finding of Ramaswami, J., that the registration of 1946 had been obtained by fraud. But they differed from Ramaswami J., in holding that Monappa was entitled to joint registration under Section 10 (2) of the Act of 1940. The learned Judges pointed out that joint registration was dealt with under Section 17 of the Act and expressed the view that before joint registration could be ordered, there should be applications from the two persons, which however was not the case. Regarding Section 10 (2) they observed:

"Section 10 (2) of the Act refers to concurrent user which is honest, that is independent concurrent user, that is, user which cannot be traced to the same source".

9. They accordingly directed that the registration in the name of B. S. Ramappa be cancelled and expunged. They then observed:

"There was an attempt before us to put forward the claims of both the parties to the trade mark but they need not be discussed in this appeal. The parties will be at liberty to seek to enforce their rights and obligations and nothing said in this order will adversely affect the rights of either party."

10. The above decision was rendered on 13th July, 1956. O. S. No. 14 of 1953 on the file of the District Court of South Kanara, which had been stayed and kept pending till then, was taken up thereafter for trial and was dismissed by the District Judge on 7th January, 1957. The learned Judge took the view that besides B. S. Ramappa, the plaintiff in the suit, B. Monappa, the defendant, was also the successor in title of the founder, B. Ramappa in respect of the trade mark by virtue of the deed dated 17th January, 1950. It was on that view that he dismissed B. S. Ramappa's suit.

11. After the above judgment of 7th January, 1957 there was a lull on the part of the younger son, B. S. Ramappa, for nearly three years. On 18th January, 1960 he issued a notice (pages 15 and 16 of the typed set in L. P. A. No. 76 of 1964) to the father stating that he had undertaken the onerous obligations cast on him by the father under the deed dated 8th February, 1953 (payment of Rupees one lakh in a lump and monthly payment of Rs. 1,000) because of the assurance of the father that under the deed he would become the sole proprietor of the trade mark, Taj Double Bavta Mark and that the elder son, Monappa, had no right to use the trade mark; but contrary to the assurance the father had deposed (in O. P. No. 65 of 1954), that he had permitted the elder son also to use the mark; and the District Court (in O. S. No. 14 of 1953), had held that Monappa was entitled to use the trade mark. B. S. Ramappa further stated that Monappa was freely using the trade mark. Ramappa wanted the father to make good his assurance, and stated that otherwise he would not be able to make the recurring payments.

12. Thereupon the father on 18th February, 1960, executed a rectification deed (pages 7 to 9 of the typed set in L. P. A. No. 76 of 1964) stating that under the deed on 8th February, 1953 he had also conveyed to the younger son the three trade marks, one of them being the Taj Double Bavta Mark, and that he had not given the trade mark to anybody else.

13. Thereafter the father also filed the suit, O. S. No. 34 of 1960, against his two sons, on the file of the Sub-Court of South Kanara, for a formal rectification of the deed dated 17th January, 1950 executed in favour of B. Monappa, by making it clear that the deed did not convey the trade mark (Taj Double Bavta Mark). The learned subordinate Judge took the view that the goodwill and the trade mark had deliberately been left out in that deed because the founder wanted to retain the trade mark. In that view of the matter he thought it superfluous to rectify the deed of 17th January, 1950 and he dismissed the suit. No appeal was preferred therefrom by the father or by the younger son, who was also a party to the suit. The above judgment was delivered on 31st October, 1962.

14. In the meantime, during the pendency of the above suit, the younger son B. S. Ramappa and his son Chandrakanth, filed an application No. 205533 on 29th October, 1961 before the Registrar for registration of the Taj Double Bavta Mark, relying on the deed of 8th February, 1953 and the deed of 18th February, 1960. The father filed an affidavit dated 29th March, 1962 supporting the son stating, "I state here that only B. S. Ramappa has the absolute right to use the mark. No other person has got right over the mark". The application was opposed by B. Monappa. The opposition was overruled and the registration was ordered by order dated 15th December, 1963. During the pendency of the above application No. 205533 B. Monappa filed his own application No. 216880 for registration on 31st July, 1963.

15. It may be mentioned here that in the order dated 15th December, 1963 the learned Registrar observed that the claim of B. Monappa for registration of the trade mark would have to be dealt with separately, in his own application, and would not constitute an impediment to the registration of the trade mark (Taj Double Bavta) in the names of B. S. Ramappa and his son in their application. Against the above order dated 15th December, 1963, Monappa filed C. M. A. No. 3 of 1964 in this Court. The appeal was dismissed by Venkatadri, J. on 1st January, 1964. L. P. A. No. 76 of 1964 was filed against the decision of Venkatadri, J. It was pending when the Registrar passed the order dated 20th March, 1965 allowing Application No. 216880 of Monappa. L. P. A. No. 76 of 1964 has since been dismissed.

16. The grounds put forward by B. Monappa in his application No. 216880 for registration were two-fold; that he got an assignment of the trade mark from his father under the deed of 17th January, 1950 and that he had been honestly and concurrently using the mark as altered by him from 17th January, 1950 and would therefore be entitled to registration under Section 12 (3) of the Act of 1958.

17. B. S. Ramappa and his son filed an opposition contending that the deed of 17th January, 1950 did not convey the trade mark of the founder to B. Monappa, and that even if as a matter of construction it should be held that the trade mark was conveyed thereunder, the conveyance would be invalid because it offended Section 39 of the Act of 1958 in that even after the deed the father still had a right to use the trade mark on the tiles manufactured by him in the Jayaram Tile Works, Kudroli and such (a partial) assignment was prohibited by Section 39 of the Act. In effect the contention was that B. Monappa was not in law the proprietor of the trade mark. It was further contended that the use of the mark under such circumstances could not be honest and further it was not continuous and not sufficient in volume. The mark of B. Monappa was certain to deceive or cause confusion in view of the existing trade mark of B. S. Ramappa and in view of Section 11 (a) of the Act it should not be registered. Further since the mark had been registered in the name of the opponents, Section 12 (1) also would be a bar.

18. The learned Assistant Registrar held that Secs. 11 (a) and 12 (1) would bar the registration in the name of B. Monappa but held that he was entitled to registration under Section 12 (3). Regarding Section 11 (a) the learned Registrar pointed out that for all practical purposes the mark of Monappa was a replica of the mark of the opponents and was certain to cause deception and confusion. Similarly he was of the view that Section 12 (1) would also be a bar because the registration had been made in the name of the opponents before the date of the hearing of Monappa's application. Regarding Section 12 (3) the learned Registrar first addressed himself to the question whether the applicant B. Monappa was not the proprietor of the mark. He pointed out that the applicant sought to make out his proprietorship on two grounds: (i) deed dated 17th January, 1950 and (ii) lawful, open, extensive and uninterrupted user of the mark and the acquiescence of the opponents. Under the first head, he agreed with the opponents' learned Counsel that the deed of 17th January, 1950 did not as a matter of construction convey the trade mark to Monappa. He held however that even if as a matter of construction the deed was meant to convey the trade mark it would be invalid because of Section 39 of the Act. The learned Registrar thus rejected the first head of the claim of proprietorship of Monappa.

The learned Registrar however held in favour of Monappa on the second ground that the user was lawful, because Monappa used it in the honest belief that he had a right to use the mark, and that the founder had not objected to the user of the mark and in fact had deposed in O. P. No. 65 of 1954 that he had permitted B. Monappa to use the mark. No doubt in 1960 he started protesting but that was evidently at the instigation of the younger son. Secondly, the learned Registrar pointed out that the use of the mark by Monappa was open and not surreptitious. Thirdly, he held that it was continuous. Fourthly, in his view even B. S. Ramappa had acquiesced in the use of the mark by B. Monappa. I shall deal with this later.

19. The learned Registrar then considered the objection that the user by Monappa was not honest. The learned Registrar held that it was honest and that it was continuous enough and the volume of the business was sufficient for the purpose of Section 12 (3), and at any rate amounted to commercial use, the criterion pointed by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in the Durex case, (1964) 2 SCR 211 = (AIR 1963 SC 1882). The learned Registrar also held that it was Monappa who had been more honest of the two brothers and that there was no reason for refusing to exercise the discretion vested in the Registrar against Monappa. In the end he ordered registration under Section 12 (3) of the Act.

20. Sri V. Rajagopalachari, the learned Counsel for the appellants, has, in a powerful argument, contended that the learned Registrar was wrong in holding that Monappa had become the proprietor of the trade mark sought to be registered by long, open, continuous and uninterrupted user. The learned Counsel urges that the user was not lawful because the mark was virtually a reproduction of the mark of the founder and the mark of the founder had not been assigned to Monappa—both as a matter of construction and in view of Section 39 of the Act—as rightly found by the learned Registrar himself. Monappa thus merely adopted with an insignificant variation the mark of the founder and use of the mark could not be honest, particularly as it would offend the provisions of Section 39. The first point made by the learned Counsel is thus: That in trade mark law, the use of the mark must be lawful even in its origin, and there is no such thing as acquiring a right to the mark by long user adversely to the rightful owner. In this respect there is a difference between the trade mark law and the ordinary law where a man's title to immoveable property becomes perfect by adverse possession over a prescribed period usually 12 years. No doubt if the rightful owner stands by and allows the usurper of the trade mark to use it for a long period, the original owner may be estopped and may be considered as having acquiesced in the use of the mark by the usurper. But in this case the learned Counsel contends that there was no such acquiescence by B. S. Monappa who became the owner of the mark at least from 8th February, 1953, the date of the settlement deed executed by the original founder. The learned Counsel submits that even for claiming the right of registration on the ground of honest user under Section 12 (3) it is necessary for the claimant to make out that he is the proprietor, because the section speaks of the Registrar permitting registration by more than one proprietor of trade marks which are identical or nearly resemble each other in the case of honest, concurrent use or other special circumstances.

Section 18 under which the application has to be made no doubt starts by saying that "any person claiming to be the proprietor of a trade mark used or proposed to be used by him who is desirous of registering shall apply in writing to the Registrar". But the words 'claiming to be the proprietor' can only mean, according to the learned Counsel, that if the claim is challenged, the applicant must make out his claim. To hold otherwise would defeat the whole object of the trade mark law, namely, that a man cannot steal another man's trade mark. A man may become the proprietor in ever so many ways: (a) by inventing the mark; (b) purchase of the mark; (c) gift; (d) by partition; (e) devolution, inheritance or operation of law. But it is necessary that he should be the proprietor in one of such ways. In this case as a matter of construction it has to be held that the deed of 17th January, 1950 did not pass the trade mark, and even if as a matter of construction it should be held that it passed the trade mark it will not be valid because of Section 39. No doubt the founder's evidence in O. P. No. 65 of 1954 showed that he permitted Monappa to use the mark. But permission would not amount to an assignment and the very deposition would show that the founder himself retained the right to continue to use the trade mark on the tiles manufactured by him in the Jayaram Tile Works, and if so, such a partial assignment would offend Sec. 39. Apart from the alleged assignment the only possible ground of title was that Monappa invented the mark. But that again would not be valid because the mark which he adopted was virtually the original mark and the alteration was only slight.

21. In support of the above argument the learned Counsel has cited the Vitamins, Ltd. case, (1956) RPC 1 = (1955) 3 All ER 827, at p. 834 and the decision of Ramamurthi J., in Balaji Chettiar v. Hindustan Lever Ltd., AIR 1967, Mad 148 (Paras 10 and 11) and Halsbury, Volume 38, Paragraph 909 and Kerly on Trade Marks, 9th Edition, paragraph 92. In the matter of Vitamins Ltd.'s Application for a Trade Mark (1956) RPC 1, the relevant facts were these, Vitamins Limited had registered the trade mark Pabavel. A. H. Robins Company incorporated in United States sought to register in England the mark Pabalate, which they had been using in America. They however withdrew their application in order to avoid controversy and expense on account of the opposition of Vitamins Limited. Shortly thereafter Vitamins Limited applied for registration of the mark Pabalate. How they sought to rely on the opening words of Section 17 (1) of the English Act 'any person claiming to be the proprietor of a trade mark.....' corresponding to Section 18 of Act XLIII of 1958, and how the Court rejected their contention will appear from the following passage at page 12 of the report 1956 R. P. C.

"In my judgment the form which an applicant is required to sign wherein he claims to be the proprietor, indicates an assertion of a present proprietary right. The respondent urges that this is merely an assertion that he claims to become the proprietor or to assume proprietary rights as and when application is granted. I do not accept that as the true interpretation of a form intended to be completed before registration can be applied for. A proprietary right in a mark sought to be registered can be obtained in a number of ways. The mark can be originated by a person or can be acquired, but in all cases it is necessary that the person putting forward the application should be in possession of some proprietary right which, if questioned, can be substantiated. Where, as here, another party in the same way of business had already put forward a claim to be the proprietor of the identical trade mark and had withdrawn the application for registration merely to avoid controversy and expense, it seems to be impossible to hold that the party who had by opposition secured that result could a few weeks later merely as a result of the withdrawal claim proprietary rights.

The position appears to have been this, that by reason of their possession and user of the mark "Pabavel" the respondents formed the view—a view which they are entitled to hold—that their reputation was such that the use of the mark—"Pabalate" by another would infringe their rights when, as the result of the development of their business, they desired to introduce other marks into commerce beginning with the same first two syllables, they decided to make this application. No explanation has been given why in the selection of such other 'Paba' marks they condescended upon the one which had been claimed by another as his property."

22. In AIR 1967, Mad 148, Balaji Chettiar applied for registration of the mark 'Surian', claiming to be the proprietor thereof. But it was found that on the date of the application the mark belonged to a partnership of which Balaji Chettiar was only one of the partners. Consequently it was held that he was not the proprietor of the mark. The learned Judge relied on the observations in the Vitamins' case, (1956) RPC 1 (12) and the observations of Fry, L. J., in In re Apollinaries Co.'s Trade Marks, (1891) 2 Ch 186 at p. 226, and the observation in 38 Halsbury, Para. 909 "that no person is entitled to put the trade mark of another person on the register."

23. In Kerly, paragraph 92 the following passage occurs with reference to Section 17 (1) of the English Act:

"The words in this section really mean no more than 'claiming that he is entitled to be registered as the proprietor.' Nevertheless, it would seem to be settled that the claim must in some sense be a justified one, if the registration is to stand; whether by virtue of the section or under some general jurisdiction, the Court will expunge a registration if the applicant for it could not in good faith make this claim."

24. The second important point made by the learned Counsel is that on the same reasoning indicated above, it has to be held that the adoption of the mark by Monappa with only a slight variation from 17th January, 1950 could not be said to be really honest. The learned Counsel emphasises that for the use to be honest within the meaning of Section 12 (3) of the Act it is not enough if Monappa believed that he had a right to use it and that it is necessary that in law the belief must be sustainable. The law would not however sustain such a belief because the adoption of the mark virtually resembling the old mark was prohibited by Section 39 of the Act and when it was prohibited by law, the law would not allow the usurper to say that the use of the mark was honest. The learned Counsel submits that even apart from law it should be obvious that this is the position even to a layman.

25. It will be seen that in the above submissions and indeed in the finding of the learned Registrar himself a large part is played by the proposition that the deed of 17th January, 1950 did not pass the trade mark to Monappa and that even if, it was meant to pass, it would be hit at by S. 39. Before proceeding further it is necessary to deal with that point because the proposition is contested by Sri V. Thiagarajan, the learned Counsel for Monappa. The contention of Sri V. Thiagarajan is that though in the deed dated 17th January, 1950 it is not specifically stated that the goodwill or the trade mark passed, yet the Court should hold (as a matter of necessary inference) that the intention of the settlor was to pass the trade mark to his son. This contention is founded on the fact that in the list of moveable properties mention is made of the implements for making the tiles and those implements included the disc bearing the trade mark and the disc itself had not been removed.

I do not think however that this is sufficient to spell out an intention to pass the trade mark. The undisputed fact remains that the settlor was still using the trade mark in the tiles manufactured by him in Jayaram Tile Works and it is not likely that he meant to part with the trade mark to any extent. One would therefore require very clear and explicit words in the deed before one could accept the contention that the trade mark was meant to be passed. In construing the deed of 17th January, 1950 it is really not permissible to take into account the later deposition of the father in O. P. No. 65 of 1954. But even taking that into account, it would amount only to this that the father permitted Monappa to use the trade mark on the tiles manufactured by Monappa. But permission will not necessarily amount to an assignment.

26. In this connection it is worthy of note that Sections 48 and 49 which deal with a case where the owner, A, permits another person, B, to use the mark and provide for the registration of B as a registered user still go on to enact that the permitted use of the trade mark by B shall be deemed to be used by the proprietor thereof, namely, A. That only emphasises the idea that permission would not constitute an assignment. Assuming, however, for the sake of argument and argument only that as a matter of construction it has to be held that the deed of 17th January, 1950 was meant to pass the trade mark to Monappa, it would still be invalid under Sections 31 and 32 of the Trade Marks Act of 1940, which were the provisions in force on 17th January, 1950, the corresponding provisions in Act XLIII of 1958 being Sections 39 and 40.

27. Section 31 of the Act of 1940, so far as it is material ran thus :

“(1) Notwithstanding anything in Ss. 29 and 30 a trade mark shall not be assignable or transmissible in a case in which as a result of the assignment or transmission, there would in the circumstances subsist, whether under this Act or any other law, exclusive rights in more than one of the persons concerned to the use, in relation to the same goods or description of goods, of trade marks nearly resembling each other or of identical trade marks, if, having regard to the similarity of the goods and of the trade marks, the use of the trade marks in exercise of those rights would be likely to deceive or cause confusion.”

Section 32 of the Act of 1940, so far as it is relevant, ran as follows :

“Notwithstanding anything in Sections 29 and 30, a trade mark shall not be assignable or transmissible in a case in which as a result of the assignment or transmission there would in the circumstances subsist whether under this Act or any other law, exclusive right in one of the persons concerned to the use of the trade mark limited to use in relation to goods to be sold, or otherwise traded in, in any place in India and an exclusive right in another of these persons to the use of a trade mark nearly resembling the first mentioned trade mark or of an identical trade mark in relation to the same goods or description of goods limited to use in relation to goods to be sold, or otherwise traded in, in any other place in India.....”

28. On the hypothesis that the deed of 17th January, 1950 assigned the right to Monappa to use the trade mark in the tiles manufactured in the Hoige Bazaar factory, the resulting position was that the settlor, Ramappa, himself was entitled to use the trade mark in the tiles manufactured in his own factory, Jayaram Tile Works and Monappa also would have the right to use the trade mark on his own tiles. This is precisely what was prohibited by Sections 31 and 32. That, in my opinion, is an inescapable conclusion on the wording of Sections 31 and 32 of the Act of 1940, though the wording would seem to be involved. Mr. Thiagarajan learned Counsel for the respondent, Monappa, was not able to put forward any contrary interpretation which would avoid this.

29. Both Sri Rajagopalachari and Sri Thiagarajan submitted that there was no exact case decided either in India or in England on this point, the corresponding provision in the English Act of 1938 being Section 22 (4). That is true. But I find that there are observations in English cases which are quoted with approval in Kerly in paragraph 492 and those observations support the interpretation which I have placed. The passage in Kerly is as follows :

“Section 22 (4) invalidates all transactions which would result in concurrent exclusive rights for two or more of those concerned in the transaction to use in the United Kingdom similar or identical marks, on the same or similar goods, if the exercise of those rights, would be likely to deceive or cause confusion. No doubt the primary function of the sub-section is to exclude assignments to different assignees of confusingly similar marks, or assignments of a mark to different assignees for different but similar goods; but it also serves to prevent an assignment which would leave the assignor with an exclusive common law right to the use of the mark. A proviso to Section 22 (4) permits such splitting assignments where the concurrent rights that result are confined to rights to export to different markets; whilst Sec. 22 (5) provides for certification by the Registrar that an assignment will not contravene Section 22 (4).

Section 22 (6) invalidates transaction that would result in concurrent exclusive rights in those concerned in the transaction to the use of a mark in different parts of the United Kingdom. This is subject however to a power for the Registrar to certify that the transaction is not against the public interest and thereby to exempt it from Sections 22 (4) and (6)."

The authorities quoted are per Master of Rolls at page 252 in Reuter Ltd. v. Mulhens, (1953) 70 RPC 235 and at p. 57 in Adrema Werke Maschinenbau G. M. B. H. v. Custodian of Enemy Property, (1957) RPC 49. In (1953) 70 RPC 235, the facts are complicated, but, for our present purpose, they may be simplified thus. The defendant company was the owner of a business in Cologne, Germany, dealing in the celebrated '4711 Eau-de-Cologne.' Reuter Co., Ltd. was a company in England and it claimed to have been rightly registered as proprietors of the trade mark '4711' in England, and brought the action against the defendant for some reliefs based on that allegation. Before the outbreak of the II World War in 1939 between England and Germany, Reuter Company or its predecessor were the agents in England of Mulhens for the sale of the products and to some extent the product was also manufactured in England. As a result of the legislation enacted during the war period, certain rights of Mulhens who had become an enemy were vested in the Custodian of Enemy Property in England who transferred those rights to Reuter Company Limited, and it was by virtue thereof that the assignment had been made by the Custodian in the name of Reuter Company Limited. One of the defences was that the assignment was invalid under Section 22 (4) of the Trade Marks Act of 1938. The argument on behalf of the defendant was that the common law rights of the defendant had not been affected and still remained intact and the assignment would leave the rights distributed between the defendant and the plaintiff and would therefore offend Section 22 (4). Evershed, M. R. was inclined to concede that if really the common law rights still inhered in the defendant, the defence should prevail. But he came to the conclusion that the defendant did not have the common law rights so far as England was concerned. The observations relevant for us occur at page 252 and are as follows:

"It follows, then, says Mr. Mould, (for the defendant) that, if notwithstanding an assignment the assignor retains an exclusive right himself to use the same mark at common law the assignment will be ineffective. That proposition I am prepared, at any rate for the purposes of the assignment, to accept. Thus, to revert to my previous illustration, if upon the sale of the trade mark 'Gold Flake' it was provided by or resulted from the sale agreement that the sellers were still entitled to the use of the name of insignia of 'Gold Flake' upon their own product, the assignment would be ineffective, and obviously and necessarily so, for the resultant competition would inevitably create deception and confusion."

Romer L. J., also got over the argument by taking the view that even the common law rights of the defendant vested in the Custodian and nothing survived to the defendant.

30. In (1957) RPC 49, the facts, were similar and the same defence was put forward and were repelled for similar reasons. The only additional feature in that case is that an argument was put forward by Mr. Buckley on behalf of the Custodian of Enemy Property in England that Section 22 (4) of the Act would not come into play at all. To put it in simple language, the argument was that Section 22 (4) would apply only where as a result of the assignment itself, there must result a plurality of the right to use the trade mark in two different persons, but that was not the situation in that case, because in 1951 when the trade marks of the German plaintiff-company were vested in the Custodian of Enemy Property in England, the trade marks and the common law rights of the German plaintiff-company became severed, and it was only after such severance the trade marks were sought to be assigned by the Custodian to an English Company called the Adrema Limited. Lord Evershed, M. R. declined to go into that argument.

31. We have thus arrived at the conclusion that as a matter of construction, there was no assignment of the trade mark to Monappa in the deed of 17th January, 1950 and in any case the assignment would be totally invalid in view of Sections 31 and 32 of Act V of 1940. This was the conclusion reached by the Registrar and I affirm it.

32. I now turn to the argument of Sri V. Rajagopalachari which I have already indicated in full. I agree with him that even in order to entitle to registration under Section 12 (3) on the ground of honest concurrent user or other special circumstances it was necessary for Monappa to establish that he was the proprietor of the trade mark sought to be registered. This contention is fully supported by the wording of Section 12 (3) and Section 18 and the principles underlying the trade mark law and the authorities cited by learned Counsel. To hold otherwise would mean that if Monappa had no right to use the trade mark, he could claim the right of registration on the alleged ground of honest and concurrent use, a position which it is impossible to accept. It seems to me, however, that both the aspects of the argument of Sri Rajagopalachari, that Monappa could not claim to be the proprietor and that the use was not honest, resolve themselves in the last resort only to one criterion, namely, that Monappa, in view of the prohibition contained in Sections 31 and 32 of the Act of 1940 could not claim to have honestly adopted any mark which would virtually be a replica of the mark of the founder. Since the point is important and seems to arise for the first time I shall endeavour to elaborate this to some extent.

33. Suppose for the sake of argument that Monappa in the first place, without making any alteration whatever, had begun to use the trade mark of the founder from 17th January, 1950. It is obvious that in such a case the user would not be honest at all. Even if he claimed that right as a matter of construction of the deed of 17th January, 1950 that claim would be invalid in view of Sections 31 and 32 of the Act of 1940. Hence he could not be considered to be the proprietor of the mark for purposes of Section 12 (3) or Section 18 of the Act of 1958 (the corresponding sections were Sections 10 (2) and 14 of the Act of 1940). Obviously the different provisions of Act V of 1940 would have to be construed in harmony. In other words Section 10 (2) and Section 14 of Act V of 1940 should be construed so as to harmonise with Sections 31 and 32 of that Act and similarly Sections 12 (3) and 18 of the Act of 1958 should be construed so as to be in harmony with Sections 39 and 40 of that Act. If under the latter set of provisions the Court could not recognise a partial assignment the Registrar and the Court would not recognise Monappa as the proprietor of the trade mark. Evidently Monappa and his legal adviser were conscious of this and that was why Monappa sought to vary the original mark of the founder by adding the word 'Monappa's, on the top and transposing the numeral '1596' from the bottom of the shield to a place inside the shield. The idea of Monappa in making this variation was to contend that this variation sufficiently distinguished his mark from the original mark of the founder, so as to avoid the bar of Sections 31 and 32 of Act V of 1940. If really the Court could say that the variation sufficiently distinguished the mark of Monappa from the founder's mark, the Court would be justified in saying that the use of the new trade mark of Monappa would not be likely to deceive or cause confusion and therefore the bar of Sections 31 and 32 would not apply and Monappa could legitimately be described as the inventor of the new mark and could be considered as the proprietor of the new mark for the purposes of Sections 10 (2) and 14 of Act V of 1940 (the corresponding provisions in the Act of 1958 being Sections 12 (3) and 18). Further in such a case the Court could also say that the use of the new mark substantially different from the old mark, could be considered as honest within the meaning of Section 10 (2) of Act V of 1940 and Section 12 (3) of Act XLIII of 1958.

34. Suppose however the Court is to hold that the variation made by Monappa is not significant enough to distinguish the mark from the founder's mark, then the Court would be justified in saying that in view of Sections 31 and 32 of the Act of 1940 (the corresponding provisions in Act XLIII of 1958 being Sections 39 and 40) the use of the mark of Monappa could not be said to be honest within the meaning of Section 10

(2) of the Act of 1940 or Section 12 (3) of the Act of 1958 and further on the same criterion Monappa could not be recognised as the proprietor of the new mark. In a technical sense no doubt Monappa would be the proprietor of the new mark in so far as the new mark was different from the old mark even to some extent and was therefore not the identical mark as the original mark. But surely it is not in this technical sense that the word 'proprietor' is used in the Trade Marks Act because if this technical sense were to prevail there would be a travesty of Sections 31 and 32 of the Act of 1940 and the corresponding provisions, Sections 39 and 40, in the Act of 1958. This is why I stated that both the aspects of the argument of Sri Rajagopalachari resolve themselves ultimately into one criterion, namely, whether the new mark adopted by Monappa sufficiently distinguished itself from the original mark of the founder. If it sufficiently distinguished itself, Monappa would at the same stroke of the pen be considered as the proprietor of the new mark and as the honest user of the new mark. If, however, the new mark is not sufficiently distinguishable from the old mark the result would just be the opposite.

35. In my opinion the above way of looking at the matter would provide one simple criterion and would effect a reconciliation between the different provisions of the Act, namely, Sections 10 (2) and 14 of the Act of 1940 on the one hand and Sections 31 and 32 of the Act on the other, of the corresponding provisions of the Act of 1958. I put forward this approach to the learned Counsel, Sri V. Rajagopalachari and Sri V. Thiagarajan and in order to avoid embarrassment to them in their relationships to their clients, I merely content myself with describing their reaction in negative terms, namely, they are not able to urge anything to shake the validity of this approach.

The matter may also be looked at from a different angle but leading to the same result. Thus in so far as some variations were made to the old mark and the variations were made by Monappa, he could be considered as the proprietor of the new mark, but this would not be sufficient to entitle him to succeed unless he makes out to the satisfaction of the Court that the use was honest. That again would depend on compliance with Sections 31 and 32 of the Act of 1940. In other words, if the variations were not sufficient to distinguish the new mark sufficiently from the old mark, the use of the mark cannot be recognised as honest in view of Secs. 31 and 32 of Act V of 1940. But if the variations would sufficiently distinguish the new mark from the old, the Court could legitimately say that the use of the new mark is honest and would not offend Sections 31 and 32 of Act V of 1940.

36. The question therefore finally resolves itself into the simple one, whether the variations adopted by Monappa to distinguish the new from the old were sufficient, I am not prepared to say that the variations were sufficient to distinguish the new mark from the old, but at the same time I think it will be unjust to Monappa to deprive him of the right to registration absolutely of any mark. The circumstances of the case are special and are such that the proper course for the Court to adopt will be to permit the registration to stand with further alterations in the new mark, so as to distinguish it sufficiently from the old mark. The Court has power to do this under the concluding portions of Sections 12 (3) and 18 (4) of the Act of 1958. Further, on account of the special circumstances of the case, the Court will be justified in taking the view if necessary, that the variations now going to be proposed by me might be considered as having been effected even from 17th January, 1950 so as to cure any defect in the content of honesty and proprietorship on the part of Monappa. The variations which I direct are these. The two flags on the top of the shield (one on either side of the crown) and the numeral '1596' inside should be deleted. The other features may remain, namely, the words Taj Double Bavuta; the device of the shield with the device of the flag and the word 'flag' inside the shield, the device of the crown on the top of the shield and the word 'Monappa's' on the top. In my opinion this will do substantial justice to Monappa.

In the view I have taken of the matter it is unnecessary to discuss in further detail the reasoning of the Registrar. It is however necessary to refer to his finding that the younger brother, B. S. Ramappa, had recognised Monappa's proprietorship of the mark and allowed him to build up the trade. This finding is opposed to the evidence and hardly does justice to the determined efforts made by B. S. Ramappa from 1951 onwards to prevent Monappa from using his mark. In 1951 he issued the notice on 27-7-1951. On 8-2-1953 he got the settlement deed in his own favour and then filed the suit, O. S. No. 14 of 1953. When he lost in O. P. No. 65 of 1954 before Ramaswami J., he carried the matter in appeal. He had to wait for sometime till 1960 because the father had supported the elder brother, Monappa, in his deposition in O. P. No. 65 of 1954 to some extent in stating that he had permitted his elder son to use the mark. On 18th February, 1960 B. S. Ramappa secured a rectification deed from the father. Then he filed the application for registration, No. 205533 supported by an affidavit of the father, dated 29th March, 1962. He entered opposition along with his son in the application of Monappa.

37. In the result I direct modification of the trade mark to be registered in the name of Monappa as indicated above and otherwise, dismiss the appeal. The parties will bear their own costs.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1970 MADRAS 165 (V 57 C 43)

K. S. RAMAMURTI, J.

Saleh Bros., Appellant v. K. Rajendran and another, Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 1065 of 1964, D/-5-9-1968, from decree of Addl. City Civil J., Madras in Appeal Suit No. 200 of 1963.

(A) T. P. Act (1882), Ss. 111 (g) and (h), 112, 113 and 116, 105—Waiver of forfeiture and waiver of notice to quit — Law is same in England and in India — Receipt of rent subsequent to notice determining lease and pending ejectment suit — Whether, receipt of rent by itself, amounts to waiver: AIR 1957 Cal 627 and AIR 1926 Cal 763, Dissent. from.

The law relating to waiver of forfeiture and waiver of notice to quit, is the same in England and in India: (1912) 24 Mad LJ 263 and AIR 1968 SC 471, Rel. on; AIR 1957 Cal 627, Dissent. from. (Para 2)

The principle underlying Section 112, that after the landlord had elected to avail himself of the forfeiture and had given notice in writing to the lessee of his intention to determine the lease and followed it up by a suit in ejectment there is no waiver, would equally apply to Section 113 where the landlord has instituted a suit in ejectment, preceded by the issue of notice determining the lease. The absence of a corresponding proviso, in Section 113, is of no significance and does not manifest any intention on the part of the Legislature to make any difference. (Para 3)

Under Section 111 (h) the lease is determined on the expiration of the notice which can be given by the unilateral choice of one of the parties, there being nothing further to be done by the other party. The issue of such a notice, of its own force and without anything more, after the expiry of the period, determines the lease. (Para 4)

Acceptance of rent which has become due since the forfeiture is regarded as waiver of forfeiture under the main operative portion of Section 112, because the acceptance of rent is an affirmation that the lease was subsisting at the time when the rent became due after the forfeiture. But this acceptance of rent, after the suit in ejectment is filed, is not regarded as a waiver, because, once the matter has come to the Court, the election has become irrevocable. The only thing necessary under the second proviso is that there must be an unequivocal demand for possession in a proceeding instituted in the Court. (Para 10)

The principle that once an election has been made and the lease determined the election is irrevocable, would apply even when the election is not followed by a suit in ejectment and if the lessor had merely given a notice in writing of his intention to determine the lease as provided in Sec. 111 (g). If rent is subsequently received by the lessor, the rights of the parties will have to be determined in accordance with the provisions of Section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act. The determination of the lease referred to in Section 116 will certainly include determination of the lease as a result of the lessor electing to take advantage of the forfeiture and determining the lease by giving notice in writing under Section 111 (g). Once the lease is determined by the issue of the requisite notice, a contractual relationship thereafter can arise only with the consent of both the parties. The irrevocable character of the election must follow in either case. (Para 11)

The plain language of Section 113 indicates that a waiver does not ipso facto result from any act of omission or commission on the part of the lessor, but the act must be such as clear evidence of the lessor's intention to treat the lease as subsisting. It is the intention of the lessor to treat the lease as subsisting which is the predominant and deciding factor in bringing about a waiver and not any particular act by itself. Illustration (a) must, therefore, be understood and applied in consonance with the principle underlying the section with due reference to the intention of the lessor. There is no warrant for the view that mere receipt of rent, whatever may be the intention of the lessor, should of its own force, divorced from the circumstances of the case, be regarded as amounting to a waiver. (Para 12)

Section 113 consists of two limbs: (a) the express or implied consent of the person to whom notice is given and (b) "the act of the person giving the notice showing the intention to treat the lease as subsisting". In order to constitute a waiver, both the limbs must concurrently operate, which means, that an act by itself and of its own force, without reference to the intention of the parties, cannot bring about a waiver. The principle underlying Section 116 of the Act will also apply in applying Section 113 as this is also a case of continuance of the lease restoring the old tenancy. (Para 13)

The preponderance of the weight of authority is that in addition to the receipt of rent by the landlord there should be proof that the receipt was with the intention to treat the lease as subsisting. According to the decisions, there should be either an express contract or conduct of the parties justifying the inference that, after the determination of the contractual tenancy, the landlord's intention was that the occupation of the premises was as a tenant. Whether the conduct of the party justified such an inference would undoubtedly turn upon the facts and circumstances of each case. AIR 1926 Cal 763, Dissent. from. (Para 17)

The circumstance that in the receipts issued by the owner, the word 'rent' is used is not decisive of the question. Case law referred. (Para 17)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble — Interpretation of statutes — Illustrations — Use of.

Illustrations are useful as aids to construction and for securing the proper meaning of the section, but they cannot control the plain meaning of the section; Illustrations appended to sections of a statute are useful to show how sections may operate and are of relevance and value in construing the text. They should only be rejected as repugnant to the section as the last resort of construction. (Para 12)

S. Kuppaswamy, for Appellant; A. Sundaram Ayyar and V. N. Srinivasa Rao, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT: This Second Appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment and the tenant who failed in the Courts below is the appellant in the second appeal. The premises in question is situated in Sembudoss Street and the owner and landlord was one Kuppaswamy Naicker now represented by the plaintiffs in the action. By G. O. No. 2216 (Home), dated 5th August, 1958, the Government issued a notification exempting the premises from the provisions of the Rent Control Act. The tenant filed two writ petitions, W. P. Nos. 732 and 733 of 1958 to quash the order of the Government and the petitions were dismissed on 10th November, 1960. The tenant preferred Writ Appeals Nos. 156 and 157 of 1960, therefrom and they too were dismissed on 15th November, 1962. Meanwhile, on 6th October, 1958, within two months after the order of exemption by the Government, the plaintiffs instituted the suit O. S. No. 1822 of 1958 on the file of the City Civil Court, Madras, for recovery of possession of the property after giving notice, Exhibit A-1, dated 2nd September, 1958, terminating the tenancy. Pending disposal of the writ proceedings, there was an order of limited interim stay and after the final disposal of the writ proceedings the suit was taken up and disposed of. Several objections were raised by the defendant, the tenant, and only two points were argued before me in the second appeal. One is that the suit is bad for want of proper notice to quit, the objection, being that the notice terminating the tenancy by the midnight of 30th September, 1958 is bad in law. A perusal of the judgment of the Courts below shows that this point was not seriously pressed before the Courts below and it was also not shown how this notice was defective. Before me too, the point was merely mentioned and when the attention of the learned Counsel for the appellant was drawn to the fact that in the grounds of appeal in this Court no objection has been taken touching this aspect, learned Counsel did not pursue the matter further. Indeed the only point that was pressed before me is the point of waiver. The tenant has filed a batch of receipts in respect of rents paid from August, 1958 to November, 1962. The third of the series of receipts is dated 31st October, 1958 being the receipt of a sum of Rs. 212-50 towards the rent for the premises for the month of October, 1958. The argument on behalf of the tenant is that after the tenancy came to an end by the midnight of 30th September, 1958, the landlord has received the rent from the tenant for the entire month of October, 1958 and for the subsequent months and he should therefore be held to have waived the prior notice to quit thereby treating the tenancy as still subsisting. Counsel on both sides cited some decisions touching this aspect as to whether or not this conduct of the landlord would amount to waiver.

2. Learned Counsel for the appellant placed considerable reliance upon illustration (a) to Section 113 of the Transfer of Property Act and the absence of a provision corresponding to the second proviso in Section 112 of the Transfer of Property Act. His contention is that the notice, Exhibit A-1, issued under S. 111 (h) of the Act determining the tenancy must be held to have been waived and stood cancelled by reason of the landlord accepting rent which had become due in respect of the property since the expiration of the notice. He urged that in the case of waiver of forfeiture by acceptance of rent which had become due since forfeiture the Legislature had made a special provision in the second proviso to Section 112 that when such rent is accepted after the institution of the suit to eject the lessee on the ground of forfeiture, such acceptance of rent is not a waiver and that the Legislature had made a deliberate departure and distinction between waiver of forfeiture and waiver of notice to quit. In support of his contention learned Counsel relied upon the following observations of Buckland J., in Manicklal v. Kadambini, AIR 1926 Cal 763:

"Now, under Section 112 which deals with a similar position in connection with forfeiture under Section 111 (g) it is expressly provided that where rent is accepted after the institution of a suit to eject the lessee on the ground of forfeiture such acceptance is not a waiver."

"It is argued by analogy that in the circumstances there is no waiver. To that, I think, the answer is that where rent is accepted after the notice to quit, whether before or after a suit has been filed, the landlord thereby shows an intention to treat the lease as subsisting. One cannot logically say that the fact of accepting rent by itself shows an intention if a suit has been filed. The intention shown by the act itself must be the same in either case. Therefore, by accepting the rent, the plaintiff in my opinion showed an intention to treat the lease as subsisting and acceptance of rent was waiver of the notice to quit notwithstanding the fact that a suit had already been filed for the purpose of ejecting the tenant. It has also to be observed that under S. 112 the acceptance of rent after suit has been exactly provided for, and it may well be argued that had it been intended that acceptance of rent after suit should not operate as a waiver in the case of a notice to quit one would have expected that a proviso similar to that in S. 112 would have been incorporated in Section 113."

With great respect, I am unable to agree with this view. Further, this view has not been followed in several decisions of the various Courts. Learned counsel on both sides invited my attention to some of the decisions both Indian and English; learned counsel for the appellant, relying upon some of the observations in the cases cited, attempted to make out that in the matter of waiver of forfeiture, and waiver of notice to quit, there is some material difference between the law in England and the law in India and that the decisions in England cannot afford much of a guidance in the solution of the problem. It is true that there are observations in some of the decisions suggesting some difference between the law in England and the law in India as enacted in Sections 111 to 113 and 116 of the Transfer of Property Act. In my view there is no difference in the matter of substance and such difference as is observed in the statutory enactment of the law in India is very superficial and a distinction without difference. On a careful consideration of all the aspects of the matter concerning the law relating to waiver of forfeiture and waiver of notice to quit, I am of the view that the law is the same in England and in India, vide Chengiah v. Rajah of Kalahasti, (1912) 24 Mad LJ 263 and Calcutta Credit Corporation Ltd. v. Happy Homes (Private) Ltd., (1968) 2 Andh WR (SC) 42: (1968) 2 SCJ 291: (1968) 2 Mad LJ (SC) 42, 43 = (AIR 1968 SC 471).

3. Before I proceed further to examine the decisions, it is necessary to refer to the well-established principles, because, in my opinion, the principle underlying Section 112, that after the landlord had elected to avail himself of the forfeiture and had given notice in writing to the lessee of his intention to determine the lease and followed it up by a suit in ejectment there is no waiver, would equally apply to Section 113 where the landlord has instituted a suit in ejectment, preceded by the issue of notice determining the lease. The absence of a corresponding proviso, in Section 113, is of no significance and does not manifest any intention on the part of the Legislature to make any difference. When forfeiture occurs as specified in Section 111 (g) on the happening of any one of the specified events, the lease does not ipso facto come to an end, but it only gives a right to the lessor, if he is so minded and so elects, to determine the lease, taking advantage of the forfeiture. It is not the mere happening of the specified events at the instance of the lessee that would bring about a termination of the lease putting an end to the relationship, but it is the determination of the lessor to elect to determine the lease that would bring about a dissolution of that relationship. The requirement of the landlord to so elect is based upon the well-recognised principle of law that no man can take advantage of his own wrong and that the lessee by his unilateral act and by committing a wrong cannot make the lease void; it is only voidable and has to be avoided by the lessor.

4. In striking contrast to this provision requiring a clear election on the part of the lessor to determine the lease, the provision in Section 111 (g) states that the lease of immovable property is determined "on the expiration of a notice to determine the lease or to quit or of intention to quit duly given by one party to the other". Under Section 111 (h) the lease is determined on the expiration of the notice which can be given by the unilateral choice of one of the parties, there being nothing further to be done by the other party. The issue of such a notice, of its own force and without anything more, after the expiry of the period, determines the lease.

5. Before the Amending Act of 1929, all that was necessary for the lessor was to manifest his election to avail himself of the forfeiture and determine the lease and it was enough if he did some act showing his intention to determine the lease following the forfeiture. There was a conflict of decisions as to whether a distinct, independent act showing the intention to determine the lease was a condition precedent to the suit in ejectment or whether a suit in ejectment itself could be regarded as showing the animus of the landlord. By the Amending Act of 1929 it is now provided that the lessor should give notice in writing to the lessee of his intention to determine the lease. The second proviso to Section 112, that acceptance of rent after the filing of the suit in ejectment will not amount to a waiver, merely illustrates the principle that once the lessor with knowledge of the forfeiture makes an election by express words or by an unequivocal act, the election is irrevocable, with the result that, if the lessor gives notice determining the lease on the ground of forfeiture and files a suit, no subsequent act would amount to a waiver. In situations and circumstances, where the landlord has not filed a suit in ejectment, there may be some room or scope for argument that particular act done by the lessor in electing to determine the lease on the basis of forfeiture is either ineffective or equivocal and that the manifestation of the required intention is not clear, but, when the landlord manifests his intention by instituting a suit in ejectment, that conduct is a final, positive and decisive act, and leaves no room for doubt, with the result that the election becomes irrevocable; the lease is once for all determined, it cannot be retracted.

6. In this connection, reference may be made to the statement of the law by Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant (26th Edn., p. 946, Section 2057):

"If ejectment be brought on a forfeiture of a lease, and after the bringing of such ejectment the landlord accepts rent, or distrains, or sets up a cause of forfeiture a subsequent non-payment of rent, it is no waiver. A writ containing an unequivocal claim for possession, or an unequivocal claim for a declaration of title to possession, operates as a final election to determine the lease." Vide also 23 Halsbury, 672 (foot-notes (a) and (b)), where the distinction between demand for and receipt of rent after the cause of forfeiture prior to the suit and the receipt of rent after the suit in ejectment is referred to.

7. The leading decision in England is Jones v. Carter, (1846) 15 M & W 718, in which it was held that, if a lessor brought an action in ejectment that was an unequivocal act and that the receipt of rent after the action in ejectment could not operate to revive the lease; the statement of the law by Lord Wensleydale in that case has been uniformly followed in all the subsequent cases. In Grimwood v. Moss, (1872) 7 CP 360, the question arose whether after the commencement of the action in ejectment the lessors were entitled to distrain for rent which subsequently accrued due. It was held that the action in ejectment was irrevocable and could not be retracted. Willes, J., after referring to (1846) 15 M & W 718, put the matter thus at p. 364:

"It is an act unequivocal in the sense that it asserts the right of possession upon every ground that may turn out to be available to the party claiming to re-enter..... In my opinion, the subsequent distress can make no difference."

I may next refer to the decision in Evans v. Enever, (1920) 2 KB 315, in which the principle in (1872) 7 CP 360 was applied. In that case the lease contained a proviso for re-entry if the lessee became bankrupt. In July, 1918, the lessee was adjudged bankrupt and in January, 1919, the lessor took out a specially indorsed writ claiming possession of the premises for forfeiture for non-payment of rent. Taking advantage of Section 212 of the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852, the defendant paid the rent and costs to the plaintiff and the proceedings came to an end. In the following May the plaintiff sued the defendant for possession claiming that the lease was forfeited by reason of the defendant's bankruptcy. It was held that, notwithstanding that the rent which was paid to the plaintiff in the first action, had accrued due subsequent to the date of the adjudication, its acceptance by the plaintiffs did not operate as a waiver of the forfeiture. Lord Coleridge, J., observes as follows (at p. 320):—

"That is well-recognized law which has never been disputed. But there is a series of cases which establish that if an action is brought for recovery of possession for breaches of covenants in the lease that is an irrevocable election to determine the lease, and that no subsequent acts of the plaintiff can be relied on as qualifying that position."

8. There is no need to refer to the other decisions and it is sufficient to refer to the decision in Civil Service Co-operative Society v. McGrigor's Trustee, (1923) 2 Ch 347. In that case, after the bankruptcy of the lessee, the lessors served on the debtors and the trustee in bankruptcy a notice of writ exercising the right of re-entry, and subsequently the lessors made a demand for and accepted the rent which had accrued due. It was held that the demand for and acceptance of rent accrued due after the issue of the writ did not operate as a waiver of the forfeiture. Russell, J. (at p. 357), referred to the case and pointed out the distinction between the demand for and acceptance of rent simpliciter and the issue of and the commencement of a writ or legal proceeding in ejectment, the latter case constituting the final election of the landlord to determine the tenancy. Reference may be made to the following observations (at p. 358):—

"Neither of those cases touches the real question, namely, whether the issue and service of writ in ejectment is such a final election by the landlord to determine the tenancy that a subsequent receipt of rent is no waiver of the forfeiture. In my opinion, the authorities establish that this is so. In (1846) 15 M & W 718, Parke, B., held that after ejectment brought, there being no evidence of actual re-entry by the landlord, the landlord could not sue for rent; and he cites with approval a decision of Lord Tenterden that the receipt of rent after ejectment brought for a forfeiture was no waiver of such forfeiture: Doe v. Meux, (1824) 1 Car and P 346. To the same effect is the case of (1872) LR 7 CP 360, where it is definitely stated that the bringing of an ejectment action is an irrevocable election to determine the tenancy; see also Rex v. Paulson, (1921) 1 AC 271 and Evans v. Enever, (1920) 2 KB 315. I adopt the words of Lord Coleridge, J., in (1920) 2 KB 315, when he says: "There is a series of cases which establish that if an action is brought for recovery of possession for breaches of covenants in the lease that is an irrevocable election to determine the lease, and that no subsequent acts of the plaintiff can be relied on as qualifying that position."

9. In (1912) 24 Mad LJ 263, this Court followed and applied the rule enunciated in (1846) 15 M & W 718 and (1872) 7 CP 360. It was held that where a right of forfeiture had accrued to the lessor and he had elected to determine the tenancy, the election was irrevocable and the parties could not by any subsequent agreement revive the old tenancy. Wallis, C. J., observed that the framers of the Transfer of Property Act did not intend to depart from the well-established rule of English Law that, where a right of forfeiture had accrued to the lessor and if he manifested his intention to enforce the forfeiture, that was an election to determine the tenancy and the election was irrevocable.

10. Acceptance of rent which has become due since the forfeiture is regarded as waiver of forfeiture under the main operative portion of Section 112, because the acceptance of rent is an affirmation that the lease was subsisting at the time when the rent became due after the forfeiture. But this acceptance of rent, after the suit in ejectment is filed, is not regarded as a waiver, because, once the matter has come to the Court, the election has become irrevocable. The only thing necessary under the second proviso is that there must be an unequivocal demand or possession in a proceeding instituted in the Court.

11. Though it is not strictly necessary in the instant case, I may, however, observe that the principle of (1846) 15 M & W 718 that once an election has been made and the lease determined the election is irrevocable, would apply even when the election is not followed by a suit in ejectment and if the lessor had merely given a notice in writing of his intention to determine the lease as provided in Section 111 (g). If rent is subsequently received by the lessor, the rights of the parties will have to be determined in accordance with the provisions of Section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act. The determination of the lease referred to in S. 116 will certainly include the determination of the lease as a result of the lessor electing to take advantage of the forfeiture and determining the lease by giving notice in writing under Section 111 (g). Once the lease is determined by the issue of the requisite notice, a contractual relationship thereafter can arise only with the consent of both the parties. The irrevocable character of the election must follow in either case. On juristic principles, I cannot see any difference between the determination of the lease under Section 111 (g) as a result of the issue of the requisite notice after forfeiture and the determination of the lease under Section 111 (g). Logically speaking, the acceptance of rent referred to in the opening words of Section 112 must be acceptance of rent before the lessor issues the notice in writing, determining the lease, under Section 111 (g). As in the instant case, a suit in ejectment has been instituted, it is unnecessary to pursue that aspect further.

12. I shall next consider the scope of Section 113, i.e., the receipt of rent by the landlord accruing due subsequent to the notice determining the lease followed by a suit in ejectment. The plain language of Section 113 indicates that a waiver does not ipso facto result from any act of omission or commission on the part of the lessor, but the act must be such as clear evidence of the lessor's intention to treat the lease as subsisting. It is the intention of the lessor to treat the lease as subsisting which is the predominant and deciding factor in bringing about a waiver and not any particular act by itself. Illustration (a) must, therefore, be understood and applied in consonance with the principle underlying the section with due reference to the intention of the lessor. There is no warrant for the view that mere receipt of rent, whatever may be the intention of the lessor, should of its own force, divorced from the circumstances of the case be regarded as amounting to a waiver. Illustrations are useful aids to construction and for securing the proper meaning of the section, but they cannot control the plain meaning of the section; see Koylash Chunder Ghose v. Sonatun Chung Barooie, (1881) ILR 7 Cal 132. Illustrations appended to sections of a statute are useful to show how sections may operate and are of relevance and value in construing the text. They should only be rejected as repugnant to the section as the last resort of construction: vide Maxwell on Statutes, p. 43: Mohamed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark, LR (1916) 2 AC 575 at 581 and Jumma Masjid v. Kodimaniandra Deviah, (1962) 2 SCJ 303; (1962) 2 MLJ (SC) 90; (1962) 2 AnWR (SC) 90; AIR 1962 SC 847 at 851. I do not see any repugnancy between the operative portion of Section 113 and the Illustration (a) as there is no difficulty in understanding the Illustration in consonance with the section. The context in which a particular act is referred to in Section 113 shows that the rent should be received at such time and in such manner as to be equivalent to the landlord assenting to the lessee continuing in possession. The receipt of rent may only create a presumption and cannot by its own force amount to a waiver. Section 113 consists of two limbs: (a) the express or implied consent of the person to whom notice is given and (b) "the act of the person giving the notice showing the intention to treat the lease as subsisting". In order to constitute a waiver, both the limbs must concurrently operate, which means, that an act by itself and of its own force, without reference to the intention of the parties, cannot bring about a waiver. So much is quite clear from the plain language of the section, which en-bodies the basic principles, and I find no justification for reading the Illustrations as being repugnant to the section. Every effort should be made to interpret the Illustration in conformity with the main section. The principle underlying Section 116 of the Act will also apply in applying Section 113 as this is also a case of continuance of the lease restoring the old tenancy. The English law regards the effect of waiver as creating a new tenancy, but the language of Section 113 points to a restoration of the old tenancy. As observed earlier, this is really a distinction without difference because, in either case the essential point to be considered is whether the other party is continuing in the relationship of a lessee, either under the old lease restored, or under a new tenancy, subject to the same terms and conditions of the prior lease, as specified in Section 116. It is in this connection that reference must be made to the following observations of the Supreme Court in Karnani Industrial Bank Ltd. v. Province of Bengal, (1951) SCJ 407: (1951) SCR 560: AIR 1951 SC 285:

"There can be no question of the lessee 'continuing in possession' until the lease has expired, and the context in which the provision for acceptance of rent finds a place clearly shows that what is contemplated is that the payment of rent and its acceptance should be made 'at such a time and in such a manner as to be equivalent to the landlord assenting to the lessee continuing in possession'."

13. I may also add that the marginal note "waiver of notice to quit" and the language employed in Section 113 that "the notice is waived", are not happy and that what really happens is virtually the creation of a new tenancy on the old terms and not a revival or restoration of the old tenancy. Viewed in this light, there is no difference between the Indian and English law. The expression "waiver of notice to quit" has been used in the section rather loosely, taking the expression from some of the decisions in England. I may refer to the following statement in Radman's Law of Landlord and Tenant (13th Edn., p. 528, Section 390) to show that the use of the expression "waiver of notice to quit" after the determination of the lease by such notice is not technically correct:

"Effect of withdrawal.—A notice to quit may be withdrawn or abandoned during its currency; or the right to enforce it may be waived, either expressly or by implication, before it has expired, but no withdrawal, abandonment or waiver is effectual without the consent of the party to whom the notice is given."

"It has been held that a withdrawal of the notice by consent during its currency does not nullify the notice, but operates as evidence of an agreement for a new tenancy to take effect on the determination of the old. Where the notice has expired,

'it is technically wrong to speak of the waiver though this convenient expression is commonly used'. If the relationship of landlord and tenant continues thereafter 'it is by agreement between the parties' constituting a new tenancy, 'since the old tenancy is already at an end.'"

14. An examination of the cases, which have dealt with the scope of Section 113, read with Illustration (a) thereto, shows that the preponderance of the weight of authority is that in addition to the receipt of rent by the landlord there should be proof that the receipt was with the intention to treat the lease as subsisting. According to the decisions, there should be either an express contract or conduct of the parties justifying the inference that, after the determination of the contractual tenancy, the landlord's intention was that the occupation of the premises was as a tenant. Whether the conduct of the party justified such an inference would undoubtedly turn upon the facts and circumstances of each case.

15. In this connection I may refer to the following observations of Lord Greene, M. R. in Booker v. Palmer, (1942) 2 All ER 674:

"To suggest there is an intention there to create a relationship of landlord and tenant appears to me to be quite impossible. There is one golden rule which is of very general application, namely, that the law does not impute intention to enter into legal relationship where the circumstances and conduct of the parties negative any intention of the kind. It seems to me that this is a clear example of the application of that rule."

16. In the instant case it is impossible to attribute to the owner the intention either to continue the relationship of landlord and tenant or to create a new tenancy. The writ proceedings initiated by the tenant questioning the legality of the order of the Government; the hot contest made by the landlord therein and the landlord filing a suit immediately after the order of exemption passed by the Government completely repeal any notion of the relationship of landlord and tenant.

17. The circumstance that in the receipts issued by the owner, the word 'rent' is used is not decisive of the question.

18. In this connection, reference may be made to the latest decision of the Supreme Court in Ramamurthy Subudhi v. Gopinath, (1968) 2 SCJ 528: AIR 1968 SC 919. That case dealt with the question whether the relationship between the parties was that of landlord and tenant or that of licensor or licensee. In that case, the suit in ejectment, after the termination of the tenancy, was compromised, under which it is specifically provided that the tenant should vacate the house in question after a period of five years and that he should pay all arrears of rent claimed in the suit and also pay future rent promptly with a condition that, if the tenant committed default to pay rent for three consecutive months, the landlord would be entitled to obtain possession of the house. The question arose whether this compromise created a relationship of landlord and tenant so as to attract the provisions of the Orissa House Rent Control Act. In determining the intention of the parties, the Supreme Court pointed out that the fact that the owner had brought the suit in ejectment was an important circumstance in the view that when the landlord had brought the suit his intention was manifest that he was keen about ejecting the lessee after having terminated the tenancy, and it was difficult to impute thereafter an intention to the lessor to create a fresh tenancy. Commenting upon the use of the word 'rent' in the memorandum of compromise, the Supreme Court observed:

"Coming to the terms of the compromise, it is true as stressed by the learned counsel for the respondent that the word 'rent' has been used, but the word 'rent' is not conclusive for, as observed by this Court in State of Punjab v. British India Corporation Ltd., (1964) 1 SCJ 571: (1964) 2 SCR 114 at p. 123: AIR 1963 SC 1459 at p. 1463, in its wider sense rent means any payment made for the use of land or buildings and thus includes the payment by a licensee in respect of the use and occupation of any land or building. In its narrower sense it means payment made by tenant to landlord for property demised to him."

The principle of this decision completely governs the instant case, both on the question of the effect of the suit in ejectment and the effect of the receipts passed using the word 'rent'.

19. I shall next refer to another recent decision of the Supreme Court, in (1968) 2 Andh WR (SC) 42: (1968) 2 SCJ 291: (1968) 2 Mad LJ (SC) 42 = (AIR 1968 SC 471). In that decision, too, the Supreme Court pointed out that under Section 113 of the Transfer of Property Act the act which operates as a waiver must show an intention to treat the lease as subsisting and other party's consent, express or implied therefor. In that case the tenants, who were holding over, issued, on 12th August, 1953, a notice to the landlord of their intention to vacate the premises on 31st August, 1953. But by their letter, dated 26th August they withdrew that notice. The landlord did not agree to the withdrawal of the notice and insisted that the lease had been determined under Section 111(h) of the Transfer of Property Act. Dealing with the question of waiver, the Supreme Court observed as follows:—

"Clearly Section 113 contemplates waiver of the notice by any act on the part of the person giving it, if such an act shows an intention to treat the lease as subsisting and the other party gives his consent...express or implied therefor. The law under the Transfer of Property Act on the question in hand is not different from the law in England. Once a notice is served determining the tenancy or showing an intention to quit on the expiry of the period of the notice, the tenancy is at an end, unless with the consent of the other party to whom the notice is given the tenancy is agreed to be treated as subsisting."

20. Reference may also be made to the decision in Clarke v. Grant, (1949) 1 All ER 768, in which after valid notice to terminate the lease the agent of the landlord accepted the rent in the mistaken belief that it was for a period prior to the notice, determining the lease. It was held that it did not amount to waiver. It is true that the mistake on the part of the agent when he received the rent is an important distinguishing feature, of that case but what is relevant is the perspective of approach of Lord Goddard, C.J., as to the consequence of the receipt of rent. The distinction between the receipt of rent in the case of a forfeiture before determining the lease and the receipt of rent after the determination of the lease was pointed out in these terms:

"If one may say so with respect to the learned Deputy Judge, he fell into the error of confusing an acceptance of rent after a notice to quit with an acceptance of rent after notice that an act of forfeiture has been committed. If a landlord seeks to recover possession of property on the ground that breach of covenant has entitled him to a forfeiture, it has always been held that acceptance of rent after notice waives the forfeiture, the reason being that in the case of a forfeiture the landlord has the option of saying whether or not he will treat the breach of covenant as a forfeiture. The lease is voidable, not void, and if the landlord accepts rent after notice of a forfeiture it has always been held that he thereby acknowledges or recognises that the lease is continuing. With regard to the payment of rent after a notice to quit, however that result has never followed. If a proper notice to quit has been given in respect of a periodic tenancy, such as a yearly tenancy, the effect of the notice is to bring the tenancy to an end just as effectually as if there has been a term which has expired. Therefore, the tenancy having been brought to an end by a notice to quit, a payment of rent after the termination of the tenancy would only operate in favour of the tenant if it could be shown that the parties intended that there should be a new tenancy."

That has been the law ever since it was laid down by the Court of King's Bench in Doe d. Cheny v. Batten, (1775) 1 Cowp 243, where Lord Mansfield said:

"The question therefore is, quo animo the rent was received, and what the real intention of both parties was?"

It is impossible to say that the parties in this case intended that there should be a new tenancy. The landlord always desired to get possession of the premises. That is why he gave his notice to quit. The mere mistake of his agent in accepting the money as rent which had accrued is no evidence that the landlord was agreeing to a new tenancy."

21. In the instant case there can be no doubt, that quo animo when the rent was received during the pendency of the suit was not to have the relationship of landlord and tenant.

22. I may next refer to the Bench decision of the Bombay High Court in Navnital v. Baburao, AIR 1945 Bom 132. In that case, the Rent Court released the house for the personal use of the landlord and he filed a suit in ejectment after serving upon the tenant the requisite notice to quit. The tenant sent a cheque expressly stating as rent but the landlord in the receipt, noted that he received it as compensation for use and occupation. On behalf of the tenant emphasis was laid on the absence of a proviso in Section 113 of the Transfer of Property Act corresponding to the second proviso to Section 112. But this argument was not accepted and the Bench held that the test in all these cases is the intention at the time when the payment is received, i.e., was the act of the landlord one from which one can impute the intention of creating a renewal of tenancy. Stone, C.J., pointed out that in the case of acceptance of rent subsequent to the notice to quit by the landlord is inaccurately referred to as the waiver of a notice to quit but that the correct view is that it is the creation of a new agreement. The decision of Buckland, J., in AIR 1926 Cal 763 was referred to but not followed. Kania, J. (as he then was), who delivered a concurring judgment and observed that in the matter of effect of acceptance of rent after notice to quit, there was no difference between the Indian Law, i.e., the provision in Section 113 of the Transfer of Property Act, and the English Law. The learned Judge also rejected the argument that by reason of the absence of a proviso in Section 113, the Legislature should be deemed to have made a departure from Section 112; it was also pointed out that the phraseology of Section 113 is not strictly accurate. That receipt of rent cannot be separated and divorced from the intention to treat the lease as subsisting was pointed out in these terms:—

"In my opinion, this line of argument is faulty, because it attempts to split the provision of Section 113 in two parts. It is an attempt to read in Section 113 the words 'by acceptance of rent' as an act resulting absolutely in the waiver of the notice to quit, irrespective of the question whether there was an intention to treat the lease as subsisting or not."

I may also add that the relevant discussion in this Bench decision of the Bombay High Court, attention is focussed mainly on the question of the effect of receipt and not on the note made by the landlord that the receipt of the money was as compensation. Even the recital, whether as rent or "as compensation" is not decisive in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in (1968) 2 SCJ 528: AIR 1968 SC 919, referred to earlier.

23. Reference must next be made to the decision in Kamlapat Sahai v. Mt. Manho Bibi, AIR 1948 Oudh 127. In this case the landlord instituted a suit in ejectment and obtained a decree. The question arose whether payment of rent in pursuance of an arrangement in the appellate Court in the matter of stay of execution amounted to waiver when payments were received as rent. The decision in AIR 1926 Cal 763 was referred to and dissented. Kidwai, J., delivering the judgment observed that once the suit has been instituted it cannot possibly be said that the lessor had manifested the intention that the lease was subsisting. It was observed that the word "rent" was misused in the receipt and would not indicate that notice to quit had been waived. The importance of this decision is that when a landlord and the tenant have been engaged in a serious fight in Court proceedings asserting rival contentions, it was impossible in that background to impute to the lessor an intention to treat the lease as subsisting. The principle of this decision directly applies to the instant case.

24. In Ilahibux v. Munir Khan, AIR 1953 Nag 219, in which the facts were similar, the same view was taken observing that the test was, if the tenant had insisted upon withdrawal of the suit in ejectment treating the relationship of landlord and tenant as subsisting, would the landlord have agreed. It was observed that the act of the landlord ought, in the light of the circumstances in the case, lead to the irresistible conclusion that he had given up the rights asserted by him in the proceedings and that when parties are litigating their rights in Court those rights could not be affected except by an express contract between them to the effect that the rights asserted in the suit by the plaintiff and denied by the defendant had been adjusted either out of Court or through the intervention of the Court.

25. I may now refer to the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Mahadeo Prasad v. Sulekha Sarkar, AIR 1954 Cal 404, in which the view of Buckland J., was not followed. In that case the landlord after a valid notice to quit brought a suit and obtained a decree in ejectment, the tenant's claim for protection under the Rent Control Law having been negatived. During the pendency of the appeal by the tenant, the landlord accepted rent from the tenant who desired to be relieved from the bother of depositing the rent under the procedure provided in the Rent Control Act. It was held that under the circumstances, payment and acceptance of rent was not with the intention of renewing or reviving or continuing the old tenancy or creating a new one. It was also held that independently of the representation of the tenant that he made the payment to the landlord merely as a matter of convenience the legal position was the same and there was no waiver as there was not the requisite consensus ad idem to treat the lease as subsisting. With regard to Illustration (a) to Sec. 113, it was pointed out that it is only in the absence of any indication pointing reasonably to a contrary intention that the acceptance of rent would amount to waiver. In this decision the decision of Buckland J., in AIR 1926 Cal 763 was not only referred to but the criticism of Stone, C.J., in AIR 1945 Bom 132 was also referred to with approval. This decision clearly emphasises that the fundamental principle in the doctrine of waiver is the intention of relinquishment of a known right, and that an act by itself would not amount to waiver. This decision was followed and approved in a Bench decision reported in the same volume in Panchanan v. Haridas, AIR 1954 Cal 460, in which also the decision of Buckland J., in AIR 1926 Cal 763 was referred to and dissented. In that case, after notice to quit, the payment of rent was made and received. The tenant made the payment in pursuance of the Rent Control Act and the landlord received it. The Bench pointed out that mere acceptance of rent was not decisive but the intention was the important factor and the circumstance that it was paid under the provisions of the Rent Control Act, leaving no option to the landlord repelled any intention on his part, to treat the lease as subsisting. The point to be noticed in this decision and other decisions where payments were made and received under the Rent Control Act is that those decisions emphasise that the governing factor is the intention and not mere receipt, divorced from the other circumstances of the case. The Bench pointed out that it is for the tenant to establish that there was an intention to treat the lease as subsisting and that the circumstance under which the rent was paid and received was the important consideration and not the mere payment.

26. In Pullin Behari v. Miss Lila Dey, AIR 1957 Cal 627, the same view was taken and the decision in AIR 1954 Cal 404 was approved and followed. While referring to this decision, I may add that there are observations in that judgment that there is some difference between the English Law and the Indian Law in view of the language employed in Section 113 of the Transfer of Property Act, which I have already indicated is not quite happy. That apart, the recent decisions of the Supreme Court in (1968) 2 SCJ 528: AIR 1968 SC 919 and (1968) 2 Mad LJ (SC) 42: (1968) 2 AndhWR (SC) 42: (1968) 2 SCJ 291 = (AIR 1968 SC 471) have made it clear that Section 113 of the Transfer of Property Act there is really no difference between Indian and English Law.

27. In Moti Lal v. Basant Lal, AIR 1956 All 175, it was held that no question of waiver arises after the landlord has brought a suit after issuing a valid notice determining the lease. It was observed as follows:—

"As will appear from the language of Section 113, a waiver can be brought about by the action of the landlord if after determining the tenancy by notice the landlord chooses to accept the rent again from the tenant. In such an event under Section 113 of the Transfer of Property Act, a notice for determination of the lease already given by the landlord to the tenant will be deemed to have been waived. No question of waiver arises after the landlord has brought a suit on the basis of a valid notice given for determination of the lease. After such a suit has been brought, there can be no waiver, though it is always open to a landlord to renew the lease at any time he pleases. I do not, therefore, think that any question of waiver arises in this case."

28. In Harbhajan Singh v. Munshi Ram, AIR 1956 Punj 246, the same view was taken emphasising that the question of waiver is one of intention and that mere acceptance of rent after the expiration of the notice to quit is not in itself a waiver but that it is merely a circumstance which will have to be considered along with other facts of the case bearing upon the question of intention of the lessor. The circumstances relied upon in that case repelling any inference of waiver was, the Court proceedings instituted by the landlord to recover possession.

29. The Patna High Court also has taken the same view in Zaffar Hussain v. Mahabir Prasad, AIR 1957 Pat 206, that acceptance of rent by the landlord after the issue of notice to quit by itself would not constitute waiver and that there must be evidence of consensus ad idem between the parties to continue their relationship as creating a new tenancy. The view taken by the earlier Bench decision of the same High Court in Wali Ahmad v. Mt. Hussaini, AIR 1917 Pat 469 was followed. In AIR 1957 Pat 206, the notice to quit was given on 11th January, 1954, and application for eviction was filed in June, 1954, the complaint of the landlord being that the tenant defaulted to pay rent from November, 1953 to May, 1954, and the question was whether the claim for rent for the period subsequent to the termination of the lease by notice to quit amounted to waiver. The Bench held that it must be shown by independent evidence that the landlord has attempted to continue the relationship of landlord and tenant and that in the absence of such evidence, a mere claim for rent would not be sufficient. In the earlier case in AIR 1917 Pat 469, the Bench had held that the institution of a suit in ejectment is an unequivocal declaration of an intention to determine the tenancy and the inclusion of a claim for rent in such a suit should not be held to be a waiver, but the claim for rent must be understood as a claim for damages for wrongful occupation. In Puran

Mal v. Onkar Nath, AIR 1959 Pat 128, notice to quit was given by the landlord on 1st June, 1946, and a suit in ejectment was filed in November, 1946, in which there was also a claim for arrears of rent from February, 1946, up to the date of suit and future profits. A second suit for the same relief was filed in December, 1949, claiming arrears of rent from December, 1946 to November, 1949. Both the suits in which there was a denial of title were decreed. In the High Court, the plaintiff was permitted to amend the plaint deleting the claim for rent. On behalf of the tenant, an argument was advanced that, notwithstanding the deletion of the prayer for recovery of rent, the landlord must be deemed to have waived in view of his having previously claimed rent in both the suits for the period subsequent to the notice to quit. The Bench held that the question of waiver was essentially a question of intention and the action of the landlord should manifest an intention to keep the lease still subsisting. The matter was stated thus:

"Further, as will appear from the above, the question whether or not there was waiver of notice to quit is purely a question of intention of the parties. It is quite manifest from the provisions of Section 113 that in order to constitute waiver there must be an intention not only on the part of the lessor but also on the lessee to treat the lease as subsisting. In order, therefore, to determine whether or not in a particular case there was waiver of notice to quit one has to see whether from the contract of the landlord and tenant, by demand and acceptance of rent or by demand followed by express promise to pay, or otherwise an intention to treat the lease as subsisting can be inferred, and this would certainly depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case.

When it is question of intention it is plain that not even the payment and acceptance of rent by the landlord after the notice to quit, much less a mere demand of rent, necessarily waives the notice. The question under Section 113 is whether the act of landlord, manifested either by acceptance of rent or by demand of rent, is such as necessarily leads to the inference that there was an intention of creating a renewal of the tenancy or as treating the tenancy, as still subsisting. Therefore, neither the acceptance of rent nor the demand of rent is conclusive on the question of waiver. It is a question of fact to be determined in each case."

30. I may next refer to the decision of the Single Judge in Ram Dayal v. Jawala Prasad, AIR 1966 All 623, where during the pendency of the suit in ejectment, the landlord received rent from the tenant and the learned Judge referred to and followed the decision of Buckland, J., in AIR 1926 Cal 763, taking the view that the mere act of receiving the rent was sufficient to constitute waiver though such a receipt was made during the pendency of the suit. There is no reference to any other decision and discussion. With respect, I am of the view that this decision is not of much assistance as a precedent.

31. Learned Counsel for the appellant relied upon the Bench decision in Kapur Chand v. Kanji, (1959) 1 Andh WR 143 = AIR 1959 Andh Pra 346, of the Andhra Pradesh High Court where the landlord has received rent from the tenant after notice to quit. There, before the matter came to the High Court, there was a remand earlier and on remand the lower appellate Court had found on the evidence that the landlord accepted the rent for several months after the notice to quit with the intention of treating the lease as subsisting. On this finding, if I may say so, it was rightly held that the landlord cannot eject the tenant. The decision in Kai Khurshroo v. Bai Jerbai, (1949) FCR 262 = (1949) FLJ 168 = AIR 1949 FC 124, turned upon the peculiar facts of that case and there was a difference of opinion, Patanjali Sastri, J., as he then was, taking a different view. There, after notice to quit, defendants 2 and 3 who claimed to be sub-tenants insisted upon continuing in possession and paid the rent month after month. The majority took the view that the landlord had obvious motive in receiving the payments of rent after a particular period i.e. the appointment of a receiver of the property of the mortgagor at the instance of his mortgagee. Having regard to the uniform view taken in all the decisions, both Indian and English, I am not inclined to interpret this decision of the Federal Court as an authority for the position that the payments and receipt of rent as such in every circumstance would amount to waiver, whatever may be the circumstances of the case and the intention of the lessor. It is significant to refer to the following observations to show the crucial distinguishing feature in that case:

"There was obviously a change when the second set of cheques were sent to the plaintiff in November, 1942. This time they were not returned to the defendants and the plaintiff kept them in his hands for some time and then sent them on to his bankers. Curiously enough this synchronizes with the appointment of a Receiver by the mortgagees who was to take possession of the house on 20th November, 1942. It may be that it was this circumstance which brought about a change in the mind of the plaintiff."

That the Supreme Court regarded the intention of the parties as important is clear from the decision in (1951) SCJ 407 = (1951) SCR 560 = AIR 1951 SC 285, already referred to, in which the Supreme Court has adverted to the significance of the context in which the payment was made and received. In the decision of the Federal Court emphasis was laid that when the tenant made the payment, he used the word 'rent' in the letter which accompanied the cheque. In the latest decision of the Supreme Court already referred to in (1968) 2 SCJ 528 = AIR 1968 SC 919, the Supreme Court had observed that the use of the word 'rent' was not conclusive. For all these reasons I am of the view that the decision of the Federal Court in Kapadia's case, (1949) FLJ 168 = (1949) FCR 262 = AIR 1949 FC 124 must be restricted to the facts of that case and not laying down a general proposition contrary to the plain language in Section 113 of the Transfer of Property Act in which the intention to treat the lease as subsisting is clearly emphasised. I may also add that in Abdul Jameel v. M/s. Simson and Machonochy Ltd., (1967) 1 Mad LJ 837, I have held that if a contractual tenancy comes to an end by efflux of time and if the tenant continues in possession and the landlord accepts the rent after such expiration that will not afford ground for holding that the landlord has assented to a new contractual tenancy. The observations of the Supreme Court in Ganga Dutt v. Kartik Chandra Das, (1961) 3 SCR 813 = (1962) 2 Mad LJ (SC) 161 = (1962) 2 Andh WR (SC) 161 = (1962) 2 SCJ 584 = AIR 1961 SC 1067 at p. 1070, as extracted in the above decision would show that the Supreme Court was already of the view that after the determination of the tenancy, possession of the tenant must be in pursuance of any contract, express or implied, thereby emphasising that the paramount consideration is the intention of the parties concerned and not any physical act of omission or commission.

32. The result is the second appeal is dismissed with costs. No leave.

T. Govindarajulu, for Petitioner; V. Sureshan, for Respondents.

ORDER: This petition is filed by a temporary Commissioned Officer to quash the Order of the Officer Commanding, Military Hospital, Madras dated 20-3-1967 in consequence of an order of the Ministry of Defence issued by the Director General, Armed Forces, Military Service dated 27-2-1967 terminating the services of the petitioner as a Commissioned Officer.

2. The petitioner was enrolled in the Army Medical Corps on 8-12-1953 as a Sepoy Nursing Assistant. After about 10 years of service, he was promoted in 1963 as Lance Naik; and, in 1964, as Naik. The petitioner appeared before the Service Selection Board at Kolhapur and before the Medical Board at Delhi and was selected for grant of Permanent Regular Commission in the Army Medical Corps by the Director General, Armed Forces Medical Services by his order dated 22-4-1965. The petitioner reported himself for duty on 2-5-1965. The Petitioner's Commission was gazetted in the Gazette of India on 18-2-1967. Nine days after the Commission was granted, the President of India terminated the petitioner's Commission on 27-2-1967. The termination of the Commission is stated to be under Paragraph 12 of the Army Instructions 231. The petitioner filed a review petition to the Director General, Armed Forces Medical Service on 7-3-1967, under Section 27 of the Army Act, 1950, and as the petitioner did not receive any immediate redress on his application for review, he submitted a petition on 9-3-1967 to the President of India. The petition to the President of India was rejected on 21-9-1967 and hence this Writ Petition.

3. In this petition, it is unnecessary to go into the competency or otherwise, of the petitioner to continue as a Commissioned Officer, for, the petitioner challenged the order terminating his service as not in accordance with law. Shortly put, the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner is that he being a Commissioned Officer, is governed by the Army Act and any dismissal and the termination of his service can only be under Section 19 of the Act, i.e. subject to the provisions of the Army Act and the Rules and Regulations made thereunder. On behalf of the Central Government, it is submitted that the petitioner was appointed as a Commissioned Officer under the Army Instructions and as he was only a temporary Commissioned Officer, he was governed by Army Instructions dated 20th October, 1962, paragraph 12, which provides that if an officer, during the probationary period, is reported as unsuitable to retain his Commission, it will be terminated at any time during or after the probationary period. In order to appreciate the contention of the learned counsel, it is necessary to refer to the relevant provisions of the Act, the Rules and the Army Instructions.

Therefore, I am unable to accept the contention of the respondent. If the tender or delivery to the party is shown as impracticable, it is open to the Landlord to adopt the procedure of affixture.

10. In this case, from the several notices that have come back to the petitioner for the reasons already mentioned and the previous conduct of the tenant in connection with the notice of attornment, it would not be unreasonable for the landlord to proceed on the basis that it is not practicable to tender or deliver notice personally to the tenant. This is enough to justify the conclusion that by affixing of the notice on a conspicuous part of the property, there has been due service of the notice.

11. Quite apart from what I have stated with regard to the service of registered notice or affixation of the notice on a conspicuous part of the premises, it is enough to hold that in this case, there has been due service of notice by virtue of the fact that the notice has been sent by post under "certificate of posting" and the presumption arises under S. 114 (f) of the Indian Evidence Act that the letter has been duly delivered to the addressee as the letter has been addressed to the residential address of the respondent tenant.

12. For these reasons, I find no substance in the contention of the respondent and allow this revision petition with costs.

13. The respondent-tenant is directed to vacate and deliver possession of the premises to the petitioner within three months from this date.

Petition allowed.

Shivashankar, for Appellants; K. R. D. Karanth, for Respondents.

CHANDRASHEKHAR, J.:— This is an appeal from the judgment and decree in Original Petition (L. A. C.) No. 76 of 1951 on the file of the Subordinate Judge of South Kanara. That petition arose on a reference under Section 30 of the Land Acquisition Act, for apportionment among the claimants of the compensation awarded for acquiring 79 cents of land in T. S. No. 265 in Mangalore Town. The learned Subordinate Judge held that respondents-claimants 11 to 18 were solely entitled to the entire compensation. Feeling aggrieved by that decision, claimants 2, 4 to 7 and 19 have preferred this appeal impleading Claimants 11 to 18 as respondents.

2. At the hearing of the appeal Mr. K. R. D. Karanth, learned counsel for respondents, raised the following two preliminary objections to the appeal:

- (i) The appeal is barred by the principle of res judicata, as the appellants did not appeal from the decree in the suit which was decided along with the Original Petition by a common judgment; and
- (ii) The entire appeal abated on the death of appellant No. 5, Vedavathi, whose legal representatives have not been brought on record.

3. Before going into the merits of the appeal, it is necessary to consider these two preliminary objections because, if either of them is upheld, the appeal must fail and it would be unnecessary to go into the merits of the appeal.

4. Mr. K. Shivashankar Bhat, learned counsel for the appellants, and Mr. Karanth addressed elaborate arguments on these preliminary objections.

5. We shall now consider the first preliminary objection. It is common ground that in the Original Petition and in the Original Suit the parties are common and the main issues are also common. Those issues relate to the title to the suit land which was acquired. The apportionment of the compensation for this land is the subject matter of the Original Petition. Though there was a common judgment in these two proceedings, there were two separate decrees, one in the Original Suit and the other in the Original Petition. The appellants have not preferred any appeal from the decree in the Original Suit, which is against them.

6. Mr. Karanth, argued that the decree in the Original Suit, against which no appeal has been filed, has become final and operates as res judicata in regard to the present appeal and hence the present appeal is barred and should be dismissed in limine.

7. As stated by the Supreme Court in Raja Lakshmi Dasi v. Banamali Sen, AIR 1953 SC 33 the principles underlying Section 11, Civil P. C., are applicable even when the case does not fall within the strict terms of that Section.

8. Where two proceedings involving common issues are disposed of in one judgment and an appeal is filed against the decree in one and not in the other, the question whether the matter decided in the latter proceedings, becomes res judicata so that it cannot be reopened in the appeal, is one on which there is no decision of this Court (the High Court of the New State of Mysore). On this question there is a conflict of decisions of different High Courts. Each learned counsel referred to certain observations of the Supreme Court as supporting his respective contention.

9. Mr. Shivashankar Bhat, strongly relied on the observations of the Supreme Court in Narhari v. Shanker, AIR 1953 SC 419. There, the plaintiffs claimed 1/3 of certain properties from one set of defendants, i.e., defendants 1 to 4 and another 1/3 from another set of defendants, i.e., defendants 5 to 8. The trial Court decreed the suit. Each set of defendants filed a separate appeal claiming 1/3 of the properties. The first Appellate Court allowed both the appeals and dismissed the plaintiff's suit by one judgment and ordered a copy of the judgment to be placed in the file of the other connected appeal. The plaintiffs thereafter brought before the High Court two appeals one against the decree in the appeal filed by defendants 1 to 4 and the other, against the decree in the appeal filed by defendants 5 to 8. In the former appeal the plaintiffs had impleaded as respondents all the defendants and had paid the full court-fee necessary for an appeal against the dismissal of the entire suit. The plaintiff's prayer covered both the appeals. The latter appeal was dismissed by the High Court as being filed beyond limitation.

10. At the hearing of the former appeal, it was contended by the respondents therein that it was barred by the principle of res judicata on account of the dismissal of the latter appeal. The High Court upheld that contention and dismissed the former appeal also on the ground that the judgment in the latter appeal operated as 'res judicata.'

11. Against the decisions of the High Court the plaintiffs then filed two appeals which ultimately came up before the Supreme Court. Reversing the decrees of the High Court this is what the Supreme Court said at page 420:—

"It is now well settled that where there has been one trial, one finding, and one decision, there need not be two appeals even though two decrees may have been drawn up. As has been observed by Tek Chand, J. in his learned Judgment in AIR 1927 Lah 289, mentioned above, the determining factor is not the decree but the matter in controversy.

As he puts it later in his judgment, the estoppel is not created by the decree but it can only be created by the judgment. The question of res judicata arises only when there are two suits. Even when there are two suits, it has been held that a decision given simultaneously cannot be a decision in the former suit. When there is only one suit, the question of res judicata does not arise at all and in the present case, both the decrees are in the same case and based on the same judgment, and the matter decided concerned the entire suit. As such, there is no question of the application of the principle of res judicata. The same judgment cannot remain effective just because it was appealed against with a different number or copy of it was attached to a different appeal. The two decrees in substance are one"

12. Relying on the above observations Mr. Shivashankar Bhat urged that the bar of res judicata is not created by the decree, but by an earlier judgment, and that even where there are two suits, a decision simultaneously cannot be a decision in the former suit. Mr. Shivashankar Bhat also argued that though in the present case there were two decrees, one in the Original Suit, and another, in the Original Petition, the two decrees were in substance only one.

13. The aforesaid observations in Narhari's case, AIR 1953 SC 419 have been explained by the Supreme Court in a later decision, Badri Narayan v. Kamdeo Prasad, AIR 1962 SC 338 at pp. 340 and 341. The Supreme Court pointed out that in Narhari's case, AIR 1953 SC 419 the first appeal was really a consolidated appeal against the decrees in both the appeals and could have been split up for the purposes of record into two separate appeals, and that it does not mean whenever there be more than one appeal arising out of one suit, only one appeal is competent against the order in any of those appeals irrespective of the fact whether the issues for decision in those appeals were all common or some were common and others raised different points for determination. The Supreme Court also pointed out that the decision in Narhari's case, AIR 1953 SC 419, does not apply to cases which are governed by the general principles of res judicata and not by Section 11 C. P. C.

14. We think Narhari's case, AIR 1953 SC 419 is distinguishable on facts from the present case, and the observations in Narhari's case, AIR 1953 SC 419 are applicable only when there is one suit which gives rise to two appeals. But in the present case there were two proceedings, one a suit, and another a reference under Section 30 of the Land Acquisition Act. Since both these proceedings are not suits, what applies is not Section 11, Civil P. C., but the general principles of res judicata.

15. Mr. Shivashankar Bhat next referred to certain observations in Daryao v. State of U. P., AIR 1961 SC 1457 at p. 1466. Gajendragadkar, J., (he then was) who spoke for the Court, said that if the petition filed in the High Court under Art. 226 of the Constitution is dismissed not on the merits, but because of the laches of the party applying for the writ or because it is held that the party had an alternative remedy available to him, then the dismissal of the writ petition would not constitute a bar to a subsequent petition under Art. 32 except in cases where and if the facts thus found by the High Court may themselves be relevant even under Art. 32.

16. The above observations were made while considering as to when a decision of the High Court in a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution, may operate as res judicata so as to bar a subsequent petition before the Supreme Court under Art. 32. The above observations have no application in regard to the question whether an unappealed decree pursuant to a single judgment in two suits between the same parties, will operate as res judicata in an appeal filed against the other decree (under the same judgment).

17. Mr. Karanth strongly relied on the decision of the Supreme Court in AIR 1962 SC 338.

18. There, against the decision of the Election Tribunal two appeals were presented before the High Court by the Election petitioner and the returned candidate respectively. The High Court allowed the appeal of the Election petitioner but dismissed that of the returned candidate. Thereafter the returned candidate appealed before the Supreme Court against the decision of the High Court in his Election Appeal only and not against the decision in the other Election Appeal (filed by the Election petitioner). A preliminary objection was taken before the Supreme Court that the appeal was barred by res judicata as it was not open to the appellant to question the correctness of the decision of the High Court in the other appeal which had become final.

19. Upholding the plea of res judicata, the Supreme Court said that the decision of the High Court though stated in one judgment, really amounted to two decisions and not one decision common to both the appeals, and so long as the decision of the High Court in one of the appeals stood, the appellant could not question before the Supreme Court the finding of the High Court in his appeal before the High Court as the finding in his appeal had to follow the finding in the other appeal.

20. We think, Badri Narayan's case, AIR 1962 SC 338 is distinguishable on facts from the present case. There, there were two decisions though stated in one judgment; but in the present case both in the Original Suit and the Original Petition, there was only one decision, namely, as to which of the parties had the title to the acquired land. We think the decision of the Supreme Court in Badri Narayan's case, AIR 1962 SC 338 has no application to the present case.

21. Mr. Karanth next relied on the decision of the Supreme Court in Sheodan Singh v. Daryao Kunvar, AIR 1966 SC 1332. There, the appellant had brought two suits against the respondent, while the respondent had brought two suits against the appellant. As there were common issues in these four suits, they were tried together by consent of parties and were disposed of by a common judgment. Separate decrees were prepared in each suit. The appellant filed four separate appeals against the decrees in these four suits. One of these appeals was dismissed by the High Court as being time barred, while another appeal was dismissed by the High Court on account of the appellant not applying for translation and printing of records. When the remaining two appeals came up for hearing before the High Court, the respondent pleaded that those appeals were barred by the principle of res judicata as her title to the suit property had become final on account of the dismissal of two other appeals. The Supreme Court upheld the view of the High Court which held that the decision of the trial Court which became final on account of the dismissal of two of the appeals, operated as res judicata even in respect of the remaining two appeals, and in that view those remaining two appeals also should be dismissed.

22. The above case is also distinguishable on facts from the present case inasmuch as an appeal has been filed only from the decree in the Original Petition and no appeal was filed from the decree in the Original Suit. As to whether the decree not appealed from operates as res judicata in the appeal preferred from the other decree, the Supreme Court did not express any opinion in Sheodan Singh's case, AIR 1966 SC 1332 but left it open after noticing the rival views expressed by different High Courts on this point.

23. We shall now briefly advert to the divergent views of High Courts on the question when two proceedings involving common issues are disposed of in one judgment, and an appeal is filed against the decree in one and not in the other, whether the matter decided in the latter becomes res judicata so that it cannot be reopened in appeal.

24. The Madras High Court has almost consistently taken the view that there is no bar of res judicata in such circumstances. According to the Madras High Court, where the object of the appeal is, in substance, if not in form, to get rid of the very adjudication which is put forward as constituting res judicata, that adjudication should not be held to bar the appeal: Pappammal v. Meenammal, AIR 1943 Mad 139.

25. According to Tek Chand, J., who spoke for the majority of the Full Bench of Lahore High Court in AIR 1927 Lah 289 (FB), the estoppel of res judicata is created by a verdict or a judgment and not by a decree and attention must be concentrated not upon the fact that there is a record of an outstanding decree in favour of a party, but upon the question whether there has been an independent decision upon which the record was based.

26. The most serious objection to the view that an unappealed decree does not bar the hearing of an appeal from the other decree, is that if the latter decree is reversed or modified in appeal, there would be two inconsistent decrees on the file of the Court and both those inconsistent decrees may be sought to be executed. Tek Chand, J., sought to solve this difficulty by stating that if two or more conflicting decrees happen to be passed regarding the same property, the later decision shall be taken to have superseded the earlier and thenceforward the only effective adjudication.

27. With all respect to his Lordship, it is difficult to see how a decree which is not appealed from, can be superseded by a decision in an appeal from another decree. We think the correct legal position is, if we may say so with respect, as stated by Stanley, C. J., who spoke for the Full Bench of Allahabad High Court in Zaharia v. Debia, (1911) ILR 33 All 51 at p. 60:

"A decree, unless it be a decree which is a nullity by reason of, for example, fraud, cannot be superseded except upon appeal in regular course. This being so if we accede to the argument addressed to us, we should have two inconsistent decrees on the file of the Court. This would be a most serious anomaly, and in execution proceedings would cause complete impasse."

28. In order to avoid such conflicting, confusing and anomalous results, we think the view taken by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in (1911) ILR 33 All 51 and which has been followed by the High Courts of Calcutta, Patna and Orissa, should be preferred to the view taken by the Madras High Court and a few other High Courts.

29. We must hold that the decree in the Original Suit regarding the title to the acquired land, which has not been appealed from, became final and the principle of res judicata bars the appeal from the decree in the Original Petition. In that view, it becomes unnecessary to consider the other preliminary objection whether the present appeal has abated on account of the death of Vedavathi whose legal representatives have not been brought on record.

30. In the result, this appeal is dismissed. But in the circumstances, we direct the parties to bear their own costs in this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1970 MYSORE 84 (V 57 C 21)

A. R. SOMNATH IYER, J.

Mallanna and others, Appellants v. Eramma and others, Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 190 of 1968, D/- 23-7-1969, from decree of Civil J., Raichur, D/- 23-1-1968.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 100 and 101 — Second appeal — Concurrent finding of Courts below as to agreement of sale being not genuine — Finding is one of fact — No interference. (Para 4)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 22, R. 4 — Impleading of only some of legal representatives of defendant — Suit does not abate — It continues against those impleaded against whom an effectual decision binding them can be made. (Para 8)

(C) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 62 — Self redeeming mortgage — Suit for possession — Mortgage debt already discharged — No suit for redemption of mortgage is necessary. (Para 9)

B. V. Deshpande, for Appellants; K. Jagannath Shetty, for Respondents Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

JUDGMENT:— The appellants are the defendants who were sued by the plaintiffs for possession and mesne profits with respect to a land which had been mortgaged by a certain Hanumavva who was the mother-in-law of the first plaintiff and the grand-mother of others. The case of the plaintiffs was that the mortgage was a self redeeming mortgage, and that the liability under the mortgage deed had come to an end after the expiry of the stipulated period. The defendants resisted the suit on more than one ground, but the Court of first instance overruled their defence and made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for possession and mesne profits at Rs. 200 a year.

2. From that decree there was an appeal by the defendants and a cross-objection by the plaintiffs with respect to mesne profits awarded which, according to the plaintiffs, were not sufficiently adequate. The lower appellate Court dismissed the appeal preferred by the defendants and allowed the cross-objection and enhanced the mesne profits to a sum calculated at Rs. 400 a year.

3. The defendants appeal.

4. Mr. Deshpande appearing for the defendants urged before me that the Courts below were in error in overruling the pleas raised by the defendants in their written statement. The first submission made by him was that notwithstanding the discharge of the mortgage debt after the expiry of the stipulated period, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover possession since there was an agreement of sale executed in favour of the defendants under which possession of the suit land had to continue with the defendants. But the Courts below recorded a finding that the agreement of sale produced by the defendants was not a genuine document, and, that finding being a finding on a pure question of fact is not open to discussion in this Court.

5. There is no substance in the argument advanced by Sri Deshpande that the decrees of the Courts below are contrary to law by reason of the refusal by the Court of first instance to accord permission for the examination of another hand-writing expert to elicit opinion contrary to the hand-writing expert's opinion which had been made available by the plaintiffs.

6. The defendants were permitted by the Court of first instance to examine another expert on an application made at an inordinately late stage, and it is their own fault if the defendants failed to avail themselves of the opportunity so made available to them.

7. It was next contended that since the suit land was the stridhana property of the deceased Hanumavva, her daughters became entitled to it after her death, and that the suit brought by the daughter-in-law and the son's sons of Hanumavva was not maintainable. But Mr. Deshpande had to abandon this argument since he had to admit that the suit land, although it was the stridhana property of Hanumavva, did not become her absolute property and on her death it reverted to the heirs of her father.

8. It was next urged that not all the legal representatives of defendant 2 were brought on the record after his death, but his brother and son were the only persons impleaded as legal representatives, although the wife and the daughter should have also been added as legal representatives. But this contention has to fail for the reason that, if, not all the representatives were brought on record the suit does not fail and it has to continue against those persons who have been impleaded as legal representatives against whom an effectual decision which binds them could be made.

9. It was again submitted that a suit for redemption should have been brought, but this contention can have no legs to stand upon since the finding of the Courts below is that the mortgage debt stood discharged in consequence of the self redeeming mortgage. It is pointless for any one to urge that in that situation the redemption of the mortgage which no longer existed, should have been sought.

10. So the decree for possession made by the Courts below, is, in my opinion, unexceptionable and must be confirmed.

11. The next branch of the argument concerned mesne profits which, as I have already observed, were awarded at Rs. 200 by the Munsiff and at Rs. 400 by the Civil Judge. Mr. Deshpande in making the criticism of the enhancement made by the Civil Judge, found himself in great difficulty at more than one stage. He first made the submission that the Civil Judge enhanced the mesne profits without there being any evidence to support the enhancement. But he had to withdraw from that submission when it was pointed out to him that the Civil Judge did allude to the evidence of the 4th plaintiff and that given by P. W. 2 both of whom gave evidence that the income from the suit land was 60 bags of jawar a year. Mr. Deshpande did not dispute that the price of each bag of jawar at the relevant point of time was Rs. 30 and so, the effect of the evidence given by both these witnesses was that the manual income was in the neighbourhood of Rs. 1,800 a year.

12. When confronted with this difficulty Mr. Deshpande modified his submission and argued that, although the Civil Judge had disbelieved the evidence of P. W. 2 and the 4th plaintiff, he nevertheless made a decree for enhancement. But here again it transpires that Mr. Deshpande was not right, since the Civil Judge said nowhere in his judgment that he did not believe the evidence of these witnesses. On the contrary the relevant discussion makes it clear that he did place dependence upon the evidence of both these witnesses and that the basis for the enhancement which he made was the evidence given by them. Mr. Deshpande cannot draw any substance for his argument that the Civil Judge did not believe the evidence of these two witnesses, from the fact that the Civil Judge did not allow the whole of the mesne profits claimed by the plaintiffs, but gave them only half of what they had claimed.

13. The argument advanced by Mr. Deshpande that the Civil Judge acted arbitrarily without the support of any evidence, overlooks the fact that the Civil Judge gave a smaller sum of money towards mesne profits not because he did not believe the evidence of P. W. 2 and the 4th plaintiff, but because he thought that allowance should be made for factors such as failure of crops, scarcity of rainfall and so on and so forth. The criticism of the enhancement made by the Civil Judge is, in my opinion, unreasonable and so unacceptable.

14. The last argument that was placed before me was that even so the provisions of Section 18 (1) of the Mysore Agricultural Debtors Relief Act, 1966 which came into force on April 1, 1969 made it incumbent on this Court to transfer that part of the appeal which concerns the liability to mesne profits to the Agricultural Debtors Relief Act Court functioning under that Act. That section reads:—

"18. Transfer of pending suits, appeals, applications and proceedings to the Court.

(1) All suits, appeals, applications for execution and proceedings in respect of any debt pending in any Civil or Revenue Court shall, when they involve the questions whether the person from whom such debt is due is a debtor, and whether the total amount of debts due from him exceeds twenty thousand rupees, be transferred to the Court.

15. It was asserted by Mr. Deshpande that the question which the issue appertaining to mesne profits necessarily involved is whether the original defendants and the legal representatives of the second defendant are debtors, and so, the transfer of the issue concerning mesne profits which is presented by this appeal for decision must stand transferred to the Court functioning under the Act. In support of this submission reliance was placed on the definition of the words "debt" contained in Section 2 which reads:—

"2(4) 'debt' means any liability in cash or kind, whether secured or unsecured, due from a debtor, whether payable under a decree or order of any Civil Court or otherwise and includes mortgage money, the payment of which is secured by the usufructuary mortgage of immovable property but does not include arrears of wages, payable in respect of agricultural or manual labour, or any liability for the recovery of which remedy is barred by limitation;

(5) "debtor" means—

(a) an individual—

(i) who is indebted;

(ii) who holds land used for agricultural purposes or has held such land at any time not more than thirty years before 30th January 1960, which land has been transferred, whether under any instrument or not, and which transfer is in the nature of a mortgage, although not purporting to be so;

(iii) who has been cultivating land personally for the cultivating seasons in the two years immediately preceding the date of the coming into operation of this Act; and

(iv) whose annual income from sources other than agriculture and manual labour does not exceed one-third of his total annual income or Rs. 1,000 whichever is greater, and whose aggregate annual income from all sources does not exceed Rs. 5,000.

The other parts of the definition of a "debtor" are not material since no dependence was placed on those parts of the definition.

16. It is seen from the definition of the word "debtor" that an individual is a debtor for the purposes of the Act only when all the four conditions enumerated in sub-clause (a) of Cl. (5) of Section 2 of the Act cumulatively exist. The definition in sub-clause (b) which relates to an undivided Hindu family has no relevance since the defendants on whose behalf Mr. Deshpande advanced the argument are individuals falling within sub-clause (a) of Cl. 5 of Section 2 of the Act. Those individuals could claim the status of a debtor under the Act only if, firstly they are indebted, secondly if they held lands during the periods specified in that clause, thirdly if they have been cultivating the land personally during the two years to which that clause refers, and lastly if their annual income does not exceed the specified amount. The existence of all these attributes is indispensable to impress upon an individual the character of a debtor under the Act within the meaning of the Act.

17. Section 18 which enjoins the transfer of certain pending proceedings whether in a suit, or in an appeal or in other proceeding, can have application only if the pending proceeding involves the question whether the person against whom that proceeding was instituted was a debtor within the meaning of the Act. The other part of that section which speaks of the total amount of the debt has no materiality to the present discussion.

18. It cannot be said that the second appeal before me involves any question as to whether the appellants in this appeal are debtors within the meaning of the Act. That question would have arisen if they had raised a plea that they conformed to the description of a debtor contained in sub-clause (a) of Cl. (5) of Section 2 of the Act. No such plea was raised in the pleadings for the obvious reason that the Act came into force only on April 1, 1969 and the suit had been instituted long before it commenced to operate. But whatever may be the reason for which the plea was not raised and no claim was made to the status of a debtor within the meaning of the Act, what cannot be overlooked is that there is no such claim involved in this second appeal, and so, it does not fall within Section 18 of the Act.

19. But Mr. Deshpande for the first time produced a memo before me to-day in which there is an assertion that the appellants are debtors within the meaning of the Act. The memo states particulars with respect to all the matters of which sub-clause (5) of S. 2 of the Act speaks, and, I cannot take cognizance of the facts mentioned for the first time during the arguments, unless the appellants are permitted to amend the written statement, and, no such application has been made before me, or could be granted at this belated stage. The production of a memo which is signed only by the advocate for the defendants who could have no personal knowledge of the truth of the statements contained therein, cannot transform an appeal which does not involve any question such as the one to which Section 18 refers, to one falling within it.

20. I dismiss this appeal with costs.
Appeal dismissed.

A. NARAYANA PAI, J.

D. Padmaraja Setty and others, Petitioners v. Gyanachandrappa and others, Respondents.

Civil Revn. Petn. Nos. 380 and 707 of 1968, D/- 1-7-1969, from order of Civil J., Hassan, in O. S. No. 2 of 1965.

(A) Hindu Succession Act (1956), S. 21 — Murder of mother and daughter on the same night — Difficult to ascertain who died first — Presumption under the section is that younger (daughter) survived the elder. (Para 4)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 22, Rr. 4, 5 — Hindu Succession Act (1956), S. 21 — Suit for partition and possession of his half share of property by 'B' against his widow mother P—Will by P of her property in favour of 'J' — Murder of 'P' and 'J' on same night during pendency of suit — Statutory presumption under S. 21 Hindu Succession Act that 'J' survived 'P' — Applications by other brothers of B and also by heirs of 'J' for being brought on record as legal representatives of P — Held J's heirs could be brought on record to continue the original suit and not the brothers of B.

A suit for partition and possession of his share in property was filed by B one of the sons of P against her who was a Hindu widow. During the pendency of the suit P and her foster daughter 'J' were murdered on the same night. 'J' was presumed to survive P under Section 21 Hindu Succession Act. P had bequeathed her property to 'J' under a valid will. On death of P other brothers of B (her other sons) applied for being brought on record to continue the original suit as intestate heirs of P. The heirs of J also applied for the same purpose as representing the estate of P on the strength of the will. It was held that heirs of J were entitled to be brought on record to represent the estate of P and not the brothers of B (her other sons). The heirs of 'J' wanted to come on record not as representatives of 'J' but as persons now representing the estate of deceased P having acquired that estate as heirs of 'J' who had acquired it under the will before her death. The fact that in normal circumstances 'J' should have been impleaded as a legal representative does not make it impossible for some other person to come on record should she die before being brought on record as legal representative of P in the original suit. ORDER:— The property in suit, out of which these Revision Petitions arise, belonged to two brothers Dasarath and Tukappa. The former died first. After the death of Tukappa also, leaving only his widow Padmavathamma, one of the sons of Padmavathamma filed a suit for partition and delivery to him of a half share in the property. Padmavathamma had brought up her brother's daughter Janavva as her foster daughter.

2. During the pendency of the suit, Padmavathamma died. Both Padmavathamma as well as her foster daughter Janavva were murdered on the same night.

3. The plaintiff filed I. A. No. VI for bringing on record his brothers because himself and his said brothers were the nearest intestate heirs of Padmavathamma under Section 15 of the Hindu Succession Act. Janavva's parents filed I. A. No. VII to come on record as legal representatives of deceased Padmavathamma, on the ground that Padmavathamma had left a registered will bequeathing all her estate in favour of Janavva and that after the death of Janavva they were the persons entitled to the estate as the nearest heirs to Janavva.

4. The will was a registered one and the same was proved by the evidence of the scribe, an attester and another. The evidence was accepted by the trial Court as satisfactorily establishing the truth and validity of the will. In view of the circumstances attending the murder of the two ladies making it difficult to ascertain as a fact which of them died first, the Court has drawn the presumption under Section 21 of Hindu Succession Act to the effect that the younger survived the elder.

5. On these findings, I. A. No. VII was allowed and I. A. No. VI dismissed.

6. Hence these two Revision Petitions by the brothers of the plaintiffs were sought to be brought on record in I. A. No. VI.

7. So far as the genuineness of the will itself is concerned, the matter is concluded by a finding of fact recorded by the trial Court in favour of the view that the will was true and valid. The Trial Court after discussing the evidence adduced on behalf of the propounders, accepted the same and upheld the truth and validity of the will. The discussion of the evidence also leaves no room for doubt that the evidence was worthy of acceptance, especially in view of the weak cross-examination on behalf of the petitioner and total absence of evidence adduced by them.

8. It appears to me that the argument cannot be accepted. The correct position is not that the parents of Janavva wanted to come on record as legal representatives of Janavva but as persons now representing the estate of deceased Padmavathamma having acquired that estate as heirs of Janavva who, as legatee under the will of Padmavathamma, had already acquired it before her death. Their title to come on record is traceable directly to the death of Padmavathamma who was a party to the suit. The fact that in normal circumstances Janavva should have been impleaded as a legal representative does not make it impossible for some other persons to come on record should she die before being brought on record as legal representative of Padmavathamma in the Original Suit.

9. Mr. Narasimha Murthy has placed strong reliance on a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in Manindra Kumar v. Santi Rani, AIR 1951 Cal 518. Actually the decision does not support his contention. The facts of that case were that on the death of one Surdendra Nath, the defendant in that suit, his three sons Sudhansu, Himanshu and Biranshu, were sought to be brought on record as legal representatives. But before the application could be disposed of, Biranshu died whereupon another application was made to bring on record Santi Rani, the widow of deceased Biranshu. The trial Court rejected the second application and made the strange order of substituting in the place of Surendra Nath not only his living sons but also the deceased son Biranshu. The Calcutta High Court pointed out that the substance of the matter was that the second application should have been regarded, not as an independent application to bring on record the legal representative of Biranshu, but as one for amendment of the original application for substitution of the heirs of Surendra by putting in the name of Santi Rani instead of Biranshu. They rejected the contention that the death of Biranshu, before he was brought on record as a party, resulted in any abatement of the suit and also the contention that Art. 177 of the Limitation Act applied to such a case. The ultimate order of the Calcutta High Court was to set aside the refusal of the trial Judge to implead Shanti Rani, the widow of Biranshu, and to direct substitution in the place of the original defendant Nurendra Nath, of his two sons Sudhansu and Himansu and also Santi Rani, the widow of the third son Biranshu.

10. Actually, therefore, the decisions of the Calcutta High Court supports the view that in the circumstances of the case, where the immediate heirs or successors of a deceased party dies before being brought on record as a legal representative, the next set of persons on whom the estate devolves answers the description of legal representatives because they would, in then existing circumstances, represent in law the estate of the original deceased party.

11. I see therefore no illegality in the order made by the trial Court directing the impleading of the parents of Janavva as now representing the estate of the deceased Padmavathamma, the party defendant in the suit.

12. Both the Revision Petitions are therefore, dismissed.

T. K. TUKOL AND M. SANTHOSH, JJ.

N. Bommon Behram and another, Petitioners v. The Government of Mysore and others, Respondents.

Writ Petn. No. 3244 of 1968, D/- 6-6-1969.

(A) Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 11 Proviso (As inserted by Mysore Act 17 of 1961) — Land Acquisition Officer and State Government — Relation between — Principal and Agent — Proviso to S. 11 is not ultra vires main section.

Proviso to Section 11 of the Land Acquisition Act as amended by the Mysore State Legislature is not inconsistent with the main section and therefore, is not ultra vires the provisions contained in the Central Act. The proviso does not take away the real power of the Land Acquisition Officer as envisaged in the Central Act.

(Para 14)

The acquisition proceedings are initiated and held by the Deputy Commissioner as an agent of the State Government and the compensation that he fixes in his award is an offer made on behalf of the Government. The judicial determination of compensation is required to be made by the District Court in case the owner of the property to be acquired declines to accept the offer and applies for a reference under Section 18 of the Act. In law an offer made by an agent is binding on his principal. Consequently the State Legislature can direct the Deputy Commissioner to seek the previous approval of the State Government, his principal, before finally making the award and filing it under Section 12 of the Act. In law an agent has to act with the consent of his master or within the scope of the authority and in enacting the Proviso to S. 11, the State Legislature has given effect to this legal concept by clarifying the scope of powers of the Deputy Commissioner in the matter of fixing the compensation in his award. The action of the Collector in holding the enquiry relating to acquisition under the Act is an administrative proceeding in order to enable him to form his own opinion regarding the various matters to be embodied in the award. The Proviso is intended as an equitable measure to safeguard the rights of the State and also to safeguard against the proposals for payment of inflated amounts of compensation which might have been determined under influence of extraneous considerations.

(Paras 11, 12, 13)

The section and the Proviso have to be read together and have to be construed harmoniously. If the proviso is intended to act as a restraint on the power conferred by the main section, that power shall be construed as one which emerges after conformation with the requirements of the proviso. The opinion which the Land Acquisition Officer has to embody in the award for the purpose of Section 11 is the opinion as modified by the order or direction, if any, given by the Government while approving the proposed amount of compensation. Consequently, there is no repugnancy between the proviso and the main section. (Case law discussed).

(Para 14)

(B) Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 11 Proviso (As inserted by Mysore Act 17 of 1961) — Determination of compensation by Land Acquisition Officer — Government's approval — Nature — Confidential communication to Land Acquisition Officer asking to fix certain compensation amount — Effect.

Where the Government does not give approval to the amount of compensation arrived at by the Land Acquisition Officer but calls upon him to draft the award on the basis given in its communication and send it to the Government for approval, the communication does not become one without jurisdiction merely because the communication is secretive or asks the Land Acquisition Officer to adopt the reasoning of the Government. It is well within competence of the State Government to indicate in unequivocal terms as to the amount of compensation acceptable to it.

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Certiorari — Against whom certiorari lies — Departmental Communication cannot be quashed.

A departmental communication is not liable to be quashed by writ of certiorari. Where the communication by Government to its subordinate officer is one which is firstly, confidential, secondly, within competence of the Government, thirdly, not embodying any official decision affecting right of the private citizen and fourthly, an administrative communication and not one made by judicial or quasi-judicial body, the communication is not liable to be quashed by issue of writ of certiorari. It is an elementary principle that persons seeking the assistance of the court in exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction must come with clean hands. They should not suppress facts or state false facts or withhold material facts from the court.

R. M. Patil and V. H. Ron, for Petitioners; V. S. Malimath, Advocate General, for Respondents.

TUKOL, J.— The petitioners have filed this writ petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution praying that this court should be pleased to strike down the proviso to Section 11 and Section 15-A of the Mysore Land Acquisition Act 17 of 1961 (hereinafter referred to as the Act). They have also prayed for a writ of prohibition against respondents 2 and 3 directing them not to follow the instructions given in letter No. RD 220 AQB '68 dated 29/30th August 1968 and to issue a mandamus directing them to maintain their own valuation expressed in the draft award dated 24th July 1968.

2. In order to appreciate the points urged on behalf of the petitioners, it is necessary to refer briefly to the relevant facts that have given rise to the writ petition. Certain lands which are owned by the petitioners were notified for acquisition under Section 4(1) of the Act. The lands were required for the use of the Border Security Force under the control of the Central Government. Prior to the issue of this Notification on 1-5-1967, there were certain negotiations between the petitioners, the Chief Secretary to Government of Mysore and other officers at a meeting held on March 31, 1967. The petitioners handed over possession of the property on April 6, 1967. The preliminary notification was followed by the requisite declaration under the Section 6 of the Act by a Notification dated 1-7-1967. It appears that the petitioners claimed Rs. 18,83,650/- as compensation for their property. The Land Acquisition officer (respondent No. 3) prepared a draft award and made a reference to the State Government for approval, purporting to act under the proviso to Section 11 of the Act. Pending the award, the petitioners were paid a sum of Rs. 6,50,000/- on September 21, 1967.

It appears that in the draft award submitted for the approval of the State Government, respondent No. 3 assessed the amount of compensation at about Rupees 13,00,000/- or so. The Government did not approve the compensation assessed by Respondent No. 3. Accordingly the Secretary to the Government of Mysore in the Revenue Department addressed a communication dated 29/30th August, 1968 marked "Strictly Confidential" conveying the approval of the Government to the award for a total sum of Rs. 6,57,870.15 Ps. and called upon the Land Acquisition Officer to prepare a fresh draft of the award in accordance with the details given in their communication.

The petitioners filed this writ petition on September 19, 1968 contending that the proviso to Section 11 of the Act was inconsistent with the main Section and that the State Government had no power to amend Section 11 of the Central Land Acquisition Act, so as to take away the real power of the Land Acquisition Officer as envisaged in the Central Act. It is also contended that the amendment is inconsistent with the main section and therefore ultra vires the provisions contained in the Central Act. The petitioners also contended that the communication dated 29/30th August, 1968 issued by the first respondent amounted to interference with the course of statutory duty and the statutory proceedings contemplated by Section 11 of the Act. They prayed that besides striking down the said communication, the court should direct the Land Acquisition Officer to ignore the instructions contained in the communication and to maintain the valuation made by her in the draft award dated 24th July, 1968. According to the petitioners, the impugned communication, if allowed to be acted upon by respondents 2 and 3, would work irreparable loss to them and that it was not within the competence of the State Government to issue instructions of the type contained in the said communication.

3. In the counter-affidavit filed by the respondents it is admitted that the properties had been taken possession of by the concerned officers on April 6, 1967 and that the petitioners had been paid Rs. 6,50,000/- on September 21, 1967. It is also admitted that the impugned communication was issued by the State Government indicating that they approved the award only for the sum expressly stated therein and that the aforesaid communication was within the competence of the Government. They have further stated, while declining to sanction the draft as sent by the Land Acquisition Officer, that they had also indicated their reasons for proposing a modified estimate of compensation. They have denied the petitioners' allegation that there was a conspiracy between the State Government and the Officer of the Security Forces in order to bring down the valuation of the property. They maintain that the proviso to Section 11 is legal and that the action taken by the State Government is well within the ambit of its power conferred by that proviso.

They complain that the petitioners have not come with clean hands, suppressing the material facts in regard to the manner in which they had come in possession of the documents produced with the writ petition and that on that ground alone the writ petition was liable to be dismissed in limine. According to the respondents, the writ petition is premature and not maintainable. They have denied the other allegations of undue interference etc.

4. Respondent No. 3 who is the Land Acquisition Officer, has filed a separate counter referring to the relevant facts of the present acquisition proceedings, the payment of advance amount to the petitioners, the submission of the draft award and the receipt of the confidential communication from the Government. She has asserted that the Land Acquisition proceedings had been conducted in accordance with the statutory provisions and that as the award drafted was subject to the previous approval of the State Government under the proviso to Section 11 of the Act, the same had been submitted to the State Government for prior approval. It is maintained that the respondent is not entitled to make an award without the previous approval of the State Government in view of the impugned proviso.

As regards the communication, this respondent has stated that the said communication contained the reasons of the State Government for not according previous approval to the draft award and that it was within her competence to adopt reasons which she might think proper in support of the modified award which she may prepare and forward the same to the State Government for prior approval.

5. The communication (Exhibit D), which has occasioned the present writ petition was, as already stated, issued by the Secretary to the State Government in the Revenue Department to the Divisional Commissioner, Bangalore Division, Bangalore. The portions of the communications which were commented upon by the learned Advocate for the petitioners and have a bearing on the points at issue may be usefully extracted at this stage:

"I am directed to convey approval of Government to the award of a total sum of Rs. 6,57,870-15 P. (Rupees Six Lakhs Fifty Seven Thousand Eight Hundred and Seventy and Paise Fifteen only) in respect of lands measuring 86 acres, 22 guntas in S. Nos. 5, 9, 11, 12 and 13 belonging to Shri Bomman Behram and Smt. Mehra Mehta of Vaderapura village acquired for locating the VIII Battalion of the Border Security Force. The break-up of the total award with reasons indicated against each of the items is as under."

Then the communication indicates what in the opinion of the Government was the proper compensation for the different items including the statutory allowance at 15 per cent on the permissible items so as to make up the total amount as approved by the Government. The concluding paragraphs of this communication read as follows:—

"Out of the total award of Rs. 6,57,870-15 P. a sum of Rs. 6,50,000/- already paid may be deducted and the balance only is payable to the party concerned together with interest due according to rules.

The draft award on the above basis may be drawn and sent up to Government for approval within a week.

It should be ensured that no reference is made to this letter in the award by the Land Acquisition Officer. Though the Land Acquisition Officer may adopt the reasoning in the letter in the modified award, it should appear as if it is his own reasoning."

It is contended on behalf of the petitioners that this communication is without jurisdiction and that the proviso to Section 11 under which the State Government was taking shelter was ultra vires.

6. In order to pronounce on the competence of the State Government to issue a communication approving the draft award for a specific sum or declining to approve the draft submitted by the third respondent, it is necessary to decide the legality of the proviso that is challenged by the petitioners. We might mention at this stage that the petitioners have also attacked Section 15-A of the Act and have prayed for striking down the provision. Since none of the reliefs sought for by the petitioners in this petition turns upon the validity or otherwise of Section 15-A, we refrain from dealing with the nature and scope of the power dealt with therein or with the legality thereof. No arguments were also addressed to us on that point.

7. Section 11, with the proviso reads as follows:—

"Enquiry and award by Deputy Commissioner:—

On the day so fixed, or on any other day to which the enquiry has been adjourned the Deputy Commissioner shall proceed to enquire into the objections (if any) which any person interested has stated pursuant to a notice given under Section 9 to the measurements made under Section 8, and into the value of the land at the date of the publication of the notification under Section 4, sub-section (1), and into the respective interests, of the persons claiming the compensation, and shall make an award under his hand of —

(i) the true area of the land;

(ii) the compensation which in his opinion should be allowed for the land; and

(iii) the apportionment of the said compensation among all the persons known or believed to be interested in the land, of whom, or of whose claims, he has information, whether or not they have respectively appeared before him:

Provided that no such award shall be made by the Deputy Commissioner, without the previous approval of the State Government or such officer as the State Government may appoint in this behalf who in the case of an award made by an officer below the rank of the Deputy Commissioner of a District, may be the Deputy Commissioner of the District."

It is obvious from the main section that the competent authority to make the award therein is the Deputy Commissioner; it is he who has to determine the value of the land, give his opinion as regards the compensation to be allowed for the land and where there are more claimants, indicate the apportionment of such compensation amongst such persons. As regards the proviso, it unequivocally lays down that no award shall be made by the Deputy Commissioner without the previous approval of the State Government.

8. What is contended in this context by Mr. R. M. Patil, learned Advocate for the petitioners, is that when the main section constituted the Deputy Commissioner the exclusive authority to form his opinion as regards the amount of compensation and make an award the proviso which has been engrafted by State Legislature empowers the State Government to interfere with the formation of such opinion by the Deputy Commissioner according to his own judgment and appreciation of the facts on the material before him. Even though it was contended in the main affidavit that the State Legislature could not have amended the Central Land Acquisition Act, no arguments have been advanced before us as to the competency of the State Legislature to amend the said Act. We may incidentally point out that the subject of acquisition and requisition of property is item No. 42 in list 3 of 7th schedule. It is undisputed that the amendments made by the State Legislature have been assented to by the President.

9. So, the sole ground of attack that requires consideration is, whether the proviso can be struck down as ultra vires on the ground that it materially interferes with the duties of the Land Acquisition Officer in forming his own opinion about the compensation that has to be allowed on the land. It is unnecessary to refer to the different sections which provide for or deal with the powers of the Deputy Commissioner in making the award and for that purpose forming his own opinion as to the various matters that are required to be included in the award.

There cannot be any doubt that the proviso, as it is worded, unambiguously requires the Deputy Commissioner to obtain the previous approval of the State Government before making an award; in other words, the compensation to be opposed (proposed?) by him in the award should have the approval of the State Government. Such amount, in some cases, may be fixed by the Government and communicated to the Land Acquisition Officer as proper compensation in their opinion. If the Land Acquisition Officer accepts the proposal made by the Government, then, there may not be further correspondence and he might prepare a modified draft of the award, obtaining the consent of the Government and then file the award under Section 12 of the Act. If he disagrees with the proposal made by the Government, there may be further correspondence or discussion between the Government and the Land Acquisition Officer, and in any case, the award as is required to be filed must be an award which has the previous approval of the Government.

10. In view of this position, it is not contended, and cannot be contended, by the State Government that fixation of the proposal as regards the amount of compensation made by the Government would interfere with the opinion which the Deputy Commissioner or the Land Acquisition Officer may form under Section 11 of the Act. The legality of such interference would necessarily depend upon the nature of the function or act which the Land Acquisition Officer is required to perform in drafting and submitting his award. If his function in that respect is quasi-judicial, interference by extraneous authority including the State Government would be repugnant to law. If on the other hand, the act of the Land Acquisition Officer is merely an administrative act and that act is sought by the Legislature to be controlled by the opinion of the Government, we do not think that the proviso would be repugnant to law.

11. It is unnecessary for us to go into the various sections of the Act in order to determine the precise nature of the act, which the Land Acquisition Officer performs in preparing his award, since there is the pronouncement of the Supreme Court in that subject. In Harish Chandra v. Deputy Land Acquisition Officer, AIR 1961 S.C. 1500, their Lordships had to deal with the question of limitation for making an application moving for a reference under Section 18 of the Act. In dealing with the question as to the nature of the award and when it should be said that the award has been made, their Lordships pronounced as follows on the legal character of the award and the nature of the act which the Land Acquisition Officer has to perform in preparing it :—

"In dealing with this question it is relevant to bear in mind the legal character of the award made by the Collector under Section 12. In a sense it is a decision of the Collector reached by him after holding an enquiry as prescribed by the Act. It is a decision, inter alia, in respect of the amount of compensation which should be paid to the person interested in the property acquired; but legally the award cannot be treated as a decision; it is in law an offer or tender of compensation determined by the Collector to the owner of the property under acquisition. If the owner accepts the offer no further proceeding is required to be taken; the amount is paid and compensation proceedings are concluded. If, however, the owner does not accept the offer Section 18 gives him the statutory right of having the question determined by Court, and it is the amount of compensation which the court may determine that would bind both the owner and the Collector. In that case it is on the amount thus determined judicially that the acquisition proceedings would be concluded. It is because of this nature of the award that the 'award can be appropriately described as a tender or offer made by the Collector on behalf of the Government to the owner of the property for his acceptance'. In Ezra v. Secy. of State, (1903) ILR 30 Cal. 36 at P. 86, it has been held that—

"the meaning to be attached to the word 'award' under S. 11 and its nature and effect must be arrived at not from the mere use of the same expression in both instances but from the examination of the provisions of the Law relating to the Collector's proceedings culminating in the award. The consideration to which we have referred satisfy us that 'the Collector acts in the matter of the enquiry and the valuation of the land only as an agent of the Government and not as a judicial officer;' and that "consequently, although the Government is bound by his proceedings the persons interested are not concluded by his finding regarding the value of the land or the compensation to be awarded."

Then the High Court has added that such tender once made is binding on the Government and the Government cannot require that the value fixed by its own officer acting on its behalf should be open to question at its own instance before the Civil Court. The said case was taken before the Privy Council in Ezra v. Secy. of State, (1905) ILR 32 Cal. 605 (PC), and their Lordships have expressly approved of the observations made by the High Court to which we have just referred. Therefore, if the award made by the Collector is in law no more than an offer made on behalf of the Government to the owner of the property then the making of the award as properly understood must involve the communication of the offer to the party concerned. That is the normal requirement of the contract law as its applicability to cases of award, made under the Act cannot be reasonably excluded.....

(the underlining (here in ' ') is ours). It would be manifest from these propositions laid down by the Supreme Court that the acquisition proceedings are initiated and held by the Deputy Commissioner as an agent of the State Government and that the compensation that he fixes in his award is an offer made on behalf of the Government. The judicial determination of compensation is required to be made by the District Court in case the owner of the property to be acquired declines to accept the offer and applies for a reference under Section 18 of the Act. In law an offer made by an agent is binding on his principal. In this view of the legal position, it would be difficult to contend that the State Legislature could not have required the Deputy Commissioner to seek the previous approval of the State Government, his principal, before finally making the award and filing it under Section 12 of the Act. In law an agent (has?) to act with the consent of his master or within the scope of the authority and in enacting the proviso, the State Legislature has given effect to this legal concept, by clarifying the scope of powers of the Deputy Commissioner in the matter of fixing the compensation in his award.

12. There appears to be another reason why the State Legislature seems to have amended Section 11 of the Act by incorporating this proviso. It is not unlikely, though the cases may be very rare, that in fixing up the compensation the Land Acquisition Officers may be influenced by extraneous considerations in determining the amount of compensation and may fix compensation far in excess of the real market value of such property at the relevant date. The proviso is intended to safeguard against such vagaries and proposals for payment of inflated amounts of compensation which might subject Government to heavy losses.

13. We have no doubt in our mind, from the propositions of law laid down by their Lordships and extracted above, that the action of the Collector in holding the enquiry relating to acquisition under the Act is an administrative proceeding in order to enable him to form his own opinion regarding the various matters to be embodied in the award. A party who is aggrieved by the award made by the Land Acquisition Officer, has got his remedy under Section 18 of the Act by praying for a reference so that the amount of compensation should be judicially fixed by a competent court. In this context, we should also note that when the Land Acquisition Officer makes the award, the law does not provide any remedy to the State Government to challenge the compensation awarded under the award for the simple reason that the award is an offer of compensation on behalf of the State Government. The Proviso is intended as an equitable measure to safeguard the rights of the State.

14. As regards the contention raised by the learned Advocate for the petitioners that the proviso is inconsistent with the main section and that on that account it is repugnant to law, it has to be noted that the subject of a proviso is to qualify or modify the scope and the ambit of the matter dealt with in the main section; the proviso may impose certain restrictions on the power to be exercised as conferred by the main section or it may in certain cases incorporate circumstances under which extended power may be exercised by the authority concerned. But, under any circumstances, it is well established that the section and the proviso have to be read together and have to be construed harmoniously. Mr. V. S. Malimath, learned Advocate General appearing for the State, has drawn our attention to the following paragraph at page 219 of "Craies on Statute law" (Sixth Edition by S. G. G. Edgar) on the construction of repugnant provisos and saving clauses.

"It sometimes happens that there is repugnancy between the enacting clauses and the provisos and saving clauses. The question then arises, how is the Act, taken as a whole, to be construed? The generally accepted rule with regard to the construction of a proviso in an Act which is repugnant to the purview of the Act is that laid down in Att. Gen. v. Chelsea Water-works, namely 'that where the proviso of an Act of Parliament is directly repugnant to the purview, the proviso shall stand and be a repeal of the purview, as it speaks the last intention of the makers."

If the proviso is intended to act as a restraint on the power conferred by the main section, that power shall be construed as one which emerges after conformation with the requirements of the proviso. As already indicated, the Land Acquisition Officer acts on behalf of the Government and hence there cannot be any repugnancy between the main section and the proviso, if the Officer is required to obtain the prior approval of the Government. If the section and the proviso are read together, it would mean that before the Land Acquisition Officer makes the award as regards the compensation to be paid for the property to be acquired, he shall secure the prior approval of the State Government. In other words, for the purpose of the section the opinion which the Land Acquisition Officer has to embody in the award is the opinion as modified by the order or direction, if any, given by the Government while approving the proposed amount of compensation. From this point of view, we are unable to see any repugnancy between the proviso and the main section.

15. Our view that the proviso is not illegal even if it is held to override the opinion of the Land Acquisition Officer or the Deputy Commissioner, is supported from the proposition laid down by the Supreme Court in B. Rajagopala v. S. T. A. Tribunal, Madras, AIR 1964 S.C. 1573. In that case, their Lordships had to decide upon the powers under Section 43-A that had been incorporated by the Madras Legislature by Madras Act No. 20 of 1948, amending the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939. What was contended before their Lordships was that that section interfered both with the administrative and quasi-judicial functions to be performed by the authorities under the Act and that it was therefore ultra vires. Section 43-A reads thus:

"The State Government may issue such orders and directions of a general character as it may consider necessary, in respect of any matter relating to road transport to the State Transport Authority or Regional Transport Authority and such Transport Authority shall give effect to all such orders and directions."

When dealing with this question, their Lordships made a distinction between the orders and directions which are of administrative nature, and orders and directions which affect the quasi-judicial power exercisable by the authorities specified therein. In dealing with this section, their Lordships stated:

"In interpreting S. 43-A, we think, it would be legitimate to assume that the Legislature intended to respect the basic

After scrutinising the provisions of law, their Lordships held that—

"On a fair and reasonable construction of S. 43-A it ought to be held that the said section authorises the State Government to issue orders and directions of a general character only in respect of administrative matters which fall to be dealt with by the State Transport Authority or Regional Transport Authority under the relevant provisions of the Act in their administrative capacity."

Applying the ratio of this decision, it should follow that the proviso which imposes certain restrictions on the opinion of the Land Acquisition Officer in proposing the compensation, the Legislature has done nothing more than laying down the policy which should guide the fixation of compensation to be embodied in an award to be made by the Land Acquisition Officer. The learned Advocate General drew our attention to a decision of this court in Vadivelu Gounder v. Spl. Land Acquisition Officer, 1969 (1) Mys. L. J. 301. In that case, there was no contest as to the vires of the proviso. All that was contended on behalf of the petitioners was that in exercising its power under the proviso, the State Government should

16. This brings us to the question of the legality or illegality of the communication impugned by the petitioners. We have already quoted the relevant portions of that communication and indicated that the communication was primarily intended to convey the approval of the Government to the award for a total sum of Rs. 6,57,870-15 P. In effect, the Government have declined to give their approval to the draft award submitted by the Land Acquisition Officer in July 1968. What is, however, objected to by the learned Advocate for the petitioners is what is contained in the last three paragraphs of this communication. It is stated that the petitioners had already been paid Rs. 6,50,000/- and taking into consideration the amount of compensation proposed by the Government, only the balance after deducting the amount paid, should be made payable to the party together with interest according to the rules. It also calls upon the Land Acquisition Officer to draft the award on the basis given in the communication and send it to the Government for approval, Mr. Patil, learned Advocate for the petitioners, submitted that this direction from the State Government completely smashes the voice of the Land Acquisition Officer and requires him to be only the mouth-piece of the State Government.

We have already indicated what the power of the State Government is. We have stated that if the main section and the proviso are read together, there shall not be an award without the previous approval of the State Government. Therefore, if the State Government indicated that in their opinion the total amount of compensation should not exceed Rs. 6,57,870-15 P. we are unable to see how this part of the communication can be said to be either without jurisdiction or in excess of jurisdiction. The learned Advocate for the petitioners, however, emphasised that the concluding paragraph which required the Land Acquisition Officer to adopt the reasoning given in the letter without making it appear that he adopted the reasoning of the State Government is what is objectionable. We agree that the concluding portion of this letter is out of tune and to a certain extent not called for. We are unable to understand why such secretive direction was sought to be given, when it was an indication in unequivocal terms of their opinion about proper compensation and well within the competence of the State Government.

Some comment was made on the sentence opens with the words "I am directed to convey". The word "direct" is normally employed in official communications issued on behalf of a Government to convey any decision or direction and has no other connotation. It is common experience that communications like these drafted by executive officers do not conform to set patterns or to the legal requirements of any particular occasion or performance of duty. It has been often indicated that the Court should not scrutinise such documents as meticulously as they would scrutinise a document which is drawn to a form and set pattern.

17. Even assuming, as has been contended by the learned Advocate for the petitioners, that the concluding paragraph of this communication is in excess of jurisdiction, the question that we have to consider is whether a writ or certiorari can issue quashing this portion. The hurdles in granting this prayer are many. Firstly, it is a confidential communication issued by the State Government to one of its subordinate officers giving certain directions which they are competent to give under the law. Secondly, it does not embody any official decision in the matter, so as to affect adversely the rights of the petitioners, and thirdly, it is an administrative communication made in the course of the official duties and is not one which is made by either judicial or quasi-judicial body, calling for our interference under Article 226 of the Constitution. As laid down by the Madras High Court in Kandaswamy v. Dy. Registrar of Co-operative Societies, Coimbatore, AIR 1954 Mad. 348, a departmental communication is not liable to be quashed by a writ of certiorari.

18. The learned Advocate for the petitioners has drawn our attention to a number of decisions in support of the proposition that even administrative orders are liable to be quashed in exercise of the power vested in the High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution. We simply note those decisions as, in our opinion, they do not need elaborate discussion. They are: (1) AIR 1964 Punj. 533; (2) AIR 1957 Trav. Co. 203 (sic); (3) AIR 1963 All. 408 and (4) AIR 1965 Mys. 255.

In all these decisions, the orders or notices had been issued in exercise of some administrative power or in the discharge of some function under some Act or the other and those notices or orders affected either the fundamental or statutory rights of persons to whom they had been issued. It was in the context of the rights of the aggrieved party and their infringement by the executive action complained of that their Lordships in the various decisions came to the conclusion that executive actions which directly affect or threaten to affect the fundamental or statutory rights of persons can be struck down by High Courts, when approached by such persons, in exercise of their powers under Art. 226 of the Constitution.

19. In the present case, the impugned communication was not issued to the petitioners. The petitioners have been meticulously silent in their affidavit as to how they came in possession of these documents. The learned Advocate for the petitioners when questioned, submitted that it was unnecessary for him to explain the possession of the documents. In our opinion, when an official communication addressed either by Government or by some superior authority to their or his subordinate and marked 'Confidential' is secured dubiously by persons who are interested in securing a decision in their favour on its basis, it would not be correct to treat the matter very lightly. It is the duty of the petitioners to explain in what legal manner they came in possession of these documents. It is an elementary principle that persons seeking the assistance of the court in exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction must come with clean hands. They should not suppress facts or state false facts or withhold material facts from the court.

An attempt was made by referring to Sections 123 and 124 of the Evidence Act to contend that since the State Government had not claimed any privilege as regards these documents, the question of their admissibility would not be a matter of agitation before the court. We may state that the question of admissibility has not been raised and could not have been raised. The petitioners have sought for relief on documents which are genuine but which were not expected to be in their possession. The Government have conceded the genuineness of the documents and the instructions contained therein. The petitioners have made very strong allegations of conspiracy etc. against the respondents and the officers of the Security Force. We are unable to spell out or infer any such conspiracy because no such conspiracy is called for in the matter of compensation as the State Government has got wide powers and the rights of the owner of the property are amply safeguarded by conferring upon him the right to agitate before a competent judicial tribunal and have the matter judicially decided. Some of the lengthy arguments on the contents of this letter could have been avoided had the draughtsman of this letter confined himself only to relevant without being unnecessarily secretive about what he was doing in exercise of what the law authorises him to do.

20. The only other point that needs reference before we conclude is as regards two other letters which the petitioners have produced with their affidavits. What we have already stated as regards the possession of the confidential communication applies to these two letters also. They are produced at Exhibit C. The first is a copy of the letter D. O. No. H. D. 323 SST 67, dated 10-7-1968 from the Secretary to Government, Home Department, addressed to the Deputy Commissioner, Bangalore District. Reference is made in this letter to the Secretary having forwarded a demi-official letter from Sri P. R. Rajagopal, Deputy Director (Admn.) Directorate General of Border Security Force, New Delhi. It has been stated by the Secretary to the Deputy Commissioner that in view of what Rajagopal has stated in his communication, the Deputy Commissioner should not make further payment to the petitioner in addition to Rs. 6,50,000/- already paid. The second communication is a D.O. from P. R. Rajagopal to the Home Secretary. In this letter, Mr. Rajagopal has requested the Home Secretary not to make further payment to Shri Behram and has further stated—

"The Home Ministry of the Government of India is anxiously awaiting your communication on the final award of the Mysore Government. Should this award be in excess over what was originally proposed, the chances are that the Ministry may decide to call off the entire deal."

The argument of the learned Advocate for the petitioners is that it is on account of this threat held by Rajagopal that the State Government had been persuaded to limit the compensation to Rs. 6,57,870-15 P. We are unable to see the connection between this communication and the assessment of the compensation by the State Government. The reason is that possession of the property has already been taken and if the compensation proceedings are either dropped or closed at this stage, the State Government or the Central Government, as the case may be, would expose themselves for payment of damages. It is unnecessary to dilate on the implications of these letters which are not relevant to the points in issue.

21. In the result, we are of the opinion that the petitioners are not entitled to any relief. We have held that the proviso to Section 11 of the Act is valid and that the impugned notification which is only an official communication issued during the usual course of official business cannot be quashed. There cannot be a mandamus to respondents 2 and 3 to maintain their estimate of compensation as their opinion is subject to the approval of the Government.

22. The petition therefore fails and is accordingly dismissed with costs. Advocate's fee Rs. 150/-.

Petition dismissed.

The Court which passed a preliminary decree in a suit for partition of properties has competence and duty to take into account any compromise between the parties subsequent to such preliminary decree, and to pass a fresh decree in accordance with such compromise even if the properties include land assessed to revenue. The mere circumstance that the decree relates to lands assessed to revenue should not take away the competence of the Court to consider the plea of compromise or agreement subsequent to the preliminary decree and to make a fresh decree in accordance with such compromise or agreement if the same is proved. The Collector to whom a decree is sent under Order 20, Rule 18 C.P.C. has no jurisdiction to enquire whether the parties have entered into a compromise subsequent to the decree and to make a fresh decree in accordance with such compromise, if he is satisfied as to the existence of such compromise. (B) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 23, R. 3 — Jurisdiction under — Formal application by a party to pass decree in accordance with compromise, not necessary.

Rule 3 of Order 23 does not provide that the Court should exercise jurisdiction under that rule only when there is formal application by one of the parties to pass a decree in accordance with a compromise or agreement. When such compromise or agreement is pleaded by a party even by way of defence in a suit, it is the duty of the court to proceed to enquire into the existence of such compromise or agreement and to pass a decree in accordance with it, if it is proved.

(C) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 2(3) — Applicability — Sub-rule applies only to execution.

The prohibition contained in sub-rule (3) of Rule 2 of Order 21 C.P.C., applies only in execution and the execution does not begin until after a final decree is made. Where in a suit for partition of properties including land assessed to revenue, a preliminary decree is passed and the Court passing the decree directs that the decree should be sent to the Collector for effecting the partition of lands assessed to revenue, the Court cannot be said to have been executing the decree. There can be no bar under O. 21, R. 2(3) for a party pleading a compromise, entered into between the parties after the passing of a preliminary decree. AIR 1945 P.C. 152, Rel. on. (Para 16)

T. S. Ramachandra, for Petitioners; K. R. Bhatta, for Respondent.

ORDER:— The principal question that arises for decision in this revision petition is whether the court which passed a preliminary decree in a suit for partition of properties including lands assessed to revenue, has competence and duty to take into account any compromise between the parties subsequent to such preliminary decree, and to pass a fresh decree in accordance with such compromise.

2. The respondent herein was the original defendant in O. S. No. 186 of 1925, a suit for partition, on the file of the Civil Judge, Junior Division, Honnavar. A preliminary decree was passed in that suit. He made an application which was styled as a Darkhast application, praying that he might be given possession of a half share in the suit lands assessed to revenue and of 3/8th share in the timber and other materials out of the demolished suit house. The petitioner herein filed objections to that application, pleading, inter alia, that subsequent to the preliminary decree, a compromise was entered into between the parties, under which each was given certain lands and gave up his rights in other lands, and that in view of the compromise, the application was not maintainable.

3. The Civil Judge, (Junior Division) overruled the petitioner's objections, appointed a Commissioner for apportioning the respondent's 3/8th share in the building materials, and directed that the decree should be sent to the Collector for effecting the partition of lands assessed to revenue.

4. Against that order, the petitioner preferred an appeal to the Civil Judge, Karwar, who dismissed the appeal. Feeling aggrieved, the petitioner has come up in revision.

5. Mr. T. S. Ramachandra, learned counsel for the petitioner, urged that when the petitioner pleaded that a compromise was entered into between the parties subsequent to the preliminary decree, the learned Civil Judge, (Junior Division) should have enquired whether there was such a compromise and if he was satisfied that there was a lawful compromise, he should have made a decree or order in accordance with it. Mr. Ramachandra contended that without deciding first whether there was a compromise, it was not open to the learned Civil Judge, (Junior Division), to send the decree to the Collector under Order 20, Rule 18 C.P.C. and to appoint a Commissioner for apportioning the building materials.

6. The rival contention of Mr. K. L. Bhatta, learned counsel for the respondent, was that after the preliminary decree was made in respect of lands assessed to revenue, the learned Civil Judge, (Junior Division), became functus officio and could not go into the question whether the parties had subsequently entered into a compromise. In support of his contention Mr. Bhatta referred to the following observations of this Court in Narasu v. Narayan, AIR 1959 Mys. 233 at p. 234:

"A decree passed under Rule 18(1) of Order 20 directing partition by the Collector cannot be said to be a preliminary decree. So far as Civil Courts are concerned it is final for all purposes, though the partition of property may remain to be effected by the Collector....."

The Court which passed a decree must be deemed to have become a functus officio after passing the decree."

7. On the other hand, Mr. Ramachandra argued that even when the preliminary decree is in respect of partition of lands assessed to revenue, the court which passed that decree is competent to take into account subsequent developments like a compromise between the parties and to pass a fresh preliminary decree to accord with the altered situation. Mr. Ramachandra relied on the following observations of the Supreme Court in Phoolchand v. Gopal Lal, AIR 1967 S.C. 1470 at p. 1473:

"We are of opinion that there is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure which prohibits the passing of more than one preliminary decree if circumstances justify the same and that it may be necessary to do so particularly in partition suits when after the preliminary decree some parties die and shares of other parties are thereby augmented It would in our opinion, be convenient to the court and advantageous to the parties, specially in partition suits, to have disputed rights finally settled and specification of shares in the preliminary decree varied before a final decree is prepared. So far therefore as partition suits are concerned we have no doubt that if an event transpires after the preliminary decree which necessitates a change in shares, the court can and should do so, and if there is a dispute in that behalf, the order of the court deciding that dispute and making variation in shares specified in the preliminary decree already passed is a decree in itself which would be liable to appeal.

8. However, Mr. Bhatta argued that decrees for partition of lands assessed to revenue, form an exceptional category to which the general proposition laid down by the Supreme Court in the above decision will not apply, and that in regard to that category of decree, the true legal position is as stated by this court in AIR 1959 Mys. 233, i.e., the court which passed such a decree was functus officio. It was also argued by Mr. Bhatta that any plea that parties have entered into a compromise subsequent to such decree, should be put forth before the Collector to whom the decree is sent for effecting the partition and not before the Civil Court that had passed such decree.

9. In AIR 1959 Mys. 233, the question that arose for determination was whether there is any period of limitation for making an application to the Civil Court praying that a decree should be sent to the Collector under Order 20, Rule 18 C.P.C. The question whether the Civil Court which made a preliminary decree is competent to pass another preliminary decree taking into account events that have happened subsequent to the passing of the earlier preliminary decree, did not arise up for consideration in that case. The observations of their Lordships to the effect that the Civil Court becomes functus officio after passing the preliminary decree, must be understood in the context of that case. In my opinion, these observations cannot be understood as laying down a proposition that a Civil Court which makes a decree for partition of lands assessed to revenue, has no competence to pass another decree, where subsequent developments call for a fresh decree.

10. Then it is pleaded that subsequent to the passing of a preliminary decree the suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by an agreement or compromise, under Order 23, Rule 3 C.P.C., it is the duty of the court to inquire whether there has been such a compromise or agreement and if it is proved, to pass a decree in accordance therewith. The view I have taken receives support from the following observations of a Bench of Madras High Court in Subramania v. Thangammal, AIR 1965 Mad. 305 at p. 307.

"We are therefore of the opinion that the court is competent to take into account the matters set out in the compromise, if the compromise is found to be genuine and binding on the parties and the court is entitled to embody it in a set of fresh directions for the purpose of passing a final decree, and the directions so issued should be construed as not an amendment to the preliminary decree already passed, but rather as a fresh preliminary decree, which it is open to the court dealing with a partition suit to pass at any time till the stage of passing the final decree is over."

11. I do not see any reason why the mere circumstance that the decree relates to lands assessed to revenue, should make any difference and take away the competence of the court to consider the plea of compromise or agreement subsequent to the preliminary decree and to make a fresh decree in accordance with such compromise or agreement if the same is proved.

12. Mr. Bhatta has not shown any provision of law which confers on the Collector to whom a decree is sent under Order 20, Rule 18 C.P.C. jurisdiction to enquire whether the parties have entered into a compromise subsequent to the decree and to make a fresh decree in accordance with such compromise, if he is satisfied as to the existence of such compromise.

13. It was next contended by Mr. Bhatta that the petitioner has not made any application under Order 23, Rule 3 C.P.C., praying that a fresh decree should be made in terms of the alleged compromise, and that in the absence of such application the learned Civil Judge (Jr. Dn.) was not called upon to enquire into the alleged compromise and to pass a fresh decree, if the alleged compromise was proved.

14. Rule 3 of Order 23 does not provide that the court should exercise jurisdiction under that rule only when there is formal application by one of the parties to pass a decree in accordance with a compromise or agreement. When such compromise or agreement is pleaded by a party even by way of defence in a suit, I think, it is the duty of the court to proceed to enquire into the existence of such compromise or agreement and to pass a decree in accordance with it, if it is proved.

15. Lastly, it was contended by Mr. Bhatta that the compromise pleaded by the petitioner, even if established, would amount to an adjustment which had not been certified or recorded under Order 21 Rule 2 C.P.C., and that the same would not be recognised by the learned Civil Judge (Junior Division).

16. As pointed out by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Madan

Theatres v. Dinshaw & Co., AIR 1945 P.C. 152 at p. 154, the prohibition contained in sub-rule (3) of Rule 2 of Order 21 C.P.C., applies only in execution and the execution does not begin until after a final decree is made. In the present case no final decree had been passed. In directing that the decree should be sent to the Collector (for effecting the partition of lands assessed to revenue) the Civil Judge (Junior Division) cannot be said to have been executing the decree. Hence there was no bar under sub-rule (3) of Rule 2 of Order 21, C.P.C., for the petitioner pleading the compromise.

17. The order of the learned Civil Judge, (Jr. Dn.) is unsustainable as he failed to consider the compromise pleaded by the petitioner, and the judgment of the learned Civil Judge, Karwar, affirming that order is also unsustainable. In the result, this revision petition is allowed and the order and the judgment of the courts below are set aside and the respondent's application is remanded to the Munsiff (the corresponding authority to the Civil Judge, Jr. Dn.) at Honnavar to dispose of it afresh according to law.

18. In this petition parties will bear their own costs.

Order accordingly.

Mysore Co-operative Societies Rules, 1960 is reasonable and has a rational connection with the object sought to be achieved viz. to maintain discipline, efficiency and integrity of the employees and keep them away from the affairs of the Committee of Management which is concerned with matters of policy like deciding upon the activities of the Society, the methods of carrying them out, the strength of staff required and their emoluments etc. If an employee is permitted to busy himself with affairs of this character, there is no doubt that he would have no time for his normal duties of office. The disability, if removed, will lead to neglect of duty and diversion of intelligence and time to matters falling outside the scope of legitimate work. The disability imposed on paid employee members serves a public purpose in requiring such members to devote all their time and intelligence towards efficient discharge of their duties for which they are being paid from the funds of the society. Case law discussed.

(Para 17)

The right to be elected to a Body of Management of a Co-operative society is a statutory right and the statute which has created it has imposed restrictions which are quite reasonable and have a legitimate and public object to serve.

(Para 19)

Rule 16 which enumerates the disqualifications for membership on the committee of Management of a society has in the relative clauses conceived of a well defined classification between the members of the society and the members who are employees of a society. It is only a paid-employee member of a society that is disqualified from being a member on the committee of management of any society or of its financing Banks. The classification cannot be said to be either arbitrary or vague. Members of a society who are free citizens and are not employed by any society on payment are quite different from members who are paid servants of a society. Clause (c) does not prohibit an employee of a co-operative society from seeking election as member on the Committee of Management of a society consisting exclusively of paid-employees. Members of a society who are not paid employees of a society form a distinct class from members who are paid employees of the society. The burden or the disqualification imposed on paid employee-members of a Co-operative Society is not imposed on other members who are simply members of a Co-operative Society. The constitutional validity of the disqualification would necessarily depend upon the object which such disability is intended to serve.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Mysore Co-operative Societies Rules (1960), R. 16(1) (c) — Validity of — Not violative of Art. 14 — Disqualification imposed on paid employee members is reasonable and has a rational connection with the object sought to be achieved.

It is necessary in order to satisfy the requirements of Art. 14 of the Constitution that the basis of the classification must have some rational relationship with the object to be achieved. The test which should be applied in determining the validity of the burden imposed upon a class of people as distinct from another class, is that no one may be subject to any greater burdens and charges than are imposed on others in the same calling or condition or in like circumstances. No burden can be imposed on one class of persons, natural or artificial, and arbitrarily selected which is not in like conditions imposed on all other classes. Case law discussed.

The disqualification imposed on paid employee members under R. 16 (1) (c) of fidavit does not establish the contention of petitioner.

Where the constitutionality of a provision of law is assailed, absence of counter affidavit does not establish the contention of the petitioner. It is open to the Court in such cases to consider facts and circumstances of common knowledge, human experience, conduct of public affairs and legal functions of institutions in testing the reasonableness of the restriction.

U. Subramaniam, for Petitioner; K. S. Puttaswamy, High Court Govt. Pleader (for Nos. 1 and 2) for Respondents.

TUKOL, J.— This Writ Petition raises a question of some significance to employees working in Co-operative Societies governed by the Mysore Co-operative Societies Act, 1959 and the Mysore Co-operative Societies Rules, 1960.

2. The petitioner has been a member of the Gandhi Bazar Consumers' Co-operative Society, Shimoga, since 1963; and was one of the nominated members on the Committee of Management which elected him as Secretary at its meeting held on 14-8-1963. He was one of the nominated members under Order No. 1912/66-67 issued by the Assistant Registrar on 3-10-1966. This order was followed by a communication dated 27-10-1966; from that very Officer intimating the petitioner that his nomination had been withdrawn as he was not eligible to serve as Director on the Committee of Management of the Society under the provisions of R. 16 (1) (c) of the Mysore Co-operative Societies Rules, 1960 (hereinafter called the Rules). The petitioner then filed the present writ petition on December 2, 1966 challenging the validity of the communication (document No. 3) and the provisions contained in Rule 16 (1) (c) of the Rules.

3. No counter has been filed on behalf of any of the respondents. Since the petitioner's nomination under Document No. 2 dated 3-10-1966 on the Committee of Management of the Gandhi Bazar

Consumers' Co-operative Society Limited (Respondent No. 3) was for the year 1966-67, the period stipulated therein has since expired and the question of striking down Document No. 3 withdrawing the nomination of the petitioner on the Committee of Management does not survive.

4. So the sole question that arises for consideration in this writ petition is whether the provisions contained in Rule 16 (1) (c) of the Rules are valid. It is undisputed that the petitioner has been a paid employee of the Shimoga Co-operative Bank Limited. Shimoga and also of the Kalika Parameshwari Co-operative Society Limited. The contention of the petitioner is that while other members of a Co-operative Society are eligible to be elected to a Committee of Management the Rule disqualifying a paid-employee of a Society from becoming a member of the Committee of Management of another Society is ultra vires being violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution. According to him, the relevant provision makes an unwarranted discrimination against a paid-employee of a particular Society by denying him the right conferred on all the members.

5. Since the other clauses of Rule 16 (1) were relied upon for founding the plea of discrimination, we reproduce the provision of sub-rule (1) of R. 16:

"16. Disqualification for Membership of Committee.

(1) No member of a Co-operative Society shall be eligible for appointment as a member of the Committee of management of such Society, if—

(a) he is in default to the society in respect of any loan taken by him, for such period as is specified in the bye-laws of the society, or in any case for a period exceeding three months; or

(b) he has directly or indirectly, any interest in any subsisting contract made with the society or in any property sold or purchased by the Society or in any other transaction of the society, except in any investment made in, or any loan taken from the society;

(c) he is a paid employee of any society or of its financing bank, provided that this shall not apply to a paid employee of a co-operative society consisting exclusively of paid employees of co-operative societies;

(d) he is a near relation of a paid employee of the Society.

Explanation— 'Near Relation' here means father, mother, husband, wife, son, daughter, undivided brother or unmarried sister, or such other relation as may be declared by the Government to be near relation for purposes of this clause.

(e) if he is employed as paid legal practitioner on behalf of the society or accepts employment as legal practitioner against the society;

(f) if he has been removed from office under Cls. (b) and (c) of sub-rule (2);

Provided that this disqualification shall cease to operate after the period, if any, fixed in the order or after the expiry of 3 years from the date of the removal or earlier by an order of Government."

6. Mr. U. Subramaniam appearing for the petitioner submitted that even though the other clauses of sub-rule (1) imposed a disability only with reference to the Society in which the member had committed a default, had acquired interest in any subsisting contract or transaction, or had been employed as paid legal practitioner on behalf of the Society, or had accepted employment as legal practitioner against the society, Cl. (c) was so general that an employee of any Society or of its financing Bank was disqualified from being appointed as a member of the Committee of Management of each and every Society even though he might be a paid employee of only one Society. It is manifest from Cls. (a), (b), (d) and (e) that each of them has reference to a well-defined class of members. While Cl. (a) imposes a disqualification on a member who has been a defaulter of the society in respect of loan taken by him, Cl. (b) disqualifies a member from being a member on the Committee of Management if he has directly or indirectly any interest in any subsisting contract made with the Society; Clause (d) disqualifies a person from being such member if he has any relation of his as a paid employee of that Society. Cl. (e) disqualifies a legal practitioner who is employed on behalf of the Society or who accepts employment against the society from being on the Committee of Management. It was contended on behalf of the petitioner that it would have been defensible to some extent if the disqualification to be a member of the committee of Management of a Society had been restricted only to that Society in which the member was a paid employee; the ban placed by Cl. (c) on an employee is not only with reference to the Society of which he is a paid employee but also with reference to other Societies of which he is not an employee at all.

7. Mr. Subramaniam submitted that the rule was violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution as the disqualification imposed on employees is not based on a valid classification and the restriction imposed on the rights of an employee member was wholly unreasonable. In support of his contention, he placed reliance on two decisions of the Supreme Court in Ameerunnissa Begum v. Mahboob Begum, AIR 1953 SC 91 and Ram Prasad v. State of Bihar, AIR 1953 SC 215. He has also placed reliance on some passage from American Jurisprudence.

8. The decision in Ameerunnissa's case, AIR 1953 SC 91 discusses the validity of Waliuddowala Succession Act 1950. The Act was challenged by Mahboob Begum and Kadiran Begum and her children on the ground that it violated Art. 14 of the Constitution in depriving them of the benefit of the ordinary law viz., their claim to succession to the estate of deceased Nawab Waliuddowala. The Act had been promulgated with the avowed object to terminating disputes relating to succession to the estate of late Nawab Waliuddowala. The High Court and the Supreme Court held that the claim of the two widows and their children under the general law of the land to succeed to the property of Waliuddowala was itself a valuable right and the deprivation of that right by a piece of discriminative legislation was sufficient to bring the case within the purview of Art. 14 of the Constitution. The learned Advocate for the petitioner has relied upon paragraph 11 of the Judgment which reads as follows:—

".....It is well settled that a legislature which has to deal with diverse problems arising out of an infinite variety of human relations must, of necessity, have the power of making special laws to attain particular objects; and for that purpose it must have large powers of selection or classification of persons and things upon which such laws are to operate. Mere differentiation or inequality of treatment does not 'Per se' amount to discrimination within the inhibition of the equal protection clause. To attract the operation of the clause, it is necessary to show that the selection or differentiation is unreasonable or arbitrary; that it does not rest on any rational basis having regard to the object which the legislature has in view." On the strength of these propositions of law, it was contended that there was no classification as such deducible in the rule and even if there was any, it was so unreasonable or arbitrary as to be struck down by this Court.

9. In Rama Prasad's case, AIR 1953 SC 215 the Supreme Court had to consider the validity of the Bihar Sethi Lands (Restoration) Act (34 of 1950) which singled out two individuals and one solitary transaction entered into between them and another party and declared the transaction to be a nullity on the ground that it was contrary to the provisions of law although there had been no judicial pronouncement by any Court or Tribunal on that point; the legislation was struck down on the ground that the legislature had singled out two individuals out of many lessees and denied them the right which every Indian Citizen possessed to have that right adjudicated upon by a judicial tribunal in accordance with law which applied to his case. It was held that the Act came directly within the mischief of Article 14 of the Constitution and was struck down on that ground. In so doing, their Lordships referred to the nature and the scope of the guarantee implied in the equal protection clauses of the Constitution and stated that the presumption of constitutionality was of no avail to the State as there was no classification at all on the face of the statute.

10. It was contended by the learned Advocate for the petitioner that there was no reasonable classification implied in R. 16 and that the preamble to the Act did not indicate that the provisions had any object to achieve. Our attention was drawn to the preamble which states that in enacting the Mysore Co-operative Societies Act, 1959, the Legislature had thought it "expedient to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the Co-operative Societies in the State of Mysore." Since at the time of the enactment, there were different Acts relating to the Co-operative Societies functioning in the different areas comprising the new State of Mysore, the legislature merely stated in its preamble that its object was to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the Co-operative Societies. The object of the legislation can be easily gathered from the other provisions of the Act. The primary object is to facilitate and regulate the formation of Co-operative Societies which have as their objects "the promotion of economic interests or general welfare of its members or of the public in accordance with the co-operative principles." The various provisions of the Act are based on these solid principles of co-operation to serve the economic interests and the general welfare of the community. We have, therefore, to see whether the impugned clause of R. 16 is intended to serve this or any other rational object.

11. Rule 16 which enumerates the disqualifications for membership on the Committee of Management of a Society has in the relative clauses conceived of a well defined classification between the members of the Society and the members who are employees of a Society. It is only a paid-employee-member of a Society that is disqualified from being a member on the Committee of Management of any Society or of its financing Banks. The classification cannot be said to be either arbitrary or vague. Members of a Society who are free citizens and are not employed by any Society on payment are quite different from members who are paid servants of a Society. It should be noted at this stage that CL (c) does not prohibit an employee of a Co-operative Society from seeking election as member on the Committee of Management of a Society consisting exclusively of paid employees. In other words, where a Co-operative Society is formed exclusively by paid-employees of such Societies, it is open to each and every member of such Society, though some of them may happen to be paid employees, to seek election to membership on the Committee of Management. The disqualification operates only in respect of Societies which are formed by other members not employed on payment under any of the Societies.

12. While we have no doubt that this classification is well defined, it is necessary in order to satisfy the requirements of Art. 14 of the Constitution that the basis of the classification must have some rational relationship with the object to be achieved. In Ramakrishna Dalmia v. Justice Tendolkar, AIR 1958 SC 538 the Supreme Court has summarised on a close perusal of its earlier decisions the principles enunciated while considering the question of validity or constitutionality of any particular law attacked as discriminatory and indicated five classes in one of which the impugned statute is likely to fall. For the purpose of this case, we consider the following passage in class 1 relevant and accordingly quote it below—

"A statute may itself indicate the persons or things to whom its provisions are intended to apply and the basis of the classification of such persons or things may appear on the face of the statute or may be gathered from the surrounding circumstances known to or brought to the notice of the Court. In determining the validity or otherwise of such a statute the Court has to examine whether such classification is or can be reasonably regarded as based upon some differentia which distinguishes such persons or things grouped together from those left out of the group and whether such differentia has a reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute, no matter whether the provisions of the statute are intended to apply only to a particular person or thing or only to a certain class of persons or things. Where the Court finds that the classification satisfies the tests, the Court will uphold the validity of the law....."

13. What then is the object sought to be achieved by the Rule by denying the paid employee-members of a Co-operative Society the right to seek election as members on the Committee of Management of any Co-operative Society? The contention of the petitioner that he has got a fundamental right like other members, to stand for election has no force. The right to stand for election is a statutory right and the exercise of it will depend upon the provisions of law conferring the said right. In this connection we may refer to the decision of the Supreme Court in Sakhawant Ali v. State of Orissa, AIR 1955 SC 166. In that case, their Lordships had to consider the validity of Section 16 (1) (ix) of the Orissa Municipal Act, 1950 which laid down that no person shall be qualified for election to a seat in the Municipality if such person is employed as paid legal practitioner on behalf of the Municipality or as Legal Practitioner against the Municipality. This provision was attacked on the ground that it was violative of the fundamental rights guaranteed under Art. 14 and Art. 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution. In considering the attack under Art. 14, their Lordships observed—

".....Article 14 forbids class legislation but does not forbid reasonable classification for the purposes of legislation. That classification however, cannot be arbitrary but must rest upon some real and substantial distinction bearing a reasonable and just relation to the things in respect of which the classification is made. In other words the classification must have a reasonable relation to the object or the purpose sought to be achieved by the impugned legislation.

The classification here is of the legal practitioners who are employed on payment on behalf of the Municipality or act against the Municipality and those legal practitioners are disqualified from standing as candidates for election. The object or purpose to be achieved is the purity of public life; which object would certainly be thwarted if there arose a situation where there was a conflict between interest and duty. The possibility of such a conflict can be easily visualised, because if a municipal councillor is employed as a paid legal practitioner on behalf of the municipality there is likelihood of his misusing his position for the purposes of obtaining municipal briefs for himself and persuading the municipality to sanction unreasonable fees."

14. Dealing with the objection under Art. 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution, their Lordships stated—

"The right of the appellant to practice the profession of law guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (g) cannot be said to have been violated, because in laying down the disqualification in Section 16 (1) (ix) of the Act the Legislature does not prevent him from practising his profession of law but it only lays down that if he wants to stand as a candidate for election he shall not either be employed as a paid legal practitioner on behalf of the municipality or act as a legal practitioner against the municipality. There is no fundamental right in any person to stand as a candidate for election to the Municipality. The only fundamental right which is guaranteed is that of practising any profession or carrying on any occupation, trade or business....."

15. From the principles laid down by the Supreme Court in this decision, it would be clear that the right to stand for election to any statutory body is not a fundamental right but is only a statutory right. The restriction imposed on a legal practitioner engaged on behalf of the municipality or against the municipality disqualifying him from being a candidate at the election was held to be legal as the object sought to be achieved by it was purity of municipal administration and the possibility of such legal practitioner misusing his position as councillor. Logically it can be deduced from this decision that legal practitioners employed for or against a municipality are a class as distinguished from legal practitioners who are not so employed.

16. We have already pointed out that members of a Society who are not paid-employees of a Society form a distinct class from members who are paid-employees of the society. The tests which should be applied in determining the validity of the burden imposed upon a class of people as distinct from another class have been explained in the following passage in paragraph 528 of "American Jurisprudence 2nd Edition, Vol. 16, at page 918".

"In the exercise of the undoubted right of classification, it may often happen that some classes are subject to regulations and some individuals are burdened with obligations which do not rest on other classes or other individuals not similarly situated, but this fact does not necessarily vitiate a statute, because it would practically defeat legislation if it were laid down as an invariable rule that a statute is void if it does not bring all within its scope or subject all to the same burdens. Thus, it has been said that it is of the essence of a classification that on one class are cast duties and burdens different from those resting on the general public and that the very idea of classification is that of a inequality, so that the mere fact of inequality in no manner determines the matter of constitutionality. The general rule as to classification in the imposition of burdens is that no one may be subject to any greater burdens and charges than are imposed on others in the same calling or condition or in like circumstances. No burden can be imposed on one class or persons, natural or artificial, and arbitrarily selected, which is not in like conditions imposed on all other classes."

17. In the present case, the burden or the disqualification imposed on paid employee-members of a Co-operative Society is not imposed on other members who are simply members of a co-operative Society. The constitutional validity of the disqualification would necessarily depend upon the object which such disability is intended to serve. The main reason which seems to have weighed with the rule making authority is to keep the paid-employees of a Society free from parties and groups which involve themselves in election affairs. The primary duty of an employee is to concern himself wholly with the administrative aspects and with the duties which are inherent in the nature of his employment. The employee of an institution has to devote his full time during the working hours to the performance of duties entrusted to him. Devotion to duty and dedicated industry ought to guide him; in that sense discipline in office is of great importance. He has no concern with the policy-making or exercise of functions solely entrusted to a Committee of Management. The interest of the institution and public policy require that the employees are kept out from the Committee of Management. An employee getting elected to a Committee of Management may often be required to keep himself away from his legitimate work as a paid servant. He may prove a disturbing element amongst his co-employees and might use his position for his personal gain and advantage. These and other conditions might have weighed with the Government in disqualifying paid-employees from seeking election to the Committee of Management.

We have therefore, no hesitation in holding that the disqualification imposed on employee-members is reasonable and has a rational connection with the object sought to be achieved viz., to maintain discipline, efficiency and integrity of the employees and keep them away from the affairs of the Committee of Management which is concerned with matters of policy like deciding upon the activities of the Society, the methods of carrying them out, the strength of staff required and their emoluments etc. If an employee is permitted to busy himself with affairs of this character, there is no doubt that he would have no time for his normal duties of office. The disability, if removed, will lead to neglect of duty and diversion of intelligence and time to matters falling outside the scope of legitimate work. We are therefore, convinced that the disability imposed on paid-employee members serves a public purpose in requiring such members to devote all their time and intelligence towards efficient discharge of their duties for which they are being paid from the funds of the Society.

18. The learned Advocate for the petitioner drew our attention to the decision of the Madras High Court in State of Madras v. Murray and Co., AIR 1965 Mad 301, in which their Lordships had to consider the reasonableness of the restriction imposed on the fundamental right guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution. The appeals before their Lordships were against the decisions of a single Judge who dealt with the applications of the respondent under Art. 226 of the Constitution challenging the validity of a notification issued by the Commissioner of Police prohibiting the plying of hand-carts in day-time on Mount Road from Round Tana to Gemini Round about between 7-30 hours to 20 hours a Main Road in a business area. Their Lordships held that the impugned notification which totally prohibited the passage of hand-carts during daytime was invalid. In coming to this conclusion their Lordships relied upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Ramjilal v. State of U. P., AIR 1957 SC-620 in which the scope of Cl. (6) of Art. 19 has been dealt with. We do not see any analogy between the restriction held invalid in that case and the restriction under consideration.

19. The learned Advocate for the Petitioner further contended that as the respondent had not filed any counter affidavit, the impugned legislation should be held to be invalid as the restriction imposed on the right of a paid-employee member was prima facie unreasonable and sufficient to rebut the presumption of constitutionality of the rule. He quoted paragraphs 139 and 140 from Vol. 16 of American Jurisprudence which deal with the presumption of constitutionality and the limitations of that presumption. The relevant portion reads:

"The presumption of constitutionality of legislation is a strong one. But it is not conclusive; it is a rebuttable presumption of fact.

It has been held in some jurisdictions that when it is proposed by a statute to deny, modify, or diminish a right or immunity secured to the people by a clear and explicit constitutional provision, this presumption in favour of the constitutionality of statutes no longer applies, but a contrary presumption arises against the validity of such statute

... .. the presumption of constitutionality has been held inapplicable to a state statute abridging the freedom of press assured by state and federal constitutions.

These principles do not come into play in this case as there is neither a denial nor a diminishment of any fundamental right. Where the constitutionality of a provision of law is assailed, absence of counter affidavit does not establish the contention of the petitioner. It is open to the Court in such cases to consider facts and circumstances of common knowledge, human experience, conduct of public affairs and legal functions of institutions in testing the reasonableness of the restriction. We have discussed the impugned restriction with reference to relevant factors relating to Co-operative Societies and their normal activities. The right to be elected to a Body of Management of a Co-operative Society is a statutory right and the statute which has created it has imposed restrictions which, in our opinion, are quite reasonable and have a legitimate and public object to serve.

20. In the result, we hold that the order (document No. 3) issued by the Assistant Registrar of Co-operative Societies on 27-10-1966 is legal and the provisions under which the same was issued are constitutionally valid. The petitioner is not entitled to any relief. The petition is dismissed. In the circumstances of the case, we make no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

AIR 1970 MYSORE 106 (V 57 C 26)

A. R. SOMNATH IYER, J.

M/s. Multanmal Chempalal, Bellary, Appellant v. M/s. C. P. Shah & Co., Bombay, Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 312 of 1965, D/- 31-7-1969, from decree of Civil J., Bellary, D/- 22-9-1964.

Sale of Goods Act (1930), S. 26 — Sale of goods — Buyer may agree to take risk even before property in goods, passes to him — Clause 7 in contract providing that risk passed to buyer on despatch of goods and buyer not entitled to make claim in respect of loss or damage — Clause 8 providing for passing of title only on payment of full price — Condition in Cl. 7 held absolute and not controlled by Cl. 8 — Delay in payment of price due to default of buyer and consequent loss of goods — Case falls under first proviso to S. 26 and buyer not entitled to claim damages for loss.

Under Section 26, Sale of Goods Act prima facie the risk passes only with property, but the section authorises a contract to the contrary under which the risk passes even before the title to the property passes. So it is permissible for the contracting parties to enter into an agreement that although property does not pass, the risk passes and they may fix the point of time when it so passes. (Para 7)

The plaintiff agreed to purchase cloth pieces from defendant. Clause 7 of the contract provided "if the goods are to be booked to upcountry the same will be done at the buyer's risk and no claim shall be entertained for the loss or damage." Clause 8 of the contract provided "until the full payment of this bill is received the goods covered by this bill shall be the seller's property." The defendant despatched the goods through a public carrier from Bombay to Bellary on 7-3-1957 but the payment of the price was made only in May owing to a dispute about Bank charges. The defendant thereafter forwarded the necessary receipt for taking delivery but the plaintiff could not take delivery as the goods were found missing or lost. The plaintiff sued to recover the amount paid by him.

Held (i) that the protection which the seller gave to himself under Cl. 7 was not in any way controlled by Cl. 8. The condition in Cl. 7 that the risk passed to the buyer at the point of time when they were despatched by the seller to the buyer was absolute and that being so, the provision contained in Cl. 8 that property shall not pass until the full price is paid did not arrest the passing of that risk. Clause 7 was in truth an agreement to the contrary which controlled the operation of the general rule which Section 26 of the Sale of Goods Act incorporates.

(Para 8)

(ii) that in the circumstances it was clear that the loss would not have occurred if plaintiff had not unreasonably delayed the payment due to dispute about Bank charges. Hence, the first proviso to Section 26 was attracted and the loss must be borne by the plaintiff, quite apart from the provisions of Cl. 7 of the contract.

(Para 11)

V. Tarakaram, for Appellant; S. G. Sundaraswamy, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— The appellant is the plaintiff and his suit was for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 2,100 from the defendant from whom he agreed to purchase some quantity of cloth pieces for a sum of Rs. 1,449-12-3 towards which the plaintiff paid an advance of Rs. 50. The goods were despatched from Bombay to Bellary in a truck belonging to a public carrier on March 7, 1957, but the balance of the price payable by the plaintiff was paid only in May through a bank draft. Until then, there was a controversy with respect to a small sum of money which represented bank charges, the payment of which was insisted upon by the defendant but was refused by the plaintiff. Eventually the plaintiff paid that amount only in May nearly two months after the goods had been despatched through the public carrier. The defendant then on May 20, 1957 forwarded the necessary receipt on the presentation of which the plaintiff could collect the goods from the carrier, but the plaintiff could not obtain delivery of those goods, which by then, were missing. This suit was instituted in that situation for the recovery of the price paid by the plaintiff to the defendant.

2. The defendant resisted the suit on the ground that under the terms of the contract between the parties, the goods were at the plaintiff's risk after their despatch by the seller and that clause reads:

"If the goods are to be booked to upcountry, the same will be done at the buyer's risk and no claim shall be entertained for any loss or damage." It is not disputed that the despatch of the goods from Bombay to Bellary fell within this clause, and that if nothing else could be said about it, once those goods are despatched by the defendant from Bombay to the plaintiff, the defendant would be under no liability to pay any compensation for their loss or destruction. That, was, the view taken by the two Courts below which dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

3. But in this appeal preferred by the plaintiff, Mr. Tarakaram advanced the contention that the courts below depended upon clause 7 in isolation, without considering the effect of Clause 8, under which, according to Mr. Tarakaram, the goods continued to be at the seller's risk until the full price payable by the plaintiff was paid. That clause reads:

"Until the full payment of this bill is received the goods covered by this bill shall be the seller's property".

4. It was contended by Mr. Tarakaram that under Clause 8 the goods continued to be the goods of the seller even after the goods had been despatched from Bombay since the price was paid by the plaintiff only in May 1957. Mr. Tarakaram also contended that the evidence discloses that the goods never reached Bellary and that they must have been lost in transit at a point of time when the seller was still the owner of the goods and the property in those goods had not yet passed to the buyer.

5. This was not the ground on which the plaintiff maintained his claim before the courts below and no issue was raised with respect to that matter. Even on the assumption that Clause 8 controlled the operation of Clause 7, what was necessary for the plaintiff to establish in order to sustain his dependence on Cl. 8 was that the goods were lost before the plaintiff paid the price, and, with respect to that matter Mr. Tarakaram was unable to point out any evidence. It is obvious that the plaintiff did not at any stage attempt to support his claim in the way in which Mr. Tarakaram attempted to maintain it in this Court. So the question whether the goods continued to be the goods of the defendant when they were lost was one into which no investigation was made by the two courts below.

6. Moreover, it does not appear to me that the protection which the seller gave to himself under Clause 7 was to any extent controlled by Clause 8. All that Clause 8 states is the point of time when the property in the goods passes from the seller to the buyer. It speaks nothing about the responsibility for loss or destruction of the goods even before the property in the goods passes to the buyer. On that question Clause 7 is complete and exhaustive. It says that once the goods are despatched by the seller, they shall be at the risk of the buyer who will not have any right to make any claim against the seller in respect of loss or damage. This condition in the contract is absolute and is to no extent subject to the provisions of clause 8, and, clause 7 is a contract to the contrary within the meaning of Section 26 of the Sale of Goods Act which reads:

"Risk prima facie with property. — Unless otherwise agreed, the goods remain at the seller's risk until the property therein is transferred to the buyer, but when the property therein is transferred to the buyer the goods are at the buyer's risk whether delivery has been made or not:

Provided that where delivery has been delayed through the fault of either buyer or seller, the goods are at the risk of the party in fault as regards any loss which might not have occurred but for such fault;

Provided also that nothing in this section shall affect the duties or liabilities of either seller or buyer as a bailee of the goods of the other party."

7. The clear meaning of this section is that prima facie the risk passes only with property, but the section authorises a contract to the contrary under which the risk passes even before the title to the property passes. So it is permissible for the contracting parties to enter into an agreement that although property does not pass, the risk passes and they may fix the point of time when it so passes.

8. In this case, the contract entered into between the parties with respect to that matter was that the risk passes to the buyer at the point of time when they are despatched by the seller to the buyer and that being so, the provision contained in clause 8 that property shall not pass until the full price paid does not arrest the passing of that risk. Clause 7 is in truth an agreement to the contrary which controls the operation of the general rule which Section 26 of the Sale of Goods Act incorporates.

9. That being so, the contention that the goods were lost when they had not become the property of the plaintiff but continued to be the property of the defendant, cannot assist the plaintiff's claim if it otherwise has to fail under clause 7. And in my opinion, it has to, in that way.

10. There is also another reason why the plaintiff's claim must be negatived. The first proviso to Section 26 says that where delivery has been delayed either because of the fault of the buyer or the seller, the goods are at the risk of the party in fault with respect to any loss which might not have otherwise occurred. In the case before me, it is obvious from the correspondence between the parties that the goods were despatched by the defendant as early as on March 7, 1957 as can be seen from Exhibit P-3, the carrier addressed a communication to the plaintiff on June 13, 1957 which stated that the goods so despatched reached Bellary within a few days, and that for about three months they were lying in the octroi office obviously for the reason that during all the period the plaintiff was carrying on a vexatious correspondence with the defendant with respect to a small sum of money representing bank charges, although eventually it was only in May, that he agreed to pay those charges.

11. So it was, that delivery could not be made to the plaintiff until May 20, 1957 on which date the necessary document of title was handed over to the plaintiff's representative in Bombay as can be seen from Exhibit P-2. It is quite reasonable to infer that the goods were lost some time between the middle of March 1957 when the goods must have reached Bellary and May 20, 1957 when payment in full was made by the plaintiff, and that during that period when the plaintiff was in default in resisting the demand for the payment of bank charges the goods must have been lost, is, I think, a fair and proper inference. That loss, it is obvious, would not have occurred if the plaintiff had not unreasonably delayed the payment of the bank charges during a long period of two months. So, on the admitted facts, it is obvious that the first proviso to Section 26 is attracted and the loss must be borne by the plaintiff, quite apart from the provisions of clause 7 of the contract.

12. So I dismiss this appeal. No costs.
Appeal dismissed.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 35, S. 47 — Acknowledgment of delivery of possession by decree-holder — Judgment-debtor is entitled to raise objection as to validity of delivery of possession. 1968 (1) Mys. L. J. 311, held, not correct in view of AIR 1961 S.C. 272.

Where the decree-holder filed a memo acknowledging delivery of possession and seeking suitable orders and the judgment-debtor sought by application to raise objections in regard to the validity of the order passed for delivery of possession and the consequent order disposing of the execution petition, the rejection of that application is illegal. The Court should dispose of the same on merits after giving the decree-holders an opportunity to file their objections. The pendency of certain proceedings relating to the property in dispute does not disentitle the judgment debtors from raising the objections in respect of which they have sought permission. (1968) 1 Mys. L. J. 311, held, is not correct in view of AIR 1961 SC 272.

JUDGMENT:— The appellants who are the decree-holders sued out execution of the decree ultimately confirmed in S. A. No. 275/1965 on 24-2-1966. For delivery of possession of the property they made an application in L. C. D. No. 140/1966 on the file of the First Additional Munsiff, Hubli and obtained possession of the property on 17-4-1966. On 1-6-1966, the decree-holders filed a memo marked Ex. 14 acknowledging delivery of possession of the properties and seeking suitable orders. On the same day, the judgment-debtors made an application marked Ex. 15 opposing the memo filed by the decree-holders, stating that the possession of the property was handed over to them. The judgment-debtors further submitted that the purported delivery of possession on 17-4-1966 was not legal and that the same is not binding on the judgment-debtors and that they may be given an opportunity to file objections in this regard. The learned Munsiff passed an order on Exhibit 14 in the following terms:

"possession delivered. E. P. disposed off".

2. This order is dated 3-6-1966. On the same day, the learned Munsiff rejected the application of the judgment-debtors seeking an opportunity to file objections in regard to delivery of possession. Against this order dated 3-6-1966, the judgment-debtors filed Civil Appeal No. 119 of 1966 before the Civil Judge, Hubli. The appellate court allowed the appeal and set aside the order passed by the learned Munsiff and remanded the matter to the trial Court for fresh trial and disposal according to law. It is against this order the decree-holders have preferred this Second Appeal.

3. This appeal appears to have been registered earlier as Civil Revision Petition No. 658 of 1967 but later, it came to be registered as Miscellaneous Second Appeal No. 36 of 1969. The order passed by the learned Civil Judge is not to set aside the order passed on Ex. 14 but merely deals with the order rejecting Ex. 15.

4. Sri. B. V. Deshpande, learned counsel for the appellants contends that an application like Ex. 15 is not maintainable as the same was filed at a stage when possession of the property has already been delivered. He placed strong reliance on a decision of this court reported in 1968 (1) Mys. L. J. 311. Though it appears that the said decision supports the contention of Sri Deshpande, it cannot be of much use to him in view of the decision of the Supreme Court reported in AIR 1961 S.C. 272. It was pointed out by the respondent's counsel that when the decision reported in 1968 (1) Mys. L. J. 311 was tendered, the Supreme Court's decision has not been brought to its notice. With reference to the contention that the objection could not be raised by the judgment-debtor after the decree-holder acknowledges delivery of possession, it is observed in the above cited High Court decision that:

"the learned counsel for the respondent has not drawn my attention to any provision in the Code which entitles a judgment-debtor to raise objections before the executing Court that the delivery of possession accepted by the decree-holders as complete and effectual is a paper delivery."

It is further observed that:

"At the stage of delivery, the Code does not contemplate any objection being raised by the judgment-debtor to the delivery of possession made under R. 35 or 36 of Order XXI.....".

"In my judgment, at the stage of delivery the judgment-debtor has no interest in the property to protect and he is not entitled to raise any objection to the delivery effected through the process of the Court which is accepted by the decree-holder, except where objection is raised that there is excess delivery or that property not covered by the decree is delivered."

5. The learned counsel Sri V. S. Math appearing for the judgment-debtor, who places reliance on AIR 1961 S.C. 272, submits that it takes a different view. This submission is not without force. The appellants therein took out execution on 9th July 1951 and got possession of the property on 22nd July 1951. On 13th August 1951, the respondent-judgment-debtor made an application to the executing Court under Sections 47, 144 and 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure for setting aside the ex parte order of delivery of possession and for re-delivery of possession of the house to him. The District Judge rejected the said application. But on appeal, this order was reversed and the High Court directed the decree-holders to return possession of the house in dispute to the judgment-debtor. The High Court held that the executing Court has no jurisdiction to order the eviction of the respondent because of the provisions of Mysore House Rent and Accommodation Control Order 1948, which was in operation on the date of eviction. Regarding the applicability and the maintainability of the application, the Supreme Court observed:

"The inapplicability of Section 47 to the proceedings out of which the appeal has arisen was also raised before us, but that contention is equally unsubstantial because the question whether the decree was completely satisfied and therefore, the court became functus officio is a matter relating to execution, satisfaction and discharge of the decree". Further it is observed:

"When a sale in execution of a decree is impugned on the ground that it is not warranted by the terms thereof, that question could be agitated, when it arises between parties to the decree, only by an application under Section 47, and not in a separate suit."

It may further be stated that the objection raised by the judgment-debtor in the case reported in 1968 (1) Mys. L. J. 311, was that the delivery effected to the decree-holder by the bailiff was, only a paper delivery and actual delivery had not been effected and therefore record of delivery could not be made but the Court overruling the objection recorded delivery of possession; the decree-holder had accepted delivery of possession effected through the bailiff of the court without any objection and it is in these circumstances that the High Court held that the judgment-debtor was precluded from raising any objection relating to the delivery of possession. Though the observations appear to lend support to the appellant's contention they should be taken with reference to the facts of the case. For this reason also the observations relied upon by the appellant's counsel cannot assist his contention.

6. The application for re-delivery of possession was made in the case decided by the Supreme Court after the delivery of possession was made. What is now sought by the judgment-debtors in this case under Ex. 15 is to raise objections in regard to the validity of the order passed for delivery of possession and the consequent order disposing of the execution petition.

7. The learned Judge does not advert to the merits of the objections sought to be raised by the judgment-debtors. It may be mentioned here that the judgment-debtors filed their objection statement before the appellate Court but the appellate Court has not gone into the merits of the objections which he could not properly go into.

8. Sri Deshpande submitted that the judgment-debtors have made an application under Section 41 of the Mysore Land Reforms Act and the same is pending. Further, it is submitted that the respondents have filed a petition for review of the judgment of this court in S. A. No. 275 of 1965. The judgment-debtors have further filed a Long Cause Suit for a declaration that the proceedings before the learned Munsiff are null and void and that their possession was protested. It appears to me that the pendency of these proceedings do not disentitle the judgment-debtors from raising the objections in respect of which they have sought permission under Ex. 15. In my opinion, the trial Court erred in shutting out the judgment-debtors from raising the objections. It was not proper that the judgment-debtors should have been permitted to make an application incorporating their objections and seeking such reliefs as they thought proper and the trial Court ought to have disposed of the same on merits after giving the decree-holder an opportunity to file their objections. In this view of the matter, it appears to me that the order of the learned Civil Judge allowing Ex. 15 and setting aside the order of the Munsiff dated 3-3-1966 rejecting Ex. 15 is correct.

9-10. The learned Munsiff will now receive the application filed by the judgment-debtors in the appellate Court and proceed to dispose of the same on merits, after giving the decree-holders an opportunity to file their objections.

11. The order passed at present in the Execution Petition will be subject to the final orders on the objection petition filed by the judgment-debtors as permitted by the lower-appellate Court.

12. With these observations, the Second Appeal is dismissed.

13. There will be no order as to costs. Order accordingly.

Finance Act (1950), S. 2 (11) (a) proviso — Assessee submitting return for assessment year 1950-51 — Income from 1-7-1949 to 31-3-1950 shown — Permission under S. 2 (11) (a) proviso of the Act to change the period of 'previous year' to nine months granted — Income cannot be assessed at the rate applicable for twelve months' income.

The discretion vested in the Income Tax Officer under S. 2 (11) (a) proviso of the Act is limited to the period of the previous year only. Once the period of 'previous year' is fixed and the income of the 'previous year' is determined that income can be charged at the rates specified in the Finance Act and at no other rate. Where the Income Tax Officer accorded consent for change of the 'previous year' to cover the period of nine months from 1-7-1949 to 31-3-1950 it was held that the assessee's income for the nine months ending on 31-3-1950 can be taxed only at the rate applicable for the income of the said period of nine months and not at the rates applicable for twelve months income. K. Srinivasan, for Applicant. S. R. Rajashekhar Moorthy, for Respondent.

ORDER:— The questions referred for our decision under Section 66 (2) of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, hereinafter referred to as the Act are:—

1. Whether the Income Tax Tribunal was justified in law in refusing to entertain the additional ground of appeal urged by the Assessee regarding the correct rate of tax applicable or to be applied for the nine months' income considered in the assessment?

2. Whether the Assessee's income for nine months ended on 31-3-1950 could have been rightly assessed at the rate applicable for twelve months' income?

3. Whether there was any material available on record to support the Tribunal's conclusion that the Assessee's turnover for the year ended 31-3-1950 was Rs. 15,00,000/-.

2. The learned counsel on both sides were agreed that question No. 1 need not be answered as the said question is involved in Question No. 2 which was directed by this Court to be referred as it arises out of the order of the Tribunal. The learned counsel for the Assessee, Sri K. Srinivasan, did not press question No. 3 and he submitted that the same may be answered in favour of the Revenue.

3. The only question that requires to be answered is Question No. 2. In our opinion, the Judgment of the Supreme Court in Esthuri Aswathaiah v. Commr. of Income Tax, Mysore, (1966) 60 ITR 411 = (AIR 1966 S.C. 1285), furnishes a complete answer and the question has to be answered in favour of the assessee.

4. The relevant facts so far as they are material for the purpose of answering question No. 2 as found in the statement of the case submitted by the Tribunal are as follows:—

5. The Mysore Income Tax Act, 1923 was repealed and the Act was extended to the erstwhile Mysore State by Section 13 of the Indian Finance Act, 1950 with effect from the first of April 1950.

Under the Act, the 'financial year' commences on the first of April, and the expression 'previous year' is defined in Sec. 2 (11). In 1950 it read thus:—

"2(11). 'Previous year' means in respect of any separate source of income, profits and gains—"

"(a) the twelve months ending on the 31st day of March next preceding the year for which the assessment is to be made, or, if the accounts of the assessee have been made upto a date within the said twelve months in respect of a year ending on any date other than the said 31st day of March, then at the option of the assessee the year ending on the day to which his accounts have so been made up;

Provided that where an assessee has once been assessed in respect of a particular source of income, profits and gains, he shall not in respect of that source exercise this option so as to vary the meaning of the expression 'previous year' as then applicable to him except with the consent of the Income Tax Officer and upon such conditions as the Income-tax Officer may think fit.

(c)(omitted as unnecessary).

6. Under the Act, the tax is levied for each financial year commencing on the first April at the rate or rates prescribed in the Finance Act in force for the time being and is actually charged on the total income of the 'previous year'. The year for which the tax is paid is called the 'assessment year' or 'income-tax year'. 'Previous year' on the income of which the tax is levied is called the 'accounting year'.

7. For the assessment year 1949-50, the Assessee was assessed under the Mysore Income Tax Act on his income earned during the accounting year ended on 30th June 1949. By reason of the repeal of the Mysore Income Tax Act and the extension of the Indian Income Tax Act, the first assessment year under the Act commencing on the first of April, so far as the erstwhile Mysore State was concerned, was the assessment year commencing on the first of April 1950. The Assessee submitted his Return for the assessment year 1950-51 commencing on the first of April 1950 in respect of the income earned during the period of nine months from 1-7-1949 to 31-3-1950. He sought the consent of the Income-tax Officer for allowing him to change the financial year ending on 31st March. That request of the Assessee was granted by the Income-tax Officer, but with a condition that the income of the period from 1-7-1949 to 31-3-1950 would be assessed at the rates applicable to the income of twelve months.

8. The Income Tax Officer assessed the income that had accrued during the period of nine months at the rates applicable to the income of twelve months. That order was affirmed on appeal by the Appellate Authorities. Hence the matter has come up on a reference sought at the instance of the Assessee.

9. It was argued by Sri. K. Srinivasan, the learned counsel for the Assessee, that the proviso to clause (a) of sub-sec. (11) of Section 2 of the Act does not empower the Income-tax Officer to impose a condition that the Assessee shall be assessed at the rates applicable to the income of twelve months where consent is granted for change of the 'previous year' even where as a result of the change the period of the 'previous year' becomes less than twelve months.

10. In (1966) 60 ITR 411=(AIR 1966 S.C. 1285), the facts were as follows:— The appellant, who had adopted the year ending on June 30th as the 'previous year' was assessed to tax for the year ending June 30, 1950, for the assessment year 1951-52. For the assessment year 1952-53, he filed a return for 21 months commencing on July 1, 1950, and ending on March 31, 1952, and to this change the Income-tax Officer accorded his sanction and he assessed the total income for the period of 21 months at the rate applicable to that total income.

11. One of the main contentions urged by the Assessee which was rejected by the Supreme Court was that the income for 21 months should be assessed at the rate applicable to the income of the last period of twelve months. In the said case, the Supreme Court laid down the following three propositions:

(1) That the length of a 'previous year' need not necessarily be twelve calendar months.

(2) Where the Income-tax Officer accords his consent to a change of the 'previous year', he has ample power to impose the condition that the full period from the end of the 'previous year' for the preceding year's assessment to the end of the new accounting year should be taken as the 'previous year' for the current assessment year. In a case where the 'previous year' at any given time applicable to the Assessee ends on June 30th and he wants to vary it so as to make it end on March 31st next, the Income-tax Officer has power to accord sanction to the change on the condition that the 'previous year' would consist of the entire period of 21 months commencing on June 30th of the year upto which his accounts were last made upto March 31st of the year upto which his accounts are newly made up.

(3) Where the Income-tax Officer accords consent for change of the 'previous year' he has no power to vary the rate at which the income of the 'previous year' is to be assessed.

12. The law as laid down by the Supreme Court is that once the length of the 'previous year' is fixed and the income of the 'previous year' is determined that income must be charged at the rates specified in the Finance Act and at no other rate.

13. It was argued by the learned counsel for the Revenue that under the proviso to clause (a) of sub-section (11) of Section 2, the Income-tax Officer has the power to accord consent for the change upon such conditions as he may think fit and that power comprehends within its ambit the power to impose a condition that where the 'previous year', as a result of the change allowed, falls below twelve months, the Assessee shall be liable to pay tax at the rates applicable to the income of twelve months. It is clear from the judgment of the Supreme Court that the discretion vested in the Income-tax Officer under the proviso is limited to the period of the 'previous year' only. It was open to the Income-tax Officer in the instant case to impose a condition that the Assessee's 'previous year' for the Assessment year 1951-52 shall be a period of 21 months commencing from 1-7-1949 to 31-3-1951. That, the Income-tax Officer has not done. He has accorded consent for change of the 'previous year' to cover that period of nine months from 1-7-1949 to 31-3-1950. Having accorded consent, he had no power under the Act to impose a condition to charge tax at a rate higher than the rate charged under the Finance Act. That power is a legislative power and cannot be exercised by any authority exercising power under the Act.

14. We therefore answer question No. 2 in favour of the Assessee that the Assessee's Income for the nine months ended on 31-3-1950 can be taxed only at the rates applicable for the income of the said period of nine months and not at the rates applicable for twelve months' income. Question No. 3 is answered in the affirmative in favour of the Revenue in view of the concession made by the learned counsel for the Assessee. The respondent will pay the costs of the Assessee. State of Mysore, Respondent.

Writ Petn. No. 1755 of 1966, D/- 12-9-1969.

States Reorganisation Act (1956), Ss. 116, 117 — First stage promotion of allottee after reorganisation — Protection of service conditions in respect of pay scales — Benefit when available — Government of India Memorandum dated 12-5-1957 para 5 — Interpretation.

Where a Government servant is allotted to a new State on reorganisation, on the first promotion, he is entitled, in view of the directive contained in para 5 of the Government of India Memorandum dated 12-5-1957, to the protection of service conditions in respect of pay scales that would have been admissible to him on such promotion in his parent State before reorganization if such scale is more favourable than the scale attached to the post in the new or reorganized State to which he is allotted. The essence of para 5 is that the benefit of higher pay scale which a Government Servant would have got in his parent State, had he continued there, is not to be taken away from him for reason only of the fact that he has got allotted to another State under the States Reorganization Act. The said protection is also limited to the first promotion in the new State. (Para 5)

Before one could say that a pay scale is higher than another pay scale with reference to posts, there must first be an equivalence in the matter of functions and responsibilities of the posts. The allottee can complain of prejudice only if the pay scale of a post to which he is promoted in the new State is lower than the pay scale of a similar or equivalent post in his parent State, to which he would have been promoted. If the post in the parent State which carries higher salary is a superior post whose functions and responsibilities are more important and heavier than those of the post to which he is promoted in the new State, he cannot complain of any prejudice at all. What para 5 proposes to do is to meet a grievance or to avoid a prejudice. As prejudice or grievance can arise only if the two posts are of equal importance and the salary of the post in the parent State is higher than the salary of the post in the new State, that is the only situation sought to be met by the said paragraph. Kulkarni v. State of Mysore 3

S. Rangaraj, for Petitioner; N. S. Chandrashekhar, High Court Govt. Pleader, for Respondent.

NARAYANA PAI, J.:— This is a writ petition for a direction in the nature of mandamus to be issued to the State Government for fixing the pay of the petitioner on promotion as Inspecting Officer in the Department of Indian Medicine with effect from 23-9-1958 in the pay that the requisite intention to justify a conviction u/s. 447 I. P. C. has not been proved and the mere fact that the action of petitioners resulted in annoyance to the complainant, even if true, cannot amount to criminal trespass. On the other hand, for the opposite party, it is contended that when the land in question was in possession of the complainant, the action of petitioners cannot but be construed as one done with intent to annoy him.

5. The principle of law has been clearly explained by the Supreme Court in the decision reported in AIR 1964 SC 986, Smt. Mathri v. State of Punjab as follows:

"In order to establish that entry on the property was with intent to annoy, intimidate or insult, it is necessary for the court to be satisfied that causing such annoyance, intimidation or insult was the aim of the entry; that it is not sufficient for that purpose to show merely that the natural consequence of the entry was likely to be annoyance, intimidation or insult, and that this likely consequence was known to the persons entering; that in deciding whether the aim of the entry was the causing of such annoyance, intimidation or insult, the court has to consider all the relevant circumstances, including the presence of knowledge that its natural consequences would be such annoyance, intimidation or insult and including also the probability of something else than the causing of such intimidation, insult or annoyance, being the dominant intention which prompted the entry." All that the learned Magistrate has found was that the action of petitioners caused annoyance to the complainant who was in possession of the disputed land. He has failed to determine taking all circumstances into consideration including the natural consequence of the act and the plea of the petitioners whether the dominant intention of the entry was to cause annoyance.

In the present case, admittedly, petitioner no. 1 was serving as gomasta-jhankar under the complainant for 7 or 8 years and claims to have been given the piece of land in question towards his remuneration. While the complainant says that he was giving five pudugs of paddy every year as remuneration, there is no clear finding whether the remuneration consisted of paddy, as alleged by the complainant, or the land had been given as asserted by petitioner no. 1. In the circumstances, when all that the petitioners did was to plough the land and spread manure asserting that petitioner no. 1 has been in possession of that land in lieu of his wages, it will not be reasonable to conclude that the dominant intention of making the entry was to annoy the complainant. On the other hand, the dominant intention in all probability was to assert possession over the land. Merely because by such assertion annoyance resulted to the complainant, it cannot be said that the trespass amounted to criminal trespass punishable u/s. 447 I. P. C.

6. In the result, the revision is allowed, the conviction and sentence are set aside and the petitioners are acquitted.

Revision allowed.

G. K. MISRA, C. J.: The petitioner was dismissed from service on 30-12-67. The Divisional Forest Officer, however, gave retrospective operation to the order of dismissal by saying that the services of Sri Ramakanta Mohanty Forest Guard are dispensed with, with effect from the date of his absconding from head quarters, i.e. from 23-5-66. The only contention urged by Mr. R. N. Das is that the order of dismissal cannot be given retrospective operation. This is concluded by the decision in AIR 1966 SC 951, Jeeva Ratnam v. State of Madras. It was stated therein that the order of dismissal would be valid from the date when it was passed and the retrospective part can be separated from the order of dismissal. Following the aforesaid decision, we hold that the dismissal order would take effect from 30-12-67.

Gopinath Das, Petitioner v. Alekh Sahu and others, Opposite Parties.

Criminal Revn. No. 171 of 1967, D/- 5-9-1969, against order of Judicial Magistrate, Daspalla, Campnayagarh, D/- 12-12-1966.

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 439—Revision against acquittal at instance of private party — Interference with finding of acquittal by Court when justifiable — Mere possibility of arriving at contrary conclusion on basis of evidence on record does not justify interference.

It is true that it is open to the High Court in revision to set aside an order of acquittal even at the instance of private parties although the State might not have thought fit to appeal, this jurisdiction should be exercised by the High Court only in exceptional cases when there is some glaring defect in the procedure or there is a manifest error on a point of law and consequently there has been a flagrant miscarriage of justice. No criteria has been laid down for determining such exceptional cases which would cover all contingencies. But some cases of this kind which would justify the High Court in interfering with the finding of acquittal in revision are (1) where the trial court has no jurisdiction to try the cases but has still acquitted the accused, (2) where the trial court has wrongly shut out evidence which the prosecution wished to produce, (3) where the court of appeal has wrongly held evidence which was admitted by the trial Court to be inadmissible, (4) where material evidence has been overlooked either by the trial Court or by the appeal court and (5) where the acquittal is based on a compounding of the offence which is invalid under the law. AIR 1962 SC 1788, Foll.

(Para 5)

A mere possibility for another court to arrive at a contrary conclusion on the basis of evidence on record cannot by itself be a reason to set aside the order of acquittal.

(Para 5)

(B) Penal Code (1860). S. 102 — Right of private defence — How long continues — Attempt to assault accused with weapon by the injured—Weapon snatched away by accused—No evidence to show any attempt by injured to snatch back the weapon or to secure any other weapon — Inflicting of injuries by accused on the injured by the weapon held could not be in private defence.

The right of private defence commences as soon as a reasonable apprehension of danger to the body arises from an attempt or threat to commit the offence although the offence might not have been committed, and it continues as long as such apprehension of danger to the body continues. Whether a person claiming to exercise right of private defence had any reasonable apprehension of danger or not depends on the state of his mind at that time and it is for him to say what danger he apprehended. Outsiders cannot divine what was passing in his mind.

Where the accused alleged that since the injured person wanted to assault him with a tangia which he (injured) was holding at the time of occurrence, the accused snatched away the weapon and assaulted him with it till the injured fell down on the ground and there was no evidence or allegation by the accused himself that there was any attempt on the part of the injured person either to snatch back the weapon or to secure any weapon from elsewhere:

Held, that the accused had failed to establish that the right of private defence was available to him. So long as Tangia was in the hands of the injured and the latter attempted to kill him, accused had every justification to apprehend danger to his body and consequently he would have been justified to inflict such injury as he would have considered necessary to save himself. But once the Tangia was snatched away by accused from the injured, there could not have been any further apprehension in the mind of accused. If there was evidence to show that after the Tangia was seized from injured the latter was attempting to catch hold of some other weapon, that could have been a sufficient justification for accused to exercise his right of private defence.

Kanungo and R. N. Mohanty, for Petitioner; R. K. Kar and R. Mohanty, for Opposite Parties.

ORDER:— This application in revision is directed against an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Daspalla acquitting the opposite parties, thirteen in number, who were prosecuted on charges under Section 148/426 I. P. C. and five of whom, namely, Denei Sahu, Mahajan Naik, Kirantan Padhan, Mohan Naik and Udaya Sahu also under Sections 326/324/323, I. P. C. The case against them is that at about 6 A. M. on 28-3-1965 they formed themselves into an unlawful assembly and being armed with Katis, Tangias, Farsa and Lathis restrained Lingaraj Das while he was proceeding on a cycle and dealt blows on him thereby causing simple and grievous hurt on his person. The opposite parties pleaded not guilty. Their case is that there are two factions in the village for the last about 12 years, Lingaraj Das (injured) and Arakhit Barik are leaders of one faction while petitioners Alekh Sahu and Danei Sahu are leaders of the other faction, and there was a number of cases between them. Some-time previous to the occurrence, Lingaraj Das was convicted under Section 307 I. P. C. for attempting to commit the murder of one Lokanath Misra and in that case some of the members of the opposite party were witnesses for the prosecution. Since then, Lingaraj Das used to move on cycle with a Farea for his personal safety. In mouza Kurum Bankatara where the occurrence took place and to which place all the parties belong, Dutikeshwar Mahadeb of which one Lokanath Misra was the Managing trustee owns some lands and opposite party no. 2 Mahajan Naik was cultivating some of the lands of the deity as a bhag tenant. After Lokanath Misra, Durga Madhab Deo became the trustee of the temple and Lingaraj Das as an agent of Durga Madhab Deo was looking after the affairs of the deity. On the date preceding the occurrence, Lingaraj Das wanted to dislodge Mahajan Naik from the land which he was cultivating. On the date of occurrence when Lingaraj Das was passing by the side of Mahajan's house on a cycle, the latter questioned him as to why he was attempting to dispossess him from the land. Lingaraj got down from his cycle and taking up the Tangia which he was holding wanted to assault Mahajan with it. Mahajan thereupon snatched away the Tangia from Lingaraj and assaulted him with it till Lingaraj fell down on the ground. None of the other members of the opposite party was present by the time of the said occurrence. The essence of the defence therefore, is that while Mahajan admitted having caused some injuries on Lingaraj but pleaded that he did so in exercise of his right of private defence, the other members of the opposite party denied having taken part in the occurrence.

2. Lingaraj Das examined as P. W. 1 stated that on the date of occurrence when he was coming down from Kabelpur bridge on a cycle, opposite party Alekh Sahu suddenly came from the house of Mahajan and stood in front of his cycle and catching hold of the handle of his cycle asked him as to why he was creating trouble in the village. He therefore got down from the cycle. Immediately thereafter the other members of the opposite party who were variously armed with Katis and lathis gathered at the spot. Danei Sahu attempted to give a blow on his neck with a Kati. He tried to ward off the blow by his left hand and the Kati blow fell on his wrist. He then fell down. Then Mahajan Naik attempted to give a blow with his Kati on his neck and he again warded it off with his left hand and received an injury on the left upper arm. He then became unconscious and did not know who caused the several injuries on his person. The doctor examined as P. W. 2 who had examined Lingaraj Das found as many as eleven injuries on the person of Lingaraj. These consisted of bleeding incised injuries on the left wrist, left humerus and the left rib; lacerated injuries on the left elbow, left humerus, left tibia; and compound fractures of the left ulna, left tibia; and abrasions on the fore-head and right arm. Some of the injuries were grievous in nature while the rest were simple. Five other witnesses were examined on the prosecution side to prove the occurrence besides the investigating officer. The defence examined one witness to support the stand taken by Mahajan Naik and he stated inter alia that excepting Mahajan Naik, the other members of the opposite party were not present at the occurrence.

3. The learned Magistrate considered the evidence on record, disbelieved the prosecution case regarding participation of the members of the opposite party excepting Mahajan Naik in the occurrence and acquitted them. He accepted the plea of Mahajan that he caused injuries on Lingaraj Das in exercise of his right of private defence and also ordered his acquittal.

4. Two contentions were advanced by Mr. Kanungo appearing for the petitioner the first being that the prosecution case disclosed the commission of an offence under Section 307, I. P. C. and that as such the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to decide the case finally but that he should have committed the opposite parties to the Court of Session and secondly that on the evidence placed before the Court, the acquittal of the opposite parties and at any rate that of Mahajan is unjustified and perverse. In the charge sheet that was laid by the Police before the Magistrate no mention was made that an offence under section 307 I. P. C. had been committed. No exception was taken from any quarter when after perusing the papers placed before the Court under section 173 Cr. P. C., the learned Magistrate framed the charges which did not include one under section 307, I. P. C.,

In order no. 23 dated 17-8-1966, the Magistrate recorded that he had been approached by the prosecution side. He therefore submitted the records before the S. D. M., Nayagarh stating that in the circumstances he did not like to try the case. The S. D. M. sent back the records to him stating that he did not see any reason why the learned Magistrate should not proceed with the trial of the case and that if he felt that his judicial functions were in any way interfered with he could draw up appropriate proceedings against the persons concerned. It is thereafter that the Court Sub Inspector filed an application before the Magistrate for framing an additional charge under section 307 I. P. C. which after due consideration was rejected by the learned Magistrate on the ground that the case diary did not disclose any materials to warrant framing of such a charge. The contention of Mr. Kanungo is that two blows with the Kati were aimed at the neck of Lingaraj Das which fortunately he warded off and that this shows that the intention of opposite parties was to kill him. But the further case of the prosecution is that after these two blows were given to Lingaraj he became unconscious and that thereafter the opposite party members dealt several other blows on the person of Lingaraj. If the intention of opposite parties was to kill him they could have easily done so after Lingaraj fell down unconscious. The fact that they did not do so shows that the intention of the assailant or assailants was not to cause his death. In the circumstances, the charges framed by the learned Magistrate were correct and he had jurisdiction to proceed with the case.

5. So far as his second contention is concerned, it is true that it is open to the High Court in revision to set aside an order of acquittal even at the instance of private parties although the State might not have thought fit to appeal, but it is now well settled that this jurisdiction should be exercised by the High Court only in exceptional cases when there is some glaring defect in the procedure or there is a manifest error on a point of law and consequently there has been a flagrant miscarriage of justice. No criteria has been laid down for determining such exceptional cases which would cover all contingencies. But some cases of this kind which would justify the High Court in interfering with the finding of acquittal in revision have been indicated by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in K. Chinnaaswamy Reddy v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1962 SC 1788. The cases enumerated are (1) where the trial Court has no jurisdiction to try the cases but has still acquitted the accused, (2) where the trial court has wrongly shut out evidence which the prosecution wished to produce, (3) where the court of appeal has wrongly held evidence which was admitted by the trial court to be inadmissible, (4) where material evidence has been overlooked either by the trial Court or by the appeal court and (5) where the acquittal is based on a compounding of the offence which is invalid under the law. Here, the learned Magistrate has duly considered the evidence let in on the prosecution side regarding the participation of the opposite parties in the occurrence and has given certain reasons in support of his finding that excepting opposite party Mahajan Naik, the others did not take any part in the occurrence. It may be possible for another Court to arrive at a contrary conclusion on the basis of evidence on record but this by itself cannot be a reason to set aside the order of acquittal. Every aspect of the prosecution case has been considered by the learned Magistrate and he has given reasons in support of his finding. The order of acquittal of the opposite parties except Mahajan cannot be interfered with.

6. The case of Mahajan Naik however stands on a different footing. Mahajan has admitted having caused certain injuries with his Kati on Lingaraj Das. But he pleaded that he did so in exercise of his right of private defence. If the establishment of this plea involves the appreciation of evidence and circumstances and the learned Magistrate has appreciated them in a particular manner, the High Court in revision would not substitute its own appraisal of the situation and set aside the order of acquittal. But in this case I find that even if all that Mahajan has said in support of his defence is accepted in toto, his plea is not established. He stated that Lingaraj Das attempted to kill him with his Tangia and therefore he (Mahajan) snatched the Tangia from Lingaraj and then inflicted the injuries on the latter with the sharp edge of the Tangia and also with its handle. The right of private defence commences as soon as a reasonable apprehension of danger to the body arises from an attempt or threat to commit the offence although the offence might not have been committed, and it continues as long as such apprehension of danger to the body continues. So long as the Tangia was in the hands of Lingaraj and the latter attempted to kill him, Mahajan had every justification to apprehend danger to his body and consequently he would have been justified to inflict such injury on Lingaraj as he would have considered necessary to save himself. But once the Tangia was snatched away by Mahajan from Lingaraj, there could not have been any further apprehension in the mind of Mahajan. In fact, Mahajan had not stated what further injury he apprehended from Lingaraj. If there was evidence to show that after the Tangia was seized from Lingaraj the latter was attempting to catch hold of some other weapon, that could have been a sufficient justification for Mahajan to exercise his right of private defence. But that is not the case here. Whether a person claiming to exercise right of private defence had any reasonable apprehension of danger or not depends on the state of his mind at that time and it is for him to say what danger he apprehended. Outsiders cannot divine what was passing in his mind. When Mahajan himself had not chosen to speak out what danger he had at that moment expected from Lingaraj who was completely disarmed by him, and when he did not say that at that moment there was any attempt on the part of Lingaraj either to snatch back the Tangia from him or to secure any weapon from elsewhere, it is manifest that Mahajan has failed to establish that the right of private defence was available to him. The learned Magistrate has taken a wrong view of law while considering this aspect of the defence case.

7. In the result, I would allow this application so far as it relates to opposite party No. 2 Mahajan Naik, set aside the order of acquittal passed against him and direct that the case be sent back to the learned Magistrate for disposal according to law. The order of acquittal in respect of the other opposite parties is maintained.

Order accordingly.

JUDGMENT: This is a second appeal preferred by the plaintiff from an order dated 19-10-62 of Sri C. Mohapatra, District Judge, Koraput-Jeypore, passed in Title Appeal No. 6 of 1962, rejecting a petition under section 5 of the Limitation Act filed by the plaintiff-appellant before him and thereby ultimately dismissing the appeal as time-barred.

2. The only question therefore that arises in this appeal is whether the District Judge was justified in rejecting the appeal filed before him on ground of limitation by dismissing this application for condonation of delay.

3. It is not in dispute that the appeal filed before the District Judge was beyond time by five days. The appellant filed an application under Section 5 of the Limitation Act for condoning the delay. This application was supported by an affidavit. The circumstances detailed therein as the cause for delay are that the appellant was a cloth merchant and had to go to Bombay in connection with his business. He returned to Jeypore on 30th of January 1962, but found that his lawyer had left the town and gone to Cuttack in connection with some sales-tax matters. He also found that the clerk who was attached to the lawyer had left his service. He had already made arrangements for getting certified copies of the judgment and decree of the trial court in order to file the appeal and the copy had been obtained and was with the lawyer. But he could not get hold of the same as his lawyer and his clerk were both absent. He tried unsuccessfully to trace them with the help of another lawyer, Sri Sahu, from the office of his lawyer who was at Cuttack. The copies were ultimately found out on the 5th and the appeal was filed on the 6th. These averments stand unchallenged as no counter has been filed by the other side.

4. The appellant in support of his allegations in the petition examined himself and his lawyer Sri V. Ramarao, P. W. 2. There is no counter-evidence in the case.

5. The learned District Judge relying on a decision of the Patna High Court reported in AIR 1919 Pat. 503, Jahar Mal v. Pritchard, which seems to lay down that the parties should not be encouraged to defer till the very last moment the taking of steps in course of an action for which a limit of time is prescribed by rules, and that no indulgence ought to be shown to a party who so puts off taking action till the last day, if by happening of some unexpected accident he exceeds the time-limit.

The Supreme Court has ruled to the contrary in a decision reported in AIR 1962 SC 361, Ramlal v. Rewa Coalfields. They have said as follows.

"The failure of appellant to account for his non-diligence during the whole of the period of limitation prescribed for the appeal does not disqualify him from praying for the condonation of delay under Section 5. Where the appellant did not file the appeal till the last day of limitation and as he fell ill on the last day of limitation, he filed the appeal thereafter asking for the delay to be excused and it was held that his want of diligence till the last day of limitation would not disqualify him from applying for the excusing of delay."

6. In view of this decision of the Supreme Court the rejection of the petition for condonation of delay under section 5 of the Limitation Act filed by the appellant was erroneous. The appellant has shown sufficient cause in his petition which has been proved through him and his lawyer. In the circumstances this appeal is allowed and the case is remanded back to the District Judge to be disposed of on merits.

The appellant, however, shall pay Rs. 150/- as costs to the respondents' counsel Sri N. V. Ramdas within four weeks.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal Appeal No. 227 of 1966, D/- 28-11-1968, from order of S. J. Koraput, D/- 2-12-1966.

(A) Evidence Act (1872), S. 8 III. (i) — Accused absconding from village after commission of offence—Fact of absconding is an incriminating circumstance and is relevant. (Para 5)

(B) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 164 and 367 — Retracted confession of accused — Extent of corroboration required — Case of an accomplice is different — Variation between confessional statement and evidence in case — Variation held not material — (Evidence Act (1872) Ss. 24, 133, 114, illus. (b)).

Law is well settled that if the confession is retracted, a conviction cannot be based thereon unless it is corroborated.

There is a distinction between the nature of corroboration required in the case of an accused and that of an accomplice. In the case of an accomplice the corroboration must be in material particulars. In the case of corroboration of a retracted confession of an accused if the general trend of the prosecution evidence corroborates the essential part of the confessional statement, the confession can be accepted as true. It is not essential that each and every fact and circumstance in the confessional statement must be proved by independent evidence. In such a case the confession has no value, and in every case the court has to insist upon independent evidence on each and every point. (Para 6)

In a case, the accused confessed before a Magistrate that the deceased and he were drunk; that they quarrelled on account of drinking; that the accused shot an arrow which struck the deceased on his chest as a result of which he died. The accused also stated where the incident took place and how he absconded for fear. The confession was however later on retracted. Evidence of one eye-witness to the incident was corroborated by another witness whose deposition was accepted as being true. Their evidence and that of the Doctor who examined the body of the deceased corroborated almost every part of the confessional statement, except that the quarrel spoken of by the accused in his confessional statement was not mentioned by the witnesses. But one of the witnesses merely stated that the accused challenged the deceased by saying that he would kill one of the four brothers including the deceased and the deceased replied that he was alone there and whom the accused would shoot.

Held, (1) that the confessional statement of the accused having been corroborated by the evidence in the case, it must be held to be true and a conviction could be based thereon. However, the conviction was based on the evidence in the case.

and (2) that much importance should not be attached to the minor discrepancy, viz., the variance between the prosecution evidence and the confessional statement regarding the quarrel between the deceased and the accused and that the confessional statement could not be held untrue on that account. S. C. Adhikari, for Appellant; Standing Counsel, for Respondent.

G. K. MISRA, J.: The appellant has been convicted under Section 302 I. P. C. and sentenced to imprisonment for life.

2. There was some ill-feeling between the accused and the members of the family of the deceased. In the afternoon of 1-12-63 the deceased was going to bring fuel from the forest. All of a sudden the accused came out of his house armed with a bow and arrows and told the deceased that he would kill him. He shot an arrow which pierced the left side of the chest of the deceased who died instantaneously. The accused absconded from the village and was arrested only on 26-9-65. The evidence of the prosecution witnesses was recorded under Section 512 Cr. P. C. in the absence of the accused. The defence is one of complete denial. The learned Sessions Judge held that the death was homicidal and that the accused killed the deceased.

3. The finding that the death was homicidal is fully supported by the evidence of the Doctor (P. W. 8). There was a punctured wound. The lower portion of the two ventricles of the heart were completely punctured. The injury was ante mortem. The Doctor opined that the deceased must have died within half an hour from the time of the infliction of the injury. There can hardly be any dispute that the deceased died as a result of the arrow shot.

4. The conviction is based on the evidence of the eye-witness P. W. 14 corroborated by that of P. W. 4, who appeared on the scene immediately after the occurrence. P. W. 14 is a sister-in-law of the deceased. She narrated as to how the accused came out of his house and suddenly gave an arrow shot as a result of which the deceased fell down. Thereafter the accused went away with his bow and arrow inside the jungle.

P. W. 4 has not seen the actual arrow shot, but hearing the shout of P. W. 3 she came out, found the deceased lying dead with the arrow sticking to his chest, and the accused going away to the jungle. These two witnesses are two rustic village folks and though there was some quarrel between the accused and the family members of the deceased, we find no sufficient justification as to why these two ladies would falsely implicate the accused in such a ghastly crime.

5. Soon after the occurrence the accused was untraced. He did not remain in the village. He was arrested about 2 years after on 26-9-65. P. Ws. 2, 4 and 6 testify to the fact of his absence from the village. P. Ws. 12, 13 and 15 are the Investigating Officers. They depose that they could not trace out the accused during the period of these two years. This conduct on the part of the accused in absconding from the village is admissible under Section 8 of the Evidence Act. Illustration (i) appended to the section runs thus:

"A is accused of a crime. The facts that, after the commission of the alleged crime, he absconded, or was in possession of property or the proceeds of property acquired by the crime, or attempted to conceal things which were or might have been used in committing it, are relevant." The fact of absconding therefore is an incriminating circumstance. In his statement under Section 342 Cr. P. C. the accused was put this question. He did not furnish any reasonable explanation, but merely denied the factum of his absence from the village.

6. The accused also made a confession before the Magistrate, First Class (P. W. 7). The learned Sessions Judge held that the confession is voluntary and true. That the confession is voluntary is not disputed before us. It is however contended that the confession is not true. To appreciate this contention the confessional statement, which is a very short one, may be quoted:

"Myself and Budu were both drunk. We started quarrelling on account of drinking. I shot an arrow. That struck on the chest of Budu. He fell down there and died. This incident happened near the outer courtyard of the house of the deceased. After this incident I left the village out of fear. I concealed myself in village Nuagad. When I appeared before the Thana, the Police arrested me."

This confession has been retracted. Law is well settled that if the confession is retracted, a conviction cannot be based thereon unless it is corroborated. There is a distinction between the nature of corroboration required in the case of an accused and that of an accomplice. In the case of an accomplice the corroboration must be in material particulars. In the case of corroboration of a retracted confession of an accused if the general trend of the prosecution evidence corroborates the essential part of the confessional statement, the confession can be accepted as true.

The aforesaid distinction however is academic in the peculiar facts and circumstances of this case where almost every part of the confessional statement is corroborated in material particulars by the prosecution evidence.

It has been established from the evidence of the Doctor and the eye-witness that the deceased died as a result of an arrow shot on his chest. This is exactly the confessional statement. The evidence of the eye-witness establishes that the deceased had an instantaneous death on the very spot near the house of the deceased. That is also the confessional statement. There is evidence that after the incident the accused left the village and absconded. That is proved by the evidence of P. Ws. 2, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 15. He was arrested two years after.

The confessional statement begins by saying that both the accused and the deceased were drunk and they started quarrelling between them. There is no prosecution evidence that both of them were not drunk. On this point therefore there is no contradiction. There need not be any positive evidence on the point also to accept the confessional statement as it is not essential that each and every fact and circumstance in the confessional statement must be proved by independent evidence. In such a case the confession has no value, and in every case the court has to insist upon independent evidence on each and every point.

With regard to the fact that there was a quarrel between the accused and the deceased, P. W. 14 states that there was no quarrel between the two. She however deposed that the accused challenged the deceased by saying that he would kill one of the four brothers including the deceased, and the deceased gave a reply that he was alone there and whom the accused would shoot. If this is construed to be a quarrel, then there is no contradiction. Assuming that this does not evidence any quarrel, the question is whether on account of this contradiction the confessional statement would be declared to be untrue.

The identical question came up for consideration before a Bench of this Court in AIR 1965 Orissa 175 State v. Ramchandra. Their Lordships observed thus:

"As to the statement when Ramchandra hid the gun in the bush near the school and subsequently removed it to the place where it was found, there is some discrepancy between the prosecution evidence and the confessional statement. This is not, however, very significant. The recording of the confessional statement is not conducted like deposition of witness in court. The accused goes on making statement in his own way. It is not subjected to cross-examination or clarification by re-examination and the accused cannot be directed to follow the chronology, exactly in the manner it happened. If the contradiction goes to the root of the matter on a material link of the case, it may be vital. A part of the confessional statement might, however, be rejected and other part accepted if the part to be rejected is proved to be false by other prosecution evidence. No hard and fast rule can be laid down. The ultimate conclusion will depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. The discrepancy leading to the findings is not, however, very material." The question for consideration in this case is that even assuming that the prosecution evidence is at variance to the confessional statement as to whether there was a quarrel between the accused and the deceased, it does not constitute such a vital link in the prosecution story as to hold that the confessional statement is untrue. In all essential particulars the confessional statement is fully corroborated and not merely in material particulars. In the facts and circumstances of this case we do not attach much importance to this discrepancy and we hold that the confessional statement is true.

As has already been stated, the conviction can be sustained on the evidence of the eye-witness P. W. 14 corroborated by that of P. W. 4 and the fact of absconding of the accused for about 2 years from the village. It is not necessary to take in aid the confessional statement to sustain the conviction. The conviction can also be based on the confessional statement as it stands corroborated in the manner already discussed.

7. The appeal has no merit and is accordingly dismissed.

Constitution of India, Art. 311 (2) — Reasonable opportunity — What is — No date fixed calling upon delinquent to cross examine witnesses — No enquiry after denial of charges — Order of dismissal cannot stand.

It is well settled that after the charges are framed, the delinquent should be given a reasonable opportunity to file an explanation and thereafter the appointing authority should fix a date for enquiry wherein witnesses would be examined, to be cross-examined by the delinquent, and the delinquent would be given a further opportunity of giving evidence in his own defence. It is only after these opportunities are given that the delinquent can be dismissed from service if he is found to be guilty. Where no date was fixed calling upon the delinquent to cross-examine the witnesses and to make comments upon the documents presented on behalf of the appointing authority, and there was no enquiry after the denial of the charges, it could not be said that the delinquent did not avail of the opportunity though given. L. Rath and B. B. Rath, for Petitioner; Advocate General, for Opposite Parties.

G. K. MISRA, C. J.: The petitioner was served with the following charges:

"Charge No. 1. You have disobeyed the Government order of transfer, transferring you to Dhenkanal Power House in office order No. 4795 dated 16-9-50 of the Executive Engineer, General Electrical Division, Cuttack, and tried to avoid the transfer by false pretensions.

Charge No. 2. You have not vacated the Government quarters even after receiving your above-mentioned transfer order. Several wild efforts of Government proved futile because of your adamant nature, which proves your disobedience and insubordination. Your claim that the house has been donated to you by the Ex-Ruler of Nayagarh is definitely not correct. The land on which the house stands belongs to the Government. So, the house cannot belong to you. The house was only allotted to you as Engine Driver of the Power House for occupation.

Charge No. 3. You have remained absent from duty wilfully for more than a year after the above transfer and always tried to mangle on false pretence and baseless grounds.

Charge No. 4. You have approached the higher authorities of the State without the permission of the superiors through the proper channel.

Charge No. 5. Your behaviour while you were called upon to explain your grievances by the Chief Engineer, Electricity and the Superintending Engineer, Electrical Circle, Cuttack, was not proper and your attitude towards the officers was repulsive."

2. In his explanation, the petitioner denied the charges and clearly asserted that he was not guilty of any of the charges. Prior to that he had asked for the documents on which some of the charges were based. Though he was given an opportunity to examine the documents, he did not avail of it. The fact, however, remains that he did not admit his guilt. After receipt of the explanation, the Superintending Engineer who is the appointing authority of the petitioner passed the following order:

"After carefully going through the explanation submitted by Sri Banchchanidhi Patnaik, Engine Driver (under suspension), submitted by him on 10-4-57 and 17-6-57 the undersigned is satisfied that his explanations are vague and do not substantially defend against the charges. The charges framed against him in this office No. 38/Con. dated 22-2-57 have, therefore, been established and Sri Banchchanidhi Patnaik is hereby ordered to be dismissed from his service from the date of receipt of this order by him." This order of dismissal is challenged by the petitioner as being contrary to the provisions of Article 311 (2) of the Constitution.

3. Mr. Rath contends that the petitioner should not have been dismissed except after an enquiry. Article 311 (2) makes the position very clear. It says:

"No such person, as aforesaid, shall be dismissed or removed or reduced in rank, except after an enquiry in which he has been informed of the charges against him, and given a reasonable opportunity of being heard in respect of those charges."

4. It is now settled by a series of decisions of the Supreme Court commencing with AIR 1958 SC 300, Khemchand v. Union of India, that after the charges are framed, the delinquent should be given a reasonable opportunity to file an explanation and thereafter the appointing authority should fix a date for enquiry wherein witnesses would be examined, to be cross-examined by the delinquent, and the delinquent would be given a further opportunity of giving evidence in his own defence. It is only after these opportunities are given that the delinquent can be dismissed from service if he is found to be guilty. In this connection we may refer to our decision in O. J. C. No. 327 of 1965, D/- 9-7-1969, (reported in AIR 1970 Orissa 1), wherein the procedure to be followed has been given in detail. Admittedly, in the present case there was no enquiry after the denial of the charges. The appointing authority says that though opportunity was given to the delinquent he did not defend himself. In fact, no opportunity was given. A date should have been fixed calling upon the petitioner to cross-examine the witnesses and to make comments upon the documents presented on behalf of the appointing authority. No such date was fixed and it cannot therefore be said that the delinquent did not avail of the opportunity though given.

5. On the aforesaid analysis, the impugned order of dismissal cannot stand.

We accordingly issue a writ of certiorari directing the opposite parties to treat the petitioner as continuing in service. It is to be noted that the petitioner has superannuated long since. Our order saying that the petitioner shall be deemed to continue in service would not affect his superannuation having taken perfect (effect?) in law.

The writ application is accordingly allowed but there will be no order as to costs.

6. R. N. MISRA, J.: I agree.
Writ application allowed.

M/s. Munilal Ramdayal, Petitioner v. Income Tax Officer, Baripada and others, Opposite Parties.

Original Jurisdiction Case No. 999 of 1968, D/- 12-8-1969.

Income Tax Act (1961), Ss. 147 and 148 — Duty of assessee questioning jurisdiction of I. T. Officer — Conditions precedent — Duty to disclose primary facts, extent of — Consequences of failure — Reasons to issue notice need not be disclosed.

The following propositions have been firmly established and are no longer in doubt.

(i) It is the duty of the assessee who wants the Court to hold that jurisdiction of the Income Tax Officer to issue notice under S. 148, was lacking, to establish that the Income-tax officer had no material before him for believing that there had been non-disclosure.

(ii) Before issue of notice under S. 148, two conditions precedent are to be fulfilled;

(a) The Income Tax Officer must have reason to believe that the income, profits or gains chargeable to income tax have been under-assessed; (b) He must also have reason to believe that such under-assessment occurred by reason of omission or failure on the part of an assessee to disclose fully and truly all material facts necessary for his assessment for that year.

(iii) Material facts means primary facts. The duty of disclosing all primary facts relevant to the decision of the question before the assessing authority lies on the assessee. This duty, however, does not extend beyond such disclosure. Once all the primary facts are before the assessing authority, whether on disclosure by the assessee himself, or on scrutiny by the assessing authority, the assessee has no duty to disclose further facts. The rest is a question of inferences to be reasonably drawn from the primary facts. The inferences are to be drawn by the Income Tax Officer and for that no duty is cast on the assessee to render assistance as to in what manner the inferences are to be drawn.

(iv) The Explanation to the Section 147 makes it abundantly clear that the duty of the assessee to disclose primary facts does not end merely with the production of accounts books and documents. The assessee should specifically bring to the notice of the Income Tax Officer the particular entries and items which are primary facts having bearing on the question in issue.

(v) If the assessee fails to bring to the notice of the Income Tax Officer the primary facts, as revealed from the account books, his defence that the Income Tax Officer with due diligence might have discovered the primary facts, is not acceptable.

(vi) Whether the Income Tax Officer had sufficient grounds for entertaining a reason to believe is not justiciable. The assessee can, however, contend that the Income Tax Officer did not hold the belief at all. The belief must be held in good faith and it cannot be a mere pretence. In other words, it is open to the Court to examine the question whether the reasons for the belief have a rational nexus to the formation of the belief and are not irrelevant or extraneous to the purpose of the section.

(vii) Before issue of notice under Section 148 the reasons are not to be disclosed by the Income Tax Officer. The earlier stages of the proceeding for recording the reasons by the Income Tax Officer and for obtaining the sanction of the Commissioner are administrative in character and are not quasi judicial. The reason why a proceeding is initiated by issuing a notice under Section 148 of the Act need not be communicated to the assessee. AIR 1967 SC 523 & AIR 1967 SC 587, Rel. on. (Para 5)

Held on facts that conditions necessary were fulfilled before notice under S. 148 was issued and with jurisdiction.

D. P. Dal, S. Patnaik and K. K. Patnaik, for Petitioner; D. Mohanty, Standing Counsel, for Opposite Parties.

G. K. MISRA, C. J.: Messrs. Munilal Ramdayal is a firm registered under the Indian Partnership and Indian Income-Tax Act. It carries on business of grain procurement, rice milling, distillation of country liquor, sale of excise drugs, grocery articles and forest products, and contract business. Ramdayal Shah, Jogeshwar Shah and Raghunandan Shah are the three partners of this firm each having one-third share. For the assessment year 1952-53 (the relevant accounting year ending with 31-3-52) the firm was assessed on a total income of Rs. 1 lakh and odd, though the petitioner submitted a return showing a total income of Rs. 33,000/- and odd. It is unnecessary to give further details. In appeal before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and the Income Tax Tribunal the original assessment was reduced.

On 26-7-68 the Income Tax Officer, Baripada, issued a notice under Section 148 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1961, (hereinafter referred to as the Act) which may be quoted:

"Whereas I have reason to believe that your income in respect of which you are chargeable to tax for the assessment year 1952-53 has escaped assessment within the meaning of Section 147 of the Income Tax Act, 1961,

I therefore propose to reassess the income for the said assessment year, and I hereby require you to deliver to me within 30 days from the date of service of this notice, a return in the prescribed form of your income assessable for the said assessment year.

This notice is being issued after obtaining the necessary satisfaction of the Central Board of Revenue".

On 26-8-68, the petitioner sent a reply asserting that there was no justification for reopening the assessment and that the conditions precedent for assumption of jurisdiction by the Income Tax Officer, under section 147 were not present in the case. This writ application has been filed under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution challenging the jurisdiction of the Income-Tax Officer in issuing the impugned notice.

2. The facts relevant for the appreciation of the points in issue may be stated shortly. On 22-12-39 there was a partnership between Sri Ram Chandra Bhanja Deo and Ramdayal Shah whereby a rice mill known as "Prabir Chandra Rice Mill" was started at Jugurpara. The share of Sriram Chandra Bhanja Deo was 10 annas and that of Ramdayal Shah 6 annas. Prabir Chandra Rice Mills was being regularly assessed under the Income Tax Act. On 25-8-1950, the share of Prafulla Chandra Bhanja Deo successor of Sriram Chandra Bhanja Deo which was fixed at 8 annas was purchased along with the entire book debts, plant machinery and land by Ramdayal Shah for Rs. 50051/- being the value of the stock in trade and for another Rs. 50,000/- towards outstanding dues of the mill. "Prabir Chandra Rice Mill" was re-named as "Munilal Rice Mill". It is to be noted that the petitioner had 6 annas interest in the Prabir Chandra Rice Mill before the purchase in the name of Ramdayal Shah. On 23-12-52, the assessment of the petitioner firm was completed under section 23 (3) of the Income Tax Act, 1922 (hereinafter to be referred to as the old Act). The case of the petitioner is that at the time of the assessment in 1952, Sri K. C. Mohanty the Accountant of the petitioner, appeared before the Income Tax Officer Sri A. K. Jana who enquired into the nature and source of the purchase of the mill and its good debts. Sri K. C. Mohanty explained at that time that the head office account was credited with the amount realised out of the book debts of Prabir Chandra Rice Mill and that the accounts of the parties were debited and closed. Accordingly, in the balance-sheet for the year 1950-51 closing on 29-10-51, Sri A. K. Jana made the following endorsement:

"Running account of the mill with main Baripada account. The two banking accounts won't tally because the accounting year differs. A few items compared and tallied".

The petitioner thus asserts that it had fully and truly disclosed all material facts necessary for assessment for the year 1952-53 and that the income chargeable to tax has not escaped assessment for that year and that the present Income Tax Officer Sri S. D. Sahay could have no reason to believe that the petitioner did not make a full and true disclosure of all material facts before the then Income-tax Officer, Sri A. K. Jana,

3. On behalf of the opposite parties an affidavit was initially filed by Sr. S. D. Sahay the Income Tax Officer who issued the notice under Section 148 of the Act. In Paragraphs 15 to 17 of the affidavit the facts on the basis of which he had reason to believe that the petitioner did not disclose all material facts fully and truly have been averred. The sum and substance of these averments may be indicated in brief.

In course of examination of accounts for the assessment year 1963-64 the following entries in the account book of the branch business of Munilal Rice Mill were noticed.

CREDIT

Munilal Ramdayal

While an amount of Rs. 1,44,813.32 P. was credited in the branch books in the name of the head office, there was no corresponding debit entry in the books of account of the head office. In other words, no cash amount passed out of the head office account corresponding to the credit in the account of the branch books. At the time of assessment for 1952-53, this fact escaped notice as the balance-sheet of the rice mill (branch) closed on Diwali day while that of the head office closed at the end of the financial year, that is, 31st March. The balance on these different dates naturally would not tally. This fact of difference in the two accounts was not noticed by the Income-Tax Officer in 1952 and was not apparent until examination of the accounts for the assessment year 1963-64. On 30-9-62 Ramdayal Shah, one of the partners, died. At that time the balance sheets of the accounts of the head office and branch were prepared. Those two accounts were tallied and the discrepancies came to light. Necessary entries were made in the accounts on 30-9-62 to reconcile the discrepancy.

In the counter-affidavit the Income Tax Officer thus asserts that though admittedly paddy worth Rs. 1,44,813 had been purchased, the accounts relevant to the year 1952-53 did not indicate that the amount had been advanced by the firm Prabir Chandra Rice Mill prior to its purchase. On an examination of the accounts Sri Sahay had reason to believe that the paddy purchases were made with cash outside the books of account, out of the secreted profits from undisclosed sources of income and this amount was introduced in the books of account for 1963-64 to cover up the concealment. Thus, in 1952-53 the assessee failed to disclose fully and truly this material fact which resulted in under-assessment.

4. It will be profitable at this stage to examine the law on the point. Section 147 of the Act, so far as is relevant, runs thus:

"147 Income escaping assessment. If (a) the Income-tax Officer has reason to believe that, by reason of the omission or failure on the part of an assessee to make a return under section 139 for any assessment year to the Income-tax Officer or to disclose fully and truly all material facts necessary for his assessment for that year, income chargeable to tax has escaped assessment for that year, he may, subject to the provisions of Sections 148 to 153, assess or re-assess such income or re-compute the loss or the depreciation allowance, as the case may be, for the assessment year concerned.

** ** **

** ** **

Explanation 2. — Production before the Income-tax Officer of account-books or other evidence from which material evidence could with due diligence have been discovered by the Income-tax Officer will not necessarily amount to disclosure within the meaning of this section".

5. The corresponding Section 34 of the old Act came up for consideration in a series of cases before the Supreme Court. The following propositions have been firmly established and are no longer in doubt.

(i) It is the duty of the assessee who wants the Court to hold that jurisdiction was lacking, to establish that the Income-tax Officer had no material before him for believing that there had been such non-disclosure.

(ii) Before issue of notice, two conditions precedent are to be fulfilled:

(a) The Income Tax Officer must have reason to believe that the income, profits or gains chargeable to income tax have been under-assessed;

(b) He must also have reason to believe that such under-assessment occurred by reason of omission or failure on the part of an assessee to disclose fully and truly all material facts necessary for his assessment for that year.

(iii) Material facts means primary facts. The duty of disclosing all primary facts relevant to the decision of the question before the assessing authority lies on the assessee. This duty, however, does not extend beyond such disclosure. Once all the primary facts are before the assessing authority, whether on disclosure by the assessee himself, or on scrutiny by the assessing authority, the assessee has no duty to disclose further facts. The rest is a question of inferences to be reasonably drawn from the primary facts. The inferences are to be drawn by the Income Tax Officer and for that no duty is cast on the assessee to render assistance as to in what manner the inferences are to be drawn.

(iv) The Explanation to the Section makes it abundantly clear that the duty of the assessee to disclose primary facts does not end merely with the production of Account books and documents. The assessee should not merely produce the account books but should specifically bring to the notice of the Income Tax Officer the particular entries and items which are primary facts having bearing on the question in issue.

(v) If the assessee fails to bring to the notice of the Income Tax Officer the primary facts, as revealed from the account books, his defence that the Income Tax Officer with due diligence might have discovered the primary facts, is not acceptable.

(vi) Whether the Income Tax Officer had sufficient grounds for entertaining a reason to believe is not justiciable. The assessee can, however, contend that the Income Tax Officer did not hold the belief at all. The belief must be held in good faith and it cannot be a mere pretence. In other words, it is open to the Court to examine the question whether the reasons for the belief have a rational nexus to the formation of the belief and are not irrelevant or extraneous to the purpose of the section.

(vii) Before issue of notice the reasons are not to be disclosed by the Income Tax Officer. The earlier stages of the proceeding for recording the reasons by the Income Tax Officer and for obtaining the sanction of the Commissioner are administrative in character and are not quasi-judicial. The reason why a proceeding is initiated by issuing a notice under Section 148 of the Act need not be communicated to the assessee.

(See AIR 1961 SC 372 Calcutta Discount Co. Ltd. v. Income Tax Officer; AIR 1967 SC 523, S. Narayanappa v. Income Tax Commissioner; and AIR 1967 SC 587 Kantamari and Sons v. Income Tax Officer Rajahmundry).

6. The sole question for consideration is whether the case of the Department that an amount of Rs. 1,44,813.32 which was credited in the branch office books of Munilal Ramdayal in the name of the head office, was kept concealed before the Income Tax Officer at the time when the original assessment for the year 1952-53 was made. It has already been stated that two conditions precedent are to be fulfilled before assumption of jurisdiction under section 148 of the Act. Dr. Pal does not question the first condition, namely that the Income Tax Officer had reason to believe that the income chargeable to income tax had been under-assessed. This aspect need not, therefore be discussed.

7. The real question for examination is whether the Income Tax Officer had reason to believe that such under-assessment occurred by reason of omission or failure on the part of the petitioner to disclose fully and truly all material facts necessary for its assessment for the year 1952-53.

8. On behalf of the petitioner, reliance is placed on the following pieces of materials in support of the contention that all primary facts in respect of the impugned item had been brought to the notice of the then Income Tax Officer, Sri A. K. Jena.

(i) The supplementary affidavit filed by Sri K. C. Mohanty who appeared before the Income Tax Officer on behalf of the petitioner avers that he showed complete extracts from the books of account and specifically brought this particular item to the notice of the Income Tax Officer.

(ii) On examination of the books of account, along with the balance-sheet and profit and loss account produced before him, Sri A. K. Jena was satisfied regarding this item and made the following entry:

"Running account of the mill with main Baripada account; the two banking accounts won't tally, because the accounting years differ. A few items compared and they tally".

(iii) In paragraph 16 of the first affidavit filed by Sri Sahay there is a statement that

"The party's accounts were debited on 29-10-51 giving corresponding credit in the head office account"

(iv) In the balance-sheet, for the year 1951-52, Munilal Rice Mill is credited with the sum of Rs. 1,62,112 and in the balance-sheet for the year 1950-51 item 37 Munilal Ramdayal is credited with the sum of Rs. 77,015/-.

(v) Sri A. K. Jena in his affidavit states that he does not remember as to who appeared before him at the time of the original assessment and whatever statement he made was true to his knowledge based on official records. His affidavit does not thus challenge the truth of the affidavit made by Sri K. C. Mohanty who swears that the facts are true to his knowledge.

9. In our view, none of the aforesaid features, either individually or (collectively?) establish that the present Income Tax Officer who issued the notice under section 148 had no reason to believe that such under-assessment occurred by reason of omission or failure on the part of the petitioner to disclose fully and truly all material facts necessary for its assessment for 1952-53.

It has already been stated that mere production of the books of account, balance-sheet and profit and loss account would not be enough. It is the duty of the assessee to specifically bring to the notice of the assessing officer all primary facts relating to the impugned item. In this regard due weight must be given to the intrinsic evidence in the case based on records. There is absolutely no intrinsic evidence to show that the impugned primary fact was brought to the notice of Sri A. K. Jana either suo motu or at the instance of the petitioner. The item relates to a heavy amount of about 1.1/2 lakhs of rupees. If the attention of the Income Tax Officer had been rivetted on this transaction, surely the same must have been embodied in the original assessment order; and some discussion, however perfunctory, must have been made in the assessment order relating to this impugned item. That is the strongest circumstance against the petitioner's case that Sri K. C. Mohanty specifically brought to the notice of Sri A. K. Jana.

10. The endorsement of Sri A. K. Jana in relevant account book to the effect:

"Running account of the mill with the main Baripada account. The two banking accounts won't tally because the two accounting years differ. A few items compared and they tally" also leads us nowhere. It is too vague and does not indicate what items were compared and tallied. If this endorsement would have made some reference to the impugned item, then alone it could serve as a piece of intrinsic evidence. In the absence of any reference to the impugned item, the endorsement does not advance the petitioner's case. The fact that the Income-Tax Officer examined the books would not be enough; in order that the condition precedent must be fulfilled, it must be established that the impugned primary fact was specifically brought to his notice either at the instance of the assessee or otherwise. The endorsement furnishes no clue as a piece of intrinsic evidence.

11. The entries in the balance-sheet showing that Munilal Rice Mill was credited with the sum of Rs. 1,62,112/- for the year 1951-52 and with the sum of Rs. 77,015/- for the year 1950-51 also throw no light as to whether the attention of Mr. A. K. Jana had been focussed on the impugned item. Merely because these two items, containing heavy amounts, were shown in the balance-sheets, no reasonable inference can be drawn that the impugned entry was explained away with reference to these two entries in the balance-sheets. The bearing which these two entries have on the impugned entry has not even been satisfactorily explained to us.

12. The contention that the affidavit of Sri A. K. Jana, stating that he did not remember anything except the material based on official records, cannot whittle down the effect of the affidavit of Sri K. C. Mohanty, has not much force. Sri A. K. Jana passed the assessment order in 1952. His affidavit has been filed in 1969. It will be difficult to expect him to make any statement directly from his knowledge after the lapse of 17 years. Sri K. C. Mohanty's affidavit that the impugned item was brought to the notice of Mr. Jana is a self-serving statement; unless it is corroborated by intrinsic or extrinsic evidence, it cannot be accepted merely because Sri Jana does not remember what happened 17 years ago. In course of discharge of his duties, Sri Jana had to pass orders of assessment in innumerable cases. In the absence of intrinsic evidence and corroborating materials we cannot place any reliance on the affidavit of Sri K. C. Mohanty that the impugned item was brought to the notice of Sri A. K. Jana.

13. Reliance is placed on the statement of Sri Sahay in paragraph 16 of his affidavit to the effect that

"The party's accounts were debited on 29-10-51 giving corresponding credit in the head office account."

But this does not in any way support the case of the petitioner that in the branch office account the impugned amount was noted for the year 1951 and a corresponding credit was given in the head office account. There was in fact no corresponding entry in the Head Office account. This is exactly what is stated by Mr. Sahay and it is for this reason that the amount escaped the notice of Sri A. K. Jana in 1952.

14. On a scrutiny of the aforesaid features, we are unable to accept the contention urged on behalf of the petitioner that there was a full and true disclosure of all the primary facts.

The Income Tax Officer was, therefore, justified in issuing notice under section 148 of the Act. He had reason to believe that paddy was purchased to the tune of Rs. 1,41,813.32 P on payment of cash from secreted income and not by adjustment of advances made by Prabir Chandra Rice Mill and that all material facts had not been fully and truly disclosed by the assessee to Sri A. K. Jena.

15. On the aforesaid analysis, we are clearly of opinion that both the conditions precedent are fulfilled in this case and the notice under section 148 of the Act is not without jurisdiction.

In the result, the writ application fails and is dismissed with costs. Hearing fee of Rs. 250/- (rupees two hundred & fifty only).

Sadananda Patnaik, Petitioner v. Vice Chancellor, Berhampur University and another, Opposite Parties.

O. J. C. No. 107 of 1969, D/- 6-8-1969.

Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Enquiry by domestic Tribunal set up by educational institutions like universities — Interference by Court — In absence of rules and regulations, rules of natural justice to be followed — Allegations of bias and mala fides against invigilator — Opportunity should be given to examinee to present his case.

In matters of disciplinary jurisdiction exercised by educational institutions, the educational authorities should be left without interference from Courts and other outside agencies in administering their affairs as long as they act in compliance with the rules of natural justice. It should always be a sound rule of discretion to allow the domestic Tribunals set up by such educational institutions to deal with the students so long as they act in accordance with their rules and regulations. The Court should not extend its jurisdiction over such matters unless the procedure adopted has been contrary to natural justice and the cause of justice, which is paramount, warrants interference. Case law discussed. (Para 4)

The rules of natural justice are not embodied rules. The question whether the requirements of natural justice have been met by the procedure adopted in a given case must depend, to a great extent, on the facts and circumstances of the case under examination, the constitution of the Tribunal and the rules under which it functions. Where there is no particular rule or regulation which the Mal-practice Committee of the university is to follow in the matter of holding the enquiry into the mal-practices adopted by candidates taking the different examinations under it, a duty is cast on the Committee to act judicially in exercise of such jurisdiction. Case law discussed. (Para 5)

Where in an enquiry against a candidate for having taken recourse to unfair means in Examination Hall, the examinee did not accept the allegations and while refuting the same he imputed bias and mala fides against the invigilator and the materials on record indicated that the candidate was not allowed to participate in such proceedings in which the enquiry by the Mal practices Committee was conducted:

Held that on the facts of the case the allegations against the Invigilator were directly connected with the conduct of the candidate as to whether he was or was not guilty of the charges against him, and as the Mal-practices committee exonerated the Invigilator from the allegations made against him without giving the candidate an opportunity to participate in such enquiry so as to present his case, the canon of natural justice could not be said to have been satisfied. Such a decision was not in keeping with the rules of natural justice as adopted by the Courts in India. (Para 6)

R. N. MISRA, J.: This is an application under Article 226 of the Constitution of India by a student of the Ramchandra Mardaraj Science College at Khallikote in the district of Ganjam, which is affiliated to the Berhampur University established under the Berham-pur University Act of 1966. The petitioner appeared at the Pre-University (Arts) Examination of 1968. The said examination was held in the month of July and its results were published on 19-9-68. The petitioner's result, however, was not declared, but before the said date on 2-9-68 the petitioner was called upon by the Assistant Registrar of the University to show cause why action might not be taken against him for having taken recourse to unfair means in the Examination Hall. On 9-9-68 the petitioner submitted his explanation in which he denied all the allegations and imputed bias and mala fides against one Sri Prabhu Prasad Panigrahi, a Lecturer in Political Science of the College where the petitioner studied, and categorically stated that the said Sri Panigrahi, who was the Invigilator, might have inserted the printed page, which was detected from the petitioner's answer book, after the answer paper was submitted by the petitioner to the said Invigilator at the end of the day's examination. The University Authorities did not hold any other enquiry to the knowledge of the petitioner, but ultimately by an order dated 12-12-68 cancelled the result of the petitioner's examination and directed that he be debarred from appearing at any examination of the University prior to the annual examination of 1970. It is against the said order of 12-12-68 that the petitioner has come up to this Court seeking for issue of a Writ of certiorari to quash the said order.

2. The stand taken by the University Authorities would appear from the notice dated 2-9-68 issued to the petitioner. For convenience it is extracted below:

To

Sadananda Patnaik Roll No. 616 Son of Jayakrishna Patnaik, At/P. O. Khallikote (Ganjam).

It is reported that you brought a piece of printed page relating to English Paper II to the Examination Hall while you were appearing in English Paper II at the Second P. U. Examination, 1968 and you left the said incrimination material in your answer book and handed over the same to the Invigilator. In this connection I am directed to say that the following charges have been made against you:

(1) That, you brought a piece of printed page relating to English paper II to the Examination on 17-7-1968 in the 1st sitting while answering English Paper II with the evident intention of copying from it;

(2) You left the said incriminating material in your answer book and handed over the same to the Invigilator inadvertently;

(3) You were warned before the commencement of the Examination not to bring any paper other than the admit card to the Examination Hall;

(4) You have made use of the document;

You are therefore required to show cause why action will not be taken against you for taking recourse to unfair means in the Examination Hall in spite of repeated warnings by the Centre Superintendent and instructions printed on the back side of the admit card.

Assistant Registrar"

The Assistant Registrar of the University filed an affidavit in opposition wherein it was further stated,—

"Para 3. . . There was no occasion for the Invigilator or the Centre Superintendent to bring (sic) the notice of the petitioner regarding the 'printing page' and 'making use of it' since in the Examination hall they had not detected mal-practice adopted by the petitioner. In fact, it was no part of the duty of the Invigilator or the Centre Superintendent to verify the answer books of the examinees after they are submitted. In fact, they had no knowledge that the 'printed page' was left inside the answer book of the petitioner. The Chief Examiner while valuing the petitioner's answer book detected the printed page inside the answer book and reported the fact to the Registrar and his report is annexed hereto.

Para 5. . . The Mal-practice Committee appointed by the syndicate went into the question, enquired into the matter in detail and were satisfied that the allegations made by the petitioner against the invigilator were false and rejected his explanation. . ."

Para 6. . . It is submitted that the petitioner in his explanation did state that he got some questions by heart from notes and reproduced them in the aforesaid examination, but the Mal-practice Committee was not satisfied with the explanation offered by the petitioner."

Para 7. . . The explanation is absurd and it is highly unbelievable that the Invigilator knew that questions the petitioner got by heart. . ."

Para 10. . . The allegations made by the petitioner against the Invigilator were thoroughly enquired into by the Mal-practice Committee appointed by the Syndicate of the Berhampur University, and after the said enquiry the Committee was satisfied that the allegations made by the petitioner against the Invigilator were thoroughly false and baseless."

A. K. Roy, for Petitioners; Ram Saroop Sinha and B. N. Chatterji, for Opposite Parties.

ORDER:— The petitioners were the first party in a proceeding under S. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure with respect to several plots of land appertaining to Khata numbers 44, 121 and 137 and situated in village Makhdumpur, Police station Bihta, district Patna. They are aggrieved by the final order passed by the learned Magistrate declaring the second party in possession over the disputed lands.

2. It is common ground that there were two brothers Triloki and Sheo Lochan. Triloki had a son, Kuar Singh who died leaving behind his widow Askueri Kuer. Kuar Singh had a son, Sundar Singh who died leaving behind his widow Dularo Kuer, opposite party no. 6. In the other branch, Hathi Ram was son of Sheo Lochan. Mithila Saran Singh, petitioner no. 1, is the son of Hathi Ram and Rajeshwar Singh, petitioner no. 2, is the surviving son of Mithila Saran Singh who had another son, Mahanand Singh who is dead. The parties are at variance with respect to the family of Rainu Singh. According to the first party, Rainu Singh was full brother of Hathi Ram (father of petitioner no. 1). But according to the second party, Rainu Singh was not the second son of Sheo Lochan but the second son of Triloki. Both the parties, however, are agreed that Rainu Singh had a daughter, Piyari Kuer, whose husband Nihora Singh is opposite party no. 1 in this Court. Opposite party no. 5, Sheo Prasad Singh, is son of Nihora Singh, Opposite party no. 1.

3. It is also undisputed in this case that Nihora Singh, opposite party no. 1, and Dwarka Singh, opposite party no. 2, are full brothers. The case of the second party is that Kuar Singh had also left behind a daughter, named, Balo Kuer and this Balo Kuer was married to Dwarka Singh, opposite party no. 2. According to the case of the first party, however, Kuar Singh had left behind no such daughter. There is, however, no dispute that Upendra Singh and Bhupendra Singh, opposite party numbers 3 and 4 respectively, are sons of Dwarka Singh, Opposite party no. 2.

4. Briefly stated the case of the first party petitioners was that after the death of Sundar Singh, there was no male member to assist the two ladies, Askueri Kuer and Dularo Kuer (opposite Party no. 6) in management of the lands left behind by Sundar Singh. Accordingly Mithila Saran Singh, petitioner no. 1, began to manage their properties and was virtually in possession over the disputed lands. However, on the 7th December, 1961, Dularo Kuer, Opposite party no. 6, executed a deed of gift in respect of the entire disputed lands in favour of the two sons of Mithila Saran Singh, namely, Rajeshwar (Petitioner no. 1) and Mahanand (since deceased). Thus, the members of the first party were in actual possession over the entire disputed lands at the time when the present proceeding was drawn up under the orders of the court, dated the 31st March, 1962.

5. The case of the second party was that Sundar Singh had predeceased his father Kuar Singh, and having none to assist him in his old age to manage his properties, he kept his son-in-law, Dwarka Singh, opposite party no. 2, with himself and thus, it was Dwarka Singh who was in possession over the lands of Kuar Singh. Kuar Singh had also surrendered his properties in favour of Dwarka Singh. Dwarka Singh, used to maintain Askueri Kuer and Dularo Kuer out of the income of the lands of Kuar Singh over which he was in possession. Somehow or the other, Dularo Kuer, opposite party no. 6 was brought in collusion of the first party who took a deed of gift from her on the 7th December, 1961 and raised a dispute as to possession, ultimately giving rise to the present proceeding.

6. It is hardly necessary to add that the learned enquiring Magistrate has accepted the claim of possession over the disputed property put forward by the second party.

7. Mr. A. K. Roy, appearing on behalf of the petitioners, has put forward the contention that the decision of the learned Magistrate is without jurisdiction and, as such, it cannot be sustained. Learned counsel pointed out that by an order, passed on the 30th December, 1963, the enquiring Magistrate had made a reference to the civil Court under Section 146 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but the civil Court by its order, dated the 22nd February, 1964, returned the records of the case to the Magistrate as the order of reference was not in accordance with law. After that, the Magistrate instead of rectifying the defect in the order of reference to the civil Court took upon himself the responsibility of deciding the proceeding. This, according to Mr. Roy, the Magistrate was not empowered to do. The argument is that on receipt of the records from the civil Court in February, 1964, the only course open to the learned Magistrate was to make a proper reference in the light of the observations contained in the order of the civil Court, dated the 22nd February, 1964. To illustrate his point, Mr. Roy has drawn my attention to a Bench decision of this Court in State of Bihar v. Hari Mishra, AIR 1965 Patna 411 to which I was a party.

8. To appreciate the contention of Mr. Roy, it is necessary to keep in mind the precise circumstances under which the records were returned by the Civil Court under its order, dated the 22nd February, 1964. The order of the enquiring Magistrate, dated the 30th December, 1963 was in the following terms:

"I have gone through the record. The possession of none has so far been found and it requires further enquiry which cannot be decided under section 145 Cr. P. C. As such the proceedings are converted to one under section 146 Cr. P. C. and a reference is made to competent civil court for deciding the claim according to law. Lands are attached under section 146. Send the record to Registrar, Civil Court for needful. Parties to appear before Registrar, Civil Court on 1-2-64."

In the very next order, which is to be found in the order-sheet, the learned Munsif, 3rd Court, Patna, pointed out that the reference to the Civil Court had not been validly made inasmuch as the Magistrate had not drawn up a statement of the facts of the case and the order, dated the 30th December, 1963 also did not show what evidence, oral or documentary, on the point of possession had been produced before the Magistrate. The learned Munsif emphasised that it was the duty of the Magistrate to draw up a statement of the facts of the cases of the parties and to deal with the evidence adduced by them in support of their respective cases so that the Civil Court might be in a position to apply its mind to the reference in question. The learned Munsif concluded his order, dated the 22nd February, 1964, by observing as follows:

"... If the Act provides that a certain thing has to be done in a certain way, that thing must be done in that very way or it should not be done at all. As the law stands, a reference without drawing up statement of the facts of the case is incomplete and improper.

Therefore I have no option but to send back the record of the case to the learned Magistrate concerned who would proceed in accordance with law."

The point raised by Mr. Roy will have to be decided in the light of the effect of the order of the learned Munsif, dated the 22nd February, 1964. Mr. Roy contends that the direction of the learned Munsif was that the Magistrate should act in accordance with law by complying with the requirements of sub-section (1) of section 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to making a reference of the matter to the Civil Court. In support of his contention, Mr. Roy urged that the earlier order of the learned Magistrate, dated the 30th December, 1963 was not incompetent but merely improper and all that he was called upon to do by the order of the Civil Court was to remove the defect in the referring order so that the reference might become a proper reference in the eye of law. The fallacy in the contention of Mr. Roy is that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to make any direction to the learned Magistrate. The civil Court was not sitting in appeal over the Magistrate dealing with the proceeding.

9. As pointed out in the Bench decision relied upon by Mr. Roy, "the Civil Court, not being a court of appeal of the Magistrate's court, is not competent and has no jurisdiction to decide the propriety of any reference made by a magistrate under section 146 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The question whether such a reference by the Magistrate is proper or improper has to be decided by a higher Court, having necessary jurisdiction. The learned Munsif, therefore, adopted the right course to have brought this matter to the notice of the court although there is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure for making of any reference by a Munsif. . . Although the civil Court is not competent to decide about the competence or otherwise of any reference by a judicial pronouncement, it can nevertheless bring to the notice of the Magistrate its opinion about the incompetent nature of the reference by means of a letter and the Magistrate may recall such a reference, if he accepts the Munsif's opinion. Such a course will save time and also the parties from unnecessary harassment in coming to the High Court."

It will thus appear that the civil Court in the present case purported to follow the second course indicated in the Bench decision aforesaid. In that very decision, it has been pointed out that the reference of the kind made in the present case was not merely irregular but incompetent and that if in such circumstances the civil Court would have proceeded to give its decision on the question of possession then that would have been without jurisdiction. In other words, in the present case, there was no valid reference to the civil Court at all so as to have clothed it with jurisdiction to give its finding on the question of possession. In the absence of jurisdiction having been conferred upon the civil Court in accordance with law, the learned Munsif could neither record his finding nor make any direction to the learned Magistrate as to what course he should adopt after the return of the records from the civil Court.

To put it differently, the purported reference to the civil Court made under the order of the 30th December, 1963 was abortive and it wholly failed to deprive the learned Magistrate of his normal jurisdiction to decide the proceeding in accordance with section 145 (4), Criminal Procedure Code and to transfer that jurisdiction to the civil Court under section 146 (1) of the Code. It is also well known that the primary jurisdiction in such matters is that of the Magistrate. That is why, even after the civil Court returns its finding to the Magistrate, it is the duty of the Magistrate to pass the final order in the proceeding in the light of the decision of the civil Court. Therefore, since the order of the 30th December, 1963 could not validly confer any jurisdiction on the civil Court to record its decision, the conclusion must inevitably be that the jurisdiction over the proceeding continued in the Magistrate as before. Therefore, after the receipt of the record from the civil court, it was for the Magistrate to decide as to what course he ought to adopt, whether to make a proper reference to the civil Court under section 146 (1) of the Code or to proceed under section 145 (4).

10. I am unable to accept the contention that by reason of the order of the Civil Court, the Magistrate was left with no option but to make a valid reference under section 146 (1) of the Code. I am, therefore, clearly of the opinion that the Bench decision of this Court, relied upon by Mr. Roy, is really of no avail to him, and in any event, the final order made by the learned Magistrate cannot be struck down as 'without jurisdiction' on the ground urged by Mr. Roy.

11. The next contention of Mr. Roy is that the decision of the learned Magistrate is vitiated on account of failure to consider two of the documents filed before him on behalf of the petitioners, namely, (i) original summons or Mosanna in the name of Mithila Saran Singh in case no. 480 of 1938 and (ii) certified copy of deposition of Moti Singh, dated the 18th August, 1948 in title suit no. 9/3 of 1947-48. As regards item no. (i), the contention of Mr. Roy is not correct since the learned Magistrate had made reference to it at page 9 of the certified copy of his judgment. Mr. Roy has rightly contended that the deposition of Moti Singh in title suit no. 9/3 of 1947-48 has not been considered by the learned Magistrate. On looking into the deposition, however, I do not find anything there which could be relevant for deciding the question of possession in the present proceeding. The non-consideration of this document, therefore, is of no consequence at all. This branch of Mr. Roy's argument accordingly fails.

12. Mr. Roy has then made a grievance of the treatment of the affidavits of the witnesses of the petitioners made by the learned Magistrate. Mr. Roy contended that the first party had filed eight such affidavits and not seven as shown in the impugned order. The affidavit said to have been left out of consideration is said to be of one Kapildeo Singh and that is said to be relevant with respect to two of the disputed plots, 241 and 643. Mr. Ram Saroop Sinha appearing for the other side stated that there was no such affidavit on record. Thereupon a search for the alleged affidavit of Kapildeo Singh was made by Mr. Roy, but it was nowhere to be found on the records of the case. Evidently, no such affidavit was before the learned Magistrate requiring his consideration. Mr. Roy then contended that the learned Magistrate could have no justification for not relying upon the affidavits of four of the witnesses of the first party, namely, Brahmadeo Singh, Baikunth Singh, Mithila Singh and Havildar Singh, when he had himself found that they held lands on the boundaries of the disputed plots 22, 1046 and 1054. This argument does not appeal to me at all. The learned Magistrate was not bound to rely upon these witnesses merely because they appeared to be competent to speak about the possession of the petitioners over the three disputed plots. The learned Magistrate had to decide whether they were truthful witnesses and not merely competent witnesses. The reason is that a competent witness is not necessarily a truthful witness. No error of law can be said to have arisen merely because the learned Magistrate did not feel impressed with the evidence given on affidavits on behalf of the first party.

13. Lastly, Mr. Roy pointed out that Dwarka Singh did not swear any affidavit in this case although he was vitally interested in the dispute. But, it is to be remembered that Dwarka Singh is opposite party no. 2 in this Court and his brother, Nihora Singh (opposite party no. 1) did swear an affidavit in support of the case of the second party in the court below. It was not essential for each and every member of the second party to swear an affidavit in the proceeding. Nothing material, therefore, turns upon the circumstance that Dwarka Singh did not swear any affidavit in the proceeding.

14. In my opinion, no ground has been made out for interfering with the decision of the learned Magistrate. The application fails and is, accordingly, dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

ANWAR AHMAD

AND M. P. VERMA, JJ.

Thakur Dayal Rai and others, Appellants v. Bishundeo Rai and others, Respondents.

A. F. A. D. No. 259 of 1964, D/- 18-2-1969, against decision of 3rd Addl. Sub. J. Muzaffarpur, D/- 15-1-1964.

Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 142 and 144—Possession and dispossession — Possession when follows title — Proof of possession and enjoyment by plaintiff though not satisfactory, not valueless — Title of plaintiff to land admitted by defendant — Plea of title by adverse possession taken by the defendant disbelieved — Plaintiff's possession, held, could be presumed from title.

Presumption of possession arising from title is not available where the land is capable of actual possession by cultivation or otherwise, and there is no evidence of possession or the evidence adduced is unworthy of the credit. But this presumption is available in all cases (1) where the evidence is equally strong and apparently equally well-balanced on both sides so that it is difficult to determine where the truth lies; (2) where the evidence on both sides is weak or unsatisfactory, but not valueless or wholly incredible; (3) where the land is of such a peculiar nature that the evidence of actual user and enjoyment in the ordinary manner could hardly be expected e.g., lands which are waste, jungle, parti, gora, submerged under water or any other kind of land incapable of cultivation. AIR 1958 Pat 386 (FB) and AIR 1922 Pat 432, Foll.; AIR 1921 Pat 237 (FB), held modified by AIR 1958 Pat 386 (FB).

(Para 7)

The plaintiffs sued to recover possession of certain land alleged to have been taken possession of by the defendants taking advantage of flood waters which washed away a ridge which separated the plaintiffs' land from that of the defendants. The defendants, inter alia, pleaded acquisition of title by adverse possession. The court found that the plaintiffs' evidence though not satisfactory was not valueless. The defendants had admitted title in the plaintiffs.

Held that the plaintiffs' possession could be presumed from the title. Even if Article 142 of the Limitation Act applied, the plaintiffs were still entitled to succeed. An argument that no such presumption should be drawn was not tenable.

Shreenath Singh and Madhusudan Singh, for Appellants; Prem Lal, Din Dayal Sinha, Muzaffar Hussain and Arun Bihari Mathur, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT: This appeal by the defendants first party is directed against the decisions of the courts below decreeing the suit of the respondents first party in part, which was for declaration of title to and recovery of possession of 4 kathas 15 dhurs of land bearing survey plot no. 530, Khata no. 122, in village Pojhia in the district of Muzaffarpur. Admittedly, the aforesaid plot stands in the name of the ancestor of the respondents first party and third party in the survey record-of-rights. Plot no. 529 which is adjacent north of plot no. 530, is recorded in the name of the ancestor of the appellants and the respondents second party.

2. According to the case of the respondents first party, there was a ridge in between plots 529 and 530, which was demolished in 1957 by the flood water of river Baghmata. After the flood had receded, the appellants, in collusion with the respondents second party, forcibly and illegally ploughed a portion of plot

no. 530 along with their own plot no. 529 and thus dispossessed the plaintiffs, in the month of Savan, 1364 Fasli.

3. The appellants set up a number of pleas including limitation and non-maintainability of the suit. The main defence, however, was that the area in dispute was a part and parcel of plot no. 529 which belonged to them and it never formed part of plot no. 530. In the alternative, they set up a title in them by adverse possession. They, however, did not give any specific date on which they came in possession of the disputed area of land.

4. The learned Munsif, acting on the report of the Pleader Commissioner, decreed the suit of the respondents first party in respect of 3 kathas 12 dhurs of land, which was found on actual measurement to be a part of plot no. 530. He disbelieved the case of the appellants that they had acquired title by adverse possession. He accepted the case of respondents first party on the points of their possession and subsequent dispossession.

5. On appeal, the learned Additional Subordinate Judge applied Article 144 of the Limitation Act to the facts of the present case and held that there was no reliable evidence to support the plea of adverse possession set up by the appellants. Alternatively, he came to the conclusion that in case Article 142 be held to be applicable, the respondents first party were entitled to recovery of possession as their title was admitted by the appellants and the oral evidence adduced on behalf of the respondents first party, although not satisfactory, was not valueless. In this view of the matter, the learned Additional Subordinate Judge affirmed the findings arrived at by the learned Munsif.

6. Mr. Shreenath Singh, learned counsel for the appellants, very strongly urged that, the suit being in ejectment, the Court of appeal below was wrong in raising the presumption of title in favour of the respondents first party in coming to its conclusion that the respondents first party had succeeded in proving their case as required by Article 142 of the Limitation Act. In the submission of learned counsel, whenever a suit is brought on the basis of possession and subsequent dispossession, Article 142 of the Limitation Act will be applicable and in that case, the plaintiff cannot be allowed to raise the presumption of title in his favour. In this connection, learned counsel relied on Raja Shiva Prasad Singh v. Hira Singh, (1921) 6 Pat LJ 478 = (AIR 1921 Pat 237) (FB). We are unable to accept the proposition of law as put forward by learned counsel.

The decision in Raja Shiva Prasad Singh's case, (1921) 6 Pat LJ 478 = (AIR 1921 Pat 237) (FB) was explained by Dawson Miller, C. J., who delivered the leading judgment of the aforesaid Full Bench, in Matuk Singh v. Tian Sahu, ILR 2 Pat 1 = (AIR 1922 Pat 432) in the following words:

"... The Full Bench case to which I have referred did not lay down the proposition that in no case could the probabilities and presumptions be taken into account. The rule there laid down was that it is only in case where there is no evidence of the plaintiff as to dispossession or, what amounted in the opinion of the Full Bench to the same thing where the evidence is valueless, that the plaintiff fails to make out his case by merely proving that he had an antecedent title and possession, but it must not be considered, merely because, where evidence was given by both sides, the learned Judge who had to determine the case had a difficulty upon that evidence or even considered that evidence not altogether satisfactory, that in such circumstances he was not entitled to give weight to the probabilities of the case or to any presumption which might properly arise from the fact that the plaintiff had previously been in possession and had title. I think it would be extending the doctrine laid down in that case too far if we were to say that merely because the Judge had some difficulty in arriving at a conclusion upon the evidence of possession or because he did not consider the evidence altogether satisfactory, he was thereby precluded from looking either at the probabilities of the case as disclosed by other parts of the evidence or from the presumptions which might arise from the plaintiffs' title."

7. From what has been stated above, it is clear that, if the evidence adduced by a plaintiff is not valueless, which is not the same thing as to say that no evidence has been led by him on the point, the court of appeal below is entitled to take into account either the probabilities of the case or the presumption arising from his title, if the same is admitted by the defendant. This view of the law now stands settled by a Full Bench decision of this Court reported in AIR 1958 Pat 386 (FB), Jaldhari Mahto v. Rajendra Singh.

Paragraph 14 of that judgment runs:

"A review of the aforesaid cases shows that presumption of possession arising from title is not available where the land is capable of actual possession by cultivation or otherwise, and there is no evidence of possession or the evidence adduced is unworthy of the credit. But, this presumption is available in all cases (1) where the evidence is equally strong and apparently equally well-balanced on both sides so that it is difficult to determine where the truth lies; (2) where the evidence on both sides is weak or unsatisfactory, but not valueless or wholly incredible; (3) where the land is of such a peculiar nature that the evidence of actual user and enjoyment in the ordinary manner could hardly be expected e.g., lands which are waste, jungle, parti, gora, submerged under water or any other kind of land incapable of cultivation. To this extent the general rule laid down by the Full Bench in the case of Raja Shiva Prasad Singh, (1921) 6 Pat LJ 478 = (AIR 1921 Pat 237) (FB) must be deemed to be modified, and in such cases the plaintiff can succeed on the strength of his title alone."

8. So far as the judgment under appeal is concerned the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, as already stated, has completely disbelieved the plea of adverse possession set up by the appellants. He has further found that the evidence adduced on behalf of the respondents first party, although not satisfactory, was not valueless and he was, therefore, right in coming to the conclusion that the evidence adduced on behalf of the respondents first party received support from their title. On the findings arrived at by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, it cannot be reasonably argued that he erred in law in raising the presumption of title in favour of the respondents first party. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge, having held that the appellants have failed to prove their case of adverse possession over the plot in dispute, was right in observing that "even if Article 142 of the Limitation Act is applicable, even then the plaintiffs are entitled to recovery of possession for the reasons that the title of the plaintiffs is admitted and the oral evidence adduced on their behalf is not valueless."

9. It was also contended by Mr. Shreenath Singh that the Additional Subordinate Judge was obsessed by the idea that he was entitled to apply the provisions of Article 144 of the Limitation Act to the facts of the present case and, with that end in view, he construed the evidence accordingly. In our opinion, this submission of learned counsel is without substance and has to be rejected. A perusal of the judgment under appeal makes it perfectly clear that the Additional Subordinate Judge tried his best to arrive at the right conclusion and the criticisms levelled against his judgment by learned counsel are unfounded. No sufficient ground has been made out for our interference. The appeal is, accordingly, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A prohibitory order was issued by a Magistrate in a proceeding under S. 144 Criminal P. C. in respect of land in dispute restraining both the parties from going upon it. One party against the order entered upon the land and harvested the crops. The other party filed a complaint of theft. The Magistrate took cognizance of the complaint.

Held, (1) that the complainant could not be said to be in possession of the land in view of the prohibitory order and therefore the charge of theft was not maintainable. (Para 3) and (2) that there was not much distinction in the language of the provision under Ss. 144 and 145 of Criminal P. C. in the matter of prohibitory order. ORDER: This petition has been filed against the order of the learned Sub-divisional Magistrate, dated the 10th September, 1968, by which he ousted the jurisdiction of the Gram Cutcherry and himself took cognizance of an offence under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code. The short facts leading to this petition may be summarised as under:

2. The complainant filed a petition of complaint before the Sarpanch of the Gram Cutcherry on the 14th September, 1966, alleging that these petitioners had forcibly cut away and removed Marua crops from some plots of Khata No. 233, situate in village Dihura, within the jurisdiction of Tikari police-station in the district of Gaya. The Sarpanch got the matter enquired into by the Mukhiya of the Gram Panchayat. After receipt of that report, the Sarpanch sent the petition of complaint to the Sub-divisional Magistrate, Gaya. The learned Sub-divisional Magistrate then took cognizance under sections 147 and 379 of the Indian Penal Code, and transferred the case to the file of a Munsif-Magistrate for trial. As against that order of taking cognizance, these very petitioners had come up to this Court with the allegation that the lands in question were the subject-matter of a proceeding under S. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and both the parties had been restrained from going upon the lands. The alleged cutting of the Marua crop by as many as 28 persons was alleged to have been done within the period of 60 days from the date of issue of the prohibitory order under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. That matter was heard by this very Court in Criminal Revn. No. 398 of 1967 (Pat) and two observations were made. The first was that, "if the learned Sub-divisional Magistrate wants to oust the jurisdiction of the Gram Cutcherry and direct that this case should be tried by a regular magistrate, he can do so after giving sufficient reasons for the same." The second observation made was that in a case of this nature, where there had been violation of his prohibitory order, the learned Sub-divisional Magistrate should not have taken cognizance himself, but should have made a complaint against the alleged wrongdoers under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code. As laid down under section 195 (1) (a) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, no Court could take cognizance of an offence like this, except on the complaint in writing of the public servant concerned, or of some other public-servant to whom he is subordinate.

3. The main point which has been argued before me is that at the time of the harvesting of the Marua crops, the complainant could not be said to be in possession of the property, as he as well as these accused persons had been restrained from going upon the land. Learned State-lawyer has tried to make a distinction between the provisions of Section 144 and Section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as regarding the nature of custodia legis concerning the property involved in the proceeding. According to him, under Section 145 (4) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, an attachment is effected and then only the property comes into the custody of the Court or the Magistrate; whereas under Section 144 of the Code, the possession still remains with the complainant, though he is asked not to go upon the land. In my opinion, there is not much distinction between the language used in Sections 144 and 145. When a particular party is restrained from enjoying the possession of the land, he must be taken to be out of possession for that period.

This view of mine finds support from a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Osman Mistry v. Atul Krishna Ghosh, AIR 1949 Cal 632. The facts of that case appear to be on all fours with the facts of the case in hand. There, paddy had been harvested while a prohibitory order under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was in force. It was pointed out in that case that a charge of theft could not lie inasmuch as the paddy was then not in possession of the opposite parties by reason of the fact that there was an order under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure prohibiting both parties from going on the land and exercising acts of possession thereon; and it was held that "At the time of the alleged cutting of the paddy, therefore, it cannot be said that it was in the possession of the opposite parties. An offence of theft cannot be committed unless the property is moved out of possession of a person. On this ground also the charge of theft would not be maintainable." Nothing has been shown to me against this view, or the view I had taken in the previous case. I would, therefore, once again draw the attention of the learned Sub-divisional Magistrate to the legal position obtaining in this case. If he thinks that his order has been violated and injustice has been done to the complainant, he may file a complaint according to the legal procedure. He himself could not take cognizance in a case like this; and so his order of taking cognizance is quashed.

4. In the result, this petition succeeds and the impugned order of the learned Magistrate is quashed.

Petition dismissed.

L. M. Sharma and Babhunath Roy, for Petitioner; L. K. Choudhary and S. K. Choudhary, for Opposite Party.

ORDER: A complaint was filed against Tejmal Sharma, proprietor of the grocery shop at Baridih, P. S. Golmur, Jamshedpur and Rewati Raman Sharma, alleging that on 23-12-1966 when the Food Inspector Upendra Narain Sinha (P. W. 2) went to the shop and wanted to take sample of mustard oil and Haldi for chemical analysis, the accused persons refused to sell the same to him and thereby prevented him from taking sample. On this complaint the prosecution was started against both the aforesaid accused persons under section 16 (1) (b) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act (hereinafter referred to as the Act).

2. The defence of Tejmal Sharma was that he was not present at the shop at the time of the arrival of the Food Inspector and that he did not prevent the Food Inspector from purchasing sample. The defence of Rewati Raman Sharma was that he had no concern with the shop. He was kept in charge of the shop just as a care-taker in the absence of his brother Tejmal Sharma, who was the proprietor thereof. His further defence was that his act of refusal to sell the articles to the Food Inspector, under the circumstances, did not amount to preventing him from taking the sample and as such no offence was committed by him.

3. The trial court held that accused Rewati Raman Sharma was working as salesman in the shop in question on 23-12-1966 when the Food Inspector wanted to take the sample of the mustard oil and Haldi for chemical analysis and that he refused to sell the same. It further held that this refusal amounted to preventing the Food Inspector from taking the sample. Hence it found him guilty of offence under section 16 (1) (b) of the Act and convicted and sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000/-, in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a further period of six months. So far Tejmal Sharma was concerned, the learned Magistrate found that he was found on the counter and was receiving the payment for the articles sold. Further he held that even assuming that he was not present in the shop at the time of occurrence, he would be liable of any act done by his servant or salesman. With such findings he held him also guilty under section 16 (1) (b) of the Act and imposed the same sentence on him as well. On appeal, the appellate court did not accept the finding about presence of Tejmal Sharma at the time the Food Inspector visited the shop and it rejected the contention that he had any vicarious liability for what was done by Rewati Raman Sharma. Consequently it acquitted him. The appellate court, however, affirmed the conviction and sentence of Rewati Raman Sharma. Rewati Raman Sharma has, therefore, filed this revision application.

4. Learned Counsel, for the petitioner, has submitted that the appellate court did not record any finding as to whether the petitioner, Rewati Raman Sharma was working as salesman in the shop at the relevant time and as such by refusing to sell the article to the Food Inspector he did not commit any offence. His next submission is that even assuming that Rewati Raman Sharma was the salesman at the relevant time, his mere refusal to sell the article did not amount to preventing the Food Inspector from taking the sample.

5. So far the first point is concerned, on perusal of the order of the appellate Court, I find that the contention is correct. Nowhere in the judgment the appellate court has held that Rewati Raman Sharma was the salesman at the relevant time in the shop in question. The appellate court has simply discussed the defence of Rewati Raman Sharma to the effect that he had been to the shop as his service was requisitioned for performing Pooja and that he was left there to wait in the shop as a caretaker of the articles. Rejection of that defence does not amount to a positive finding that Rewati Raman Sharma was working as salesman at the relevant time. This finding is wanting in this case. Learned Counsel for the opposite party has, however, submitted that there was positive finding by the trial court that Rewati Raman Sharma was working as salesman in the shop in question on 23-12-1966 and as this part of the finding was not specifically challenged and argued by the appellants in the lower appellate court and the judgment is of affirmance it must be taken that the appellate Court affirmed this finding as well. I do not see any force in this contention. In a criminal matter the appellate Court, irrespective of the fact whether any finding of the trial Court is challenged or not, has to come to its own finding about the facts which are alleged to have constituted the offence. If there is lack of finding of any necessary ingredient constituting an offence, the order of the appellate court affirming conviction becomes vitiated.

6. The second point urged by the learned Counsel for the petitioner needs careful consideration. The allegation against the petitioner in the complaint petition is that on 23-12-1966 the petitioner refused to sell to the Food Inspector the sample of mustard oil and Haldi which were kept in the shop for sale and thereby prevented him from taking the sample for chemical analysis. In the evidence also the Food Inspector stated that he demanded the sample from Rewati Raman Sharma, for which he was prepared to pay the price, but Rewati Raman Sharma refused to give him the sample. He recorded this refusal in writing. There is no provision in the Act that mere refusal to sell by itself is an offence. It will be offence only when it amounts to prevention as contemplated by section 16 (1) (b) of the Act. The relevant part of section 16 is as follows:

"(1) If any person,

(b) prevents a food inspector from taking a sample as authorised by this Act," The Food Inspector is authorised to take a sample under section 10 of the Act. That section reads as follows:

"(1) A food inspector shall have power—

(a) to take samples of any article of food from

(i) any person selling such articles,

(ii) any person who is in the course of conveying, delivering or preparing to deliver such article to a purchaser or consignee,

(iii) a consignee after delivery of any such article to him".

Therefore this section empowers a Food Inspector to take sample of any article of food from any person selling such article. Even if it be assumed that petitioner Rewati Raman Sharma was selling the articles on the relevant date and at the relevant time it has to be seen if his refusal to sell amounted to prevention as contemplated by Section 16 of the Act. Section 10 of the Act empowers a Food Inspector to take the sample. It does not create any obligation on the part of the salesman or any other person mentioned therein to actively co-operate with the Food Inspector in taking the sample by physically handing over the article to him. It was for the Food Inspector to take the sample and if the salesman prevented him from doing so, he could be liable for an offence under section 16 (1) (b) of the Act.

7. The dictionary meaning of "to prevent" according to Oxford English Dictionary is to stop, keep, or hinder from doing something, to render an act or event impracticable or impossible by anticipatory action, to frustrate, defeat, bring to naught, render void or nugatory (an expectation, plan, etc). This means that there must be some action on the part of the person preventing any act, which would render the performance of that act impracticable or impossible. Such action of that person may be in the shape of physical obstruction or show of force or threat or show of any gesture which hinders performance of the act. Simply not co-operating by not handing over any article to the Food Inspector will not amount to preventing him from taking the sample. Mere refusal to sell the article unaccompanied by any gesture indicating that the Inspector would not be allowed to take the sample does not amount to prevention as contemplated by section 16 (1) (b). This view gets support from some cases cited on behalf of the petitioner. The first case referred to is a decision in Bishan Dass Telu Ram v. State, AIR 1957 Punj. 99. In that case also the accused had refused to give sample even on payment and it was held:

"that is not the same thing as prevention which need not have an element of physical obstruction, but it does involve some act which hinders an inspector from taking a sample".

Another case referred to is a decision in State of Gujarat v. Laljibhai Chaturbhai, AIR 1967 Guj 61. It was held therein:

"Whether the Food Inspector was prevented or not would depend on the facts of the case in order to constitute the offence. There must be a physical obstruction or threat or an assault. Mere refusal to give a sample would not amount to such prevention. Nor would merely leaving the shop, we do not know for what purpose, amount to prevention".

As against this, the learned Counsel for the opposite party has relied upon a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Municipal Board Sambhal v. Jhamman Lal, AIR 1961 All 103 in support of his contention that mere refusal to give the sample amounted to prevention as contemplated by section 16 (1) (b) of the Act. In this case when the Food Inspector reached the shop and demanded sample, Jhamman Lal instead of giving it to him left the shop and promised to come shortly. The Food Inspector waited for some time but he did not turn up. Then he asked one Tota Ram, who was sitting there in the shop, to supply the sample. This man also did not give him the sample saying that it would be given by Jhamman Lal and he was going to call him. He also left the shop. The Food Inspector prosecuted both of them for offence under section 16 (1) (b) of the Act. It was contended on behalf of the accused that before there could be prevention, there should be some kind of overt act. In that connection it was held:

"If a person disappears from the shop, in our opinion, he has done an overt act by means of which he made it impossible for the Food Inspector to obtain a sample from him. Apart from this fact we do not think that in cases of prevention an overt act is necessary".

In making the above observation, the learned Judge relied upon a decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Public Prosecutor v. Murugesan, AIR 1954 Mad 199. In that Madras case, however, the conduct of the accused was interpreted as sufficient overt act on his part to render the taking of sample impracticable. A sample of milk was demanded from the accused. He did not give it to the authority concerned. He went to the hotel and handed over the milk to the servant of the hotel. The milk was put into the milk pan in which milk was boiling. Therefore the whole conduct was such as made it difficult for the authority to take the sample for analysis. It is in that connection that it was held:

"On the facts alleged there could be no doubt that this accused, in the manner set out above and which need not be repeated, has effectively prevented the local executive officer from taking the sample and for this no further overt act is necessary than what has happened". This observation does not say that no sort of overt act was necessary to constitute prevention as contemplated by section 16 (1) (b) of the Act. In the Allahabad case referred to above so far Jhamman Lal was concerned, his disappearance from the shop was treated as an overt act by means of which he made it impossible for the Food Inspector to obtain a sample from him. It is for that reason that the aforesaid Punjab case which was cited before their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court was distinguished by making the following observations:

"With respect we might say that the learned single Judge did not consider the point that by disappearance, the accused had made it impossible for the Food Inspector to obtain sample "from the persons selling such article" which he was entitled to obtain under section 10 (1) and thereby he had prevented the Food Inspector in taking the sample as authorised by the Act".

The learned Judges did not observe that the view taken by the Punjab High Court was wrong. They simply distinguished it by saying that disappearance of the accused amounted to prevention.

So far Tota Ram, who had refused to give the sample, was concerned, it was observed that it was not clear from the evidence that he was selling the oil and that he refused to give sample and had prevented the Food Inspector from taking the sample from any person, who was selling such article. The point whether mere refusal to sell would amount to prevention was not considered in that Allahabad decision. This case is, therefore, no authority for the proposition that mere refusal to sell the article as sample to the Food Inspector amounts to preventing him from taking the sample as contemplated by section 16 (1) (b) of the Act.

8. In the instant case the allegation in the complaint is that the accused refused to sell the sample to the Inspector. There is no evidence that the Inspector insisted on taking sample and that the accused spoke that he would not allow him to do so. Rewati Raman Sharma did not offer any physical obstruction. There is no evidence that he gave any threat or showed any undesirable gesture. He quietly wrote out his refusal to sell the articles when asked to do so. He did not do any thing from which it could be inferred that he would not allow the Inspector to take the sample if he wanted to do so. In my opinion, the facts alleged and proved did not amount to preventing the Food Inspector from taking the sample, and as such no offence under section 16 (1) (b) is made out.

9. The result is that the revision application is allowed. The order of conviction and sentence passed against the petitioner is set aside. He is discharged from the bail bond. Fine, if realised, shall be refunded.

Revision allowed.

ORDER: This application is directed against an order passed by the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Patna City on the 22nd July, 1966, drawing up a proceeding under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (hereinafter referred to as the Code) against the petitioners calling upon them to show cause by the 6th August, 1966, as to why they should not be ordered to execute bonds of rupees one thousand with two sureties of the like amount each for keeping peace for a period of one year. It appears that this order was passed on the basis of a police report of the Malsalami Police station that there was an apprehension of the breach of the peace due to old enmity for a piece of land, which is a graveyard.

2. Learned Counsel for the petitioners has submitted that the order of the Court below is vague and the notices served upon the petitioners did not disclose as to what was the substance of the informations which they were to answer. In this connection he has referred to section 112 of the Code, which provides that when a Magistrate acting under Section 107 of the Code deems it necessary to require any person to show cause, he shall make an order in writing, setting forth the substance of the information received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the term for which it is to be in force, etc. I think the contention of the learned counsel is well founded.

3. Under Section 107 of the Code, whenever a Magistrate is informed that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace he may require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond, with or without sureties for keeping the peace for a period not exceeding one year. This has to be done in the manner provided in the subsequent sections and the manner is provided in S. 112 of the Code. That section requires a Magistrate to make an order in writing setting forth the substance of the information received.

Here, in the instant case, it appears that the learned Magistrate has not given the substance of the information received in the order. He has simply passed orders in the following terms:

"Perused the police report of Malsalami P. S. and duly forwarded by D. I. Police, Patna City, for action under section 107 Cr. P. C.

Whereas, I am satisfied from the police report of Malsalami P. S. that there is a serious apprehension of breach of peace at the hands of members of O. P. due to old enmity for piece of land which is graveyard which may disturb the public peace and tranquillity in a place which lies within the local limits of my jurisdiction.

Draw up proceeding under section 107 Cr. P. C. against the members of O. P."

It is not stated in this order as to what was the substance of the report of the police and in what manner the petitioners were likely to commit breach of the peace. It is also not stated as to with regard to which graveyard there was apprehension of breach of the peace. All these things have been left vague. The notices to show cause served on the petitioners were in these very terms. Therefore, it was not clear from the contents of the notices as well as to what allegations the petitioners were to answer.

Such order which does not contain the substance of the information received has been held to be bad in a decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Birdhaj Roy v. State, AIR 1953 Cal 491, which has been referred to by the learned Counsel for the petitioners. It has been held therein that the order of the Magistrate not indicating the nature of the information received which induced him to take action under section 107 of the Code is bad. No decision counter to it could be pointed out by the learned Counsel for the opposite party.

4. It has, however been submitted by the learned Counsel for the opposite party that the revision application is premature inasmuch as the petitioners have only been called upon to show cause and that stage is to come when, after the perusal of the show cause the Magistrate would take a decision whether to proceed with the proceeding or not. In this connection, learned Counsel for the opposite party has relied upon a decision of this Court in Criminal Rev. No. 351 of 1954 (Pat) Zahuruddin v. State, decided on the 18th November, 1954. In that case also a proceeding was started under Section 107 of the Code and the petitioners were called upon to show cause as to why they should not be ordered to execute a bond. It was observed that it would be premature for this Court to say whether the allegations did or did not warrant a proceeding under Section 107 of the Code, the learned Magistrate having complete jurisdiction to issue notices under that section.

5. In answer to this, learned Counsel for the petitioners has referred to an earlier decision of this Court in the case of Amanat Ali v. Emperor AIR, 1929 Pat 67. In that case also against the very initial order drawing up a proceeding under section 107 of the Code and calling upon the other side to show cause, a revision was filed and that was allowed on the ground that specifications as required under the law were not indicated in the order, that is to say, the petition in revision was entertained against the initial order calling upon the other side to show cause. This decision is counter to the aforesaid decision in the case of Zahuruddin, Criminal Revn. No. 351 of 1954 D/- 18-11-1954 (Pat), referred to by learned Counsel for the opposite party, in which the revision was characterised as premature at that stage. The decision in the case of Amanat Ali AIR 1929 Pat 67 was not referred to in that decision, which has been relied upon by the learned Counsel for the opposite party. The decision in the case of Amanat Ali being an earlier decision and having not been overruled by a Bench decision of this Court has to be followed. Therefore, I hold that the present revision application is not premature.

6. Another contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioners has been that the petitioners were called upon to show cause why they should not execute a bond for keeping peace for a period of one year and this period must be taken to have begun from the date of the order, that is to say, from the 22nd July, 1966, and, since that period has already elapsed, the order is fit to be set aside now. In this connection he has relied upon a decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Baburam v. Rex, AIR 1949 All 21. In that case the initial order requiring the parties concerned to furnish security for a period of three months commenced from the 18th August, 1947, when it was observed that that period having already expired, if the learned Magistrate was to hear the case upon merits under section 117 of the Code, he would not be in a position to pass a final order in confirmation of the previous order and he would have to drop the proceeding. With such observations, the proceeding was quashed.

It would, however, appear that in that particular case, the period of three months was directed to commence from a particular date. That is not the case in the case under consideration. Further, if such be the intention of law, then in every case, by coming in revision and dealing the matter, the person proceeded against would evade the execution of the bond. Learned Counsel has not been able to cite any decision of this Court on this point. With respect, I am not inclined to agree with the decision referred to above.

7. In view of what has been said above, the application is allowed and the order of the learned Magistrate dated the 22nd July, 1966, is set aside on the ground that it is vague. I would, however, like to make it clear that it is always open to the learned Magistrate to take appropriate action in a legal way if any such occasion arises.

Petition allowed.

AIR 1970 PATNA 109 (V 57 C 18)

S. N. P. SINGH AND SHAMBHU PRASAD SINGH, JJ.

Dehri Rohtas Light Rly. Co. Ltd., Petitioner v. Union of India and another, Opposite Party.

Civil Writ Jurisdiction Case No. 545 of 1968, D/- 26-2-1969.

(A) Railways Act (1890), Ss. 29 and 42 — Constitution of India, Art. 245 — Powers of Central Government under Ss. 29 and 42 are not absolute—Although sections do not provide any guide-lines legislative policy can be gathered from the whole Act. ¶

Sections 29 and 42 are not invalid on the ground that in those sections absolute power has been given to the Central Government to regulate the rates of freight etc. applicable to all Railways including the non-Government railways. (Para 19)

It is true that in the two impugned sections the Legislature has not provided any guide-line in the matter of regulation of rates of freight etc. by the Central Government. The preamble of the Act also does not lay down any legislative policy and as such it is not possible to gather any guide-line from the preamble of the Act in this regard. But it is well settled that the legislative policy behind a particular enactment can be gathered from the entire provisions of the Act. From the provisions of Ss. 27-A, 28 and 41 of the Act it can be gathered that "reasonableness", "interest of the public" and "avoidance of discrimination" are the basic legislative policy behind the enactment as contained in Chapter V of the Act. There is thus a binding rule of conduct in sections 27A, 28 and 41 of the Act in the light of which the Central Government have to exercise the powers conferred on them under Sections 29 and 42 of the Act. It is, therefore, difficult to hold that the Legislature has delegated its authority to the Central Government in the matter of regulation of rates of freight etc., applicable to Railways including the non-Government Railways by surrendering its essential legislative functions in favour of the Central Government. AIR 1967 SC 1895, Dist.; AIR 1960 SC 475, Rel. on. (Para 15)

(B) Railways Act (1890), Ss. 29 and 42 — Orders under — Quasi-judicial nature — Record of evidence.

The power which is vested in the Central Government under Sections 29 and 42 of the Act is quasi-judicial in nature in so far as it affects the rights of the Companies running non-Government Railways and such a power in the case of non-Government Railways has to be exercised in conformity with the principles of natural justice. Though the Act does not expressly cast a duty on the Central Government to act judicially, as the orders of the Central Government have to be passed on the materials placed before them and such orders might seriously affect the rights of the Companies running non-Government Railways, it is implied that a duty is cast on the Central Government to act judicially in the matter of regulation of rates etc. applicable to non-Government Railways. AIR 1962 SC 1110 and AIR 1967 SC 1398, Foll. (Paras 23 and 26)

(C) Railways Act (1890), Ss. 29 and 42 — Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Speaking orders — Orders of Central Government — Principles to be observed.

Where a statute or any rule framed thereunder in specific terms requires an authority to give reasons for its decision, the authority is bound to give a reasoned decision. An order passed in contravention of such a mandatory provision would render its decision invalid. The two impugned sections of the Act although do not provide for giving reasons, and the question of the violation of the statutory provision does not arise yet the authority should give reasons in support of its decision as a rule of prudence. Case law discussed.

(Paras 28, 30)

(D) Railways Act (1890), Ss. 28 and 29 — Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Government railway and non-Government railway — Government can be put in a separate class — Discrimination between non-Government railways alleged — Burden of proof is on petitioner.

The Government can be legitimately put in separate class by itself. There can be no two opinions on the question that the profits earned by Government Railways accrue to the benefit of the general public whereas the profits earned by a non-Government Railways accrue to the benefit of a particular individual or a set of individuals. It cannot also be doubted that a Government Railway provides better facilities to the travelling public than a non-Government Railway in several respects. The Government Railways, therefore, can legitimately be put as a class by themselves and as such there will be no violation of Article 14 of the Constitution when the Central Government differentiates between the Government Railways and the non-Government Railways in the matter of fixation of rates of freight etc.

However, where the petitioner alleges that a discrimination is made between itself and non-Government railways it is for the petitioner to prove by placing sufficient materials before the Court.

(Para 35)

(E) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Affidavits — New point — Principles.

Ordinarily a new point taken in the rejoinder to the counter-affidavit should not be entertained by the court unless the petitioner with the permission of the court amends the main application. But facts stated in the counter-affidavit of the other side which support a point taken in the petition can always be relied on. Further where a particular point is taken in the main application and what is stated in reply to it in the counter-affidavit of the other side is not factually correct, statements in the rejoinder to the counter-affidavit pointing out the incorrectness of the allegations in the counter-affidavit should also be taken into consideration. If it is open to the plaintiff to a suit to deny in his deposition the averments in the written statement, there appears no reason why statements in the counter-affidavit not factually correct cannot be denied by filing a rejoinder to it by the petitioner in a writ application. (Para 37)

Lal Narayan Sinha, R. P. Katriar and
K. Srinivasan; for Petitioner; Dr. V. A.
Seyid Muhammad, S. Sarwar Ali, Sashi
Kumar Sinha and Shyameshwar Dayal, for Opposite Party.

S. N. P. SINGH, J.: This is an application under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India in which the validity of the order of the Government of India, Ministry of Railways (Railway Board), contained in letter No. TCR/1078/66/DRL, dated 2-4/5-1968 (Annexure 13) addressed to the petitioner has been challenged.

2. The relevant facts which are not in dispute are these. The petitioner.
Dehri Rohtas Light Rly. Co. Ltd., hereafter to be called the petitioner Company, is a Company registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1882, having its registered office at Dalmianagar in the State of Bihar and it carries on business of transport of goods and passengers by the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway in the district of Shahabad. Sometime in the year 1908 Messrs Octavius Steel &
Company, Calcutta, the promoters of a Company to be called the Dehri Rohtas
Tramway Company Ltd., made an application to the Government of Bengal for sanction to the construction of a line of Tramway between Dehri-on-Sone on the East Indian Railway and the village of Akbarpore within the District of Shahabad. The Government of Bengal by Notification No. 24 R, dated the 10th of November, 1908, granted the application and made an order under section 5 of the Bengal Tramways Act (III of 1883) called the Dehri Rohtas Tramway Company Order (Annexure 1). By the said order the Government of Bengal reserved to itself full control over charges of all kinds for the use of the tramway. An agreement dated the 4th of June, 1909, between the District Board of Shahabad, Octavius Steel & Company and the Dehri Rohtas Tramway Company Ltd., was entered into (Annexure 2) and thereafter Dehri Rohtas Light Railway was constructed. When the Government of India Act, 1935, came into force, the control over Dehri Rohtas Light Railway vested in the Federal Railway Authority (which before its establishment meant the Central Government) by virtue of the provisions of Section 311 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1935. Thereafter the petitioner Company is governed by the provisions of Indian Railways Act, 1890 (Act IX of 1890), hereafter called "the Act", and is included in the definitions of "Railway Company" and "Railway Administration" within the meaning of Section 3 of the Act. In exercise of the powers conferred on the Central Government by Section 29 of the Act, the Central Government fixes the maximum and minimum rates from time to time applicable to Government Railways and other private Railways including the petitioner Company. The Central Government also by virtue of the provisions contained in Section 42 of the Act classifies any commodity, which has not been classified before, or re-classifies any commodity and increases or reduces the level of class rates and other charges applicable to Government Railways and other private railways including the petitioner Company.

3. It appears that there was a general revision of classification and rates by the Central Government in the year 1958 and accordingly the petitioner Company also revised the freight rate in 1958. The Central Government permitted to levy five per cent surcharge on the basic rates as revised in 1958 with effect from the 1st of April, 1960, to all Railways including the petitioner Company. By order No. TC. I/1078/62 dated the 2nd of May, 1962, the Railway Board revised the basic freight rates for goods, coal and livestock traffic in respect of all Government Railways and forwarded the copy of the order to all non-Government Railways including the petitioner Company asking them whether they also desired that the proposed increase should be made applicable to them as well and to furnish full justification for the same to enable the Board to examine the question further (Annexure 4). It appears that the petitioner Company sent a representation dated the 5th July, 1962, in which the petitioner Company made a request for making the increased freight rates applicable to it (Annexure 5). The Railway Board, however, rejected the representation of the petitioner Company and by their letter no. TCI/1078/62, dated the 20th of August, 1962, informed the petitioner Company that after considering all the points raised in the letter of the petitioner Company the Board came to the conclusion that no increase in the rates in force over the Dehri Rohtas Light Railway was called for (Annexure 6). The request made by the other non-Government Railways for the increase in rates and freights was acceded to and they were allowed the same increase in rates and freights as were applicable to the Government Railways.

4. It appears that in 1963 in respect of Government Railways the supplementary charge on goods traffic was increased from 5% to 10 p. c. and a surcharge of 10% was introduced on parcels traffic. All non-Government Railways including the petitioner Company and Port Trust Railways made a request for similar increase in the rate of supplementary charge. The request made by the petitioner Company was turned down by the Railways Board whereas the request made by the other non-Government Railways and Port Trust Railways was acceded to and they were allowed to implement the same increase in the rate of supplementary charge from different dates as was made applicable in the case of Government Railways.

5. In the year 1964 there was a further increase in the rate of supplementary charge from 10% to 12% on goods freight with effect from the 1st of April, 1964, in respect of Government Railways.

All non-Government Railways including the petitioner Company made representations for similar increase in the rate of supplementary charge. The increase in the rate of supplementary charge was sanctioned to all non-Government Railways except the petitioner Company from different dates. The request made by the petitioner Company for increase in the rate of supplementary charge was finally turned down by the Ministry of Railways by their letter No. TCI/1078/64 DRL dated the 8th of June, 1965 (Annexure A).

6. It is alleged that by Circular No. TCI/1078/65 dated the 27th of February, 1965, and the 12th of March, 1965, the Railway Board ordered various adjustments in freight rates with effect from the 1st of April, 1965, both upward and downward, by way of reclassification of certain commodities, introduction of some new classes and merging of the supplementary charges in the basic rates which had been permitted earlier to Government and some non-Government Railways. It is further alleged that the petitioner Company was required to show the supplementary charges separately and was not permitted to merge with the basic freight as was done in the case of all Government Railways and other non-Government Railways, although the reclassifications, upward and downward, were made applicable to the petitioner Company. It is stated in the counter-affidavit filed on behalf of the opposite party that the petitioner Company was permitted to revise the rates merging the 5% supplementary charge and to notify them with effect from the 1st of May, 1965. In support of the above statement, the copy of letter no. TCI/1078/65, dated the 9th of April, 1965, from the Ministry of Railways, addressed to the Managing Agents, Dehri Rohtas Light Railway, Dalmianagar, has been enclosed with the counter-affidavit (Annexure B).

7. In the year 1966 a supplementary charge of 3% was introduced with effect from the 1st of April, 1966, on goods traffic subject to certain exceptions in respect of Government Railways. All non-Government Railways including the petitioner Company made representations for similar increase in the supplementary charge. The representations made by other non-Government Railways, namely, Shahadra-Saharanpur, Arrah-Sasaram, Futwa-Islampur, Howrah-Amta and Howrah-Sheakala, were made applicable to them with effect from the 15th of December, 1966. The representation made by the petitioner Company dated the 18th of October, 1966 (Annexure 7) was turned down by the Ministry of Railways by their letter No. TCR/1078/65/

DRL, dated the 9th of January, 1967 (Annexure 8).

8. It appears that in the year 1967 also there was some increase in the charges in respect of Government Railways. All non-Government Railways including the petitioner Company made representations for permitting the same increase and all the non-Government Railways except the petitioner Company were allowed the same increase from different dates. The representation of the petitioner dated the 17th of June, 1967 (Annexure 9) was turned down by letter No. TCR/1078/66 DRL dated the 27th of December, 1967, of the Ministry of Railways (Annexure 10). It appears that the petitioner Company again sent a letter dated the 21st of February, 1968, to the Railway Board for reconsideration of the aforesaid order dated the 27th of December, 1967, and made a request for increase in freights and fares as were applicable to the other Railways (Annexure 11). In response to the letter of the petitioner Company (Annexure 11), the Government of India. Ministry of Railways (Railway Board) by the impugned order, as contained in their letter no. TCR/1078/66/DRL, dated 2-4/5-1968. (Annexure 13), accorded sanction for the increase in freight rates for goods traffic and passenger fares with effect from the 1st June, 1968, in respect of the petitioner Company on the following basis:

(a) The supplementary charge leviable on goods traffic to be increased from 5% to 10%.

(b) The basis for first class passenger fares to be increased from 5.18 paise per kilometre to 6 paise per kilometre, for second class from 2.91 paise per kilometre to 3.5 paise per kilometre and for the third class from 1.94 paise per kilometre to 2.25 paise per kilometre.

9. In the meantime the Railway Board revised the freight rates of passenger fares in respect of Government Railways with effect from the 1st of April, 1968, and all the non-Government Railways with effect from the 11th April, 1968. The petitioner Company thereupon made a representation by letter dated the 20th April, 1968, in which they made a request for the same increase in freights and fares (Annexure 12).

10. It appears that the petitioner Company, not being satisfied with the decision of the Railway Board as conveyed in their letter (Annexure 13), sent a letter by way of representation to the Railway Board on the 11th of May, 1968, in which they made another request for making the freight rates at par with the rates applicable to Government and other non-Government Railways (Annexure 16). On the 27th of May, 1968, the petitioner Company sent a telegram to the Railway

Board to expedite the sanction (Annexure 17). A letter was also sent by the petitioner Company on the 17th of June, 1968, in which a request was made for an early decision on their representation. The Railway Board by their letter no. TCR/1078/66/DRL, dated the 23rd of July, 1968 ultimately rejected the representation made by the petitioner Company and expressed their inability to accede to any further enhancement in fares and freights (Annexure D). The above-mentioned letter of the Railway Board was sent to the petitioner Company after the present application was filed in this Court on the 22nd of July, 1968.

11. It is alleged that the freight rates which are applicable to the petitioner Company after the increase made by the order of the Railway Board dated 2-4/5-68 are almost equal to the freight rates which were applicable in the case of Government Railways with effect from the 1st of July, 1962. Statements showing the year to year increase in the freight rates applicable to Government Railways and those applicable to the petitioner Company in regard to some major commodities, such as, limestone and cement, have been filed as Annexures 14 and 15. According to the petitioner Company, the Central Government has made a discrimination against the petitioner Company by allowing them only the increase in the rates which had been allowed to the Government Railways as far back as 1962 instead of allowing them to charge the same rates as are at present charged by the Government and other non-Government Railways.

12. In their application the petitioner Company has challenged the validity of the order (Annexure 13) on various grounds. In their counter-affidavit the opposite party have alleged that the petitioner Company stands in a class by itself and that the reasons, which led to increase in the freight rates etc., from time to time in respect of Government Railways, are not applicable to the petitioner Company. It is further alleged that the Central Government in granting increase in freight rates etc., to other non-Government Railways have taken into consideration their financial position.

13. Mr. Lal Narayan Sinha, learned counsel appearing for the petitioner Company without disputing the position that the petitioner Company is governed by the provisions of the Act, at the time of argument raised the following contentions.

(a) That sections 29 and 42 of the Act are invalid in so far as they empower the Central Government to regulate the rates of freight etc., applicable to non-Government Railways.

(b) That the power, which is vested in the Central Government under Ss. 29 and 42 of the Act, is quasi-judicial in nature and it has to be exercised in conformity with the principles of natural justice which has not been done while fixing the rates of freight etc. of the petitioner Company.

(c) That the Central Government while exercising quasi-judicial power under sections 29 and 42 of the Act have to pass reasoned orders which have not been done in the case of the petitioner Company.

(d) That the Central Government in fixing the rates of freight etc., have made a discrimination between the petitioner Company and the Government Railways as well as between the petitioner Company and other non-Government Railways without any reasonable basis.

(e) That the Central Government have taken into consideration irrelevant factors and have left out of consideration relevant factors in fixing the rates of freight etc., applicable to the petitioner Company.

14. I shall now proceed to consider the points raised seriatim. The validity of sections 29 and 42 of the Act has been challenged on the ground that in the two sections absolute power has been given to the Central Government to regulate the rates of freight etc. applicable to all railways including the non-Government railways. Mr. Sinha urged that the two sections may be valid in so far as they empower the Central Government to regulate the rates of freight etc. applicable to Government railways inasmuch as the Central Government have the absolute right to regulate the rates of freight and fare applicable to their own Railways but the sections are invalid in so far as they empower the Central Government to regulate the rates of freight and fare applicable to non-Government Railways because the Legislature has not provided any guidance in the matter of fixation of rates. According to Mr. Sinha there is a complete delegation of the Legislative functions in the Central Government in regard to the question as to what would be the guiding principles in the matter of fixation of rates of freight and fare applicable to non-Government Railways. Section 29 of the Act reads as follows:

"(1) The Central Government may by general or special order fix maximum and minimum rates for the whole or any part of a railway, and prescribe the conditions in which such rates will apply.

(2) The Central Government may, by a like order, fix the rates of any other charges for the whole or any part of a railway and prescribe the conditions in which such rates of charges shall apply.

(3) Any complaint that a railway administration is contravening any order issued by the Central Government under sub-section (1) shall be determined by the Central Government."

It is clear from the provisions of S. 29 that no guiding principles have been provided there in the matter of fixation of maximum and minimum rates or the rates of any other charges applicable to the whole or any part of a railway and for prescribing the conditions in which the rate and rates of charges are to be applied. Section 42 of the Act runs as follows:

"The Central Government alone shall have power—

(a) to classify or reclassify any commodity;

(b) to increase or reduce the level of class rates and other charges."

Similarly no guiding principles have been provided in section 42 itself in the matter of classification or reclassification of the commodities or in the matter of increase or reduction in the level of class rates and other charges by the Central Government. Thus, in the two impugned sections the Legislature has not provided any guide-line in the matter of regulation of rates of freight etc. by the Central Government. The preamble of the Act does not lay down any legislative policy and as such it is not possible to gather any guide-line from the preamble of the Act in the matter of regulation of rates of freight etc. by the Central Government.

15. The next question which falls for consideration is whether any legislative policy has been laid down in the other relevant sections of the Act. It is well settled that the legislative policy behind a particular enactment can be gathered from the entire provisions of the Act (See the cases of Union of India v. Bhanamal Gulzarimal Ltd., AIR 1960 SC 475 and Vasanlal Maganbhai Sanjanwala v. State of Bombay, AIR 1961 SC 4). Chapter V of the Act in which the two impugned sections occur is headed as "Traffic Facilities". Section 27 imposes an obligation on a Railway Administration to arrange for receiving and forwarding traffic without unreasonable delay and without partiality. Section 27A empowers the Central Government in the public interest to give directions in regard to transport of goods by a Railway Administration. Section 28 lays down as follows:

"A railway administration shall not make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to, or in favour of, any particular person or railway administration, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or subject any particular person or railway administration or any particular description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever."

Section 41 of the Act reads thus:

"(1) Any complaint that a railway administration—

(a) is contravening the provisions of section 28,

(b) is charging for the carriage of any commodity between two stations a rate which is unreasonable, or

(c) is levying any other charge which is unreasonable, may be made to the Tribunal, and the Tribunal shall hear and decide any such complaint in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter.

(2) In the case of a complaint under clause (a) of sub-section (1),

(i) whenever it is shown that a railway administration charges one trader or class of traders or the traders in any local area lower rates for the same or similar animals or goods or lower rates for the same or similar services, than it charges to other traders or classes of traders, or to the traders in another local area, the burden of proving that such lower charge does not amount to an undue preference shall lie on the railway administration.

(ii) in deciding whether a lower charge does or does not amount to an undue preference, the Tribunal may, in addition to any other considerations affecting the case, take into consideration whether such lower charge is necessary in the interests of the public.

(3) In the case of a complaint under clause (b) or clause (c) of sub-section (1), the Tribunal may fix such rate or charge as it considers reasonable:

Provided that the rate to be fixed under clause (b) of sub-section (1) shall be within the limit of the Government under sub-section (1) of section 29.

(4) A complaint under this section may be made jointly against two or more railway administrations".

From the provisions of sections 27A, 28 and 41 of the Act it can be gathered that "reasonableness", "interest of the public" and "avoidance of discrimination" are the basic legislative policy behind the enactment as contained in Chapter V of the Act. There is thus a binding rule of conduct in sections 27A, 28 and 41 of the Act in the light of which the Central Government have to exercise the powers conferred on them under sections 29 and 42 of the Act. It is, therefore, difficult to hold that the Legislature has delegated its authority to the Central Government in the matter of regulation of rates of freight etc., applicable to Railways including the non-Government Railways by surrendering its essential legislative functions in favour of the Central Government.

16. Mr. Sinha appearing for the petitioner company strongly relied on a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Devi Das v. State of Punjab, AIR 1967 SC 1895. In that case section 5 of the East Punjab General Sales Tax Act, 1948, as it originally stood, was held to be void. The learned Chief Justice while dealing with the question regarding the validity of section 5 of the Punjab Act observed as follows:

"Under section 5 of the Punjab General Sales Tax Act, 1948, as it originally stood, an uncontrolled power was conferred on the Provincial Government to levy every year on the taxable turnover of a dealer a tax at such rates as the said Government might direct. Under that section the Legislature practically effaced itself in the matter of fixation of rates and it did not give any guidance either under that section or under any other provisions of the Act...no other provision was brought to our notice. The argument of the learned counsel that such a policy could be gathered from the constitutional provisions cannot be accepted, for, if accepted, it would destroy the doctrine of excessive delegation. It would also sanction conferment of power by Legislature on the executive Government without laying down any guide-lines in the Act. The minimum we expect of the Legislature is to lay down in the Act conferring such a power of fixation of rates clear legislative policy or guide-lines in that regard. As the Act did not prescribe any such policy, it must be held that Section 5 of the said Act, as it stood before the amendment, was void." The case relied upon by learned counsel appearing for the petitioner is distinguishable on the ground that in that case no legislative policy or guide-lines were found under any other provisions of the impugned Punjab Act. As I have already indicated, a clear legislative policy and guide-lines have been laid down under other provisions of the Act, namely, Sections 27-A, 28 and 41 of the Act.

17. Dr. V. A. Seyid Muhammad appearing for the opposite party relied on the following cases, namely, N. T. F. Mills Ltd. v. 2nd Punjab Tribunal, AIR 1957 SC 329, Jyoti Pershad v. Union Territory of Delhi, AIR 1961 SC 1602 and Abdul Wajid v. State of U. P., AIR 1955 All 708 for the proposition that the basic idea underlying all the provisions of the Act has to be taken into consideration for judging the vires of the Act. The decisions in the cases referred to and relied upon by the learned counsel appearing for the opposite party support his contention.

18. Dr. V. A. Seyid Muhammad put forward an alternative argument that even if it be held that the Legislature has not given sufficient guidance to the Central Government in the matter of fixation of rates of freight etc., the discretion to exercise the powers being vested in a high authority, the Court will assume that the authority will exercise the power conferred upon it reasonably. According to learned counsel, mere possibility of the abuse of power is not a sufficient ground to strike down the provisions of the Act as unconstitutional. In support of his above contention, he relied on the following cases, namely, Pannalal Binraj v. Union of India, AIR 1957 SC 397, Virendra v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 896 and State of Bombay v. F. N. Balsara, AIR 1951 SC 318. Learned counsel further relied on the following passage in "Willis on Constitutional Law" (1936 Edition) at pages 586-587:

"... Perhaps the best view on this subject is that due process and equality are not violated by the mere conference of unguided power, but only by its arbitrary exercise by those upon whom conferred. If this is the correct position, the only question that would then arise would be the delegation of legislative power. If a statute declares a definite policy, there is a sufficiently definite standard for the rule against the delegation of legislative power, and also for equality if the standard is reasonable. If no standard is set up to avoid the violation of equality, those exercising the power must act as though they were administering a valid standard."

It is not necessary to consider the alternative argument of learned counsel for the opposite party in any detail in view of the fact that, as found above, there is a sufficient legislative policy in the Act itself in the light of which the Central Government have to exercise the powers conferred upon them under the two impugned sections of the Act.

19. It will be relevant to refer to some of the passages in the Report of the Railway Freight Structure Enquiry Committee 1955-57, Volume I (Part-I), which reveal the legislative history of the Act. Paragraph 278 of the Report shows that when more railways were established and when more Companies were formed, the necessity for a check on the rating policy of the Companies to safeguard the interest of both the railways and the public was felt.

Paragraph 278 of the Report runs thus:

"In the early days of railways in this country the need for detailed control by Government was not felt. As more railways were established and more railway companies were formed, there was a growing desire that Government should have a check on the rating policy of the companies to safeguard the interest of both the railways and the public. By a resolution of the Government of India, of 12th December, 1887, it was laid down, amongst other principles, "that, although in the interests of the public, Government should abstain from direct interference in the matter of rates and fare yet there are certain ruling principles which Government, as the guardian of public interests, must see complied with by the railway administration. There should be no undue preference, in other words, railway administration ought not to be permitted to make preferential bargain with particular persons or companies, such as granting them scales of charges more or less favourable than those granted to the public generally. Again, in cases where the traffic offering is sufficient to justify these arrangements, railway administration must give reasonable facilities for public traffic between any two railway stations, each railway administration being contented to receive for its share of the through rate, less than its ordinary low rate."

It appears from paragraph 279 of the Report that when the Act was passed in 1890, in order to safeguard the interest of the public provision was made in the Act for the appointment of a Railway Commission. The legislative history of the Act, therefore, shows that "interest of the public" was the dominant consideration for a check by the Government on the rating policy of the Companies running non-Government Railways. The Legislature in Chapter V of the Act clearly indicated that "interest of the public", "avoidance of discrimination" and "reasonableness" are the three basic factors which have to be taken into consideration in the matter of check by the Government on the rating policy of the Railways. For all these reasons, I would overrule the first contention which has been raised on behalf of the petitioner Company and hold that sections 29 and 42 of the Act are valid.

20. I now proceed to deal with the second contention of learned Counsel appearing for the petitioner Company. Mr. Sinha urged that the petitioner Company and other Companies, which are running non-Government Railways, have a right to conduct their business according to their choice which includes the right to fix their own rates for rendering service to the people by transporting goods and passengers. Therefore, the power which is vested in Central Government under sections 29 and 42 of the Act is quasi-judicial in nature inasmuch as the exercise of the power affects the right of all such Companies, which run non-Government Railways, and such a power must be exercised in conformity with the principles of natural justice. According to Mr.

Sinha, the Central Government have not followed the principles of natural justice while fixing the rates of freight etc., applicable to the petitioner Company. Learned counsel appearing for the opposite party, on the other hand, submitted that no duty is cast on the Central Government by the provisions of the Act to act judicially and the orders which are passed by the Central Government under Sections 29 and 42 of the Act are purely administrative in nature. The Central Government, therefore, are not required to strictly observe the principles of natural justice while passing the orders. Alternatively, he argued that even if it be held that the power vested in the Central Government is quasi-judicial in nature, there has been no violation of the principles of natural justice because the petitioner Company was given ample opportunity to represent their case for enhancement in the rates of freight and fare before the impugned order was passed by the Central Government.

21. On the rival contentions raised on behalf of the parties, two main points fall for consideration, namely, (1) whether the power vested in the Central Government under sections 29 and 42 of the Act is quasi-judicial in nature or it is purely of administrative character and (2) whether the Central Government have transgressed the principles of natural justice while passing the impugned order (Annexure 13) if the nature of the power vested in the Central Government be held to be quasi-judicial in nature. It will not be necessary to deal with the second point if it is found that the nature of the power that the Central Government have to exercise under sections 29 and 42 of the Act is purely administrative in character. It shall have, however, to be considered whether the Central Government have observed the ordinary rules of fair play while passing the impugned order.

22. Learned counsel appearing for the petitioner Company relying on the case of R. v. Manchester Legal Aid Company, (1952) 1 All ER 480, urged that where an authority is under an obligation to pass an order on objective determination of certain facts, either under an express provision of the statute or by implication and the order affects the right of some one, the authority concerned is under a duty to act judicially. According to Mr. Sinha, the very nature of the power vested in the Central Government to regulate the rates of freight etc., implies that the Central Government have to act objectively taking into consideration the relevant facts and any decision of the Central Government in that regard has the direct effect on the right of the Companies running non-Government Railways. According to learned counsel appearing for the opposite party, the mere fact that a decision has to be taken by an objective test and the decision affects the right of some one, the decision cannot be said to be quasi-judicial in nature. He submitted that the real test is whether by the statute a duty is cast on the authority to act judicially.

23. In the case of Nagendra Nath Bora v. Commissioner of Hills Division and Appeals, Assam, AIR 1958 SC 398 at p. 399 it was observed as follows:

"...whether or not an administrative body or authority functions as a purely administrative one or in a quasi-judicial capacity, must be determined in each case, on an examination of the relevant statute and the rules framed thereunder." In the case of Radeshym Khare v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1959 SC 107 the learned Chief Justice made the following observation:

"As stated in paragraph 115 of Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 11 at page 57, the duty to act judicially may arise in widely differing circumstances which it would be impossible to attempt to define exhaustively. The question whether or not there is a duty to act judicially must be decided in each case in the light of the circumstances of the particular case and the construction of the particular statute with the assistance of the general principles laid down in the judicial decisions. The principles deducible from the various judicial decisions considered by this Court in Province of Bombay v. Khusaldas S. Advani, AIR 1950 SC 222 at p. 260 were thus formulated, namely:

(i) that if a statute empowers an authority, not being a Court in the ordinary sense, to decide disputes arising out of a claim made by one party under the statute which claim is opposed by another party and to determine the respective rights of the contesting parties who are opposed to each other, there is a lis and prima facie and in the absence of anything in the statute to the contrary it is the duty of the authority to act judicially and the decision of the authority is a quasi-judicial act; and

(ii) that if a statutory authority has power to do any act which will prejudicially affect the subject, then, although there are not two parties apart from the authority and the contest is between the authority proposing to do the act and the subject opposing it, the final determination of the authority will yet be a quasi-judicial act provided the authority is required by the statute to act judicially."

In the instant case there is no lis and there is no question of any contest between the two parties and as such the principle referred to under the first category has no application. It has, therefore, to be considered whether the case comes under the second category, namely, whether the provisions of the Act require the Central Government to act judicially when passing orders under sections 29 and 42 of the Act. No express provisions have been made in the Act regarding the procedure to be adopted by the Central Government in carrying out their duties under sections 29 and 42 of the Act. It is manifest, however, from the nature of the power, which is vested in the Central Government, that they have to take into consideration the various facts before passing orders under sections 29 and 42 of the Act. Undoubtedly an order passed under sections 29 and 42 of the Act in respect of non-Government Railways affects the right of the Companies to run their Railways according to their choice. It is not disputed that the Central Government pass orders under sections 29 and 42 of the Act in respect of non-Government Railways after consideration of the materials placed before them.

Indeed, in paragraph 17 (vi) of the counter-affidavit it has been stated that the Central Government exercise the powers under Section 42 of the Act after considering both the viewpoints of the Railways, their financial position and the effect of fixation of rates and charges on the public. Taking into consideration all the circumstances, I am of the view that though the Act does not expressly cast a duty on the Central Government to act judicially, as the orders of the Central Government have to be passed on the materials placed before them and such orders might seriously affect the rights of the Companies running non-Government Railways, it is implied that a duty is cast on the Central Government to act judicially in the matter of regulation of rates etc., applicable to non-Government Railways. As observed by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in the case of Board of High School and Intermediate Education, U. P. Allahabad v. Ghanshyam Das Gupta AIR 1962 SC 1110—

"... the statute is not likely to provide in so many words that the authority passing the order is required to act judicially; that can only be inferred from the express provisions of the statute in the first instance in each case and on one circumstance alone will be determinative of the question whether the authority set up by the statute has the duty to act judicially or not. The inference whether the authority acting under a statute where it is silent has the duty to act judicially will depend on the express provisions of the statute read along with the nature of the rights affected, the manner of the disposal provided, the objective criterion if any to be adopted, the effect of the decision of the person affected and other indicia afforded by the statute."

I accordingly hold that the power which is vested in the Central Government under sections 29 and 42 of the Act is quasi-judicial in nature in so far as it affects the rights of the Companies running non-Government Railways and such a power in the case of non-Government Railways has to be exercised in conformity with the principles of natural justice.

24. It is now to be considered whether or not the Central Government have violated the principles of natural justice, while passing orders relating to the fixation of rates of freight etc. applicable to the petitioner Company. Paragraph 21 (iv) and (v) of the application, in which the petitioner Company has taken the specific ground regarding the violation of the principles of natural justice, read thus:

"21 (iv) The petitioner was not given any opportunity to show cause against the proposed order nor was it informed of the reasons why its request could not be acceded to as a result of which the petitioner could not explain the relevant materials and their effect and the consequent relief to which the petitioner is entitled.

(v) The said orders having been passed without due consideration and without giving the petitioner an opportunity to prove its case and thus they offend the rules of natural justice. They are, therefore, illegal and void."

In paragraph 17 of the counter-affidavit filed by the opposite party the allegation that the principles of natural justice have been violated has been denied and it has been asserted that all opportunities were given to the petitioner for justifying their case for the increased rates. It is further stated in that paragraph as follows:

"... The petitioner Light Railway not only made representations on the subject and produced whatever evidence they wished to, they were also asked to supply additional information and clarification and they did so. And it was only after all the material supplied by them or obtained from them had been duly considered that the Ministry of Railways took the decision. These matters were considered by the Ministry of Railways carefully and the Ministry of Railways decided in favour of the petitioner by making applicable to them the increases in freight rates and fares as detailed in the order dated 2/4-5-1968 of the Ministry of Railways, a copy of which is enclosed to the petition and marked as Annexure 13. It is, therefore, abundantly clear that the petitioner was given all opportunity in the matter and the question of offending the rules of natural justice by the opposite party did not arise."

25. The two impugned sections of the Act do not contemplate recording of oral or documentary evidence in the usual way as in a court of law nor do they contemplate a regular hearing by the Central Government. No rule framed under the Act has been brought to our notice in course of arguments to show that the Central Government have to follow a particular procedure before passing an order either under S. 29 or under section 42 of the Act in respect of Government Railways. As observed in the case of Bharat Barrel and Drum Mfg. Co. v. L. K. Bose, AIR 1967 SC 361—

"... It is now well settled that while considering the question of breach of the principles of natural justice the court should not proceed as if there are any inflexible rules of natural justice of universal application. The Court therefore has to consider in each case whether in the light of the facts and circumstances of that case, the nature of the issues involved in the inquiry, the nature of the order passed and the interests affected thereby, a fair and reasonable opportunity of being heard was furnished to the person affected."

In the case of Union of India v. P. K. Roy, AIR 1968 SC 850 the same principle has been reiterated in these words:

"... the extent and application of the doctrine of natural justice cannot be imprisoned within the straight jacket of a rigid formula. The application of the doctrine depends upon the nature of the jurisdiction conferred on the administrative authority, upon the character of the rights of the persons affected, the scheme and policy of the statute and other relevant circumstances disclosed in the particular case."

26. It is not disputed that whenever the Government of India revised the freight rates etc. in respect of Government Railways and non-Government Railways, they were informed by the Railway Board and they were asked to furnish full justification for the increase in the freight rates etc., if they desired that the proposed increase should be made applicable to them as well. On being asked by the Railway Board to furnish justification for the increase in the freight rates etc., the petitioner Company had sent written representations from time to time. Along with the letter of representations the petitioner Company had sent various statements to show the increase in the cost of running the Railway and at times they had also sent their annual reports. According to Mr. Lal Narayan Sinha, the petitioner Company ought to have been given an opportunity for personal hearing by the Central Government before rejecting the representation of the petitioner Company and before passing the impugned order (Annexure 13) allowing only a partial increase in the rates of freight etc. Mr. Sinha submitted that the petitioner Company would have been able to show to the satisfaction of the Central Government that regard being had to all the relevant facts including the fact that there is a considerable increase in the cost of running Railway Administration, the petitioner Company is entitled to the same increase in the rates of freight and fare as they are made applicable to the Government Railways and other non-Government Railways if it had been given a personal hearing before the decision of the Central Government. Learned counsel appearing on behalf of the opposite party contended that as the provisions of the Act do not contemplate a personal hearing, the Central Government were not bound to give a personal hearing to the petitioner Company. He, however, conceded that if the petitioner Company had demanded a personal hearing and the same had been denied by the Central Government, the question regarding violation of the principles of natural justice might have arisen.

In support of his contention he relied on the decision in the case of the State of Assam v. Gauhati Municipal Board, Gauhati, AIR 1967 SC 1398. In that case a question for consideration was whether the Gauhati Municipal Board was entitled to a personal hearing before the State Government passed the order of supersession under Section 298 of the Assam Municipal Act. The High Court had held that the proceedings culminating in an order under Section 298 of the Assam Municipal Act were quasi-judicial and there was violation of the principles of natural justice in that case. According to the decision of the High Court, the State Government should have given an oral hearing to the Board and should also have given opportunity to produce materials in support of the explanation offered by the Board. While dealing with the question whether the principles of natural justice were violated and the Board had a right of personal hearing, their Lordships of the Supreme Court observed as follows:—

"The High Court has conceded that a personal hearing of the nature indicated above is not always a concomitant of the principles of natural justice. But it was of the view that in the present case principles of natural justice required that the Board should have been given a personal hearing and an opportunity to produce materials in support of the explanation. We should have thought that when the Board is giving notice as required by Section 298 it would naturally submit its explanation supported by facts and figures and all relevant material in support thereof. However, we are definitely of opinion that the provisions of section 298 being fully complied with it cannot be said that there was violation of principles of natural justice in this case when the Board never demanded what is called a personal hearing, and never intimated to the Government that it would like to produce materials in support of its explanation at some later stage. Therefore, where a provision like section 298 is fully complied with as in this case and the Board does not ask for an opportunity for personal hearing or for production of materials in support of its explanation, principles of natural justice do not require that the State Government should ask the Board to appear for a personal hearing and to produce materials in support of the explanation. In the absence of any demand by the Board of the nature indicated above, we cannot agree with the High Court that merely because the State Government did not call upon the Board to appear for a personal hearing and to produce material in support of its explanation it violated the principles of natural justice."

Two principles are deducible from the observation of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in the above-mentioned case, namely, that a personal hearing is not always a concomitant of the principles of natural justice and that there is no question of the violation of the principles of natural justice when the aggrieved party has not demanded a personal hearing. In the instant case the petitioner Company in their representation (Annexure 7) did not ask for a personal hearing. In the representation (Annexure 9) the petitioner Company simply stated as follows:

"We shall be glad to furnish any other information and depute our representative for personal discussions, if necessary."

In the representation (Annexure 11) no request for personal hearing was made. In the representation (Annexure 12) it was stated as follows:

"We will be pleased to explain the various points and reply to further queries as may be desired and will be prepared to discuss various points personally at any place in India as and when called for."

As I have already stated, after the receipt of the impugned order (Annexure 13), the petitioner Company sent another representation on the 11th May, 1968 (Annexure 16). In that application the petitioner stated as follows:

"It is further requested that the matter may please be given your immediate attention and if required we may be given an opportunity to explain the various points and reply to further queries if any, as may be desired."

In the telegram (Annexure 17) and in the letter (Annexure 18), which the petitioner Company sent subsequently, it did not make any request for a personal hearing. As I have already stated, by Annexure 'D' dated the 23rd of July, 1968, the Railway Board finally rejected the representation made by the petitioner Company and expressed their inability to accede to any further enhancement in freights and fares. From the various representations, which I have referred to above, it is clear that the petitioner Company did not make a demand for personal hearing. The request made in three of the representations cannot be construed as a demand for personal hearing inasmuch as the petitioner Company left the matter whether they should be given an opportunity to explain the various points to the discretion of the Central Government. For the reasons stated above, I find it difficult to hold that the principles of natural justice have been violated by the Central Government because the petitioner Company was not given a personal hearing.

27. I shall now deal with the third point raised by Mr. Lal Narayan Sinha. Mr. Sinha submitted that in none of the orders, which have been passed by the Central Government and communicated to the petitioner Company, the reasons for disallowing the increase in the rates of freight and fare have been given. It is, therefore, difficult for the petitioner Company to know the grounds on which the representations made by it have been disallowed. According to Mr. Sinha, an authority exercising quasi-judicial power must pass a reasoned order. Learned counsel appearing for the opposite party, on the other hand, contended that an authority exercising quasi-judicial power need not give reasons in support of its decision in every case. It must give reasons when its decision is likely to be challenged in appeal or in revision. According to learned counsel, as an order passed by the Central Government either under section 29 or under section 42 of the Act is final and there is no provision in the Act for appeal or revision against the decision of the Central Government, an order passed under either of the sections cannot be held to be bad in law merely because no reasons have been given in support of the order.

28. Where a statute or any rule framed thereunder in specific terms requires an authority to give reasons for its decision, the authority is bound to give a reasoned decision. An order passed in contravention of such a mandatory provision would render its decision invalid. As the two impugned sections of the Act do not provide for giving reasons, the question of the violation of the statutory provision does not arise in the instant case. It is, however, to be considered whether the absence of reasons in the various orders passed by the Central Government has rendered those decisions invalid on the ground of the failure of the principles of natural justice. In order to decide the point it is necessary to review some of the judicial decisions.

29. In the case of Express Newspaper Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1958 SC 578 one of the grounds of attack was that the decision of the Wage Board constituted under the Working Journalists (Conditions of Service) and Miscellaneous Provisions Act, 1955, was illegal because no reasons were given by it for its decision. While dealing with that point it was observed as follows:

"It was no doubt not incumbent on the Wage Board to give any reasons for its decision. The Act made no provision in this behalf and the Board was perfectly within its rights if it chose not to give any reasons for its decision. Prudence should, however, have dictated that it gave reasons for the decision which it ultimately reached because if it had done so, we would have been spared the necessity of trying to probe into its mind and find out whether any particular circumstance received due consideration at its hands in arriving at its decision. The fact that no reasons are thus given, however, would not vitiate the decision in any manner and we may at once say that even though no reasons are given in the form of a regular judgment, we have sufficient indication of the Chairman's mind in the note which he made on April 30, 1956, which is a contemporaneous record explaining the reasons for the decision of the majority."

In the case of Harinagar Sugar Mills v. Shyam Sunder, AIR 1961 SC 1669 the point for consideration was whether the authority exercising appellate power under section 111 (3) of the Indian Companies Act, 1956, was obliged to set out reasons in support of its decision. While considering that question, it was observed as follows:

"If the Central Government acts as a tribunal exercising judicial powers and the exercise of that power is subject to the jurisdiction of this Court under Article 136 of the Constitution, we fail to see how the power of this Court can be effectively exercised if reasons are not given by the Central Government in support of its order".

In the case of Govindrao v. State of M. P. AIR 1965 SC 1222, while considering the validity of the order passed by the Government under section 5 (3) of the Central Provinces and Berar Revocation of Land Revenue Exemption Act (37 of 1948) it was observed as follows:

"The next question is whether Government was justified in making the order of April 26, 1955? That order gives no reasons at all. The Act lays upon the Government a duty which obviously must be performed in a judicial manner. The appellants do not seem to have been heard at all. The Act bars a suit and there is all the more reason that Government must deal with such cases in a quasi-judicial manner giving an opportunity to the claimants to state their case in the light of the report of the Deputy Commissioner. The appellants were also entitled to know the reason why their claim for the grant of money or a pension was rejected by Government and how they were considered as not falling within the class of persons who it was clearly intended by the Act to be compensated in this manner."

In the case of M. P. Industries Ltd. v. Union of India AIR 1966 SC 671 it was held that in exercising the power of revision under rule 55 of the Mineral Concession Rules, 1960, the Central Government acts as a judicial tribunal and as the decision of the Central Government is subject to appeal under Article 136 of the Constitution of India, the giving of reasons for its decision is necessary. In the case of Bhagat Raja v. Union of India AIR 1967 SC 1606 the view expressed in the case of AIR 1966 SC 671 was reiterated and it was held that in exercising the powers of revision under rule 55 of the Mineral Concession Rules 1960 the Central Government discharge functions which are quasi-judicial in nature.

While considering the question whether it was incumbent on the Central Government to give any reasons for its decision on review it was observed as follows:

"The decisions of tribunals in India are subject to the supervisory powers of the High Courts under Article 227 of the Constitution and of appellate powers of this Court under Article 136. It goes without saying that both the High Court and this Court are placed under a great disadvantage if no reasons are given and the revision is dismissed curtly by use of the single word 'rejected' or 'dismissed'. In such a case, this Court can probably only exercise its appellate jurisdiction satisfactorily by examining the entire records of the case and after giving a hearing come to its conclusion on the merits of the appeal. This will certainly be a very unsatisfactory method of dealing with the appeal. Ordinarily, in a case like this, if the State Government gives sufficient reasons for accepting the application of one party and rejecting that of the others, as it must, and the Central Government adopts the reasoning of the State Government, this Court may proceed to examine whether the reasons given are sufficient for the purpose of upholding the decision. But, when the reasons given in the order of the State Government are scrappy or nebulous and the Central Government makes no attempt to clarify the same, this Court in appeal may have to examine the case de novo without anybody being the wiser for the review by the Central Government. If the State Government gives a number of reasons some of which are good and some are not, and the Central Government merely endorses the order of the State Government without specifying those reasons which according to it are sufficient to uphold the order of the State Government, this Court, in appeal, may find it difficult to ascertain which are the grounds which weighed with the Central Government in upholding the order of the State Government. In such circumstances, what is known as a 'speaking order' is called for."

Learned counsel appearing for the opposite party placed before us an unreported decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Som Datt Datta v. Union of India, Writ Petn. No. 118 of 1968 D/-20-9-1968 = (AIR 1969 SC 414). In that case it was contended that the order of the Chief of the Army Staff confirming the proceedings of the Court Martial under section 164 of the Army Act and that of the Central Government dismissing the appeal of the petitioner under section 165 of the Army Act were illegal since no reasons had been given by either of them. The contention was overruled with the following observation:

"In the present case, it is manifest that there is no express obligation imposed by section 164 or by section 163 of the Army Act on the confirming authority or upon the Central Government to give reasons in support of its decision to confirm the proceedings of the Court Martial. Mr. Dutta has been unable to point out any other section of the Act or any of the rule made therein from which necessary indication can be drawn that such a duty is cast upon the Central Government or upon the confirming authority. Apart from any requirement imposed by the statute or statutory rule either expressly or by necessary implication we are unable to accept the contention of Mr. Dutta that there is any general principle or any rule of natural justice that a statutory tribunal should always and in every case give reasons in support of its decision. In English law there is no general rule apart from the statutory requirement that the statutory tribunal should give reasons for its decision in every case.

In Rex v. Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal, 1952-1 KB 338 it was decided for the first time by the Court of Appeal that if there was a speaking order a writ of certiorari could be granted to quash the decision of an inferior court or a statutory tribunal on the ground of error on the face of record. In that case, Danning L. J. pointed out that the record must at least contain the document which initiates the proceedings in the pleadings, if any, and the adjudication but not the evidence nor the reasons, unless the tribunal chooses to incorporate them in its decision. It was observed that if the tribunal did state its reasons and these reasons were wrong in law a writ of certiorari might be granted by the High Court for quashing the decision. In that case the statutory tribunal had fortunately given a reasoned decision, in other words, made a speaking order and the High Court could hold that there was an error of law on the face of the record and writ of certiorari may be granted for quashing it. But the decision in this case led to an anomalous result, for it meant that the opportunity for certiorari depended on whether or not the statutory tribunal chose to give reasons for its decision in other words, to make a speaking order. Not all tribunals by any means were prepared to do so and a superior court had no power to compel them to give reasons except when the statute required it. This incongruity (6 & 7 Elizabeth 2 C. 66) which provides that on request a subordinate authority must supply to a party genuinely interested the reasons for its decision. Section 12 of the Act states that when a tribunal mentioned in the first schedule of the Act gives a decision it must give a written or oral statement of the reasons for the decision if requested to do so on or before the giving or notification of the decision. The statement may be refused or the specification of reasons restricted on grounds of national security and the tribunal may refuse to give the statement to a person not principally concerned with the decision if it thinks that to give it would be against the interests of any person primarily concerned. Tribunals may also be exempted by the Lord Chancellor from the duty to give reasons but the Council of Tribunals must be consulted on any proposal to do so. As already stated, there is no express obligation imposed in the present case either by Section 165 of the Indian Army Act on the confirming authority or on the Central Government to give reasons for its decision. We have also not been shown any other section of the Army Act or any other statutory rule from which the necessary implication can be drawn that such a duty is cast upon the Central Government or upon the confirming authority. We therefore reject the argument of the petitioner that the order of the Chief of the Army Staff dated May 26, 1967 confirming the finding of the Court Martial under section 165 of the Army Act or the order of the Central Government dismissing the appeal under section 165 of the Army Act are in any way defective in law."

30. From the various decisions of the Supreme Court, referred to above, the following principles can be gathered, namely, that the authority exercising quasi-judicial functions must give reasons for its decision if the statute under which it acts provides that reasons should be given in support of its decision, then reasons in support of its decision should be given by the authority when the decision is subject to an appeal or revision by a higher court or the higher authority even if the statute does not provide specifically that reasons should be given by the authority in support of its decision; that as a rule of prudence the authority should give reasons in support of its decision while exercising quasi-judicial power even if the statute does not require it to give reasons or its decision is not subject to appeal or revision; and that failure of the administrative authority to give reasons in support of its quasi-judicial decision would not per se render its decision invalid on the ground of failure of the principles of natural justice if the statute does not require it to give reasons and its decision is not subject to appeal or revision.

31. In the instant case the various orders of the Central Government cannot be struck down as invalid simply because the Central Government did not give reasons in support of their decision. It must, however, be observed that it would have been proper if the grounds on which the representations of the petitioner Company were rejected would have been disclosed in the various orders of the Central Government so that the petitioner Company might have known the reasons which led the Central Government to reject their representations.

32. On the point of discrimination relevant statements have been made in paragraph 20 of the writ application which read thus:

"That the freight rates now prevalent in the petitioner's Railway after the above mentioned increases are nearly equal to the freight rates prevailing in the State Railways with effect from 1-7-1962. Statements showing year to year increase in freight rates over State Railways and those in the case of the petitioner's Railway in regard to the major commodities carried by this Railway, namely, limestone (about 87% of the total goods traffic) and cement (about 10% of the total goods traffic), are Annexures 14 and 15 hereto and form part of the petition. It will be seen from Annexure 14 that for limestone, which is 87% of the goods traffic on this railway, the freight rates over the State Railways which were at the same level as in the case of the Petitioners railway in 1968 were 27.5% above those of the petitioner's railway in 1967. After the increase sanctioned by the said letter dated 4-5-1968, the freight rates over the State Railways are still 25% higher than the freight rates of the petitioner's Railway. Your petitioner's Railway was not given the benefit of increase made from time to time between 1963 to 1968. It will be seen that even if in 1968, your petitioner's Railway be allowed to charge the same freight rates and fares as State Railways, the loss incurred by the petitioner's Railway during all the past years as a result of its being compelled to charge lower freights and fares would still remain and never be recouped. Instead of at least doing belated justice to the petitioner by allowing the petitioner to charge the same rates as are now charged by State Railways and other private railways, the Central Government has continued to discriminate against the petitioner by allowing the petitioner only the increase effected over the State Railways as far back as 1962 and denying the petitioner the benefit of increases effected between 1963 and 1968. In paragraph 21 (vii) and (viii) of the writ application the point of discrimination has been raised in these words:

"21 (vii) The said orders of the Government are in contravention of Art. 14 of the Constitution as they discriminate against the petitioner by denying to it the sanction that was accorded to other private railways similarly placed to the petitioner.

(viii) In the matter of increase in freight rates the case of the petitioner cannot be distinguished at all from that of the other private railways nor from that of the Government Railways and in the absence of any factor that distinguishes the case of the petitioner from that of others the orders are clearly discriminatory and invalid."

Certain facts and figures have been given in paragraphs 22 and 23 of the writ application to show discrimination and they read as follows:

"22. That while proposing further increase in passenger rates and freight rates for coaching and goods traffic in the Railway Budget 1968-69, the Hon'ble Railway Minister made specific mention in Parliament, of the increase in costs and how they are required to be neutralised by saying:

During the past 16 years, from 1951-52 to 1967-68 the price of coal has risen by 115%, of iron and steel by 143 p. c., of cement by 85%, of timber by 72% and of mineral oils by 61 p. c. The per capita cost of staff has risen by 106% during the same period. Taking all these increases into account, the cost of Railway transport has gone up by about 100%. On the other hand, passenger fares have gone up during the period to a substantially lower extent. The average fare realised per passenger per kilometre (non-suburban) increased by 75% for the First Class, by 58.8% for Second Class Mail, by 51.9% for the Second Class Ordinary, by 60% for the Third Class Mail. The fare by Third Class Ordinary train by which 87% of the total non-suburban passenger travelled rose only 36%. Taking all the classes together, the increase during the period 1951-52 to 1967-68 works out to 48.1%".

While proclaiming the above increase in cost of operation to be the basis which warrants the increase in the freight rates passenger fares over the Government Railways, your petitioner has been discriminated against not being allowed the same increase to compensate for the same increased cost of operation which applies to the petitioner's railway as it applies to the Government and other private railways.

33. That in any event after 1962-63 the financial position of the petitioner (which had been deteriorating steadily on account of Government's refusal to sanction any increase in passenger fares and freight rates) declined further and the return on capital at charge went below the return that Indian Government Railways were getting. The deteriorating financial position continued year by year in 1966-67, the return on capital at charge in the case of your petitioner was as low as 1.4% against the figure for Indian Government Railways of 5.4%. In the year 1967-68 the position will deteriorate further and the return on capital at charge is expected to be in vicinity of 0.5% as against 5.4% on the State Railways. This continuously deteriorating financial position is due to the fact that the working expenses in the case of all the railways in India have been going up steadily on account of increased prices of coal, spares and others as well as increased salary and wages bill. While the increased working cost in the case of the Government and all other private railways were neutralised by the freight increases, the petitioner was not allowed the benefit of increased freight rates till 1968 and even in 1968 the increase sanctioned can at the best be comparable to the freight level prevalent in the Indian Railways in 1962 with the result that the return on capital at charge has gone down from figure above that of the Government Railways to the low figure of 1.4% in 1966-67 and still lower in 1967-68 against the figure for Government Railways of 5.4%, thus causing great loss to the petitioner. Statements explaining the position as stated above were made out and sent to the Opposite parties along with your petitioner's representation dated 16/17-6-1967."

Paragraph 16 of the counter-affidavit filed by the Opposite Party is a reply to paragraph 20 of the writ application and it reads as follows:

"With regard to paragraph 20 of the petition, it is stated that the petitioner railway stands in a class by itself and that the reasons which led to increase over Government Railways from time to time as brought out in paragraphs 10 to 15 above are not applicable to the petitioner Railways. It is further stated that in granting increases in freight rates to other non-Government Railways, their financial position was considered. Shahabad-Saharanpur, Ahmadpur-Katwa, Burdwan-Datwa and Banakura-Damodar River Light Railways had consistently shown a loss each year from 1960-61 to 1966-67. Futwa-Islampur Light Railway had shown a loss in the years 1960-61 and 1962-63. Although the remaining three non-Government Light Railways, namely, Arrah-Sasaram, Howrah-Amta and Howrah-Sheakhala had shown some profits for the years 1960-61 to 1966-67, the dividend paid by these Railways ranged from 3% to 5% as against 10 to 20% paid by the Dehri-Rohtas Light Railway, the petitioner. On the other hand, the petitioner was having a fairly good profit and his financial position was good. Over and above, the reserves accumulated by the petitioner were and are also considerably more than the reserves of the other non-Government Light Railways. A statement showing the financial position of the non-Government light Railways is attached hereto and marked as Annexure C. It is stated and submitted that there is no substance in the allegation made by the petitioner Railway that it has been discriminated against in the matter of increases in freight rates and fares, the petitioner and the other non-Government Railways not being similarly situated."

In paragraph 17 (vii) and (viii) of the counter-affidavit the point raised in paragraph 21 (vii) and (viii) of the application has been answered in these words:

"17 (vii) It is stated that there has been no discrimination against the petitioner by refusing their prayer as stated, which refusal was based on such proper grounds as have been stated in this counter-affidavit and the question of any contravention of Article 14 of the Constitution does not arise. It is further submitted that the petitioner and the other private Railways are not similarly situated.

(viii). That the Government Railways and other non-Government Railways not being similarly situated and there being distinguishing features in the case of the petitioner as already explained in the previous paragraphs, there is no discrimination as alleged."

The statements made in paragraphs 22 and 23 of the application have been replied in paragraphs 18 and 19 of the counter-affidavit which read thus:

"18. With reference to the statements made in paragraph 22 of the petition, it is stated that the opposite parties crave leave to refer to the speech of the Hon'ble Minister in connection with the increase in the passenger fares and freight rates in the Railway Budget 1968-69 and place their submission, and it may be necessary that the said speech may be submitted before the Hon'ble Court to show the exact position as stated in the speech. The petitioner is also put to strict proof as regards the rise in costs and the factors responsible for it over the petitioner railway. It is further stated that the question of discrimination against the petitioner does not arise. It is, however, submitted that the case of the petitioner was considered in all its aspects and as already stated in this counter-affidavit the financial position of the petitioner was found quite satisfactory and the opposite parties have acted properly and justly in dealing with the case of the petitioner.

19. With regard to the statements made in paragraph 23 of the petition, it is stated that the financial position of the petitioner has not deteriorated. It is submitted that the financial position of the petitioner does not justify the increase as asked for by the petitioner. The reserves accumulated by the petitioner, which increased from 59.37 Lakhs in 1960-61 to

Rs. 74.56 Lakhs in 1966-67, were, and are, also considerably more than the reserves of the other Light Railways. The petitioner transferred Rs. 20 lakhs to the Capital account by issue of Bonus shares of value of Rs. 10 lakhs in the year 1961-62 and another 10 lakhs in the year 1966-67. It may be further stated that the net earnings of the Government Railways for the years 1966-67 and 1967-68, were Rs. minus 18.27 crores and Rs. minus 31.52 crores respectively after paying Rs. 132.39 crores and Rs. 141.52 crores in these two years as contribution to general revenues at 5.50% for the capital invested up to 31-3-1964 and at 6.0% for the capital invested thereafter."

34. Although in the writ application the point of discrimination between the Government Railways and the petitioner Company has been specifically taken, Mr. Lal Narayan Sinha in course of his arguments did not press the point seriously. It is a well settled principle that the Government can be legitimately put in a separate class by itself. (See the cases Manna Lal v. Collector of Jhalawar, AIR 1961 SC 828 and Lachhman Dass v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 222.) There can be no two opinions on the question that the profits earned by Government Railways accrue to the benefit of the general public whereas the profits earned by non-Government Railways accrue to the benefit of a particular individual or a set of individuals. It cannot also be doubted that a Government Railway provides better facilities to the travelling public than a non-Government Railway in several respects. The Government Railways, therefore, can legitimately be put as a class by themselves and as such there will be no violation of Article 14 of the Constitution when the Central Government differentiate between the Government Railways and the non-Government Railways in the matter of fixation of rates of freight and fare.

Mr. Sinha seriously contended that the Central Govt. had made a discrimination between the petitioner company and the other non-Government Railways in the matter of fixation of rates of freights etc. without any rational basis. Learned counsel appearing for the opposite party, on the other hand, submitted that the petitioner company stands as a class by itself and as such the Central Government have not made any discrimination between the petitioner Company on one hand and the other non-Government Railways on the other in the matter of fixation of rates of freight and fare. He further contended that the petitioner Company has failed to discharge the onus to prove that the Central Government have made a discrimination between it and the other non-Government Railways.

There is substance in the contention raised on behalf of the opposite party and it cannot be brushed aside.

In the case of Budhan Choudhary v. State of Bihar, AIR 1955 SC 191 the true meaning and scope of Article 14 of the Constitution were explained in these words:

"It is now well established that while Article 14 forbids class legislation, it does not forbid reasonable classification for the purpose of legislation. In order, however, to pass the test of permissible classification two conditions must be fulfilled, namely, (i) that the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things that are grouped together from others left out of the group and (ii) that the differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute in question. The classification may be founded on different basis; namely, geographical, or according to objects or occupations or the like. What is necessary is that there must be a nexus between the basis of classification and the object of the Act under consideration. It is also well established by the decisions of this Court that Article 14 condemns discrimination not only by a substantive law but also by a law of procedure."

In the case of Ram Krishna Dalmia v. Justice Tendolkar, AIR 1958 SC 538 the principle enunciated above was reiterated and it was further observed as follows:

"The decisions of this Court further establish—

(a) that a law may be constitutional even though it relates to a single individual if, on account of some special circumstances or reasons applicable to him and not applicable to others that single individual may be treated as a class by himself;

(b) that there is always a presumption in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment and the burden is upon him who attacks it to show that there has been clear transgression of the constitutional principles;

(c) that it must be presumed that the Legislature understands and correctly appreciates the need of its own people, that its laws are directed to problems made manifest by experience and that its discriminations are based on adequate grounds;

(d) that the Legislature is free to recognise degrees of harm and may confine its restrictions to those cases where the need is deemed to be the clearest;

(e) that in order to sustain the presumption of constitutionality the Court may take into consideration matters of common knowledge, matters of common report, the history of the times and may assume every state of facts which can be conceived existing at the time of legislation; and

(f) that while good faith and knowledge of the existing conditions on the part of a legislature are to be presumed, if there is nothing on the fact of the law or the surrounding circumstances brought to the notice of the court on which the classification may reasonably be regarded as based, the presumption of constitutionality cannot be carried to the extent of always holding that there must be some undisclosed and unknown reasons for subjecting certain individuals or corporations to hostile or discriminating legislation.

The above principles will have to be constantly borne in mind by the Court when it is called upon to adjudge the constitutionality of any particular law attacked as discriminatory and violative of the equal protection of the laws".

The same principles have to be borne in mind by a Court if a particular order passed by the Government is challenged on the ground of violation of Article 14 of the Constitution.

35. In the application filed by the petitioner company the particulars showing that the petitioner company and the other non-Government railways are similarly situate have not been given. The onus to prove that there has been a discrimination between the petitioner company and the other non-Government Railways being on the petitioner company, which has challenged the orders of the Central Government on the ground of infringement of Article 14 of the Constitution, it was incumbent upon the petitioner company to place sufficient materials before the Court to show that the petitioner company and the other non-Government Railways are similarly situate. In paragraph 16 of the counter-affidavit quoted above it has been asserted by the opposite party that the petitioner company stands as a class by itself. Although in the rejoinder to the counter-affidavit filed by the opposite party the petitioner company has denied the fact that the petitioner company stands as a class by itself, it has not furnished particulars showing that the other non-Government Railways, such as, Shahdara-Sharanpur, Ahmadpur-Katwa, Buddwan-Katwa, Bankura-Damodar and Futwah-Islampur Light Railways, are similarly situate. In the case of State of Madhya Pradesh v. Bhopal Sugar Industries Ltd., AIR 1964 SC 1179 it was observed as follows:

"The petitions filed by the company are singularly deficient in furnishing particulars which would justify the plea of infringement of Article 14 of the Constitution. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that to make out a case of denial of the equal protection of the laws under Article 14 of the Constitution, a plea of differential treatment is by itself not sufficient. An applicant pleading that equal protection of the laws has been denied to him must make out that not only he had been so treated differently from others but he has been so treated from persons similarly circumstanced without any reasonable basis, and such differential treatment is unjustifiably made".

The contention raised on behalf of the petitioner Company that the Central Government have made a discrimination between it and the other non-Government Railways must, therefore, be rejected on the preliminary ground that the petitioner Company has not been placed sufficient materials before the Court to show that the petitioner company and the other non-Government Railways are similarly situate. I may state here that in the writ application the petitioner company has also alleged that the orders passed by the Central Government are mala fide. At the time of argument, however, learned counsel appearing for the petitioner company did not challenge the orders of the Central Government on the ground of mala fide. Indeed no particulars have been given in the writ application to show that the Central Government have made a discrimination against the petitioner company for some ulterior reasons. For the reasons stated above, it is not possible to strike down the orders of the Central Government as invalid on the ground of discrimination between the petitioner company and other non-Government Railways.

36. Now remains to consider the last contention of learned counsel appearing for the petitioner company. Mr. Lal Narayan Sinha contended that the orders of the Central Government are vitiated because they have taken into consideration irrelevant factors and have ignored the relevant factors while fixing the rates of freight etc., applicable to the petitioner company. According to Mr. Sinha, 'freight' and 'fare' are the prices for the service rendered by a Railway. They must relate to the cost actually incurred in rendering service by way of transportation of goods and passengers. Any other factor is not relevant in the matter of fixation of rates of freight etc. He further contended that the Railway Board have taken into consideration wrong facts and irrelevant matters even in judging the financial position of the petitioner company. Before dealing with the aforesaid contentions of Mr. Sinha, I would consider a preliminary point which was raised by Dr. V. A. Seyid Muhammad appearing for the opposite party. Learned counsel submitted that the petitioner company, although aware of the fact that over-all financial position of the petitioner company was taken into consideration in fixing the rates of freight and fare, has not alleged in the main petition that wrong facts and irrelevant matters were taken into consideration in judging the financial position of the petitioner company. According to learned counsel, on the facts stated in the counter-affidavit, the petitioner company has taken a new point in the rejoinder to the counter-affidavit that wrong facts and irrelevant matters have been taken into consideration in judging the financial position of the petitioner company. In support of his contention that a new point cannot be taken in the rejoinder to the counter-affidavit without amending the main petition, he replied on certain observations made in the cases of Kartick Chandra Dutta v. District Traffic Supdt., Pandu Region, Katihar N. F. Railway, AIR 1957 Pat 676 and Shivdev Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1963 Pat 201. In Kartick Chandra Dutta's case AIR 1957 Pat 676 it was observed:

"The authority of the District Traffic Superintendent to remove him from the service was questioned for the first time in his rejoinder to the counter-affidavit on behalf of the opposite party. For this reason alone, this argument must be rejected".

In Shiv Deo Singh's case, AIR 1963 Pat 201 it was observed:

"... It appears to me that after the filing of the counter-affidavit on behalf of the two respondents, no new ground of attack on the whole scheme can be made, by merely mentioning a new fact in a supplementary affidavit without an amendment of the original application". Mr. Lal Narayan Sinha submitted that the facts stated in the counter-affidavit can be taken into consideration in support of the point raised in the main application and relief can be given to the petitioner on the basis of the facts stated in the counter-affidavit. In support of his submission he relied on the cases of Firm Srinivas Ram Kumar v. Mahabir Prasad, AIR 1951 SC 177, Babu Raja Mohan Manucha v. Babu Manzoor Ahmed Khan, AIR 1943 P.C. 29 and Ranbir Singh Chadha v. Chief Commercial Superintendent (Rates) Head Quarters Office, Delhi, AIR 1961 Punj 268. In Firm Srinivas Ram Kumar's case AIR 1951 SC 177 their Lordships of the Supreme Court observed as follows:

"... when the alternative case, which the plaintiff could have made, was not only admitted by the defendant in his written statement but was expressly put forward as an answer to the claim which the plaintiff made in the suit, there would be nothing improper in giving the plaintiff a decree upon the case which the defendant himself makes. A demand of the plaintiff based on the defendant's own plea cannot possibly be regarded with surprise by the latter and no question of adducing evidence on these facts would arise when they were expressly admitted by the defendant in his pleadings".

In Babu Raja Mohan Manucha's case, AIR 1943 PC 29 the Judicial Committee has observed thus:

"With all due respect to the Chief Court, their Lordships think that their attitude towards the question of pleading was unduly rigid. A defendant who when sued for money lent pleads that the contract was void can hardly regard with surprise a demand that he restore what he received thereunder".

In the Punjab case, which was an application under Article 226 of the Constitution, the following observations were made:

". . . If it is open to the High Court to decide a question of fact which is in dispute on the pleadings or on the evidence produced before it, then there is no reason why the petitioner cannot be allowed to request the High Court to decide the petition on the basis that the respondent's allegation of disputed facts is correct. When the petitioner accepts the respondent's allegations of facts, then insistence on amendments of the petition can serve no useful purpose and can only result in delay in disposal of the petition on merits".

37. Upon a consideration of the various decisions, referred to above, I am of the opinion that ordinarily a new point taken in the rejoinder to the counter-affidavit should not be entertained by the Court unless the petitioner with the permission of the court amends the main application. But facts stated in the counter-affidavit of the other side which support a point taken in the petition can always be relied on. Further where a particular point is taken in the main application and what is stated in reply to it in the counter-affidavit of the other side is not factually correct, statements in the rejoinder to the counter-affidavit pointing out the incorrectness of the allegations in the counter-affidavit should also be taken into consideration. If it is open to the plaintiff to a suit to deny in his deposition the averments in the written statement, there appears no reason why statements in the counter-affidavit not factually correct cannot be denied by filing a rejoinder to it by the petitioner in a writ application. In the instant case in paragraph 21 (ii) of the application the point that the Central Government did not apply their mind to the relevant matters has been specifically taken. The details as to which relevant matters had been ignored and which irrelevant matters had been taken into consideration have not been given. In paragraph 23 of the application, which I have already quoted above, the petitioner company has asserted that after 1962-63 the financial position of the petitioner company had deteriorated. In paragraph 17 (i) of the counter-affidavit the following statements have been made:

"The petitioner having failed to make out a case for increase in railway freight and fares, the request aforesaid was not acceded to. Further, it is stated that in letter No. TCD/1078/64/DRL dated 8-6-1965 from the Ministry of Railways to the petitioner, a copy of which letter is attached and marked as Annexure 'A', it was explained to the petitioner that 'having regard to the over-all financial position of the line, there does not exist adequate justification for sanctioning the increases asked for specially when the upward revision of classification of commodities such as limestone and cement, with effect from 1-4-1965, would further improve the revenues of the company". In paragraphs 18 and 19 of the counter-affidavit, which I have quoted above, the assertion of the petitioner company that its financial position deteriorated since 1962-63 has been denied and a counter assertion to the effect that the financial position of the petitioner company was found satisfactory has been made. The statements made in paragraph 19 of the counter-affidavit show that the reserves accumulated by the petitioner company were also taken into consideration by the authorities in fixing the rates of freight and fare. Annexure 'C' is a chart in which the financial position of the various non-Government Light Railways has been shown. In my opinion, the petitioner company, which has taken a ground that the Central Government did not apply their mind to the relevant matters, in fixing the rates of freight and fare, can legitimately show with reference to the facts stated in the counter-affidavit and the charge (Annexure 'C') that the Central Government have taken into consideration irrelevant facts and have excluded out of consideration the relevant facts in fixing the rates of freight and fare applicable to the petitioner company. I, therefore, do not think that the petitioner company can be disallowed to rely on the statements in the counter-affidavit which support its case.

38. Now I proceed to deal with the main contention. Learned counsel desired to be reverted to the general side and the Governor had specifically allowed his request in that behalf, an option was subsequently again given to the petitioner and in response to it he had continued to serve on the medical education side. After the termination of his appointment as D.D.R.M.E., he was again asked if he wanted to revert to the general side or continue to work on the college side. On special facilities having been provided to the petitioner, he continued to work on the medical education side and is still so working. The only other defence to the alleged infringement of the petitioner's fundamental right under Article 16 of the Constitution raised by the respondents in one of their pleadings for the first time is that the petitioner is deemed to have withdrawn his application, dated December 20, 1965 (Annexure 'E', which reached the Department on December 22, 1965) by his letter, dated December 21, 1965 (Annexure 'IX') addressed to the Dean of the Medical Department of the Post Graduate Institute wherein he had referred to the oral talk with the Dean and agreed to accept the post of Deputy Medical Superintendent of the Post Graduate Institute on honorary basis along with the post of Professor of Forensic Medicine after the termination of the post of D.D.R.M.E. This letter was written only one day after the application of the petitioner had been sent. The previous application was not even by implication withdrawn by this letter which was clearly intended to make stop-gap arrangement as the petitioner was definitely given to understand that the post of D.D.R.M.E. was being abolished with effect from January 1, 1966, and the post of A.D.H.S. had not yet been created. Petitioner's application was for appointment as A.D.H.S. with effect from the date when the post was created. The petitioner's letter, dated December 21, 1965, related to the arrangement with effect from January 1, 1966. To say the least, this new defence of the State against the charge under Article 16 of the Constitution is wholly disingenuous and a mere afterthought.

(xv) It had been decided by the Health Department that whoever was selected as A.D.H.S., would automatically be promoted as D.H.S. when the latter post would fall vacant. When respondent No. 2 was appointed as D.H.S., the only ground on which he was selected without considering anyone else was that he was already working as A.D.H.S. and had given a good account of himself in that capacity. The appointment of respondent No. 2 as D.H.S. will, therefore, automatically stand or fall with the validity of his appointment as A.D.H.S. It was fairly conceded by the learned Advocate General for the State that whoever would have been appointed A.D.H.S. in April, 1966, would normally have automatically become the D.H.S. as soon as that post fell vacant.

41. This is the relevant factual aspect of the case. So far as the legal position is concerned, it does not appear to admit of any doubt. Clause (1) of Article 16 of the Constitution which is a mere protection of the guarantee of equal protection contained in Article 14 of the Constitution is couched in the following language:—

"There shall be equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office under the State."

42. It is the common case of both sides that the petitioner is a citizen of India, and so is respondent No. 2. In the matter of appointment, what Article 16(1) guarantees is an equal opportunity to all citizens to apply for appointment under the State, and to be considered for that appointment. In M. R. Balaji v. State of Mysore, AIR 1963 SC 649, and in several other cases thereafter, it has been authoritatively held by their Lordships of the Supreme Court that "appointment" in Article 16 includes promotion to higher posts. In Banarsidas v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 520, it was held that selection for appointment in Government service has got to be on a competitive basis and those whose past service is free from blemish can certainly be said to be better qualified for Government service than those whose record was not free from any blemish. It is equally clear that the State can either by appropriate legislation under Article 309 of the Constitution or by statutory rules framed under the proviso to that Article restrict the eligibility of citizens for appointment to any particular post by prescribing the essential qualifications and possible disqualifications etc. So long, however, as neither any qualifications or disqualifications are laid down for a post by any enactment or statutory rules nor (in the absence of any statute or statutory rules) have the same been laid down by the executive order of the appropriate authority, every citizen, who is prima facie qualified for any post or public service is entitled to his fundamental right under Article 16(1) of the Constitution which may in this respect be said to consist of two distinct legal rights, viz.:—

(i) the right to make an application for any post under the Government; and

(ii) the right to be considered on the merits for the post for which an application has been made.

It has been held in the High Court, Calcutta v. Amal Kumar Roy, AIR 1962 SC 1704, that "equal opportunity" does not mean getting the particular post for which a number of persons may have been considered, and so long as the aggrieved person was given consideration along with others, and had been given his chance, it cannot be said that he had not had equal opportunity along with others who may have been selected in preference to him. The fact that the Government may make its choice in a particular way cannot be said to amount to discrimination against the applicant who was duly considered but not appointed. In the same case it was also observed that mere seniority does not confer a right for selection for a higher post. In AIR 1962 SC 602, it was categorically held that "the fundamental right guaranteed by the Constitution is not only to make an application for a post under the Government, but the further right to be considered on merits for the post for which an application has been made. Of course, the right does not extend to being actually appointed to the post for which an application may have been made."

What has happened in the instant case is that the petitioner has exercised half of his fundamental right under Article 16(1) by submitting his application for appointment to the post of A.D.H.S., but the Government has infringed the second part of the petitioner's fundamental right "to be considered on merits for the post for which" he had applied. In AIR 1966 SC 1942, it was observed by their Lordships of the Supreme Court (in paragraph 7 at page 1945 of the AIR report) as follows:—

"Mr. Nambiar in this connection also relied on Articles 15 and 16 of the Constitution. He urged that if the executive is held to have power to make appointments and lay down conditions of service without making rules in that behalf under the proviso to Article 309, Articles 15 and 16 would be breached because the appointments in that case would be arbitrary and dependent on the mere whim of the executive. We are unable to hold that Articles 15 and 16 in any way lead us to this conclusion. If the Government advertises the appointments and the conditions of service of the appointments and makes a selection after advertisement there would be no breach of Article 15 or Article 16 of the Constitution because everybody who is eligible in view of the conditions of service would be entitled to be considered by the State." The analysis of the ratio of the above-quoted passage in the judgment of Supreme Court in B. N. Nagarajan's case, AIR 1966 SC 1942 (supra) appears to be:—

(i) that the executive has the power to make appointments and lay down conditions of service without making rules in that behalf under the proviso to Article 309; and by so doing the guarantee under Articles 15 and 16 would not be breached;

(ii) that if selection and appointment to a post is made in accordance with the rules framed under Article 309, no question of violation of Article 15 or Article 16 would arise;

(iii) that even if no such rules are framed, the guarantee of Article 16 of the Constitution would not be infringed if the Government advertises the post and the conditions of service for appointment thereto and then makes a selection out of all the eligible persons who have submitted their applications for the post. Though no reason was given for not considering the petitioner at the relevant time, the main reason for the State which has been given, i.e., about the petitioner having been far junior to respondent No. 2 in the Medical Service is wholly irrelevant for purposes of Article 16 of the Constitution, particularly when the post of A.D.H.S. was not meant or intended to be filled in exclusively from the medical side and the said post was a new post. It is the admitted case of both sides that the said new post was not intended to be filled in necessarily by promotion. It has been the consistent case of the respondents as disclosed in their written statement that the post in question had to be filled in by selection and that nobody could claim it on the basis of seniority alone. Even if they had not so stated, it is clear, as held by the Supreme Court in AIR 1967 SC 1910, that the question of seniority comes in the matter of selection to a post only if two candidates for the post are otherwise found to be equal. According to the ratio of the judgment of the Supreme Court in Sant Ram Sharma's case, AIR 1967 SC 1910 (supra), seniority cannot be used as a lever for creating inequality between two eligible candidates for a selection post. It is the common case of both sides that the post of Additional Director of Health Services was created as a select post and that nobody could claim a right to be appointed to that post by promotion. In connection with the filling of a similar post in the Police Department, it was held by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Sant Ram Sharma's case, AIR 1967 SC 1910:—

"The circumstance that these posts are classed as 'Selection Grade Posts' itself suggests that promotion to these posts is not automatic being made only on the basis of ranking in the Gradation List but the question of merit enters in promotion to selection posts. In our opinion, the respondents are right in their contention that the ranking or position in the Gradation List does not confer any right on the petitioner to be promoted to selection post and that it is a well established rule that promotion to selection grades or selection posts is to be based primarily on merit and not on seniority alone." Emphasis was then laid by the Supreme Court on the following principle:—

"The principle is that when the claims of officers to selection posts is under consideration, seniority should not be regarded except where the merit of the officers is judged to be equal and no other criterion is, therefore, available."

43. The defence of the State based on seniority of respondent No. 2 as compared with that of the petitioner in the P.C.M.S., is, therefore, not a valid defence at all for refusing to consider the application of the petitioner on merits for the select post in dispute. The mere fact that the petitioner was qualified and eligible for the post of A.D.H.S., and he had applied for it entitled him to be considered on merits. Inasmuch as the Government admittedly did not consider his application on merits for the said post, his fundamental right under Article 16(1) has been infringed and breached. To me there appears to be no answer to this charge of the petitioner regarding the violation of his constitutional fundamental right. The Government did not refuse to consider him at that stage on the ground that he was too junior. They just ignored his application. The ground of comparative juniority of the petitioner is the solitary ultimate shield by which this attack of the petitioner against the impugned appointment of respondent No. 2 is now sought to be warded off. As already held by me this defence is defenceless, and devoid of all merit. According to the pronouncement of the Supreme Court in Sant Ram Sharma's case, AIR 1967 SC 1910 the consideration of seniority could enter the field in a case like this if the merits of two candidates were otherwise judged to be equal. Such a stage was admittedly never reached.

44. The fundamental right under Article 16 of the Constitution would become wholly illusory and would be reduced to a mockery if the Government could be permitted to say that in a particular case they had made up their mind to appoint a particular person to a newly created post for any reason whatsoever, and that, therefore, they refused to consider the written application of another duly qualified and eligible person merely because he was at one time junior to the person sought to be appointed though he may be better qualified and may have had a cleaner service record. Article 16, as already stated, does not confer a right on anyone to be appointed to any particular post. The only rights of a citizen are: (i) to apply and (ii) to be considered on merits. The latter part of the petitioner's fundamental right has been clearly infringed in this case. The appointment of respondent No. 2 to the post of A. D. H. S. as a result of the violation of the fundamental right of the petitioner cannot, therefore, be sustained. There was no other ground on which the promotion of respondent No. 2 to the post of the Director of Health Services was justified except that he happened to be the Additional Director of Health Services at the time when higher post fell vacant. Once it is held that the appointment of respondent No. 2 as Additional Director was unconstitutional, his further promotion and appointment as Director of Health Services automatically falls and cannot be sustained.

45. I would, therefore, allow this writ petition with costs and set aside the order of the State Government appointing respondent No. 2 originally as Additional Director Health Services and later on consequently promoting him to the post of Director Health Services.

46. H. R. SODHI, J.:— I have had the privilege of going through the judgments of my learned brothers Capoor and Narula, JJ. Both are agreed that none of the orders impugned by the petitioner can be said to have been vitiated on account of any mala fides of the Administrative Department of Punjab Government of which Mrs. Sarla Grewal was the Secretary at the relevant time. I am in respectful agreement with them on this point. To me it appears that the charge of mala fides levelled by a responsible officer like the petitioner was not only misconceived but wholly uncalled for, when we find it proved beyond any doubt that the Administrative Department had actually been going out of the way to help the petitioner, first in his appointment as Officer on Special Duty and then to save him from any monetary loss because of the abolition of the temporary post of Deputy Director, Research and Medical Education, hereinafter described as DD/RME, which post he got on account of the special efforts which Dr. Tulsi Dass, then Director of the Post-graduate Institute of Medical Education and Research, Chandigarh, appears to have made for him.

47. Facts have been stated very succinctly by Capoor, J. and the brief narrative thereof so far as Narula, J. has thought necessary for the purpose of deciding the question if Article 16 of the Constitution of India has been violated is also not in controversy. This narrative, however, seems to suggest that the petitioner being possessed of higher academic qualifications was probably more qualified than respondent No. 2 Kanwar Moti Singh who was the permanent incumbent of the post of the Deputy Director, Health Services, Punjab, and had been promoted as an Additional Director for a shortwhile and then as a Director. In all services, there are certain basic qualifications which a candidate must possess in order to enter into that service and once he has done so whether on account of these qualifications or higher ones, all members of that service are to be treated equally in the matter of further promotion. Mere possession of higher educational qualifications cannot by itself be taken to be the proof of more merit in a particular officer. It is the general talent of the officer, his basic qualifications, experience; more so in the case of doctors and several other matters, the cumulative effect of which has to be considered in order to determine whether that officer is possessed of higher merit than others and difference in educational qualifications is only one of the factors which might or might not be treated as relevant by the competent authority in the matter of appointment to a selection post.

48. With great respect to my learned brother Narula, J. I do not agree that Article 16 of the Constitution of India has, in any way, been violated in the circumstances of the instant case on account of the appointment of respondent No. 2 as Director, Health Services, Punjab. I need not recapitulate all the facts, but in order to determine if the impugned orders have infringed Article 16 of the Constitution, a few established facts have to be stated in their true perspective.

49. There are in the State of Punjab two classes of Punjab Civil Medical Services, one known as Punjab Civil Medical Service Class I, hereinafter referred to as PCMS I, and Punjab Civil Medical Service Class II, hereinafter referred to as PCMS II, though the departmental head of both these Services has always been the same officer designated as Director of Health Services. The petitioner admittedly joined PCMS II on 15-12-1949 and was confirmed in that Service on 15-2-1951. He was promoted in an officiating capacity to PCMS I only on 25/26-4-1964 and has not yet been confirmed in that post, nor is he due for the selection grade. The petitioner was transferred to the teaching side in a temporary post on 5-9-1960 as an associate Professor of Forensic Medicine in the grade of Rs. 750-50-1400 in the Medical College, Patiala, though he continued to retain his lien in the general cadre, namely, P.C.M.S. II.

50. A Post-graduate Institute of Medical Education and Research had been set up at Chandigarh by the Punjab Government and it was in the year 1955 that for the first time a separate temporary post of a Director of Research and Medical Education was created. Dr. Tulsi Dass who was already in charge of this institute, was appointed its first Director, though administrative control of the general cadre and Medical Colleges still remained with the Director of Health Services. It was later thought necessary to have a Deputy Director under Dr. Tulsi Dass and a temporary post was accordingly created. Dr. Deepak Bhatia was appointed to this post in the year 1961 with the approval of the Punjab Public Service Commission. The post was not advertised nor any applications invited when Dr. Bhatia was appointed as Deputy Director. The newly created post of the Deputy Director was not included either of the PCMS or teaching cadres. Dr. Jagdish Singh, who was the Director of Health Services, Punjab, at that time, died on 25-12-1962 and Dr. Deepak Bhatia, the senior most in the cadre of the PCMS I, was appointed Director in his place w.e.f. 15-3-1963. On the appointment of Dr. Bhatia as Director, the post of DD/RME fell vacant and it appears from the record that Dr. Tulsi Dass was keen to have the petitioner appointed as Deputy Director. There were several difficulties in his way as the petitioner was very junior in his own cadre for that post. A way out was found presumably by Dr. Tulsi Dass inasmuch as a temporary post of an Officer on Special Duty was created. The petitioner was appointed to that post at the instance of the said Dr. Tulsi Dass and got transferred from Patiala to Chandigarh to work against the vacant post of the Deputy Director in September 1963. It was after this when the ground had been fully prepared for the petitioner that an advertisement, filed as annexure 'A' with the writ petition, was published through the Punjab Public Service Commission in July, 1964, inviting applications for the post of the DD/RME. The advertisement was in the following terms:—

"PUNJAB PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION, PATIALA.

Candidates claiming concessions admissible to Backward Classes should produce the relevant affidavits filed before a 1st Class Magistrate in the enclosed form (A) or (B)."

There were only three other applicants, two of whom were junior to the petitioner, whereas nothing is known about the record of service of the candidate who was senior to him. The conditions laid down in the advertisement were such that no officer, already in the permanent service of the State or the Union Government feeling secure in his service in the general cadre and fairly high up in seniority with any chances of promotion, was likely to apply for a temporary post and lose the benefit of permanent service.

51. The petitioner was almost 57 steps below respondent No. 2 on the seniority list of PCMS I to which class the former has not yet been confirmed while on the teaching side where the petitioner had been appointed as Associate Professor against a temporary post, there were about 55 professors above him, in the order of seniority, some of them possessing higher qualifications than the petitioner as per annexure R. 2/12 filed by the respondents showing the gradation of the teaching staff as it stood on 1-3-1966. The position of the petitioner, in the final gradation list of the PCMS I and II prepared on 7-12-1963 under the States Reorganisation Act, 1956 (Central Act 37 of 1956) after the merger of the States of erstwhile PEPSU and Punjab as per annexure R. 2/4, was as low as 121. Twenty-five officers on the teaching line, originally junior to the petitioner, had been promoted and made senior to him list whereof is given in annexure R. 2/19. The petitioner with such a position in the general cadre not having been even promoted to PCMS I and being very low in the order of seniority in the teaching staff had everything to gain if he was appointed as DD/RME, though the post was a temporary one and terminable on one month's notice on either side. As a matter of fact the petitioner circumstanced as he was in his own cadre had no chances of early promotion in the ordinary way.

52. He applied for the post of DD/RME, was selected and consequently appointed to this post with effect from 31-8-1964 in a grade of Rs. 1500-2100. Respondent No. 2 who was at that time working as Deputy Director, Health Services lodged a protest against the petitioner being given a job carrying a higher scale of pay. The petitioner was put on probation in terms of his appointment for two years, but before this period could run out, the post itself was abolished with effect from 1-1-1966. On the abolition of the post the administrative department in order to accommodate the petitioner and protect his pay recommended that the post of Associate Professor of Forensic Medicine in the Medical College at Patiala be upgraded in the scale of Rs. 1000-75-1600 with effect from 1-1-1966 and the petitioner be appointed to that post on the same emoluments which he was enjoying as Deputy Director, Research and Medical Education. He was also given the additional charge of the post of the Deputy Medical Superintendent in the Post-graduate Institute.

53. It may be mentioned here that at this stage the amalgamation of the two wings of the Health Services has had a chequered history. Before the partition of the country in the year 1947 and afterwards upto 8-11-1948, there were two separate departments known as Medical Department and Public Health Department under the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals and Director, Public Health, respectively. On 26-10-1948, by a notification No. 5907-M-4A/577803 issued by the State Government, these two departments were amalgamated with effect from 8-11-1948 and put under the charge of one officer designated as Director, Health Services. A copy of this notification has been filed by the respondents as annexure R. 2/1. The cadres of PCMS I and II were kept separate as before and there are different rules relating to the appointment, terms and conditions of the two cadres. The professors in Medical Colleges were kept separate as a class from PCMS I in the matter of seniority. In the year 1963 by notification No. 4013-2HB-63/2436, dated 29-3-1963, the teaching cadre of Medical Colleges was separated from the general cadres of the PCMS I and PCMS II and it was directed that the recruitment to all teaching posts at the Colleges would in future be made direct through the Punjab Public Service Commission, though the serving personnel were also eligible. In the year 1965, by order dated 18-12-1965, all these services were again amalgamated and the Director of Health Services was declared as Head of Department for Medical Education and Research except the Post-graduate Institute at Chandigarh. The Director of Health Services, Punjab, was, therefore, from that date onwards, the Head of the Medical Services and the Medical Education and Research in the State of Punjab except in respect of the Post-graduate Institute.

54. A need was consequently felt to have a Joint Director and there was at one time a proposal that the said officer be taken from the teaching side, but ultimately it was decided to have an Additional Director without there being any obligation to have him from amongst the teaching staff. The petitioner seemed to wrongly think that the temporary post of an Additional Director should have gone to an officer on the teaching side, as he believed that it had been created in lieu of that of the Deputy Director, Research and Medical Education. My learned brother Capoor, J. has elaborately dealt with the matter. There is no material to warrant the assumption that it was a post reserved for the teaching line, whatever might have been the proposals and counter-proposals at one time. An offer of the post of the Additional Director was nonetheless made to senior-most professors in the teaching line, but they declined.

55. Kanwar Moti Singh, respondent No. 2, had been promoted to PCMS I with effect from 5-7-1949 and confirmed in that cadre with effect from 5-7-1950. He got the selection grade in PCMS I with effect from 4-2-1961 and promoted as Deputy Director, Health Services, Punjab, in the scale of Rs. 1300-50-1600 from 24-5-1962. He had also been confirmed as Deputy Director with effect from 14-10-1963. The office of the Director, Health Services, fell vacant twice and he had held the same in an officiating capacity. When the appointment of Dr. Bhatia was made as Director in March, 1963, respondent No. 2 was also considered, though in the matter of seniority he was at that time at serial No. 9 amongst Class I Officers and obviously this consideration implied that he was thought to be possessed of merit making him eligible for selection irrespective of his seniority. It was Dr. Bhatia, of course, who was ultimately selected. In these circumstances, when the temporary post of the Additional Director was to be filled up, respondent No. 2 who was already working as Deputy Director was appointed to that post in the scale of Rs. 1800-100-2000 plus non-practising allowance of Rs. 400 per mensem with effect from 29-4-1966. On 22-8-1966, this respondent was promoted as Director when the post fell vacant on Dr. Deepak Bhatia going to the Government of India.

56. It was in the background of this history of the service of these two contesting officers who belong to different classes, that it was to be seen how far the petitioner had any right to be considered for selection as Additional Director or Director of Health Services. The petitioner belongs to PCMS II though officiating in PCMS I, whereas the respondent holds a confirmed post in the selection grade in PCMS I. These two officers could not, therefore, be said to be members of the same class of service, apart from the seniority of the petitioner which was very low as already stated above, and the question arises whether in such circumstances, can it be said that the petitioner has been accorded any discriminatory treatment by the State Government by not considering him for these posts.

57. Mr. Anand Swarup referred to a demi-official letter in which a reference was made to certain complaints of a personal nature against respondent No. 2 which were denied by the said respondent. It is on record that instead of any action being taken against the respondent, he was rather promoted as a Deputy Director within a few days of the said letter. It was very uncharitable in the absence of any data to establish the allegations regarding the personal character of respondent No. 2, to take notice thereof in determining the respective merits of the petitioner and the respondent, and whether Art. 16 of the Constitution of India has been violated. The argument of Mr. Anand Swarup based on these allegations has no merit and must, therefore, be straightway rejected.

58. The State Government in the exercise of its executive power under Article 162 of the Constitution of India has a right to make appointments to various offices and grant promotions from time to time as it might think proper. A Government servant holds his office during the pleasure of the President or the Governor of the State, as the case may be, and the only limitations laid down on the exercise of that power of the Government are as given in Art. 311 of the Constitution or Art. 16 thereof. No Government servant holding a civil service post under the Union or the State can be dismissed or removed or reduced in rank except by the authority by which he was appointed and that too after an enquiry in which he has been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard in respect of the charges against him and when it is proposed to take some action on the basis of that enquiry he has been given a further opportunity to make a representation against the proposed penalty. Article 16 forms part of the same code of constitutional guarantees as given in Arts. 14 and 15 of the Constitution of India and supplements them. It is only one of the instances of the application of the general rule of equality so far as services under the State or the Union are concerned. This guarantee of equality in the absence of any statutory rules relating to selection to a post by departmental promotion is violated only where the appointing authority brings in arbitrariness in the exercise of its executive power and denies to any individual officer in the same class and similarly situated his right to be considered for that post. It was observed by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in All India Station Masters' and Assistant Station Masters' Association, Delhi v. General Manager Central Railway, AIR 1960 S.C. 384, that equality of opportunity in matters of promotion must mean equality as between members of the same class of employees and not equality between members of separate, independent classes.

59. There is no dispute that Art. 16 (1) of the Constitution guarantees equal opportunity not only in the matter of initial appointment to a service, but also in regard to future promotions to higher posts, but at the same time no civil servant has a claim to ask for a selection post as of right. It is a prerogative of the competent authority to give an officer promotion or refuse the same provided it does not act in the exercise of its executive power in an arbitrary manner. This guarantee of equality under Arts. 14, 15 and 16 of the Constitution, as held by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Banarsidas's case, AIR 1956 SC 520 (infra) does not take away the right of the Government to pick and choose proper persons when it is intended to fill up a civil post from out of a number of officers.

60. In order to support his contention that Art. 16 has been violated in the case before us, reliance has been placed by the learned counsel for the petitioner on some observations made by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in AIR 1956 SC 520, where the writ petition filed by Banarsidas and others under Article 32 of the Constitution complaining of an infringement of Art. 16 was dismissed. There, some Patwaris who had been working as part-time Government servants in Uttar Pradesh in the Revenue Department, had indulged in acts of indiscipline by trying to paralyse the Revenue Department and coerce the Government to accept their demands. These Patwaris tendered their resignations and the Government accepted the same relieving them of their duties soon after submission of their resignations. On the next day the Government reorganised the cadre by creating a new service of Lekhpalis, but the cadre included all those Patwaris whose record of service was free from blemishes and had withdrawn their resignations. The Government rather gave locus paenitentiae to those ex-Patwaris who realised their mistake in joining the agitation but did not take into service in the reorganised cadre those Patwaris who had been found guilty of lack of sense of discipline. In these circumstances, some Patwaris who had preferred the writ petition in the Supreme Court contended that the direction of the State Government that only those ex-Patwaris whose resignations had been accepted but had an excellent record of service would be absorbed in the new cadre, denied to them equality of opportunity, and offended against Art. 16. The contention was repelled it being held by their Lordships that the Government like all other employers are entitled to pick and choose from amongst a large number of candidates offering themselves for employment under Government and no question of any violation of Article 16 arose. It was in this context that an observation was made in the judgment that the Government service has got to be on a competitive basis. The expression 'selection for appointment in Government service has got to be on a competitive basis' cannot be taken out of the context and interpreted to mean that whenever a departmental promotion is to be made, all officers in a particular service get a right to apply for the selection post and whether an application is submitted or not, to be considered for the same, even if they are not equally situated in the relevant cadre. If a competent authority selects an officer to a selection post by a departmental promotion, there is inherent in this selection a competition. It is not understood how the observation referred to above can possibly help the petitioner.

61. Reference was again made to AIR 1962 SC 1704, in support of the contention that mere seniority does not confer a right to be selected to any higher post. It is incorrect to say that respondent No. 2 has been selected solely on the ground of seniority. Seniority-cum-merit are relevant considerations to a selection post and there is nothing to indicate that respondent No. 2 was not possessed of merit and he was selected simply because he happened to be the senior-most. As already stated, merit does not mean merely possessing higher educational qualifications.

62. The petitioner also cannot derive any help from the observations made by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in AIR 1962 S.C. 602. The facts of that case are distinguishable and there is not indeed a ghost of semblance between the facts of that case and the instant one. The services of one Krishan Chander Nayar, who had been employed on a purely temporary basis as a machineman in the Central Tractor Organisation, which was a temporary one under the Ministry of Agriculture, Government of India, New Delhi, were terminated in terms of his employment on the ground that he was no longer required in that Organisation. The Government while terminating his services placed a ban on his being ever taken into Government service, for which there was obviously no justification. The stand taken up by the Government in defence of its action was that the alleged ban was purely a departmental instruction for future guidance not intended, in any way, to prevent the petitioner from applying for any post under the Government. In spite of denial of the Government about the existence of any ban their Lordships came to a conclusion that, as a matter of fact, a ban as alleged by the petitioner had been imposed and that any application made by the petitioner (Krishan Chander Nayar) seeking employment under the Government would be treated as a waste paper in view of the ban. In these circumstances, their Lordships considered the question of the violation of Article 16 and made an observation that the fundamental right guaranteed by the said Article consisted not only in making an application for a post to the Government, but the further right to be considered on merits for the post for which an application had been made. It was while quashing the ban that their Lordships of the Supreme Court observed that Krishan Chander Nayar had a right to make an application and to be considered for a post. It could not be intended to be laid down by their Lordships that in every case where a person, whether similarly situated or not and whatever his position in any particular service be, has a right to make an application for a departmental promotion when no applications have been invited therefor. The decision in Krishan Chander Nayar's case, AIR 1962 S.C. 602, has to be confined to the facts of that case.

63. The learned counsel for the petitioner laid great emphasis in his submissions on some observations made by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in AIR 1966 S.C. 1942. I do not see how this authority can be pressed into service by the petitioner. The contention was raised on behalf of the petitioners there that Articles 15 and 16 of the Constitution would be violated if the executive were held to have the power to make appointments and lay down conditions of service without making rules in that behalf under proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution. This contention was repelled by their Lordships it being held that it is not obligatory under proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution to make rules of recruitment etc. before the service can be constituted or proposed, or created or filled, and that the State Government has executive powers in relation to all matters with respect to which the legislature of the State has power to make laws and entry No. 41 in List II (State List) empowers the State legislature to make laws with regard to the State public services. In that case, advertisement had been made and applications invited for the recruitment of Assistant Engineers in the executive cadre of the Mysore Public Works Department. The argument of arbitrariness and violation of Articles 15 and 16 was negatived because the applications had been invited giving equal opportunity to all citizens duly qualified to make applications which were considered by the Public Service Commission. It is not seriously contended before us that their Lordships have in Nagarajan's case, AIR 1966 S.C. 1942 laid down that advertisement for any selection post, where departmental promotion is to be made in the exercise of the executive power of the State, is necessary, and if not made, it would amount to denial of equality guaranteed by Articles 15 and 16 of the Constitution. No such contention can possibly be advanced with reasonableness as inviting of applications by advertisement is only one of the modes of recruitment which would exclude arbitrariness. There may be appointment even without an advertisement and still no arbitrariness is brought in. It will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case as to whether a particular appointment has been so made as to discriminate between two persons similarly situated so that it can be said that a differential treatment has been accorded to one at the cost of the other.

64. It is a mistaken approach to think that in case of every appointment or recruitment to a service or promotion, the State should first invite applications. My brother Narula, J. has also not gone to the extent of holding on the basis of Nagarajan's case, AIR 1966 S.C. 1942 that inviting of applications was necessary but all that has been observed by the learned Judge is that the application made in writing by the petitioner should have been considered. I do not appreciate how it became incumbent on the State Government to consider the so-called application or representation of the petitioner simply because on reading an unofficial news item in the press he submitted the said representation. If there was no obligation on the State Government to invite applications when it sought to make an appointment to a selection post by promotion, there was none to consider one made by an over ambitious officer like the petitioner who, though not equally situated in any manner, thought that he was more qualified simply because of his having higher educational qualifications and on account of his having enjoyed certain temporary advantage at one time as DD/RME. The petitioner is not even confirmed in PCMS I and actually belongs to PCMS II. The two classes of PCMS are quite distinct and separate from each other, though an officer in class II could be promoted to class I. The petitioner might have believed that he had more merit but the State Government considered the claims of all those persons whom it thought were senior on the teaching side and better qualified and it was only when they declined that the post of the Additional Director was offered to respondent No. 2. There is nothing to indicate that any of the senior professors on the teaching side had any grievance against the appointment of respondent No. 2 as Additional Director. It is the petitioner alone, who though in no way equated with this respondent, chose to make an application for being appointed to the Selection post. The appointment of respondent No. 2 as Director was made in the same manner as was being done hither-to-before and I do not think that any injustice has been caused to the petitioner or that his fundamental right guaranteed under Article 16 has in any way, been violated.

65. For the foregoing reasons the writ petition has no merit and agreeing with my learned brother Capoor, J., I dismiss the same with costs which, therefore being two respondents, I assess at Rs. 300/-.

66. ORDER— In accordance with the decision of the majority of the Bench, the writ petition is dismissed with costs, which, inasmuch as there are two respondents, are assessed at Rs. 300/-.

Petition dismissed.

AIR 1970 PUNJAB AND HARYANA 137 (V 57 C 20)

R. S. NARULA & R. S. SARKARIA, JJ.

Municipal Committee, Jullundur City, Appellant v. Shri Romesh Saggi and others, Respondents.

F. A. O. No. 125 of 1963; D/- 11-12-1968, from order of Gurdev Singh, J., D/- 31-7-1968.

(A) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Ss. 110 to 110-F — Claim petition under S. 110-C — Judgment of Criminal Court determining guilt or innocence of driver is not binding on Claims Tribunal — Claims Tribunal is "Court" within S. 3, Evidence Act — Tribunal must act judicially and must follow principles of natural justice — AIR 1968 Punj 466, Overruled — (Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 3, 43) — (Punjab Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal Rules (1964), R. 3) — (Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 18 — District Court acting under S. 18 is a Court).

The judgment of a Criminal Court in a prosecution arising out of a motor accident, determining the guilt or innocence of the driver of the motor vehicle concerned, is neither conclusive nor binding on the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunals, dealing with a claim petition under S. 110-C of the Motor Vehicles Act, and its findings as to the guilt or otherwise of the driver are wholly irrelevant for the purpose of the trial on merits of the claim petition before the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal. Such judgment can, however, be relevant only for the purpose and to the extent specified in S. 43 of the Evidence Act. AIR 1968 Punj. 466, Overruled. (Para 35)

CM/EM/B39/69/GDR/D

Per Narula, J.:— The Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal squarely falls within the definition of "Court" contained in S. 3 of the Evidence Act. The mere use of the word "award" in respect of the decisions of the Tribunal does not take the case out of the definition of "Court". What is sought to be excluded from the purview of the Evidence Act by referring to "proceedings before an arbitrator" are proceedings to which the provisions of Arbitration Act, 1940 apply. The mere use of the word "judgment" or the word "award", both of which expressions have been used in connection with the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal in Ss. 110 to 110-F, does not indicate conclusively as to whether a Tribunal is or is not a "Court" within the meaning of S. 3 of the Evidence Act. Case law discussed.

(Paras 4, 5)

Even assuming that the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal is not a 'Court' within the meaning of S. 3 of the Evidence Act, but is something akin to an Arbitrator or a domestic Tribunal it cannot be said that the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal is bound by the findings of fact recorded by a competent Criminal Court on the merits of the controversy relating to the rashness or negligence of the driver in a running down action.

(Paras 14, 17)

Per Sarkaria, J.:— An arbitrator must not disregard the crucial rules of evidence founded on the fundamental concepts of natural justice and public policy. One of such concepts is, that an Arbitrator—indeed for that matter any judicial Tribunal—has to determine the facts in controversy before him by applying his own mind after an independent enquiry and investigation. This is the basic function of any Judicial Tribunal. No Arbitrator or Tribunal, therefore, can be permitted to abdicate this fundamental judicial function and accept a readymade opinion of a Criminal Court. If he fails to make an independent enquiry and contents himself with the role of a rubber-stamp functionary, merely accepting the ipse dixit of the Criminal Court, such self-effacement on his part, will amount to legal misconduct.

(Para 18)

All Judicial Tribunals whether they are or are not Courts within the definition of S. 3 of the Evidence Act, must observe those crucial rules of evidence which are founded on the principles of natural justice. The expression "principles of natural justice" cannot be reduced into any precise, exhaustive and inflexible definition. The question whether or not the principles of natural justice have been observed in a particular case, has to be determined in the light of the constitution of the Tribunal, the nature and scope of its duties and the rules laid down by the Legislature to regulate its functioning and procedure. In this sense, such principles must vary. (Para 23)

Though the statute is silent on the point, it cannot be disputed that the Tribunal has to determine the claims filed before it in accordance with the general law of torts. Keeping in view the statutory provisions relating to the constitution, scope of powers and duties, and procedure to be followed by the Tribunal, it can safely be said that the fundamental principle underlying S. 43, Evidence Act, is to be deemed a principle of natural justice, which the Tribunal is bound to observe. (Para 24)

In civil actions and criminal prosecutions arising out of the same motor accident involving bodily injury or death, the parties may be different, the issues may not be identical, the nature of the onus may vary and the effect of evidence may not be the same. It will, therefore, be opposed to fundamental canons of justice and public policy to treat the judgments of the Criminal Court binding on a Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal, trying a claim arising out of a motor accident involving injury or death. The judgment of the Criminal Court, can at the most, be used only for the purpose and to the extent indicated in S. 43 of the Evidence Act. Case law discussed.

(B) Tort — Negligence — Distinction between civil and criminal negligence — Penal Code (1860), Ss. 304-A, 337 — Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 104.

Per Sarkaria, J.:— The principles of liability governing civil actions and criminal prosecutions based on negligence differ in two material aspects. Firstly, in a criminal case, such as one under S. 304-A or 337 I.P.C., the negligence which would justify a conviction must be culpable or of gross degree and not the negligence founded on a mere error of judgment or defect of intelligence. The degree of negligence which would justify a conviction must be something to the danger of which, if one drew the accused's attention, the latter might exclaim 'I don't care'. It must be something more than a mere omission or neglect of duty, as for instance, the failure of a Municipal Corporation, or a Trust to repair a road in consequence of which a person using the road got accidentally killed. Thus, a law distinguishes between negligence which originates a civil liability and the one on which a criminal prosecution can be founded. In some cases, the bounds which separate a culpable negligence from a 'civil' negligence are blurred or may even disappear altogether, but in most cases this distinction is clearly discernible. In criminal cases there must be mens rea or guilty mind, i.e., rashness or guilty mind of a degree which can be described as criminal negligence; mere carelessness is not enough. (Paras 29, 30)

Furthermore, the nature of the onus, the approach to and effect of the evidence in a criminal case is materially different from that in a civil action. In criminal cases, the prosecution must pursue the guilt of the accused beyond the utmost bounds of doubt, to a point of moral certainty. But in civil cases, mere preponderance of probability may be sufficient to fasten the defendant with liability. The reason is not that the Evidence Act prescribes different standards of proof in civil and criminal cases, but because under that Act the burden of proving the guilt of the accused beyond all manner of doubt always rests on the prosecution and never shifts on to the accused. This is not so in civil cases. (Paras 31, 32)

NARULA, J.:— In this appeal under Section 110-D of the Motor Vehicles Act (4 of 1939), as subsequently amended by Act 100 of 1956, against an award, dated March 19, 1963, for Rs. 6,750.46 P. and costs, it was argued on behalf of the judgment-debtor appellant before Gurdev Singh, J., that the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal had no jurisdiction to hold that Raghbir Singh, the driver of the alleged offending vehicle was guilty of any rash or negligent act as Raghbir Singh had already been acquitted by this Court on August 14, 1961 (in Criminal Revision No. 312 of 1961) of the charge of rashness or negligence in respect of the same accident which gave rise to the claim under Section 110-A of the Act. In view of the conflict of authority on the abovesaid point, and the prima facie inclination of the learned Judge not to agree with the law laid down by Mahajan, J. in Sadhu Singh v. Punjab Roadways, Ambala City, 1968-70 Pun. L. R. 39= (AIR 1968 Punj. 466), and in view of the further fact that this question is likely to arise in a large number of cases, the learned Single Judge has referred the following question for decision by a Division Bench:—

“Whether the judgment of a criminal Court in a prosecution arising out of a motor accident, determining the guilt or innocence of the driver of the motor vehicle concerned, is conclusive and binding upon the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal dealing with a claim petition under Section 110-C of the Motor Vehicles Act, and if not, for what purposes and to what extent can such a judgment be availed of by the parties concerned.”

2. Sections 110 to 110-F and Section 111-A were added to the principal Act of 1939 by the various provisions contained in the amending Act 100 of 1956. Section 110 authorises the State Government to constitute one or more Motor Accidents Claims Tribunals for the purpose of adjudicating upon claims for compensation in respect of accidents involving the death of, or bodily injury to, persons arising out of the use of motor vehicles. Section 110-A states that an application for compensation arising out of an accident of the nature specified above may be made by the person who has sustained the injury or by the legal representatives of the deceased where death has resulted from the accident. Section 110-B provides that the Claims Tribunal shall, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, hold an inquiry into the claim and may make an award determining the amount of compensation which appears to it to be just. Section 110-C then provides:—

“(1) In holding any inquiry under Section 110-B, the Claims Tribunal may, subject to any rules that may be made in this behalf, follow such summary procedure as it thinks fit.

(2) The Claims Tribunal shall have all the powers of a Civil Court for the purpose of taking evidence on oath and of enforcing the attendance of witnesses and of compelling the discovery and production of documents and material objects and for such other purposes as may be prescribed; and the Claims Tribunal shall be deemed to be a Civil Court for all the purposes of Section 195 and Chapter XXXV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

(3) Subject to any rules that may be made in this behalf, the Claims Tribunal may, for the purpose of adjudicating upon any claim for compensation, choose one or more persons possessing special knowledge of any matter relevant to the inquiry to assist it in holding the inquiry.”

Section 110-D gives a statutory right of appeal to a person aggrieved by an award of a Claims Tribunal. Such an appeal lies in cases where the amount in dispute in appeal is not less than Rs. 2,000/-, and is preferable to the High Court. Section 110-E relates to recovery of money from insurers and Sec. 110-F bars the jurisdiction of Civil Courts to entertain any question relating to any claim for compensation which may be adjudicated upon by the Claims Tribunal, and also bars the issue of an injunction in respect of any action taken or to be taken before the Claims Tribunal. Section 111-A authorises the State Government to make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of Sections 110 to 110-E, and in particular such rules may provide for, inter alia, the procedure to be followed by a Claims Tribunal in holding an inquiry under Chapter VIII, and the powers vested in a Civil Court which may be exercised by a Claims Tribunal.

3. In exercise of the powers conferred by Section 111-A, the Punjab Government has framed the Punjab Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal Rules, 1964, which were published in the Home Transport Department of the Punjab Government vide notification No. GSR-4/CA4/39/S. III A/65, dated January 5, 1965. Rule 3 provides that every application for payment of compensation made under Sec. 110-A shall be in the form appended to those rules. There are as many as 24 columns in the prescribed form. But no information regarding any criminal prosecution or a judgment of any criminal Court or the result of a criminal prosecution is required to be given in the prescribed form. Column 22 headed; "any other information that may be necessary or helpful in the disposal of the claim" but this does not by itself indicate that the State Government while prescribing a form envisaged the furnishing of information regarding the result of any criminal prosecution to the Tribunal. Rule 19 states that the Claims Tribunal, in passing orders shall record concisely in a judgment the findings on each of the issues framed and the reasons for such findings and make an award specifying the amount of compensation to be paid by the insurer and also the person or persons to whom compensation shall be paid. Rule 20 states that the provisions of Order 5, Rules 9 to 13 and 15 to 30, Order 9, Order 13, Rules 3 to 10, Order 16, Rules 2 to 21, Order 17 and Order 23, Rules 1 to 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure shall, so far as may be apply to proceedings before the Claims Tribunal. No other rule is relevant for answering the question which has been referred to us. From a survey of the relevant provisions of the Act and the Rules, it is clear that the Act as well as the Rules are absolutely silent on the question of the applicability of any particular rules of evidence.

4. So far as the Evidence Act is concerned, Section 1 provides that the provisions of that Act shall extend to the whole of India (except the State of Jammu and Kashmir), and the Act applies to "all judicial proceedings in or before any Court", but the Act does not apply to the proceedings before an arbitrator. Expression "Court" for the purposes of the Evidence Act is defined in Section 3 to include "all persons, except arbitrators, legally authorized to take evidence"; "Legally authorised to take evidence" would mean the statutory authority to take the statement of a witness on oath or on solemn affirmation. Sub-section (2) of Section 110-C of the Motor Vehicles Act specifically states that "the Claims Tribunal shall have all the powers of a Civil Court for the purpose of taking evidence on oath,". The statutory provisions contained in sub-section (2) of Section 110-C of the Motor Vehicles Act, therefore, expressly authorise the Tribunal constituted under Section 110 of the Act to take evidence on oath.

Inasmuch as the Presiding Officer of the Tribunal has to be a person, it appears to be clear that the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal squarely falls within the definition of "Court" contained in Section 3 of the Evidence Act. Once it is held that the Tribunal constituted under Section 110 of the Motor Vehicles Act is a "Court", the major part of the question referred to us is answered as Section 43 of the Evidence Act states that judgments, orders or decrees other than those mentioned in Sections 40, 41 and 42, are irrelevant, unless the existence of such judgment, order or decree, is a fact in issue, or is relevant under some other provision of the Evidence Act. It is nobody's case that the judgment of the Criminal Court is or could be relevant under Section 40, 41 or 42 of the Evidence Act in proceedings under Section 110-A of the Motor Vehicles Act. Nor is the existence of the judgment or orders of the Criminal Court in issue, in the claim petition presented under Section 110-A. It is also not claimed that the disputed judgment of the Criminal Court is in any manner relevant under any other provision of the Evidence Act in the claim proceedings.

5. Mr. K. C. Nayyar, the learned counsel for the appellant, conceded that if it is held that the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal is a "Court" for the purposes of the Evidence Act, the judgment of the Criminal Court will not be relevant and the findings contained in the said judgment cannot be looked at or considered while deciding the claim preferred under Section 110-A of the Motor Vehicles Act. He, however, vehemently argued that the Tribunal in question is not a "Court" within the meaning of Section 3 of the Evidence Act. Two arguments were advanced in support of this contention. It is firstly submitted by Mr. Nayyar that Section 110-C leaves the summary procedure to be followed by the Tribunal to its own discretion by stating that the Tribunal may follow such summary procedure as it thinks fit. He then submits that it is only certain specified chapters or provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure which have been made applicable to the Tribunal and no part of Section 110-C applies the Evidence Act to proceedings before the Tribunal.

The appellant does not appear to be appreciating the difference between the civil procedure by which the claim has to be tried as distinguished from the rules of evidence which may be applied by a Tribunal in disposing of a claim petition. Except to the extent to which the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code have been made applicable, the matter of procedure has been left to the discretion of the Claims Tribunal subject to the rules that might be framed in that behalf by the State Government under S. 111-A. But the question of applicability of the Evidence Act depends on the Tribunal being a "Court" or not. The reasons for which Mr. Nayyar says that the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal is not a "Court", are (i) that in referring to the decisions of the Tribunal, the word "award" as distinguished from the expression "judgment or decree" has been used and (ii) that it has been held by this Court that the Tribunal in question is not a regular Civil Court. Learned counsel submits that inasmuch as the Evidence Act has specifically excluded the applicability of its provisions to arbitration proceedings, and inasmuch as the decision of the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal has been specifically labelled as "Award" which expression has been specifically used in respect of the decisions of arbitrators, it is clear that the Tribunal is not a Court.

In Fazilka Dabwali Transport Co. (Private) Ltd. v. Madan Lal, 1968-70 Pun. L. R. 9=(AIR 1968 Punj. 277), it was held by a Division Bench of this Court (S. B. Capoor and Shamsheer Bahadur, JJ.), that neither the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal nor, consequently the High Court (exercising its appellate jurisdiction under the said Act) is strictly speaking a Court and that the phraseology employed in Section 110-C is itself indicative of that intendment. It was held that the Claims Tribunal in holding an inquiry has been given certain powers of Civil Court for certain specified purposes, but that the Tribunal cannot be regarded as a "Court" strictly speaking and the use of the word "award" gives a complexion of arbitration to its proceedings. What the Division Bench of this Court was considering in the case of Fazilka Dabwali Transport Co., 1968-70 Pun. L. R. 9=(AIR 1968 Punj. 277) (supra) was whether a person aggrieved by the appellate order of this Court under Sec. 110-D of the Motor Vehicles Act has or has not a right of appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent. The contention was negatived by the Bench on the ground that an appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent lies against a judgment, and that expression is defined in Section 2(9) of the Code of Civil Procedure to mean "the statement given by the Judge, of the grounds of a decree or order." The "Judge" is defined in sub-section (8) of Section 2 to mean a presiding officer of a Civil Court. It was in this context that the learned Judges held that the "Tribunal" is not a Civil Court. The question whether the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal is or is not a Court as defined in Section 3 of the Evidence Act did not arise before the Bench and could not possibly have been answered in the case of Fazilka Dabwali Transport Co., 70 Pun. L. R. 9=(AIR 1968 Punj. 277).

The statutory definition of Court contained in Section 3 of the Evidence Act is of a comparatively much wider amplitude than the restricted scope of the expression "Civil Court". Same applies to the decision of the Judicial Commissioner of Goa, Daman and Diu in British India Genl. Ins. Co. Ltd., Margao v. Chambi Shaikh Abdul Kadar, 1968 A.C.J. 322=(AIR 1968 Goa 78). The learned Judicial Commissioner held in that case that the Claims Tribunal under the Act cannot be regarded as a Civil Court for the purpose of interference in revision under Section 115(c) of the Code of Civil Procedure and Section 8(2)(b) (i) of the Goa, Daman and Diu (Judicial Commissioner's Court) Regulation, 1963, though the Claims Tribunal could be regarded as a Tribunal for the purposes of supervisory jurisdiction vested in the High Court under Article 227 of the Constitution. As already pointed out, the question of the Tribunal being or not being a "Court" for the purpose of Evidence Act did not arise before the Judicial Commissioner. Mr. Harbans Lal Sarin, the learned senior counsel for respondent No. 1 referred in this connection to certain observations of Dua, J. in Shri Ram Pertap v. General Manager, Punjab Roadways, Ambala, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 448 = (AIR 1962 Punj 540). The learned Judge held in that case that it should be borne in mind that the bunch of Sections 110 to 110-F of the Motor Vehicles Act merely deals with the subject of the substitution of the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal in place of a Civil Court for purposes of adjudicating claims for compensation in respect of an accident involving the death or bodily injuries to persons arising out of the use of a Motor Vehicle. These observations of a general nature cannot, I think, assist us in coming to a definite finding on the precise question which we are called upon to answer.

The mere use of the word "award" in respect of the decisions of the Tribunal does not in our opinion take the case out of the definition of "Court." There is no doubt that the word "award" is usually used in respect of decisions of arbitrators, but even the decision of a District Court in proceedings under Section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act is called an award, and it cannot be argued that a District Court while deciding a reference under the Land Acquisition Act is not a Court, or that such a decision partakes of the nature of the award of an arbitrator. What is sought to be excluded from the purview of the Evidence Act by referring to "proceedings before an arbitrator" are proceedings to which the provisions of Arbitration Act 10 of 1940 apply. The object is that the arbitrators cannot be tied down to the strict rules of evidence. If such exclusion had not been specifically provided for, an arbitration Tribunal would also have been covered by the definition of "Court" as an arbitrator is a person who is legally authorised to take evidence.

When the learned Judges of the Division Bench of this Court in Fazilka Dabwali Transport Company's case, 70 Pun LR 9 = (AIR 1968 Punj 277) referred to the use of the expression "award" in relation to the decision of the Tribunal, the object was to distinguish it from a judgment within the meaning of CL 10 of the Letters Patent. Otherwise the word "judgment" itself has been used under R. 19 of the Punjab Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal Rules, 1964, where it is stated that the Claims Tribunal in passing orders shall record concisely "in a judgment" the findings on each of the issues framed and the reasons for such findings. This clearly shows that the mere use of the word "judgment" or the word "award" both of which expressions have been used in connection with the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal in the abovesaid statutory provisions would not indicate conclusively as to whether a Tribunal is or is not a "Court" within the meaning of Section 3 of the Evidence Act. Mr. Nayyar points out that the 1964 Rules cannot be called into aid in deciding this particular case as the judgment under appeal was given by the Tribunal on March 19, 1963, and the rules in question were framed in 1964. I have referred to the Rules merely as an aid to construction and not for the purpose of finding any fault with the judgment of the Tribunal for non-compliance with any of those Rules.

6. Coming to the decided cases to which reference has been made by the learned counsel for the parties, I may first mention the judgment of a Division Bench of the Chief Court of Punjab, prepared by Rattigan, J., in Bishen Das v. Ram Labhaya, 106 Pun Re 1915 = (AIR 1916 Lah 133). The judgment of the Sessions Court at Faridkot convicting the defendant was ruled out of consideration by the District Judge in a claim for compensation. When the correctness of that decision was assailed before the Chief Court, Rattigan, J. observed as follows:—

"We find it unnecessary to deal with the question whether the copy of the judgment was or was not duly certified, as in our opinion the judgment in question should not have been received in evidence for the purpose of proving that defendants caused the death of Ladha Mal, there being ample authority for holding that the judgment of a Criminal Court is inadmissible as a piece of evidence in civil proceedings (see (1868) 10 Suth WR 56, (1870) 14 Suth WR 339, (1881) ILR 6 Cal 247 and (1896) ILR 23 Cal 610) and that the facts alleged by the plaintiffs in the Civil case must be proved independently of that judgment (see (1882) ILR 4 All 97 and (1866) 5 Suth WR 26 and (1866) 5 Suth WR 27).

The learned Additional Divisional Judge was of opinion that the judgment was relevant under Section 42 as relating to a matter of a public nature inasmuch as a trial for murder is a matter in which the public at large is interested. We cannot agree with this construction of Section 42 or hold that the morbid interest of a section of a public in the details of a murder trial constitutes such trial, 'a matter of a public nature' within the meaning of Section 42."

7. Mr. Sarin then referred to the Division Bench judgment of the Madras High Court in Pedda Venkatapathi v. G. Balappa AIR 1933 Mad 429, wherein it was held that under Section 43 of the Evidence Act, the judgment of the Criminal Court can be used only to establish the fact that an acquittal has taken place as a fact in issue in the civil suit. The Civil Court cannot take into consideration the grounds upon which that acquittal was based. It was further held that it lies upon the Civil Court itself to undertake an entirely independent inquiry before satisfying itself of the absence of reasonable and probable cause, for the alleged malicious prosecution, in a suit for damages on that ground. In re, Chakka Jagga Rao, AIR 1935 Mad 563, it was held that in a civil action for assault which is an action in tort, the fact that the defendant has been convicted or acquitted in a criminal Court is relevant only as to the fact of the conviction or acquittal and it is totally irrelevant on the question whether the conviction or acquittal was right, that is to say, whether the assault was or was not in fact committed. The learned Judge held that the judgment of a Criminal Court is a record of the proceeding in that Court, and nothing more, and that a Civil Court should embark upon an inquiry before it on the same facts without being influenced in any way whatever by the conclusion at which the Criminal Court has arrived.

A Division Bench of the Patna High Court held in Harihar Prasad Singh v. Mt. Janak Dulari, AIR 1941 Pat 118, that in a civil suit the decisions in criminal cases relating to the subject-matter of the suit cannot be relied upon. A Full Bench of the Lahore High Court while dealing with a converse case where a prayer for stay of the criminal proceedings on account of the subject-matter of the dispute being pendente lite in a civil action was being pressed, held in B. N. Kashyap v. Emperor, AIR 1945 Lah 23 (FB) as follows:—

"The fact is that the issues in the two cases although based on the same facts (and strictly speaking even parties in the two proceedings) are not identical and there appears to be no sufficient reason for delaying the proceedings in the criminal Court, which, unhampered by the Civil Court, is fully competent to decide the questions that arise before it for its decision and where in the nature of things there must be a speedy disposal." The question that had been referred to the Full Bench was couched in the following language:—

"When there are concurrent proceedings covering the same ground before a criminal Court and a Civil Court, the parties being substantially the same, would the judgment of the Civil Court, if obtained first, be admissible in evidence before the criminal Court in proof or disproof of the fact on which the prosecution is based?"

The above question was answered by the Full Bench in the negative with the observations which have already been quoted.

8. In Ramadhar Chaudhary v. Janki Chaudhary, AIR 1956 Pat 49, a Division Bench of that Court held that a judgment of a Criminal Court is admissible to prove only as to who were the parties to the dispute and what order had been passed in the criminal proceedings, but that the facts stated therein or statements of the evidence of the witnesses examined in the criminal case, or the findings given by the Criminal Court are not admissible in the civil proceedings. The learned Judges held that technically the judgments of Criminal Courts are inadmissible as not being between the same parties, the parties in the criminal proceedings being the State on the one hand, and the prisoner on the other, and in the civil suit the prisoner and some third party; and substantially because, the issues in a civil and criminal proceeding are not the same, and the burden of proof rests in each on different shoulders. Modi, J. held in Onkarmal v. Banwarilal, AIR 1962 Raj 127, that a judgment of acquittal in a Criminal Court is irrelevant in a civil suit based on the same cause of action, just as a judgment of conviction cannot, in a subsequent civil suit, be treated as evidence of facts on which the conviction is based. The learned Judge held that the Civil Court must independently of the decision of the Criminal Court investigate facts and come to its own finding on the relevant point.

9. Mr. Sarin then referred to the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Hollington v. F. Hewthorn & Co. Ltd., 1943 (2) All ER 35. In that case the plaintiff's car which was being driven by the son of the plaintiff was involved in an accident with the car owned by the defendant. The plaintiff's claim for damages to his car and for personal injuries sustained by his son was allowed. At the trial stage a certificate to the effect that the defendant's driver had been convicted for driving without due care and attention on the same day on which the accident occurred was ruled out of consideration. In the Appeal Court it was contended that the said exclusion of the evidence consisting of the certificate was contrary to law. It was held by the Court below that the certificate of conviction could not be tendered in evidence in civil proceedings, and that the certificate had been rightly rejected by the trial Court. It was held that in a subsequent civil trial, the Court should come to a decision on the facts before it without regard to the proceedings before a criminal Tribunal. The Court of Appeal held:—

"The contention that a conviction or other judgment ought to be admitted as prima facie evidence is usually supported on the ground that the facts have been investigated, and the result of the previous investigation is, therefore, at least some evidence of the facts that have been established thereby. To take the present case, it could be said that the conviction shows that the magistrates were satisfied, on the facts before them, that the defendant was guilty of negligent driving. If that be so, it ought to be open to a defendant who had been acquitted to prove it, as showing that the Criminal Court was not satisfied of his guilt; though the discussion by text-book writers and in the cases all turn on the admissibility of convictions, not of acquittals. If a conviction can be admitted, not as an estoppel, but as prima facie evidence, so ought an acquittal and this only goes to show that the Court trying the civil action can get no real guidance from the former proceedings without retrying the criminal case. Without dealing with every case and text-book that was cited in the argument, we are of opinion that, both on principle and authority, the conviction was rightly rejected."

10. In the authoritative pronouncement of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Anil Behari Ghosh v. Smt. Latika Bala Dassi, AIR 1955 SC 566, it was clearly held in the following passage that the High Court could not have assumed on the basis of the judgment of conviction in the sessions trial that Charu was the murderer, and that the question whether Charu was or was not a murderer had to be decided on the evidence produced in the civil case:—

"The learned counsel for the contesting respondent suggested that it had not been found by the lower Appellate Court as a fact upon the evidence adduced in this case, that Girish was the nearest agnate of the testator or that Charu had murdered his adoptive father, though these matters had been assumed as facts. The Courts below have referred to good and reliable evidence in support of the finding that Girish was the nearest reversioner to the estate of the testator. If the will is a valid and genuine will, there is intestacy in respect of the interest created in favour of Charu, if he was the murderer of the testator. On this question the Courts below have assumed on the basis of the judgment of conviction and sentence passed by the High Court in the sessions trial that Charu was the murderer. Though that judgment is relevant only to show that there was such a trial resulting in the conviction and sentence of Charu to transportation for life, it is not evidence of the fact that Charu was the murderer. That question has to be decided on evidence."

11. The precise question relating to the jurisdiction of a Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal to take into consideration the finding of a Criminal Court recorded in its judgment against the accused driver, came up for consideration before a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in the Indian Mutual General Insurance Society Ltd., Madras v. M. Kothandian Naidu, 1966 ACJ 62 (Mad). The Bench held that though the driver who had been acquitted of the charge under Sec. 304-A of the Indian Penal Code on having been given the benefit of doubt, the fact of his acquittal by the Criminal Court was not relevant and the judgment of acquittal had no direct bearing on the merits of the civil action which ought to be decided exclusively on the facts brought on the record of the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal.

11-A. Mr. K. C. Nayyar relied on the judgment of a Division Bench of the Mysore High Court in P. Channappa v. Mysore Revenue Appellate Tribunal, Bangalore, AIR 1966 Mys 68, for the proposition that the Tribunal was bound by the findings of the Criminal Court. In P. Channappa's case the question for decision in the writ petition in which the judgment was given was whether after the decision of the City Magistrate in the prosecution case to the effect that Channappa's stage carriage was not overloaded on the relevant day, the Regional Transport Authority could or could not suspend the stage carriage permit of the writ petitioner on the ground that in fact his stage carriage was overloaded on the relevant day. In other words the question was whether it was open to the State Transport Authority constituted under the Motor Vehicles Act to go into the question of the truth or otherwise of the charge of overloading for a second time in order to reach an independent conclusion on the same question of fact contrary to the one reached by the Criminal Court. While allowing the writ petition, the Division Bench of the Mysore High Court held that when a particular charge had been enquired into and found against by a competent criminal Court, the Regional Transport Authority, a Tribunal constituted under the Motor Vehicles Act, could not again enquire into the same charge so long as the acquittal before the Criminal Court was not based on any technical ground, but on merits.

The situation with which the Mysore High Court was dealing in Channappa's case, AIR 1966 Mys 68 was entirely different from the one with which we are faced. It was the jurisdiction of the Regional Transport Authority and not of the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal which was under consideration. Moreover, even as matter of public policy, it appears to be consistent with the rule of law to hold that once a competent Municipal Court, be it a Civil Court or a Criminal Court, has come to a definite finding of fact on a question on which penalty can be imposed by a statutory Tribunal, it should not be open to the latter to come to an independent finding on the same point, which may be inconsistent with the finding of the competent Court. That principle does not, however, hold good in case of a civil action for compensation or damages on account of a fatal or bodily injury. As pointed out by the Patna High Court in AIR 1956 Pat 49, the parties in a criminal action as distinguished from the third party claim in a running down action, are different, and the burden of proof may lie on the different parties, and the standard of proof on the central question of negligence or rashness may itself differ. Whereas in a Criminal Court the burden of proof never shifts from the prosecution, the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in a running down action is well-known. In fact when the question of the jurisdiction of the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal to take into consideration the judgment of a Criminal Court came up before a Division Bench of the Mysore High Court itself after the decision in Channappa's case, AIR 1966 Mys 68 in Seethamma v. Benedict D'Sa, 1966 ACJ 178 = (AIR 1967 Mys 11), it was unequivocally held by the Division Bench of the Mysore High Court as follows:—

"At one stage of the argument Mr. Sundaraswamy asked us to say that since respondent 1 was acquitted by the Magistrate in the prosecution launched against him for rash and negligent driving, that acquittal to some extent negatives the negligence imputed to him. It is obvious that the order of acquittal upon which Mr. Sundaraswamy depends cannot be used in that way. We have to found our conclusion as to negligence upon the material before us and the purpose for which the order of acquittal can be used is only to prove that there was an order of acquittal and nothing more."

In the face of the subsequent judgment of the Mysore High Court in Seethamma's case, 1966 ACJ 178 = (AIR 1967 Mys 11) (Supra), no reliance can in our opinion be placed on the earlier judgment of that very Court in P. Channappa's case, AIR 1966 Mys 68 for the proposition which is now being canvassed before us by Mr. K. C. Nayyar. Even otherwise, the distinction between the two cases is apparent as has already been pointed out.

12. Mr. Nayyar then referred to a Division Bench judgment of the Madras High Court in Jerome D'Silva v. Regional Transport Authority, South Kanara, AIR 1952 Mad 853. That again was a case where the allegation against the writ petitioner was that his motor vehicle was being used for smuggling rice, and on the driver of the vehicle having been charged by the police under Section 186 of the Indian Penal Code, had been discharged on the finding that the accusation against him was groundless and in spite of the discharge of the driver by the order of the Criminal Court, dated January 6, 1951, the Regional Transport Officer suspended the permit of the petitioner by order, dated March 3, 1951, on ignoring the finding of the Criminal Court and coming to an independent finding that the smuggled rice was being transported in the vehicle.

The writ petition was filed to have quashed the abovesaid order of the Regional Transport Officer as well as the order of the Regional Transport Authority upholding the same order in appeal on March 31, 1951. Subba Rao, J. (as he then was), before whom the case came up for hearing in the first instance, referred it to a larger Bench. It was in the above circumstances that the Division Bench of the Madras High Court held that if there is a conviction by a competent Criminal Court, that would furnish conclusive ground for any penal action by the Transport Authorities, and similarly if the criminal prosecution ends in a discharge or acquittal of the accused and such order of the Criminal Court is passed before the order of any Road Transport Tribunal decides the matter, then the Tribunal has no power to go behind the order of the competent Criminal Court. The considerations which weighed with the Madras High Court in Jerome D'Silva's case, AIR 1952 Mad 853 and with the Mysore Court in P. Channappa's case, AIR 1966 Mys 68 do not appear to be relevant for deciding the question which has been referred to us.

13. The solitary judgment of a learned Single Judge of this Court in 1968-70 Pun

LR 39 = (AIR 1968 Punj 466) which no doubt supports the contention which is being advanced by Mr. K. C. Nayyar is based on the judgment of the Madras High Court in Jerome D'Silva's case, AIR 1952 Mad 853 and that of the Mysore High Court in P. Channappa's case, AIR 1966 Mys 68. The learned Judge has not given any additional reason for holding that the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal is bound by the decision of the Criminal Court on merits as to the question of rashness or negligence of the driver of the offending vehicle. The judgment of the learned Single Judge in Sadhu Singh's case, 70 Pun LR 39 = (AIR 1968 Punj 466) does not appear to be consistent with the trend of judicial authority on the subject to which detailed reference has already been made, and does not appear to lay down good law in the face of the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Anil Behari Ghosh v. Smt. Latika Bala Dass, AIR 1955 SC 566.

14. Mr. Nayyar's further argument was that it would not be consistent with the general juridical principles to allow a Tribunal like the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal to sit in judgment over the decision on merits of a competent Criminal Court. This line of argument is obviously based on the assumption that the Claims Tribunal is not a "Court" within the meaning of Section 3 of the Evidence Act. Even if we were to assume for the sake of argument, though we have held to the contrary, that the Claims Tribunal established under Section 110 of the Motor Vehicles Act is not a "Court" within the meaning of Section 3 of the Evidence Act, we would be inclined to hold that nevertheless the Tribunal is not bound by the findings of fact recorded by a competent Criminal Court on the merits of the controversy relating to the rashness or negligence of the driver in a running down action.

15. Strength was sought to be derived by Mr. Nayyar from the observations of the Members of the Judicial Committee in Sambasivam v. Public Prosecutor, Federation of Malaya, (1950) AC 458, to the following effect:—

"The effect of a verdict of acquittal pronounced by a competent Court on a lawful charge and after a lawful trial is not completely stated by saying that the person acquitted cannot be tried again for the same offence. To that it must be added that the verdict is binding and conclusive in all subsequent proceedings between the parties to the adjudication. The maxim 'Res judicata pro veritate accipitur' is no less applicable to criminal than to civil proceedings."

It is noteworthy that their Lordships of the Privy Council emphasised in the above-quoted passage that the verdict of the Criminal Court is binding in all subsequent proceedings "between the parties to the adjudication", and never stated that it is binding on those who were not parties to the first adjudication. It is nobody's case that Romesh Saggi was a party to the criminal case in which Raghbir Singh is stated to have been acquitted. The parties to the case of criminal prosecution of Raghbir Singh were the State on the one hand and Raghbir Singh on the other. For the same reason, the observations of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Pritam Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 415, approving of the abovesaid ratio of the judgment of the Privy Council in a similar case, can be of little assistance to Mr. Nayyar's client.

16. From whatever angle the matter is viewed, we are, therefore, of the opinion that the law laid down in Sadhu Singh's case 70 Pun LR 39 = (AIR 1968 Punj 466) is not correct, and that the view (on the question referred to us) expressed by the Division Bench of the Mysore High Court in 1966 ACJ 178 = (AIR 1967 Mys 11) and by the Division Bench of the Madras High Court in the 1966 ACJ 62 = (AIR 1967 Mad 54) is the correct one. We would, therefore, return the following answer to the question referred to us:—

"The judgment of a Criminal Court in a prosecution arising out of a motor accident, determining the guilt or innocence of the driver of the motor vehicle concerned, is neither conclusive nor binding on the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal, dealing with a claim petition under Section 110-C of the Motor Vehicles Act, and its findings as to the guilt or otherwise of the driver are wholly irrelevant for the purpose of the trial on merits of the claim petition before the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal. Such judgment can, however, be relevant only for the purpose and to the extent specified in Section 43 of the Evidence Act."

16-A. With the abovesaid answer, we send back this case to the learned Single Judge for disposal on merits in accordance with law. The costs of this reference shall be costs in the appeal.

17. SARKARIA, J. :— I entirely agree with my learned brother that the answer to the question referred to us should be in the negative, as proposed. I, however, wish to emphasise and elaborate a little, the alternative aspect of the matter founded on the assumption — though not our finding—that the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal is not a 'Court' within the meaning of Section 3 of the Evidence Act, but is something akin to an Arbitrator or a domestic Tribunal.

18. In this connection, it may be noted that even an arbitrator must not disregard the crucial rules of evidence founded on the fundamental concepts of natural justice and public policy. One of such concepts is, that an Arbitrator—indeed for that matter any Judicial Tribunal—has to determine the facts in controversy before him by applying his own mind after an independent enquiry and investigation. This is the basic function of any Judicial Tribunal. No Arbitrator or Tribunal, therefore, can be permitted to abdicate this fundamental judicial function and accept a ready-made opinion of a criminal Court. If he fails to make an independent enquiry and contents himself with the role of a rubber-stamp functionary, merely accepting the ipse dixit of the Criminal Court, such self-effacement on his part, in my opinion, will amount to legal misconduct.

19. There is authority for the proposition that where the Arbitrator improperly admits evidence, which is the crucial evidence in the case, his award must be set aside as vitiated. In Kelantan Government v. Duff Development Co., (1923) AC 395, it was held that where it appears that the Arbitrator has decided on evidence which in law was not admissible and which is incorporated in the award, there is an error of law on the face of the award. This principle was adopted in Dutton Massey and Co. v. Jammadas Harparsad, AIR 1924 Sind 51. Another Sind case which is cited in Dutton Massey and Company's case, AIR 1924 Sind 51 is Gunnies v. Tulsidas, (Misc. No. 563 of 1921) (Sind) wherein the award was attacked on the ground of misconduct on the part of the Arbitrators in admitting improper evidence and acting on such evidence in arriving at their conclusion.

20. In that case, it was urged that only one question as to the construction of a particular clause in the contract between the parties had been referred to the Arbitrators for their decision, and though the Arbitrators were of the opinion that the objector was entitled to a decision in his favour the Arbitrators had, notwithstanding the protest of the objector, admitted evidence of an alleged custom to vary the express terms of the contract and had acted on such custom. The award was set aside, inter alia, on the ground that there was an error apparent on the face of the record. Again, in G. P. Gunnies & Co. Ltd. v. Amanlal Tulsidas, AIR 1924 Sind 75, a Full Bench of that Court laid down that where the Arbitrators had admitted improper evidence and were misled by it, they had committed an error of law patent on the face of the award and this could amount to legal misconduct.

21. To the same effect is the ratio of S. Venkatasubbiah v. Kumara Ramiah, AIR 1935 Mad 184, and Walford, Baker & Co. v. Macfic and Sons, (1915) 113 LT 180.

22. In Aboobaker Latif v. Reception Committee of the 48th Indian National Congress, AIR 1937 Bom 410, Wadia, J. of the Bombay High Court held that though the Evidence Act does not apply to arbitration, yet the Arbitrator must not disregard the rules of evidence which are founded on fundamental principles of justice and public policy.

23. The law is well settled that all Judicial Tribunals whether they are or are not Courts within the definition of Section 3 of the Evidence Act,—must observe those crucial rules of evidence which are founded on the principles of natural justice. Well then, what are the "principles of natural justice" which a domestic Tribunal is bound to observe? In particular, is the principle underlying Sec. 43 of the Evidence Act one of "natural justice?" The expression "principles of natural justice" cannot be reduced into any precise, exhaustive and inflexible definition. The question whether or not the principles of natural justice have been observed in a particular case, has to be determined in the light of the constitution of the Tribunal, the nature and scope of its duties and the rules laid down by the Legislature to regulate its functioning and procedure. In this sense, such principles must vary. (In this connection, see the observations of the Supreme Court in New Prakash Transport Co. Ltd. v. New Suwarna Transport Co. Ltd., AIR 1957 SC 232 = 1957 SCR 98).

24. In the instant case, Section 110-C (2) of the Motor Vehicles Act expressly clothes the Motor Accidents Tribunal with all the powers of a Civil Court for the purpose of taking evidence on oath and of enforcing the attendance of witnesses, etc., and Rule 20 enjoins on it to follow many of the material provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Though the statute is silent on the point, it cannot be disputed that the Tribunal has to determine the claims filed before it in accordance with the general law of torts. Keeping in view the statutory provisions relating to the constitution, scope of powers and duties, and procedure to be followed by the Tribunal, it can safely be said that the fundamental principle underlying Section 43, Evidence Act, is to be deemed a principle of natural justice, which the Tribunal is bound to observe.

25. In the view I take, I am fortified by a decision of the House of Lords in General Medical Council v. Spackman, 1943 (2) All ER 337. In that case, a registered medical practitioner, who was co-respondent in a divorce suit, was found by the Divorce Court to have committed adultery with the respondent therein to whom he stood in professional relationship, and a decree nisi was pronounced, which was afterwards made absolute. The General Medical Council gave him notice that a meeting of the Council would be held to decide whether his name should be removed from the medical register for "infamous conduct in a professional respect." At the hearing, he desired to call fresh evidence on the issue of adultery. The Council declined to hear the fresh evidence, but accepted the decree nisi as prima facie proof of adultery, and directed that the practitioner's name should be erased from the register. The Court of first instance, by a majority, consisting of Viscount Caldecote, C. J. and Humphreys, J. held that the Council had made 'due inquiry' and in consequence, dismissed the application of the medical practitioner for a writ of certiorari. Singleton, J. was of a different opinion, and considered that even when a doctor was adjudged to have been guilty of adultery under a decree of the Divorce Court, the Council, if that finding were disputed, ought to hear evidence tendered by or on behalf of the doctor in an endeavour to establish the contrary. In the Court of Appeal, Mackinnon, Goddard and Clauson L. JJ., were unanimous in adopting the view which had been expressed by Singleton J. Mackinnon L. J. held that 'due enquiry' involved 'a full and fair consideration of any evidence that the accused desires to offer, and, if he tenders them, hearing his witnesses.' With this, the other two Lord Justices agreed, and the writ of certiorari was granted accordingly.

26. The General Medical Council appealed to the House of Lords, which dismissed the appeal and affirmed the judgment of the Appeal Court. On behalf of the Council, it was urged before the House of Lords that no injustice had been done, and that a lay body like the Council could not take a better test of truth or falsity on an issue of adultery than the decision of a Judge specially delegated by the legislature to try that kind of question. It was emphasised that the finding of adultery was recorded by a civil court and it was not the decision of a petty sessional Magistrate in a criminal matter. It was added that the Council did not accept without question the verdict of the Court in a civil case, but looked at the reasons behind the Judge's order, and that it was entitled to accept the conclusion of the Court as final. It was, therefore well justified in applying the principle that no opportunity ought to be given to produce evidence which was reasonably available at the time of the trial in the civil Court. In short, the Council's case was that it was entitled to treat the conclusion of the Court as to adultery as final, unless the new evidence was not so available or unless there was fraud. It was further argued that the Court should not usurp the functions of the domestic Tribunal or dictate its procedure. Repelling these arguments, Viscount Simon L. C. made this illuminating speech:—

"Parliament has conferred on the General Medical Council responsibility for the register, and has constituted the council a domestic forum to determine whether a case is made out for striking off the list a particular name. The gravity to the doctor concerned of an adverse decision by the council needs no emphasis, but the responsibilities of the General Medical Council cannot be measured only by the effect of its decision on an individual . . . (After referring to the terms of Section 29 of the Medical Act, 1958, which gave the Council power to erase the name of a medical practitioner after "due inquiry" if he had been found guilty of infamous conduct in any professional respect, his Lordship proceeded):—

".....It is not disputed that the general Medical Council, in exercising this jurisdiction, is not a judicial body in the ordinary sense. It is master of its own procedure and is not bound by strict rules of evidence. It is not subject to correction by the Courts as long as it complies with Section 29 of the Act of 1858. That section draws a significant distinction between a case in which the impeached practitioner has been convicted of felony or misdemeanour and a case in which the allegation of infamous conduct is not connected with a criminal conviction. In the former case, the decision of the council is properly based on the fact of the convictionIn the latter case, the decision of the council, if adverse to the practitioner, must be arrived at "after due inquiry" and this of course means after due inquiry by the council. The question, therefore, is whether the council in this case can be regarded as having reached its adverse decision 'after due inquiry' when it has refused to hear evidence tendered by the practitioner with a view to showing that he has not been guilty of the infamous conduct alleged and that the finding of Divorce Court against him as co-respondent is wrong.

"It is worth observing that this problem does not arise only in connexion with conclusions reached in the Divorce Court.The previous decision is not between the same parties. There is no question of estoppel or of res judicata. In such cases the decision of the Courts may provide the council with adequate material for its own conclusion if the facts are not challenged before it, but, if they are, the Council should hear the challenge and give such weight to it as the Council thinks fit. The same view must, I think, be taken if the practitioner challenges the correctness of a finding of adultery by the Divorce Court.....So much follows from the structure of Section 29 and from the necessity, if there is to be "due inquiry", of giving the accused party a fair opportunity of meeting the accusation. Unless Parliament otherwise enacts, the duty of considering the defence of a party accused, before pronouncing the accused to be rightly adjudged guilty, rests on any tribunal, whether strictly judicial or not, which is given the duty of investigating his behaviour and taking disciplinary action against him. The form in which this duty is discharged—e.g. whether by hearing evidence viva voce or otherwise—is for the rules of the tribunal to decide. What matters is that the accused should not be condemned without being first given a fair chance of exculpation In that case, Lord Atkin observed as under:

".....It is not disputed that where there has been a trial, at least before a High Court Judge, the notes of the evidence at such trial and the judgment of the judge may afford prima facie evidence in support of the charge, for the council are not obliged to hear evidence on oath. But the very conception of prima facie evidence involves the opportunity of controverting it, and I entertain no doubt that the council are bound, if requested, to hear all the evidence that the practitioner charged brings before them to refute the prima facie case made from the previous trial. If this is inconvenient it cannot be held. It is much more inconvenient that a medical practitioner should be judged guilty of an infamous offence by any other than the statutory body. Convenience and justice are often not on speaking terms. Nor do I accept the view put forward on behalf of the council that they are ill-qualified to form an opinion on such a charge as the present compared with a High Court Judge. I can imagine no tribunal better qualified to draw deductions from the proved conduct between a doctor and his female patient than the very experienced body of men for instance who sat on the present inquiry.

Some analogy exists, no doubt, between the various procedures of this and other not strictly judicial bodies, but I cannot think that the procedure which may be very just in deciding whether to close a school or an insanitary house is necessarily right in deciding a charge of infamous conduct against a professional man. I would, therefore, demur to any suggestion that the words of Lord Loreburn L. C. in Board of Education v. Rice, 1911 AC 179, afford a complete guide to the General Medical Council in the exercise of their duties. As I have said, it is not correct that 'they need not examine witnesses.' They must examine witnesses if tendered, and their own rules rightly provide for this. Further it appears to me very doubtful whether it is true that "they have no power to administer an oath"

.....The question, however, does not turn on the judge's absence of doubt, but on whether the members of the council are themselves convinced of their fellow-practitioner's guilt. I agree with the judgment of Singleton J. and those of the Lord Justices, and am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed."

27. Lord Wright, who agreed with Viscount Simon L.C., observed:—

"..... The question of a failure of 'natural justice' is what is to be considered in this appeal, but, before considering the meaning of these words, I must first observe that they can in this case be properly taken as a description of what the council has to do, namely, to make "due inquiry", which under the statute is the governing criterion, that is 'an independent inquiry by the council as the body responsible for its own decision'.

'Natural justice' seems to be used in contrast with any formal or technical rule of law of procedure....."

(Quoting with approval the words of Selborne L.C. in Spackman v. Plustead District Board of Works, (1885) 10 A.C. 229, that in the proceedings of the authority, 'there must be no malversation of any kind, and there would be no decision within the meaning of the statute if there were anything of that sort done contrary to the 'essence of justice', Lord Wright continued:—

I have italicized (here in ') the two phrases which the Earl of Selborne seems to me to use as meaning what is generally meant by 'natural justice'. He adds, that 'this is a matter not of a kind requiring form, not of a kind requiring litigation at all, but requiring only that the parties should have an opportunity of submitting to the person by whose decision they are to be bound such considerations as in their judgment ought to be brought before him.....

(In 1911 AC 179) Lord Loreburn L. C. had just expressly observed that the board can obtain information in any way they think best, always giving fair opportunity to those who are parties to the controversy for correcting or contradicting any relevant statement prejudicial to their 'view'. The words fair and relevant are to be noted. If this statement is applicable to an 'administrative tribunal', it must, in my opinion, be applicable to the proceedings of the council which may not inaptly be described as a professional tribunal like so many other similar professional bodies which are invested by statute for grave reasons of public policy with disciplinary powers over members of the profession. (After discussing some other cases, the speech proceeded:—

sion 'sadly lacking in precision'. So it may be, and, perhaps it is not desirable to attempt to force it into any procrustean bed, but the statements which I have quoted may, at least, be taken to emphasise the essential requirements that the tribunal should be impartial and that the medical practitioner who is impugned should be given a full and fair opportunity of being heard. These are conditions of the validity of any decision enunciated by the council If the principles of natural justice are violated in respect of any decision, it is, indeed, immaterial whether the same decision would have been arrived at in the absence of the departure from the essential principles of justice. The decision must be declared to be no decision.

..... The legislature has not made a decree of the Divorce Court conclusive on the question of adulterous conduct in the same way as it has made a conviction of felony or misdemeanour conclusive so that in such a case all that the council has to decide on proof of the decree and the identity of the party is whether the adultery amounts to infamous conduct in a professional respect. Parliament, when it thinks fit, can clearly and effectively put on the same footing for the purpose of disqualifying the offender as a conviction of treason and felony a decree of adultery of the Divorce Court The proceedings in the Divorce Court were an entirely separate proceeding. The proceedings before the Council are fresh proceedings, before a different body who are bound to hold a due inquiry on their own responsibility and make their own decision on the evidence before them."

28. It is to be noted that notwithstanding the fact that the medical practitioner in that case had been guilty of adultery by the Divorce Court, i.e., the High Court exercising matrimonial jurisdiction, and not merely by a Criminal Court, it was held that failure by the Medical Council to make a due inquiry and arrive at a decision on their own responsibility, independently of the decision of the Divorce Court, was vitiated on the ground that it amounted to a breach of the principles of natural justice. If I may say so with respect, the observations quoted above from General Medical Council's case, 1943-2 All. E. R. 337, apply with greater force to the case of a Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal. Whereas the Medical Council was required under Section 29 of the Medical Act, 1858, only to make a 'due inquiry' and thus proceed in a quasi-judicial manner, the provisions of Sections 110 to 110-F of the Motor Vehicles Act and the statutory rules framed under Section 111-A of that Act contemplate that the proceedings of the Tribunal shall be wholly judicial in character. While making an inquiry, it shall, inter alia, have the powers of a Civil Court for the purpose of taking evidence on oath and of enforcing the attendance of witnesses, and it is also enjoined (Rule 20) not only to follow many of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, but also to record concisely in a judgment a finding on each of the issues framed and the reasons for such finding (Rule 19).

29. It is important to note in this connection that the principles of liability governing civil actions and criminal prosecutions based on negligence differ in two material aspects. Firstly, in a criminal case, such as one under Section 304-A or 337, Indian Penal Code, the negligence which would justify a conviction must be culpable or of gross degree and not the negligence founded on a mere error of judgment or defect of intelligence.

30. "The principle to be observed", said Lord Atkin in Andrews v. Director of Public Prosecution, (1937) 2 All. E. R. 552, "is that cases of manslaughter in driving motor cars are but instances of a general rule applicable to all charges of homicide by negligence. Simple lack of care such as will constitute civil liability is not enough. For purposes of the criminal law there are degrees of negligence, and a very high degree of negligence is required to be proved before the felony is established. Probably, of all the epithets that can be applied 'reckless' most nearly covers the case." The degree of negligence which would justify a conviction must be something to the danger of which, if one drew the accused's attention, the latter might exclaim 'I don't care'. It must be something more than a mere omission or neglect of duty, as for instance, the failure of a Municipal Corporation or a Trust to repair a road in consequence of which a person using the road got accidentally killed. Thus, a law distinguishes between negligence which originates a civil liability and the one on which a criminal prosecution can be founded. In some cases, the bounds which separate a culpable negligence from a 'civil' negligence are blurred or may even disappear altogether, but in most cases this distinction is clearly discernible. In short, in criminal cases there must be mens rea or guilty mind, i.e., rashness or guilty mind of a degree which can be described as criminal negligence; mere carelessness is not enough.

31. Secondly, the principle of avoidance of liability when there is contributory negligence by the injured person is no defence in criminal law. (See Tika Ram's case, AIR 1950 All 300). But in the absence of a statute analogous to the English statute, namely, the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945, in India, contributory negligence may be a good defence to a civil action.

32. Furthermore, the nature of the onus, the approach to and effect of the evidence in a criminal case is materially different from that in a civil action. In criminal cases, the prosecution must pursue the guilt of the accused beyond the utmost bounds of doubt, to a point of moral certainty. But in civil cases, mere preponderance of probability may be sufficient to fasten the defendant with liability. The reason is not that the Evidence Act prescribes different standards of proof in civil and criminal cases, but because under that Act the burden of proving the guilt of the accused beyond all manner of doubt always rests on the prosecution and never shifts on to the accused. This is not so in civil cases.

33. To sum up, in civil actions and criminal prosecutions arising out of the same motor accident involving bodily injury or death, the parties may be different, the issues may not be identical, the nature of the onus may vary and the effect of evidence may not be the same. It will, therefore, be contrary to all fundamental concepts of natural justice to treat the findings of the Criminal Court as binding on the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal, assuming — but not holding — that such a Tribunal is not a Court as defined in Section 3 of the Evidence Act, but partakes the character of an Arbitrator, with most of the trappings of a Court.

34. It will, therefore, be opposed to fundamental canons of justice and public policy to treat the judgments of the criminal Court binding on a Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal, trying a claim arising out of a motor accident involving injury or death. The judgment of the Criminal Court, can at the most, be used only for the purpose and to the extent indicated in Section 43 of the Evidence Act.

35. For the reasons recorded in our separate judgments, we answer the question referred to us in the following manner, and direct that this appeal will now go back to the learned Single Judge for disposal on merits in accordance with law:—

"The judgment of a Criminal Court in a prosecution arising out of a motor accident, determining the guilt or innocence of the driver of the motor vehicle concerned, is neither conclusive nor binding on the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunals, dealing with a claim petition under Section 110-C of the Motor Vehicles Act, and its findings as to the guilt or otherwise of the driver are wholly irrelevant for the purpose of the trial on merits of the claim petition before the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal. Such judgment can, however, be relevant only for the purpose and to the extent specified in Section 43 of the Evidence Act."

Costs of this reference shall be costs in the appeal.

Order accordingly.

S. B. CAPOOR AND R. S. NARULA, JJ.

Manohar Lal Ganeshi Lal and another, Plaintiffs-Appellants v. Ganeshi Ram Pohla Ram and others, Defendants-Respondents.

First Appeal No. 456 of 1958, D/- 16-9-1968, from decree of Sub-J., 1st Class, Rohtak, D/- 25-8-1958.

Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 11, 2(2), O. 23, R. 1 — Scope — Mortgagor and mortgagee — Usurious Loans Act (1918), S. 3(1) Proviso (ii) (as amended by Punjab Act, 7 of 1934) — Question of amount due from mortgagor in subsequent suit for redemption—Question already decided in previous suit inter partes—Mortgaged land not redeemed, nor mortgage foreclosed — Question cannot be reopened under S. 3 — Expression “any decree of a Court” in proviso (ii) to S. 3(1) applies to consent decree — (Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 60) — (Debt Laws — Usurious Loans Act (1918), S. 3(1) Proviso (ii) (as amended by Punjab Act 7 of 1934)).

It is only an adjudication of a res that operates as a bar on the principles of res judicata whether statutory or constructive. When it is found that there has in fact been no adjudication by a Court, the provisions of Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not bar the trial of the relevant issue. (Para 5)

In a subsequent suit for redemption of mortgaged property the question of the amount due from the plaintiff-mortgagor to the defendant-mortgagee on the mortgage in suit, which question has already been decided by a consent decree in a previous redemption suit inter partes, but the mortgaged land has not been redeemed nor the mortgage foreclosed, cannot be reopened under Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act as amended by the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act (7 of 1934). The jurisdiction of the Court to reopen or scale down the debt is expressly barred by S. 3 of Usurious Loans Act. AIR 1967 SC 591, Distinguished, AIR 1934 PC 205 Explained. Case law discussed.

(Paras 5, 7)

The expression “any decree of a Court” in proviso (ii) to sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act applies as much to a consent decree as to a decree passed in a contested action. This is in contradistinction to the provisions or principles of Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which bar the trial of only such an issue which was directly or substantially in issue in the previous litigation and on which the adjudication of a competent Court has been superimposed. (Para 5)

The invoking of the relief under the purview of sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act is subject to the second proviso to that sub-section and the word “decree” in that proviso applies as much to a consent decree as to a decree based on appraisal of evidence by the Court itself. A decree based on a compromise is in a way passed on the admission of the parties on the points in issue and has for all practical purposes the same force as a decree obtained after contest. Any relief granted to the plaintiffs in a subsequent suit in respect of the mortgage money which was payable on the date of the previous consent decree, cannot but affect the previous decree. Dalip Chand Gupta and J. V. Gupta, for Appellants; G. P. Jain with Sarvshri Satya Prakash Jain and G. C. Garg, for Respondent (No. 1 only).

R. S. NARULA, J.:— The sole question which calls for decision in this plaintiffs' Regular First Appeal against the judgment of the Court of Shri Mohan Lal Jain, Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Rohtak, dated August 25, 1958, granting the plaintiff-appellants a decree for possession of the land in dispute conditional on their depositing in the Court a sum of Rs. 6,000/- within six months of the date of the decree for redemption of the mortgaged land is — whether in a subsequent suit for redemption of mortgaged property the question of the amount due from the plaintiff-mortgagor to the defendant-mortgagee on the mortgage in suit, which question has already been decided in a previous suit inter partes, on the basis of which the mortgaged land has not been redeemed nor the mortgage foreclosed, can be reopened under Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act as amended by the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act (7 of 1934). This question has arisen in the case in hand in the following circumstances:—

The land in suit was mortgaged with possession by one Ganeshi Lal with the predecessor-in-interest of defendants Nos. 2 to 11 for Rs. 4,000/- in the year 1921. The usufruct of the land was to be adjusted against the interest amounting to Rs. 200/- which amount of interest fell due on half of the mortgage money, i.e., on Rs. 2,000/-. The remaining mortgage-money of Rs. 2,000/- was to carry interest at Re. 0/7/9 per cent per mensem. After the death of the original mortgagee, his heirs sold their mortgage rights in favour of Ghasi Ram, defendant No. 1, for a sum of Rs. 3,000/-. The plaintiff-appellants (to whom reference will be made in this judgment by their title in the trial Court as also to the other parties to this litigation) who are the heirs of Ganeshi Lal, the original mortgagor, obtained on May 9, 1955, a decree for redemption of the land in dispute on payment of Rs. 6,000/- to be deposited by them within six months of the date of that decree. The decree of the competent Civil Court, dated May 9, 1955, further provided that if the plaintiffs fail to deposit the amount within the aforesaid period of six months "the mortgage shall continue as before." It is the admitted case of both sides that the mortgage amount determined by the consent decree of the Civil Court in the previous suit was not paid by the plaintiffs within the prescribed period or indeed at any time thereafter. It is also not in dispute that the defendants took no steps to foreclose the mortgage.

It was in the abovesaid circumstances that the suit from which the present appeal has arisen was filed by the plaintiffs on August 5, 1957, claiming a decree for possession by redemption of the land in dispute without payment of any mortgage money or on payment of the mortgage money which may be fixed according to law after taking account of profits accruing from the land. The suit was resisted by Ghasi Ram defendant No. 1 alone. Proceedings against other defendants were ex parte. Defendant No. 1 admitted the mortgage as well as its terms. He, however, pleaded that the claim of the plaintiffs was barred on principles of res judicata on account of the previous adjudication by a competent Civil Court, and on account of the plaintiffs not having redeemed the land on making the requisite payment within the time allowed by the said previous decree.

Defendant pleaded that this had resulted in automatic foreclosure of the mortgage. In the alternative it was pleaded that in any case the plaintiffs could not challenge the quantum of the mortgage money which they were liable to pay, i.e., Rs. 6,000/- which had been found by the Court in the previous suit, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs could not call for accounts from the defendant. On the pleadings of the parties, the trial Court framed as many as seven issues out of which we are concerned in this appeal with issues Nos. 2 and 3 only, which were:—

"2. Whether the suit is barred by res judicata?

3. Whether the plaintiffs can challenge the amount of Rs. 6,000/- as agreed upon between the parties in the previous suit?"

2. By its judgment and decree under appeal, the trial Court found issue No. 2 against the contesting defendant and held that the suit for redemption was not barred by res judicata, but decided issue No. 3 against the plaintiffs and held that the plaintiffs could not ask for the decision of the competent Court in the previous suit though based on a compromise being reopened, as to the amount of mortgage money which the plaintiffs were liable to pay for redemption of the land in dispute. Not satisfied with the finding of the trial Court on issue No. 3, the otherwise successful plaintiffs have preferred this appeal to this Court. While admitting the appeal on December 1, 1958, Dua, J. directed on the application of the plaintiff-appellants that the sum of Rs. 6,000/- in question may be deposited by them in Court and the mortgagee-respondents may be allowed to withdraw the amount on furnishing adequate security to the satisfaction of the executing Court for restitution of the amount in question. We were informed by the learned counsel for the contesting parties that in pursuance of the abovesaid order, the plaintiffs did deposit the requisite amount in the trial Court and have in consequence thereof already obtained actual possession of the mortgaged land in full satisfaction of the decree under appeal subject to the decision of this Court.

3. Mr. Ganga Parshad Jain, the learned counsel for the contesting defendant-respondent, did not question the correctness of the finding of the trial Court on issue No. 2 and indeed frankly conceded that the subsequent suit of the plaintiffs for redemption was not barred. Parties, therefore, contested before us only about the correctness or otherwise of the finding of the trial Court on issue No. 3. Mr. Dalip Chand Gupta, the learned counsel for the plaintiff-appellants submitted that the decree in the previous suit for redemption having been passed on a compromise between the parties, the Court below was bound to ignore the same for purposes of the subsequent suit in which the whole matter must be held to be again open. What the plaintiffs actually claim is that the Court is bound to scale down the mortgage debt under Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act and the previous decree is no bar to this being done. He further contended that determination of the quantum of the mortgage money was not a res which had been adjudicated upon by the Court itself in the previous suit, and that what had in fact happened was that the trial Court had merely superimposed its seal on a mere agreement between the parties as to the quantum of the mortgage money. In addition, counsel contended that the whole decree in the previous suit must be treated as one indivisible unit and the moment the plaintiffs had not redeemed the mortgage within the time allowed by the said decree, the whole of the previous decree should be deemed to have been washed out, and that the present suit should have been tried as if no decree at all had been passed in the previous suit.

Counsel firstly referred to the judgment of the Privy Council in Raghunath Singh v. Mt. Hansraj Kunwar, AIR 1934 P.C. 205. It was held in that case that unless it could be said that a decree involved a decision to the effect that the mortgagor's right to redeem was extinguished, it cannot operate by way of res judicata so as to prevent the Courts, under Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, from trying a second redemption suit. There is no quarrel with the proposition of law laid down by the Privy Council in Raghunath Singh's case, AIR 1934 P.C. 205 (supra), and as already observed, learned counsel for the contesting defendant did not for a moment assail the proposition of law laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. No question as to the reopening of the determination of the Court in the previous suit as to the quantum of mortgage money arose in the case of Raghunath Singh, AIR 1934 P.C. 205. Reference was then made to the judgment of a learned Single Judge of the Madras High Court in K. Santamma v. K. R. Venkatarama Reddi, AIR 1935 Mad. 909, wherein it was held that with respect to the application of Order 23, Rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a suit for partition should be treated differently, and a subsequent suit for partition of the same property involved in the previous suit is not barred under Order 23, Rule 1 by the dismissal of the previous suit even though no permission to institute a fresh suit was obtained when the previous suit was dismissed on the ground of compromise, the reason being that the right to bring a suit for partition unlike other suits is a continuing right, and as soon as the defendant failed to carry out the compromise, "the parties are relegated to their rights as they existed prior to the compromise."

Though the main question decided by Madhavan Nair, J. in Keesari Santamma's case, AIR 1935 Mad. 909 (supra) is not in dispute in the appeal before us, Mr. Dalip Chand Gupta has laid great stress on the observation of the learned Judge to the effect that in case of non-carrying out of the compromise what happens is that "the parties are relegated to their rights as they existed prior to the compromise". From the abovesaid expression used by the Madras High Court in its judgment in the case of Keesari Santamma, AIR 1935 Mad. 909, counsel wants to spell out that the result of not redeeming the land in dispute by the plaintiffs in execution of or in pursuance of the decree in the previous suit is that the parties before us are also relegated to their rights as they existed prior to the compromise which would mean that the compromise as well as the decree passed thereon have to be completely ignored and that this would result in the determination of the mortgage money in the previous suit being deemed to be non-existent. We do not find any force in this contention of the learned counsel. The only aspect of the case with which the Madras High Court was concerned was as to the maintainability of the subsequent suit for partition. No question of detail such as the one involved in issue No. 3 before us was mooted before the Madras High Court.

The observation to which reference has been made by Mr. Dalip Chand Gupta was made only for the purpose of emphasising that the second suit would not be barred by the partition suit having been dismissed on the allegation that it had been adjusted. The Madras High Court held that the parties had been relegated to their rights which existed prior to the compromise and that giving effect to the said principle would result in the finding that the subsequent suit was maintainable. All that was held was that the dismissal of the previous suit in the case before the Madras Court could not operate as a bar to the plaintiffs' suit. The ratio of the judgment in Keesari Santamma's case, AIR 1935 Mad. 909, does not appear to advance the contention of Mr. Dalip Chand Gupta at all.

4. Reliance was lastly placed by Mr. Gupta on the authoritative pronouncement of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in P. Venkata Subba Rao v. V. Jagannadha Rao, (1964) 2 S.C.R. 310 = (AIR 1967 S.C. 591). The fate of the case before the Supreme Court depended upon the scope and true construction of Section 19 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938) as amended by Section 16(ii) of the Madras Agriculturists Relief (Amendment) Act (23 of 1948). Sub-section (1) of Section 19 of the 1938 Madras Act, inter alia, provided that where a Court has passed a decree before the coming into force of that Act for the repayment of a debt against an agriculturist, the Court shall, on an application of the judgment-debtor, apply the provisions of that Act to such decree and notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, amend the decree accordingly or enter satisfaction thereof as the case may be. Sub-section (2) of Section 19 makes the provisions of sub-section (1) applicable even to those cases where the decree has been passed by a Court in respect of a debt payable on the date of commencement of the Act after such commencement. Section 16 of the Amending Act of 1948 states that the amendments made by the said 1948 Act shall apply to the following sets of proceedings, namely:—

(i) all suits and proceedings instituted after the commencement of this Act;

(ii) all suits and proceedings instituted before the commencement of this Act, in which no decree or order has been passed, or in which the decree or order passed has not become final, before such commencement;

(iii) all suits and proceedings in which the decree or order passed has not been executed or satisfied in full before the commencement of this Act.

The relevant substantive provisions of the Madras Act entitle the judgment-debtors against whom decrees covered by Section 16 have been passed to apply for their being scaled down. One of the questions which arose for decision before the Supreme Court under the above provisions was whether a compromise decree passed in a suit instituted before the commencement of the Act falls within clause (ii) or clause (iii) of Section 16 of the Amending Act. The Supreme Court held:—

"There, being no distinction between decrees passed after contest and decrees passed on compromise, the words 'in which the decree or order passed has not become final' in clause (ii) of Section 16, cannot be held to refer to a compromise decree but to decrees which are final such as final decrees for foreclosure, etc., in suits on mortgages."

Their Lordships held on the facts of the case before them that it was governed by clause (iii) of Section 16 read with sub-section (2) of Section 19 of the principal Act and the judgment-debtors were, therefore, entitled to broach the question of the scaling down of the decree once again. In the portion of the judgment on which Mr. Gupta has relied, it was observed by the Supreme Court that though the conduct of the judgment-debtor in omitting to press the claim for reduction of the amount of the claim on the first occasion was significant, it did not constitute res judicata either statutory or constructive. It was in that context that the Supreme Court observed that the compromise decree was not a decision by the Court, but was the acceptance by the Court of something to which the parties had agreed, and that a compromise decree merely sets the seal of the Court on the agreement of the parties. On that basis it was held that the Court while passing the compromise decree at the earlier stage had not decided anything, and that it was only a decision by the Court which could be res judicata, whether statutory under Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure or constructive as a matter of public policy.

Their Lordships of the Supreme Court refused to look into the evidence to show that the judgment-debtor had actually paid two sums under the consent decree because no plea of estoppel by conduct had been raised or tried in that case. The contention of Mr. Gupta was that a judgment-debtor is doubtlessly not entitled to invoke the provisions of Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act (10 of 1918) as amended by Section 5 of the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act (7 of 1934), in a case where the grant of relief under that provision would affect any decree of a Court, but that the earlier consent decree cannot in the light of the observations made in the judgment of the Supreme Court in Pulavarthi Venkata Subba Rao's case, 1964-2 SCR 310=(AIR 1967 SC 591) (supra), be called a decree of a Court. In order to appreciate this argument of the learned counsel, it is necessary to take notice at this stage of the relevant part of Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act as amended by Punjab Act 7 of 1934. The relevant extract from the section is quoted below:—

"(1) Notwithstanding anything in the Usury Laws Repeal Act, 1855, where, in any suit to which this Act applies, whether heard ex parte or otherwise, the Court has reason to believe,—

(a) that the interest is excessive; and

(b) that the transaction was, as between the parties thereto, substantially unfair, the Court may exercise all or any of the following powers, namely, may,—

(i) re-open the transaction, take an account between the parties, and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any excessive interest;

(ii) notwithstanding any agreement, purporting to close previous dealings and to create a new obligation, re-open any account already taken between them and relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any excessive interest, and if anything has been paid or allowed in account in respect of such liability, order the creditor to repay any sum which it considers to be repayable in respect thereof;

(iii)	x	x	x
	x	x	x
	x	x	x

Provided that, in the exercise of these powers, the Court shall not—

(i)	x	x	x
	x	x	x
(ii) Do anything which affects any decree of a Court.
	x	x	x
	x	x	x
	x	x	x

5. A mere perusal of the above quoted provision makes it plain that the ratio of the judgment of the Supreme Court in Pulavarthi Venkata Subba Rao's case, 1964-2 SCR 310=(AIR 1967 SC 591), has no application to the matter before us. It is only an adjudication of a res that operates as a bar on the principles of res judicata whether statutory or constructive. When it is found that there has in fact been no adjudication by a Court, the provisions of Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not bar the trial of the relevant issue. In the present case, however, the appellants must fail, not because of the ordinary principles of res judicata, but because of the fact that the jurisdiction of the Court to reopen or scale down the debt is expressly barred by the very provision which the appellants seek to invoke for getting the relevant relief. What the relevant part of Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act says is that the Court shall not reopen any transaction or grant any relief under sub-section (1) of Section 3 where by doing so "any decree of a Court" is affected.

The expression "any decree of a Court" in proviso (ii) to sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act applies, in my opinion, as much to a consent decree as to a decree passed in a contested action. This is in contradistinction to the provisions or principles of Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which bar the trial of only such an issue which was directly or substantially in issue in the previous litigation and on which the adjudication of a competent Court has been superimposed. The answer to the question whether the appellants in the present case can escape the bar of the second proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 3 depends upon the answer to the simple question — "whether the grant of any relief resulting in the reduction of the sum of Rs. 6,000/- payable under the previous decree would or would not affect the previous decree." To ask that question is to answer it. An answer to the above question in the negative appears to me to be an impossibility. In the Supreme Court case the relevant provisions of the Madras Act clearly provided for the scaling down of decretal debts. There is no jurisdiction in the Civil Courts in Punjab to scale down any debt under Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act as amended by the 1934 Punjab Act, except in the circumstances mentioned in Section 3 itself.

No reference is being made by me in this connection to the various sections contained in Part IV of the 1934 Punjab Act as subsequently amended relating to proceedings before Debt Conciliation Boards as the same are not relevant for purposes of deciding this appeal. The relief available in the Civil Courts of Punjab under Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act is subject to proviso (i) and proviso (ii) to sub-section (1) of that section. This case falls squarely within proviso (ii). Nor do we find any force in the contention of Mr. Gupta to the effect that the non-payment of the mortgage money by the plaintiffs within six months of the previous decree made the decree non-existent for purposes of the second proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act. The relevant proviso does not say that it is only an executable decree the effecting of which would bar the availability of relief under the purview of sub-section (1) of that section. The effecting of any decree of a Court is prohibited by the proviso.

6. Mr. Ganga Parshad Jain, the learned counsel for the contesting defendant, referred us to a Division Bench judgment of the Oudh Chief Court in Darshan Lal v. Munnu Singh, AIR 1940 Oudh 273, wherein it has been held that the former decree operates as res judicata on the question of amount due on the mortgage and that the purchaser of the equity of redemption is entitled to redeem on payment of the amount determined by the former decree. The question whether the former decree was a consent decree or one obtained after contest did not arise in Darshan Lal's case, AIR 1940 Oudh 273 (supra). Reliance was then placed on behalf of the defendant on the judgment of a Division Bench of the Lahore High Court in Phula Singh v. Bur Chand, AIR 1917 Lah. 446. This case was really followed by the Oudh Court.

In the Lahore case it was held that the question of the amount due on the mortgage in question was res judicata by reason of the decree in the previous suit. A Full Bench of the Bombay High Court held in Ramji Bapuji v. Pandharinath Ravji, ILR 43 Bom. 334=(AIR 1918 Bom. 1) (FB), (per Scott, C. J.) that "a second redemption suit must recognise the binding effect of the previous redemption decree nisi in so far as it settles the accounts up to the date of that decree, and the duty of the Court in the second suit would be limited to the ascertainment of the amount due at the date of the second suit or decree and to give such consequential relief as the law permits." In Mt. Maina Bibi v. Chaudhri Vakil Ahmad, AIR 1925 P.C. 63 (at page 68), it was held that the question of the amount of the dower debt and that of the rate of interest which had been decided in the earlier suit could not be reopened in the second suit, and that it was only the amount subsequent to the date of the previous decree which could be gone into at the later stage. It was observed by the Privy Council that the non-fulfilment of the condition attached to the decree in the earlier suit only extinguished the right of the plaintiffs to the inheritance of, or, their rights to recover possession of the lands at some future time.

7. Mr. Ganga Parshad Jain lastly referred to the Division Bench judgment of Harries and Ganga Nath, JJ., in Ibney Hasan v. Gulkandi Lal, AIR 1936 All. 611. In that case it was held that where it is not possible for the High Court to reduce the interest without affecting a decree previously passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction, it cannot exercise the powers given by Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act. It was decided by the Allahabad High Court that the Court in exercising its powers under Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act must not do anything which affects any decree whether such decree be inter partes or not. Once the distinction pointed out by the Allahabad High Court is recognised, it becomes clear that the law laid down by the Supreme Court in connection with the application of the principles of res judicata is not at all relevant for determining the question of application of the second proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act. Relief under the purview of sub-section (1) of Section 3 cannot be granted even in a case where some decree not inter partes is likely to be affected. A consent decree which is inter partes cannot certainly be placed at any lower pedestal than a decree which is not even inter partes. As already stated it is not necessarily an adjudication of the Court itself in a contested action which creates the bar under the second proviso. It is the possibility of affecting any decree of any competent Court which creates the relevant bar.

We are, therefore, unable to find any fault with the ultimate decision of the trial Court on issue No. 3. It is unnecessary to deal with the reasoning on which the trial Court based its finding on that issue. We would, therefore, hold that the invoking of the relief under the purview of sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act is subject to the second proviso to that sub-section and that the word "decree" in that proviso applies as much to a consent decree as to a decree based on appraisal of evidence by the Court itself. A decree based on a compromise is in a way passed on the admission of the parties on the points in issue and has for all practical purposes the same force as a decree obtained after contest. In the circumstances of this case any relief granted to the appellants in respect of the mortgage money which was payable on the date of the previous consent decree, cannot but affect the said previous decree.

8. No other point having been argued before us in this case, the appeal of the plaintiffs fails and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

9. S. B. CAPOOR, J: I agree.
Appeal dismissed.

FULL BENCH

D. K. MAHAJAN, SHAMSHER
BAHADUR AND R. S. NARULA, JJ.

Kanianwali Co-operative Farming Society at Kanianwali through its Secretary Kanwal Krishan and others, Petitioners v. State of Punjab through the Secy. to the Punjab Govt. in the Rev. Dept. Civil Secretariat, Chandigarh and others, Respondents.

Civil Writ No. 621 of 1968, D/- 30-4-1969.

(A) Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act (10 of 1953) as amended by Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment and Validation) Act (14 of 1962), S. 19-B — Section has retrospective effect and operates from the date it was enacted — 1967 Lah. LT 155 and 1969 Pun LJ 1, Overruled.

Per Majority (Mahajan J. contra). The retrospective amendment of S. 19-B with effect from July 10, 1958, makes the provisions of that section subject to S. 10-A of the Act right from the first day when S. 19-B was enacted;

At no time was Section 19-B independent of and not subject to the provisions of Section 10-A;

The expression "this Act" in S. 19-B (unamended as well as amended) has reference to the principal Act of 1953, and not to any subsequent amending legislation. (Para 44)

The controversy about the decision of 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331 being correct or not is wholly irrelevant in the changed legislative field because of the unamended Section 19-B being deemed to have never existed and the amended S. 19-B being treated as the only section which came into force and continues to apply to the category of acquisitions mentioned therein. (Para 44)

FM/FM/C439/69/RGD/P

The law laid down in Bhagat Gobind Singh's case, AIR 1963 Punj. 319, as well as in the State of Punjab v. Shamsher Singh, 1966-68 Pun. L. R. 41 and also in the Letters Patent judgment in the State of Punjab v. Bhalle Ram, 1963 Pun. L. J. 65, is correct and unexceptionable.

(Para 44)

The observations in the judgment of the Single Judge in Gurcharan Singh v. State of Punjab, 1967 Lah. L. T. 155, which go contrary to the decision of the earlier Division Bench in the case of the State of Punjab v. Bhalle Ram, 1963 Pun. L. J. 65, were not quite correct. For the same reason decision in Smt. Atma Devi v. State of Punjab, 1969 Pun LJ 1 on the point now in issue (which was based on the earlier Single Bench judgment in case of Gurcharan Singh, 1967 Lah LT 155) was also not correct.

(Para 44)

Any land which is once included in the surplus area of a big land-owner never ceases to be surplus and is never taken out of the pale of the area which is liable to be utilised under Section 10-A (a) except in the cases of acquisition by the State or acquisition by inheritance referred to in the Act.

(Para 44)

The purpose of enacting Section 19-B was to take over the surplus area of those who became big land-owners after April 15, 1953, by acquiring more lands from other land-owners (otherwise than by inheritance subject to Section 10-B) and not to reduce the surplus area of those who were big land-owners on April 15, 1953.

(Para 44)

Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331 is overruled not only by subsequent amendment of the Act but also by 1963 Pun. L. J. 65.

(Para 32)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble — Interpretation of Statutes — Harmonious construction.

Per Shamsher Bahadur, J.:— Words in a statute have to be given their plain meaning and every effort has to be made by Courts to give a harmonious construction to the various provisions even if some seeming contradiction is involved. If a workable construction could be evolved by retaining each word in the relevant provision, such a construction has to be preferred to the one which would involve the deletion of some of its clauses or the re-writing of its provisions. Any construction of a statute which defeats its object is neither permissible nor legitimate.

D. S. Nehra with Mr. B. S. Bajwa, for Petitioners; A. S. Sarhadi, Senior Advocate with N. S. Bhatia, for Advocate General, Punjab, for Respondents.

MAHAJAN J.:— This Full Bench has been constituted in order to resolve the conflict that has arisen in this Court, as to whether the provisions of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment and Validation) Act, 1962 (Act No. 14 of 1962) are retrospective or prospective? One set of decisions has given retrospectivity to all the provisions of this Act including Section 19-B; whereas the other set of decisions has merely given Section 19-B, as amended by this Act, a prospective effect.

2. In Bhalle Ram v. State of Punjab, 1962-64 Pun LR 331, it was decided by me that transfers made before the 30th of July, 1958, of the surplus area by a land-owner cannot be ignored vis-à-vis the transferee; and such transfer has to be taken into consideration, so far as the transferee is concerned, to find out whether the land with the transferee is in excess of the permissible area after taking into consideration the land already held by him. In other words, after adding the land obtained by the transfer to the land already held by the transferee, it has to be determined under Section 19-B, whether there is any surplus land in the hands of the transferee.

3. In the wake of Bhalle Ram's decision, 1962-64 Pun LR 331 the Legislature stepped in and enacted the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment and Validation) Act, 1962 (Act No. 14 of 1962). The Letters Patent Bench reversed Bhalle Ram's decision 1962-64 Pun LR 331 in view of the amendment. The decision of the Letters Patent Bench is reported as State of Punjab v. Bhalle Ram 1963 P. L. J. 65. This decision of the Letters Patent Bench did not take into consideration the provisions of Sec. 1(2) of Act No. 14 of 1962, according to which Section 19-B, as amended, was to take effect from the 30th of July, 1958. It was also not urged before the Letters Patent Bench that Bhalle Ram's decision 1962-64 Pun LR 331 could not be reversed because Sec. 19-B was not retrospective. In short, the question of retrospectivity of S. 19-B was not considered by the Letters Patent Bench. The decisions, which are in line with the decision of the Letters Patent Bench in Bhalle Ram's case, 1963 Pun LJ 65 are:—

(1) Bhagat Gobind Singh v. Punjab State, 1963-65 PLR 105 = 1963 Cur LJ 22 = (AIR 1963 Punj 319);

(2) State of Punjab v. Shamsheer Singh, 1966-68 Pun LR 41;

(3) Hans Raj v. State of Punjab, 1967 Cur LJ 804 (P & H).

4. None of these decisions notices Section 1 (2) of Act 14 of 1962, which brought into operation Section 19-B, as amended, with effect from the 30th of July, 1958.

5. The matter again cropped up in Gurcharan Singh v. State of Punjab, 1967 Lah LT 155; and in that case, I came to the conclusion that the position, as prevailed when Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun LR 331 was decided, continued to prevail up to the 30th of July, 1958, as was clear from Section 1 (2) of Act No. 14 of 1962, read with Section 6 of that Act. This view found favour with Narula, J. in Smt. Atma Devi v. State of Punjab, 1969 Pun LJ 1. The Letters Patent Bench decision as well as the decision in Bhagat Gobind Singh's case, 1963-65 Pun LR 105 = (AIR 1963 Punj 319) were brought to the notice of the learned Judge; and the learned Judge was of the view that in spite of the Letters Patent Bench decision and Bhagat Gobind Singh's decision, 1963-65 Pun LR 105 = (AIR 1963 Punj 319) the rule in Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun LR 331 still held the field, as held by me in Gurcharan Singh's case, 1967 Lah LT 155.

6. Therefore, it is clear from what has been stated above that the short controversy that we are called upon to resolve is, whether the amendment of Sec. 19-B by Act No. 14 of 1962, operates from the 30th of July, 1958, or it has retrospective effect and would operate from the commencement of the parent Act, that is, Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act, 1953 (Act No. 10 of 1953)?

7. The previous history of the legislation along with its relevant amendments was noticed by me in detail in Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun LR 331; and for facility of reference, I merely reproduce the relevant part of that decision:—

".....In order to appreciate the contention of the learned counsel for the parties, it is essential to go through from the very start into the relevant provisions of the various Acts that have held the field from time to time. The first Act that was enacted in this behalf is the Punjab Tenants (Security of Tenures) Act, 1950 (Act No. 22 of 1950) which came into force on the 6th November, 1950. The permissible area in this Act was kept at 100 standard acres and the provisions as to transfers are dealt with in Sections 10, 11 and 12 and are in these terms:—

'10. Effect of Transfer:— Subject to the provisions of Sections 11 and 12, and save in the case of lands acquired under any law for the time being in force, every transfer or other disposition of land, whether by act of parties or by operation of law or by or in execution of a decree, unless duly completed or deemed to have been completed before the 1st May, 1950, shall be void and unenforceable in so far as it tends to reduce or has the effect of reducing the minimum period of tenancy hereinafter specified.

11. Saving of Bona fide sale:— Nothing contained in Section 10 shall apply to a sale made, or intended to be made, in good faith and any tenant of the land which is the subject matter of such sale shall, unless the unexpired period of his tenancy fixed by or under the provisions of this Act is accepted by the vendee, be liable to ejectment under the provisions of the Punjab Tenancy Act, 1887 (16 of 1887), as if he were a tenant from year to year:

Provided that, where the tenant is not accepted by the vendee, the tenant shall, subject to the rights of other pre-emptors as provided in the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913, be entitled to pre-empt the sale in the manner prescribed therein, and Section 15 of the said Act shall be deemed to be amended accordingly.

This Act was amended by the Punjab Tenants (Security of Tenures) Amendment Act, 1951 (President's Act 5 of 1951). So far as the present controversy is concerned, no change was made in the 1950 Act by this amendment. The 1950 Act was repealed by the Act and the Act came into force on the 15th April, 1953. S. 2 is the definition section and it is only necessary to notice the definitions of the phrases 'land-owners', 'permissible area', 'reserved area', 'surplus area'; and these definitions are as under:—

'2. In this Act, unless the context otherwise require (1) 'land-owner' means a person defined as such in the Punjab Land Revenue Act, 1887 (Act 17 of 1887), and shall include an 'allottee' and 'lessee' as defined in Cls. (b) and (c) respectively, of Section 2 of the East Punjab Displaced Persons (Land Resettlement) Act, 1949 (Act 36 of 1949), hereinafter referred to as the Resettlement Act.'

Explanation:— In respect of land mortgaged with possession, the mortgagee shall be deemed to be the land-owner.

(The definition of the 'land-owner' in the Punjab Land Revenue Act is in these terms:—

'land-owner' does not include a tenant or an assignee of land revenue, but does include a person to whom a holding has been transferred, or an estate or holding has been let in farm, under this Act for the recovery of an arrear of land-revenue or of a sum recoverable as such an arrear and every other person not hereinbefore in this clause mentioned who is in possession of an estate or any share or portion thereof, or in the enjoyment of any part of the profits of an estate.)

(2) * * * * *

(3) 'Permissible area' in relation to a land-owner or a tenant means thirty standard acres and where such thirty standard acres on being converted into ordinary acres exceed sixty acres, such sixty acres;

Provided that—

(i) no area under an orchard at the commencement of this Act, shall be taken into account in computing the permissible area;

(ii) * * * * *

(4) 'Reserved area' means the area lawfully reserved under the Punjab Tenants (Security of Tenures) Act, 1950 (Act 22 of 1950), as amended by President's Act of 1951 hereinafter referred to as the '1950 Act' or under this Act.

(5) * * * * *

(5-a) 'Surplus area', means the area other than the reserved area, and, where, no area has been reserved, the area in excess of the permissible area selected as prescribed; but it will not include a tenant's permissible area:

Provided that it will include the reserve area, or part thereof, where such area or part has not been brought under self-cultivation within six months of reserving the same or getting possession thereof after ejecting a tenant from it, whichever is later, or if the land-owner admits a new tenant, within three years of the expiry of the said six months.'

The other provisions which require notice in connection with the present controversy are Sections 6, 10-A and 16 and are in these terms:—

'6. For the purposes of determining under this Act the area owned by a land-owner, all transfers of land except bona fide sales or mortgages with possession, or transfers resulting from inheritance made after the 15th August, 1947 and before the commencement of this Act, shall be ignored.

10-A(a) The State Government or any officer empowered by it in this behalf, shall be competent to utilize any surplus area for the resettlement of tenants ejected, or to be ejected, under Cl. (i) of sub-section (1) of S. 9.

(b) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, no transfer or other disposition of land which is comprised in a surplus area at the commencement of this Act, shall affect the utilization thereof in Cl. (a).

Explanation:— Such utilization of any surplus area will not affect the right of the land-owner to receive rent from the tenant so settled.

16.— Save in the case of land acquired by the State Government under any law for the time being in force, or by an heir by inheritance, no transfer or other disposition of land effected after the 1st February, 1955 shall affect the rights of the tenant thereon under this Act.'

The Act was again amended by the Punjab Security of Tenures (Amendment) Act 57 of 1953, but so far as the provisions concerning the present controversy are concerned no change was made. The next amendment of the Act was made by the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment) Act, 1955 (Act No. 11 of 1955). Sub-section (3) of S. 2 was replaced by the following sub-section:—

'(3) 'Permissible area' in relation to a land-owner or a tenant, means thirty standard acres and where such thirty standard acres on being converted into ordinary acres exceed sixty acres, such sixty acres:

Provided that:—

(i) no area under an orchard at the commencement of this Act, shall be taken into account in computing the permissible area;

(ii) for a displaced person—

(a) who has been allotted land in excess of fifty standard acres, the permissible area shall be fifty standard acres or one hundred ordinary acres, as the case may be,

(b) who has been allotted land in excess of thirty standard acres but less than fifty standard acres, the permissible area shall be equal to his allotted area,

(c) who has been allotted land less than thirty standard acres, the permissible area shall be thirty standard acres, including any other land or part thereof, if any, that he owns in addition, and so also sub-section 5 (a) of S. 2 as under:—

'(5-a) 'Surplus Area' means the area other than the reserved area, and, where no area has been reserved, the area in excess of the permissible area selected as prescribed; but it will not include a tenant's permissible area:

Provided that it will include the reserved area, or part thereof, where such area or part has not been brought under self-cultivation within six months of reserving the same or getting possession thereof after ejecting a tenant from it, whichever, is later, or if the land-owner admits a new tenant, within three years of the expiry of the said six months.'

Section 16 was also substituted by the following section:—

"16.—Save in the case of land acquired by the State Government under any law for the time being in force, or by an heir by inheritance, no transfer or other disposition of land effected 'after the 1st February, 1955, shall affect the rights of the tenant thereon under this Act'."

8. The next amendment of the Act came into force in the year 1957 by the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment) Act, 1957, (Punjab Act No. 46 of 1957). Certain changes were made in Section 2 (5-a) by section of the amending Act with the result that Section 2 (5-a) after the amendment stands thus:—

'2 (5-a) 'Surplus area' means the area other than the reserved area, and, where no area has been reserved, the area in excess of the permissible area selected under Section 5-B or the area which is deemed to be surplus area under sub-section (1) of S. 5-C, but it will not include a tenant's permissible area:

Provided that it will include the reserved area, or part thereof, where such area or part has not been brought under self-cultivation within six months of reserving the same or getting possession thereof after ejecting a tenant from it, whichever is later, or if the land-owner admits a new tenant, within three years of the expiry of the said six months.'

9. The last amendment is by the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment) Act, 1959 (Punjab Act No. 4 of 1959). Section 10-A was amended by Section 2 of the amending Act and new Sections 19-A and 19-B were inserted. The amended Section 10-A and Ss. 19-A and 19-B are in these terms:—

'10-A. (a) The State Government or any officer empowered by it in this behalf, shall be competent to utilise any surplus area for the resettlement of tenants ejected, or to be ejected under Cl. (i) of sub-section (1) of S. 9.

(b) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, and save in the case of land acquired by the State Government under any law for the time being in force or by an heir by inheritance no transfer or other disposition of land which is comprised in a surplus area at the commencement of this Act, shall affect the utilization thereof in Cl. (a).

Explanation:— Such utilization of any surplus area will not affect the right of the land owner to receive rent from the tenant so settled.

19-A.(1) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any law, custom, usage, contract or agreement from and after the commencement of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment) Ordinance, 1958, no person whether, as land-owner, or tenant, shall acquire or possess by transfer, exchange, lease, agreement or settlement any land, which with or without the land already owned or held by him, shall in the aggregate exceed the permissible area:

Provided that nothing in this section shall apply to lands belonging to registered co-operative societies formed for purposes of co-operative farming, if the land owned by an individual member of the society does not exceed the permissible area.

(2) Any transfer, exchange, lease, agreement or settlement made in contravention of the provisions of sub-section (1) shall be null and void.

'19-B(1) If, after the commencement of this Act, any person whether as land-owner or tenant, acquires by inheritance or bequest or gift from a person to whom he is an heir any land or if after the commencement of this Act and before the 30th July, 1958, any person has acquired by transfer, exchange, lease, agreement or settlement any land, which, with or without the lands already owned or held by him, exceeds in the aggregate the permissible area, then he shall, within the period prescribed, furnish to the Collector, a return in the prescribed form and manner giving the particulars of all lands and selecting the land not exceeding in the aggregate the permissible area which he desires to retain and if the land of such person is situated in more than one patwar circle, he shall also furnish a declaration required by Section 5-A.

(2) If he fails to furnish the return and select his land within the prescribed period, then the Collector may, in respect of him, obtain the information required to be shown in the return through such agency as he may deem fit.

(3) If such person fails to furnish the declaration, the provisions of Section 5-C shall apply.

(4) The excess land of such person shall be at the disposal of the State Government for utilization as surplus area under Cl. (a) of Section 10-A or for such other purposes as the State Government may by notification direct.'

It may be mentioned that this Act was enacted in pursuance of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment) Ordinance, 1958 (Punjab Ordinance No. 6 of 1958) which was repealed by the Amending Act No. 4 of 1959.

It is in the light of these provisions relating to sales that the respective arguments of the parties have to be examined

10. As already said, in the wake of Bhalle Ram's decision, 1962-64 Pun LR

331, the Legislature stepped in and enacted the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment and Validation) Act (No. 14 of 1962). Section 1 (2) is as follows:—

"1(2):— Clause (a) of S. 2, S. 4, S. 5, S. 7 and S. 10 shall be deemed to have come into force on the 15th day of April, 1953, Cl. (b) of Section 2 and S. 6 shall be deemed to have come into force on the 30th day of July, 1958, and the remaining provisions of this Act shall come into force at once."

Sections 2 (5-a), 10-A and 19-B were amended and some other new sections were added. The amended sections along with the relevant new provisions are set out below:—

(c) For the purpose of determining the surplus area of any person under this section, any judgment, decree or order of a Court or other authority obtained after the commencement of this Act and having the effect of diminishing the area of such person which could have been declared as surplus area shall be ignored.

(b) that for evaluating the land of any person at any time under this Act, the land owned by him immediately before the commencement of this Act, or the land acquired by him after such commencement by inheritance or by bequest or gift from a person to whom he is an heir, shall always be evaluated for converting into standard acres as if the evaluation was being made on the date of such commencement, and that the land acquired by him after such commencement in any other manner shall always be evaluated for converting into standard acres as if the evaluation was being made on the date of such acquisition."

Section 10 of Act No. XIV of 1962 provided that "Section 10-A of the Principal Act, as amended by this Act, and Clause (5-a) of Section 2 of the Principal Act shall always be deemed to have been inserted in the Principal Act on the 15th day of April, 1953."

12. Thus the position, that emerges after the amendment of the Parent Act (Act No. X of 1953) by the Amending and Validation Act (Act No. XIV of 1962) along with the amendments, that have been made from time to time between the dates of the passing of these two Acts, is as follows:

13. Whatever area is over and above the reserved area or the permissible area of a land owner, as on 15th of April, 1953, will be the surplus area, provided on that area, there are no tenants within their permissible area. In other words if on the surplus land, there are tenants and their holdings do not exceed the tenant's permissible area, as defined in Section 2 (3) of the Parent Act, the so-called surplus area will not be surplus. It will only be surplus if, on the relevant date, it is in excess of the reserved or permissible area of the owner and there are no tenants on the same up to the extent of the permissible area of the tenants. According to Section 10-A, the State Government or any officer empowered by it in this behalf could utilize the surplus area for the resettlement of ejected tenants or tenants that might be ejected under Section 9 (1) (i) of the Act.

Sub-section (b) of Section 10-A provides as follows:—

"10-A (b) — Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force and save in the case of land acquired by the State Government under any law for the time being in force or by an heir by inheritance no transfer or other disposition of land which is comprised in surplus area at the commencement of this Act, shall affect the utilization thereof in clause (a).

EXPLANATION:— Such utilization of any surplus area will not affect the right of the land-owner to receive rent from the tenant so settled."

All transfers and dispositions of land comprised in the surplus area, as on 15th of April, 1953, will not affect its utilization for resettlement of tenants ejected under Section 9(1)(i). If the matter stood here, there would be no difficulty.

But the amended Section 19-B provides that—

"Subject to the provisions of Section 10-A if after the commencement of this Act, any person, whether as land-owner or tenant, acquires by inheritance or by bequest or gift from a person to whom he is an heir, any land, or if after the commencement of this Act and before the 30th July, 1958, any person has acquired by transfer, exchange, lease, agreement or settlement any land, or if, after such commencement, any person acquires in any other manner any land, which, with or without the lands already owned or held by him, exceeds in the aggregate the permissible area, then he shall, within the period prescribed, furnish to the Collector, a return in the prescribed form x x x x giving the particulars of all lands and selecting the land not exceeding in the aggregate the permissible area which he desires to retain x x x"

Sub-section (4) provides that—

"The excess land of such person shall be at the disposal of the State Government for utilization as surplus area under clause (a) of Section 10-A x x x x".

14. It is common ground that after the coming into force of Section 19-B, that is, with effect from the 30th of July, 1958, a transferee of a surplus area cannot change its character merely because he was holding land far below his reserved area or permissible area. It is also not disputed that the transfer of surplus area is not void unless the area obtained by transfer coupled with the area already held in the hands of the transferee exceeds the reserved area or the permissible area. The only question, which has been debated and which requires to be settled is, what is the position qua the surplus land transferred between the 15th of April, 1953, and the 30th of July, 1958, in the hands of a transferee when the land transferred and the land already held by the transferee do not exceed the reserved area or the permissible area in the hands of the transferee. According to Bhalle Ram's decision, 1962-64 Pun. L. R.

331, the surplus land, after transfer in the hands of transferee, will cease to be surplus unless it is in excess of the reserved area or permissible area in the hands of the transferee. It is also plain that the Amending and Validation Act No. XIV of 1962 was enacted to do away with the import of that decision. The only question is, whether the Legislature did away with the same with effect from the 15th of April, 1953 or the 30th of July, 1958. The very fact, that the amended Section 19-B was made operative from the 30th of July, 1958, shows that the Legislature never intended to make this provision retrospective. It was specifically held in Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331, that Section 19-B overrides Section 10-A because both the provisions could not stand together. What was surplus under Section 10-A could cease to be surplus under Section 19-B by reason of transfer of land, the validity of which was not impaired by law. The transfers were not to affect the utilization of the surplus. But by reason of Section 19-B, that surplus, on transfer, would become the reserved or permissible area of the transferee and would thus cease to be the surplus area because, otherwise, a curious result will follow, namely, that the same land, though the surplus area of the transferor, would not be the surplus area of the transferee after a transfer, inasmuch as, the same is not rendered void by any provisions of the Act. What I have said above finds further support from the definition of the surplus area. Only that area is surplus, which is in excess of the reserved or permissible area and vis-a-vis the transferee, the surplus of the transferor may cease to be surplus at all. If the intention of the Legislature was to take away the benefit conferred on the transferees by Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331, retrospectively, Section 19-B would have been given effect like Sections 10-A and 2(5-a) with effect from the 15th of April, 1953. But that was not done and, in my opinion, advisedly. The Legislature did not want to unsettle the settled transactions.

15. Mr. A. S. Sarhiadi, learned counsel for the State, drew our attention to the objects and reasons leading to the enactment of Act XIV of 1962. No reference can be made to the Objects and Reasons of the enactment because the rule of construction is that the intention of the Legislature has to be gathered from the plain and express language of the statute. It is only, where the language is not plain or express that aid may be derived from the Objects and Reasons for its interpretation. The decision in Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331, was before the Legislature when it enacted Act No. XIV of 1962, and advisedly made Section 19-B operative from the 30th of July, 1958, thus indicating that they did not want to take away the effect of that decision prior to the 30th of July, 1958. There seems to be no escape from this conclusion. Reference may also be made to the observations of the Supreme Court in Arjan Singh v. State of Punjab, 1969 Cur. L. J. 1 (SC). Hegde, J., who spoke for the Court, observed:—

“* * It is a well settled rule of law that no provision in a statute should be given retrospective effect unless the legislature by express terms or by necessary implication has made it retrospective and that where a provision is made retrospective, care should be taken not to extend its retrospective effect beyond what was intended.”

16. No explanation has been offered by the learned counsel for the State, why the Legislature made the amended Section 19-B operative with effect from the 30th of July, 1958.

17. After giving the matter my careful consideration, it appears to me that transfers of land, which is surplus in the hands of an owner, are not only valid; but the surplus area will cease to be surplus in the hands of the transferee if in the aggregate the area already held by the transferee and the area acquired by him on transfer does not exceed his permissible or reserved area and whatever is in excess of his permissible and reserved area will be the surplus area. This will only hold good vis-a-vis transfers effected up to the 30th of July, 1958. All transfers thereafter would not have this result because the transfer being subject to Section 10-A will not be taken into account under Section 19-B. This section after amendment opens with the phrase—

“Subject to the provisions of Section 10-A * * *”

18. I now proceed to state the facts of the present petition: Hakam Singh, respondent No. 5, owned 348 Acres 7 Kanals, 10 Marlas of land. This land was under the cultivation of petitioners Nos. 2 to 7, Kartar Singh and others. On the 14th of May, 1955, Hakam Singh gifted the land in dispute to petitioners Nos. 2 to 7. Thereafter, mutations were entered and sanctioned. As Hakam Singh had not reserved his area, proceedings were taken for declaration of the surplus area. On the 5th of April, 1966, the Revenue Assistant, as Collector, declared 288 Acres 7 Kanals 10 Marlas as surplus leaving an area of 60 acres as the permissible area under Section 5-B. Against this decision, an appeal was taken to the Commissioner and it was contended that petitioners Nos. 2 to 7 were the tenants prior to the 15th of April, 1953; and as such, any land which is over and above the reserved or permissible area and on which tenants are settled would not be surplus area in view of the definition of 'surplus area' in Section 2(5-a). It was also urged that the transfer being prior to the 30th of July, 1958, and the area in the hands of the transferee including the lands held by them not being in excess of their reserved or permissible area, the area in dispute could not be declared as 'surplus area'. On the 6th of March, 1967, the Commissioner rejected the appeal. The Commissioner held that the donees petitioners Nos. 2 to 7 were not tenants though they were in cultivating possession as the sons of the donor. The contention, that the area ceased to be reserved area by reason of the transfers, was also negatived. The case was remanded for the decision of certain matters which had not been decided. A revision was preferred against this order to the Financial Commissioner; but with no effect. This led to the present petition under Article 226 of the Constitution of India; and the only contention that has been urged before us, is that the transfers being to persons not holding land in excess of the reserved or permissible area, the surplus land in their hands would cease to be surplus because in their hands it is within the reserved or the permissible area.

19. In view of my decision, that Section 19-B is not retrospective and Bhalle Ram's decision, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331, holds the field with regard to the transfers effected prior to the 30th of July, 1958, this petition must succeed. The petition is accordingly allowed; and the order of the Financial Commissioner, the Commissioner and the Collector declaring the land in dispute to be surplus area is quashed. But in the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs.

20. SHAMSHER BAHADUR, J.:—The provisions of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act, 1953, as it stood amended by the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment & Validation) Act, 1962, which have been set out in the judgment of my learned brother, Mahajan J., are designed, as stated in the preamble itself "to provide for the security of land tenure and other incidental matters." Besides providing for security of land tenure, the scheme of the legislation makes it clear that tenants from reserved or permissible areas are liable to ejection. The small landowner thus is as much a subject of protection as a tenant of a landowner whose holdings exceed the permissible area. The concept of 'permissible area' is applicable both to landlords and tenants. Tenants, who are liable to be evicted or have in fact been ejected under Section 9, are to be resettled and indeed, it is provided in Section 9-A that even a tenant who is liable to be ejected under clause (i) of sub-section (1) of Section 9 shall not be dispossessed of his tenancy unless he is accommodated on a surplus area. The concept of 'surplus area' is the kernel of the legislation, and the Legislature obviously intended the creation of such areas for the purpose of resettlement of tenants who are liable to be ejected or in fact have been ejected.

21. It is in furtherance of this central idea of resettlement of tenants that Section 10-A has been enacted. I need not advert again to clauses (a), (b) and (c) of this section, the last one of which was inserted by the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment and Validation) Act, Punjab Act 14 of 1962 (also referred to as the Amending Act 14 of 1962). Clause (c) of Section 10-A says that any judgment, decree or order of a court or other authority, obtained by a person and having the effect of diminishing the holding of the area of such person which could have been declared surplus, shall be ignored. The various provisions introduced by Amending Act 14 of 1962 were given retroactive operation by the Act and as it has been contended strenuously that the judgments which have either reversed the decision in Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331, or have not followed it, have omitted to take account of this provision, it is well to set it out again. Sub-section (2) of Section 1 of the Amending Act says that—

"Clause (a) of Section 2, Section 4, Section 5, Section 7 and Section 10 shall be deemed to have come into force on the 15th day of April, 1953,..... and Section 6 shall be deemed to have come into force on 30th day of July, 1958,.....".

We are not concerned with clause (a) of Section 2, which relates to the explanation added in regard to lands allotted to displaced persons. Section 4 of the Amending Act is now clause (c) of Section 10-A, to which reference has been made. Section 5 of the Amending Act contains the newly inserted Section 10-B, which says that in case where succession has opened after the surplus area or any part thereof has been utilised under clause (a) of Section 10-A, the saving provision in favour of an heir by inheritance under clause (b) of Section 10-A shall have no effect in respect of the area which has actually been utilised; and lastly, Section 10 which is to take effect from 15th April, 1953, is the overall deeming provision which is in these terms:—

"Section 10-A of the principal Act, as amended by this Act, and clause (5-a) of Section 2 of the principal Act, shall always be deemed to have been inserted in the principal Act on the 15th day of April, 1953."

22. Could there be a clearer intention of the Legislature that the provision for utilisation introduced in clause (c) of Section 10-A was positively to take effect from the 15th day of April, 1953? In other words, any judgment, decree or order of a Court or other authority tending to scale down the possible surplus area of a landowner shall be ignored right back from 15th of April, 1953. It is well to emphasise again that sub-section (5-a) of Section 2 inserted by Punjab Act No. 11 of 1955, defining the 'surplus area', was also deemed to have taken effect from 15th April, 1953. Now, the closing words inserted by Punjab Act 14 of 1962 in this sub-section (5-a) which defines 'surplus area' are to this effect:—

".....and includes the area in excess of the permissible area selected under Section 19-B,....."

The area selected as permissible area under Section 19-B, inserted by Punjab Act 4 of 1959 and amended by Act 14 of 1962, has not been made sacrosanct and is made expressly subject to the provisions of Section 10-A, which includes clause (c).

23. The matter does not end here. Even sub-section (4) of Section 19-B (Section 6 of the Amending Act 14 of 1962) which no doubt under sub-section (2) of Section 1 of the Amending Act 14 of 1962, has to take effect from 30th July, 1958, says that:—

"The excess land of such person shall be at the disposal of the State Government for utilisation as surplus area under clause (a) of Section 10-A or for such other purpose as the State Government may by notification direct."

24. This brings us to the consideration whether Section 19-B can operate as an integral piece of legislation independently of Section 10-A. Sub-section (2) of Section 1 of the Amending Act 14 of 1962 says that Section 6 "shall be deemed to have come into force on the 30th day of July, 1958". As amended by Act 14 of 1962, Section 19-B says that:—

"..... if after the commencement of this Act, any person, whether as landowner or tenant, acquires by inheritance or by bequest or gift from a person to whom he is an heir any land, or if after the commencement of this Act and before the 30th July, 1958, any person has acquired by transfer, exchange, lease, agreement or settlement any land.....which, with or without the lands already owned or held by him, exceeds in the aggregate the permissible area, then he shall,..... furnish to the Collector, a return in the prescribed form and manner giving the particulars of all lands and selecting the land not exceeding in the aggregate the permissible area which he desires to retain"

25. It is sought to be argued that transfers effected before 30th July, 1958, even though having the effect of diminishing the surplus area shall be taken into reckoning and not ignored. The section is preceded by the non obstante clause "subject to the provisions of Sec. 10-A" whose plain meaning is that the overriding authority of the State Government to utilise the land as surplus will remain unaffected. What is saved by Sec. 19-B read with sub-section (2) of Section 1 of the Amending Act 14 of 1962 is the actual transfer. Words in a statute have to be given their plain meaning and every effort has to be made by Courts to give a harmonious construction to the various provisions even if some seeming contradiction is involved. If a workable construction could be evolved by retaining each word in the relevant provision, such a construction has to be preferred to the one which would involve the deletion of some of its clauses or the re-writing of its provisions. The matter seems to me to be obvious as the Amending legislation (Act 14 of 1962) which gives retroactive operation to Section 10-A was enacted to meet the situation which had been created by Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331. The Letters Patent Bench of Dulat and Grover JJ. in 1963 Pun. L. J. 65, while overruling the decision of Mahajan J., made this observation towards the end:—

"It is clear now from the amendments that the surplus area in connection with any landowner is to be determined on the basis of that landowner's holding as it existed on the 15th April, 1953, and the land, which is in fact surplus at that time, will remain surplus irrespective of any transfer made by the landowner subsequently."

What warrant is there to say that the Letters Patent Bench had not considered the effect of sub-section (2) of Section 1 of the Amending Act 14 of 1962 which said that while the amended Sec. 10-A would come into force from 15th April, 1953, the amended Section 19-B would come into force on 30th July, 1958? It seems to me that the compulsive obligation behind Sections 4 and 10 of the Act 14 of 1962 being made operative with effect from 15th April, 1953, renders the position taken on behalf of the petitioners utterly untenable. The amended Section 10-A is expressly stated to be deemed "to have been inserted in the principal Act on the 15th day of April, 1953".

26. In 1963-65 Pun. L. R. 105=(AIR 1963 Punj. 319), which is a judgment of Mehar Singh, J. (as the Hon'ble the Chief Justice then was) and myself, it is stated at page 124 that:—

"In Section 19-B, before its amendment by Punjab Act 14 of 1962, provision was made for furnishing of declaration under Section 5-A by a person acquiring land so as to determine his surplus area and in (1962) 64 Pun. L. R. 331, Mahajan J. held that according to Section 19-B the area acquired by the transferees including the area held by them is to be taken into account for the purpose of finding the surplus area in their hands... In the wake of this decision Section 19-B has been amended by Punjab Act 14 of 1962 by adding in the beginning of sub-section (1) of it these words — 'subject to the provisions of Section 10-A' which means that the position has now been clarified that land in the hands of a transferee does not cease to be available for utilisation under Section 10-A."

Section 19-B having been specifically made subject to the provisions of Section 10-A, cannot protect a Court decree or order which has been obtained after the 15th April, 1953, although it had been passed before the 30th of July, 1958 in so far as the utilisation of the land as surplus area is concerned. Any construction of a statute which defeats its object is neither permissible nor legitimate.

27. In another Bench decision in Hans Raj v. State of Punjab, 1967 Cur. L. J. (P. & H.) 804, I said, and Narula J. concurred with me that a judgment, decree or order of a court obtained after 15th April, 1953, would not affect the declaration of the surplus area which has to be determined according to the holding of a person on the date of the commencement of the Act, i.e., 15th April, 1953. Reference was made to the Supreme Court decision in Bhagwan Das v. State of Punjab, 1966-68 Pun. L. R. 300=(AIR 1966 S.C. 1869), where it was observed that "the scheme of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act appears to be that the entire land held by the landowner in the State of Punjab on the date of the commencement of the Act must be evaluated on that date and the status of the landowner and his surplus area, if any, must be then ascertained." Their Lordships of the Supreme Court had given consideration to all the provisions of the Act and it is impossible to spell out the contention which is now brought in the limelight that the earlier Bench decisions of this Court failed to take account of the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 1 of the Amending Act 14 of 1962. In my view, the situation has not changed to require any reconsideration. I am, therefore, unable to agree with Mahajan J. that the decision in Bhalla Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331, still holds the field. On the contrary Bhalla Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331, was overruled not only by statute in express terms but also by Division Bench judgments of this Court.

28. In my view, the petition ought to be dismissed and the order of the Financial Commissioner upholding the orders of the Commissioner and the Collector maintained.

29. R. S. NARULA, J.:— Having had the advantage of perusing the learned judgments prepared by my Lords Mahajan and Shamsher Bahadur JJ., I would prefer to record my decision in this case as well as the reasons which have impelled me to reach that conclusion in my own words.

30. Out of his total holding of 348 Acres, 7 Kanals and 10 Marlas of land (valued at 160 Standard Acres and 13½ Units) in village Kanianwali, tahsil Muktsar, district Ferozepore, Hakam Singh respondent No. 5 (without reserving any area for self-cultivation) gifted the land in dispute in May, 1955, to his sons petitioners Nos. 2 and 3, their respective wives, petitioners Nos. 4 and 5, and to the respective daughters of his two sons who are petitioners 6 and 7. Mutation in respect of the said gifts was duly entered and sanctioned on May 14, 1955. By his order, dated April 5, 1966, the Collector (Agrarian), Ferozepore, ignored those transfers in exercise of the power conferred on him under Section 10-A (b) of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act, 1953, as subsequently amended, and declared 288 Acres, 7 Kanals and 10 Marlas of Hakam Singh's original holding (including the land in dispute) as his surplus area. The Collector's order to ignore the transfers having been upheld right up to the Financial Commissioner, the transferees have, in this petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution sought, inter alia, a decision to the effect that the said transfer could not be ignored as Sections 10-A (b) and (c) did not apply to transfers effected between April 15, 1953, and July 30, 1958, as held in 1967 Lah. L. T. 155, and 1969 Pun. L. J. 1.

31. On the other hand, the learned counsel, for the respondents have pressed for the abovesaid contention of the petitioners being repelled on the authority of the Division Bench judgments of this Court in:—

(i) 1963-65 Pun. L. R. 105=(AIR 1963 Punj. 319);

(ii) 1966-68 Pun. L. R. 41, and

(iii) 1967 Cur. L. J. 804 (P. & H.).

As the two sets of decisions on the question of the applicability of Section 10-A to transfers effected between April 15, 1953 and July 30, 1958, were not reconcilable this petition at the time of its admission on February 16, 1968, was directed by the Motion Bench to be placed before my Lord, the Chief Justice for its being heard by a Full Bench.

32. Though all the relevant provisions of law have been set out by my learned brother Mahajan, J., I will briefly indicate the chronological order in which those provisions were enacted and then refer to the resultant situation. The Punjab Tenants (Security of Tenure) Act (22 of 1950), as amended by the Punjab Tenants (Security of Tenure) Amendment

Act, 1951 (President's Act 5 of 1951) was repealed and replaced by the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act (10 of 1953) (hereinafter called the principal Act), on and with effect from April 15, 1953. The Prevention of Ejectment (Temporary Powers) Ordinance, 1952, had by then already expired by efflux of time. The concept of "surplus area" was introduced for the first time into the principal Act by the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment) Act (11 of 1955) (hereinafter referred to as the 1955 Act), which came into force on May 26, 1955. One of the specified objects of enacting the 1955 Act was "to introduce the new concept of 'surplus area' and its utilisation by the State Government for the resettlement of ejected tenants". Another objective of the said enactment was "to prevent sales and other dispositions of land adversely affecting the continuance of tenancies and the extent of available surplus area." The amendment made in the definition of "permissible area" by Section 3 of the 1955 Act is not material for our purposes. Area other than the reserved area and where no area had been reserved, the area in excess of the permissible area selected as prescribed (excluding a tenant's permissible area) was defined as the "surplus area" in clause (5-a) added to Section 2 of the principal Act by Section 3 of the 1955 Act. Sections 10-A (a) and (b) were inserted into the principal Act by Section 8 of the 1955 Act, in the following terms:—

"10-A. (a) The State Government, or any officer empowered by it in this behalf, shall be competent to utilize any surplus area for the resettlement of tenants ejected, or to be ejected, under clause (i) of sub-section (1) of Section 9.

(b) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, no transfer or other disposition of land which is comprised in a surplus area at the commencement of this Act, shall affect the utilization thereof in clause (a). Explanation.— Such utilization of any surplus area will not affect the right of the landowner to receive rent from the tenant so settled."

Sections 5-A to 5-C were then introduced into the principal Act by Section 3 of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment) Act (46 of 1957), requiring every land-owner or tenant, who owns or holds land in excess of the permissible area to furnish a declaration supported by affidavit in respect of the land owned or held by him, and permitting the landowner who might not have exercised his right of reservation to select his permissible area and to intimate the selection to the prescribed authority; and further providing for the consequences and penalties of non-compliance with the furnishing of the declaration and making the selection.

The definition of "surplus area" as contained in Section 2(5-a) of the principal Act was amended so as to substitute the expression "as prescribed" by the words "under Section 5-B or the area which is deemed to be surplus area under sub-section (1) of Section 5-C". Next came, the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment) Ordinance No. 6 of 1958, promulgated by the Governor of Punjab on July 30, 1958. The date of promulgation of this Ordinance has to be borne in mind as it has a special significance for the purpose of dealing with the somewhat vexed question on which my learned brothers have not been able to agree. The Ordinance amended clause (b) of Section 10-A of the principal Act so as to save from its operation land acquired by the State Government under any law for the time being in force and land acquired by an heir by inheritance. Paragraph 4 of the Ordinance introduced into the principal Act Sections 19-A to 19-D. Section 19-B(1) as enacted under the Ordinance reads as follows:—

"If, after the commencement of this Act, any person, whether as land-owner or tenant, acquires by inheritance or bequest or gift from a person to whom he is an heir any land which, with or without the lands already owned or held by him, exceeds in the aggregate the permissible area, then he shall, within the period prescribed, furnish to the Collector a return in the prescribed form and manner giving the particulars of all lands and selecting the land not exceeding in the aggregate the permissible area which he desires to retain, and if the land of such person is situated in more than one Patwar circle, he shall also furnish a declaration required by Section 5-A."

Sub-section (4) of Section 19-B was in the following terms:—

"The excess land of such person shall be at the disposal of the State Government for utilization as surplus area under clause (a) of Section 10-A or for such other purposes as the State Government may by notification direct."

The circumstances which led the Governor to promulgate the Ordinance can be gathered from the objects and reasons of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment) Act (4 of 1959), which replaced the Ordinance on January 19, 1959. One of the said objects was "to prohibit further acquisition of land in excess of the permissible area by inheritance, transfer, exchange, lease, agreement, or settlement". The relevant provisions of the 1959 Act were practically the same as those of the 1958 Ordinance. Section 19-B (1) as originally introduced into the principal Act by the Ordinance was slightly amended by the 1959 Act and then read as follows:—

"If, after the commencement of this Act, any person, whether as landowner or tenant, acquires by inheritance or bequest or gift from a person to whom he is an heir any land or if after the commencement of this Act and before the 30th July, 1958, any person has acquired by transfer, exchange, lease, agreement or settlement any land, which, with or without the lands already owned or held by him, exceeds in the aggregate the permissible area, then he shall, within the period prescribed, furnish to the Collector, a return in the prescribed form and manner giving the particulars of all lands and selecting the land not exceeding in the aggregate the permissible area which he desires to retain, and if the land of such person is situated in more than one Patwar circle, he shall also furnish a declaration required by Section 5-A."

Section 5 of the 1959 Act by which the Ordinance was repealed provided that notwithstanding such repeal, anything done or any action taken under the Ordinance shall be deemed to have been done or taken under the 1959 Act as if the Act had commenced on the 30th day of July, 1958.

33. At the time when Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331, was decided on December 5, 1961, Section 19-B(1) and Section 19-B(4) were in the same form as have been quoted above and as had been introduced into the principal Act by the 1959 Act. The basis of the judgment of my learned Brother Mahajan, J. in Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331, was that Section 19-B had impliedly repealed Section 10-A in so far as acquisitions covered by Section 19-B were concerned. After preferring an appeal against the Single Bench judgment in Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331, and before the decision of the Letters Patent Appeal, the State Legislature passed the Punjab Security of Land Tenures (Amendment and Validation) Act, 1962 (Act 14 of 1962) (hereinafter called the 1962 Act). It has been authoritatively held by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Kavalappara Kottarathil Kochuni v. States of Madras & Kerala, AIR 1960 SC 1080, that Statement of Objects and Reasons for passing a law may be referred to for the purpose of ascertaining the conditions prevailing at the time the Bill was introduced and the purpose for which the amendment introduced by the Bill in the previous Act was made. The purpose for which the Bill leading to the passing of the 1962 Act was introduced into the Legislature can be gathered from the objects of the same. The relevant extracts from the "Objects" are given below:—

"Some of the recent judicial pronouncements have the effect of defeating the objectives with which the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act, 1953, was enacted and amended from time to time.

In another Civil Writ No. 1342 of 1960 re: Bhalle Ram v. State of Punjab, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331, the High Court has interpreted Section 19-B as if it impliedly repealed Section 10-A(b) in respect of the transfers from the surplus area made between 15th April, 1953, and 30th July, 1958, and as if such transfers could not be ignored under Section 10-A(b) for the purpose of computing the surplus area. The view taken by the High Court would considerably diminish the surplus area of a land-owner as available on 15th April, 1953. Section 19-B was never enacted with that object. The purpose of enacting Section 19-B was to take over the surplus area of those who became big landowners after 15th April, 1953, by acquiring more lands and not to reduce the surplus area of those who were big land-owners on 15th April, 1953."

Accordingly clauses 3, 6 and 7 of the Bill seek to neutralise the effect of the aforesaid decisions. Clause 11 provides for the validation of certain orders made under the parent Act notwithstanding the decision first mentioned."

Clauses 3, 6 and 7 of the Bill ultimately became Sections 3, 6 and 7 of the 1962 Act. Whereas Section 3 was intended to neutralise the effect of a Division Bench judgment of this Court in Jagan Nath v. State of Punjab, Civil Writ No. 1051 of 1960 (Punj.), and Section 7 was intended to neutralise the effect of the judgment of this Court in Surja v. Financial Commissioner, Punjab and others, Civil Writ No. 486 of 1961 (Punj.), Section 6 was expressly enacted "to neutralise the effect" of the judgment of this Court in Balle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun. L. R. 331. The object of introducing clause (c) into Section 10-A by clause (4) of the Bill which led to the passing of the 1962 Act was to provide that the decrees which had been obtained by interested persons being relations etc. for the diminishing of the surplus area should be ignored in computing the surplus area. Different dates of coming into force of different provisions were prescribed by sub-section (2) of Section 1. As explained in a later part of this judgment, the fixing of different dates was not a matter of whim, but had to be done on a scientific basis in order to achieve the objectives of the amendments which were sought to be made by this Act. Clause (c) which was introduced into Section 10-A of the principal Act in the following words by Section 4 of the 1962 Act was given retrospective effect from the 15th day of April, 1953:

"For the purposes of determining the surplus area of any person under this section, any judgment, decree or order of a Court or other authority, obtained after the commencement of this Act and having the effect of diminishing the area of such person which could have been declared as his surplus area shall be ignored."

Clause (a) of Section 2 whereby an explanation was added to clause (3) of Section 2 of the principal Act defining "permissible area" was likewise deemed to have come into force on April 15, 1953. Sections 5 and 7 of the 1962 Act by which Sections 10-B, and 19-E and 19-F were introduced into the principal Act were likewise given retrospective effect from April 15, 1953. On the other hand the only two provisions of the 1962 Act which were deemed to have come into force on the 30th day of July, 1958, were Sections 2(b) and 6. Under Section 2(b), the following words and figures were added to the definition of "surplus area" as contained in clause (5-a) of Section 2 of the principal Act, as amended by the 1955 Act:—

"and includes the area in excess of the permissible area selected under Section 19-B."

Section 6 of the 1962 Act is the crucial section which amended Section 19-B in the following manner:—

"In Section 19-B of the principal Act,— (1) in sub-section (1), for the words 'if, after the commencement of this Act, any person whether as land-owner or tenant acquires by inheritance or bequest or gift from a person to whom he is an heir any land or if after the commencement of this Act and before the 30th July, 1958, any person has acquired by transfer, exchange, lease, agreement or settlement any land', the following words shall be substituted, namely:—

'Subject to the provisions of S. 10-A, if after the commencement of this Act, any person, whether as land-owner or tenant, acquires by inheritance or by bequest or gift from a person to whom he is an heir any land, or, if after the commencement of this Act, and before the 30th July, 1958, any person has acquired by transfer, exchange, lease, agreement or settlement any land, or if, after such commencement, any person acquires in any other manner land,' and

(2) in sub-section (2), the words 'and select the land for him in the manner specified in sub-section (2) of Sec. 5-B' shall be added at the end."

34. Section 19-B(1) as amended by the above-quoted provisions of Section 6 of the 1962 Act is in the following terms:—

"Subject to the provisions of Sec. 10-A, if after the commencement of this Act, any person, whether as land-owner or tenant, acquires by inheritance or by bequest or gift from a person to whom he is an heir any land, or if after the commencement of this Act and before the 30th July, 1958, any person has acquired by transfer, exchange, lease, agreement or settlement, any person acquires in any other manner any land, which with or without the lands already owned or held by him, exceeds in the aggregate the permissible area, then he shall, within the period prescribed, furnish to the Collector, a return in the prescribed form and manner giving the particulars of all lands and selecting the land not exceeding in the aggregate the permissible area which he desires to retain, and if the land of such person is situated in more than one Patwar circle, he shall also furnish a declaration required by Section 5-A".

35. The material points of difference between the unamended Section 19-B(1) as introduced by the 1959 Act on the one hand, and the said provision as amended by the 1962 Act on the other, are these:—

(i) In the unamended Section it was not stated that it was subject to Section 10-A. It was so stated in the amended section;

(ii) In the unamended section only three categories of acquisition by transfer were mentioned, viz:—

(a) acquisition by inheritance after the commencement of the Act;

(b) acquisition after the commencement of the Act by bequest or gift from a person to whom the person acquiring is an heir; and

(c) acquisition "after the commencement of this Act" and before the 30th of July, 1958, by transfer, exchange, lease, agreement or settlement.

In the amended section four kinds of acquisition of land are referred to. In addition to the three kinds of acquisition under the unamended section, the following fourth category was added:—

(d) acquisition "after such commencement" (i.e. after the commencement of the Act) by any person in any other manner.

Since the counsel for both sides laid so much emphasis on the effect of amending Section 19-B with effect from July 30, 1958, in contradistinction to the retrospective effect given to the addition made in Section 10-A from April 15, 1953, by the specific provisions of Section 1(2) of the 1962 Act, it appears to be appropriate to deal with that argument at this very stage straightway. The submission of the learned counsel for the petitioners to the effect that if the acquisitions during the period April 15, 1953, to July 30, 1958, referred to in Section 19-B were also required to be made subject to Section 10-A, the Legislature would have given effect to the amendment of Section 19-B from April 15, 1953, appears to me to be wholly fallacious. It would be remembered that Section 19-B saw the light of the day for the first time on July 30, 1958, when the Governor's Ordinance was promulgated. To imagine that an amendment to Section 19-B could be made effective from a date prior to the one on which the principal section itself came into force is, in my opinion, illogical. If Section 19-B had been amended with effect from April 15, 1953, the amendment contained in the words of Section 6 of the 1962 Act would have hung in the air as the principal provision into which the amendment had to be introduced was not in existence at any time before July 30, 1958. In these circumstances there appears to me to be no answer to the proposition that the maximum possible retrospective effect that could have been given by the Legislature to the amendment of Section 19-B was from the date of the introduction of the principal provision and that was July 30, 1958; and this is what the Legislature did. The effect of amending Section 19-B in 1962 with effect from July 30, 1958, is that for all legal and practical purposes all concerned must forget that the un-amended Section 19-B was ever introduced by the 1958 Ordinance and was ever on the statute book or in existence. On the contrary the deeming provisions of Section 1(2) of the 1962 Act read with Section 5(2) of the 1959 Act result in Section 19-B as amended in 1962 being deemed to have been on the statute book as we now find it right from July 30, 1958. In other words, we have to assume in the circumstances described above that the 1958 Ordinance introduced into the principal Act Section 19-B as we find it after its amendment in 1962. In this connection it is significant to notice (as already pointed out) that retrospective effect from July 30, 1958, has been given only to those amendments effected by the 1962 Act which seek to amend the provisions which had been inserted into the principal Act only on July 30, 1958, for the first time by the Governor's Ordinance.

36. The inference at which I have arrived by the above process of reasoning leads to the corollary that we must forget once for all the decision given by this Court in Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun. L.R. 331, as the provision of law on which the said decision was given is now deemed to have never existed. I say that the original provision never existed because that is the effect of a deeming provision which has replaced an old one from the date of inception of the original section. The necessary consequence is that we cannot think of Section 19-B having ever existed without the clause "subject to the provisions of Section 10-A", and we are compelled to assume by legal fiction that Section 19-B(1) has always been subject to and never independent of Sec. 10-A.

This conclusion appears to me to be absolutely inescapable.

37. The next important question which needs consideration in this respect is as to what is the meaning of the expression "after the commencement of this Act" used in Section 19-B. In other words, the question is, which is the enactment to which reference is made by the expression "this Act" in Section 19-B(1). Learned counsel for the petitioner placed reliance on certain observations of Hegde J. in the judgment of their Lordships of the Supreme Court in 1969 Cur. L. J. 1 (SC), for contending that the expression "after the commencement of this Act" in Section 19-B(1) means "after the commencement of the 1959 Act", i.e., during the period commencing January 19, 1959. This, in my opinion, is the second fallacy in the way of thinking of the petitioners. In the case of Arjan Singh, 1969 Cur. L. J. 1 (SC), the Supreme Court was dealing with the question of the date of the coming into force of Section 32-KK of the Pepsu Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1955. In that connection it was observed that on a reading of the various provisions of the Pepsu Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Amendment and Validation) Act, 1962, it appeared to the Supreme Court, that the Legislature intended that Section 7 of that Act which introduced into the principal Act Section 32-KK should be deemed to have come into force on 30th October, 1956. Hegde, J. observed:—

"Evidently the draftsman when he drafted Section 7 of the Act had in his mind the Amendment Act and not the principal Act. The words 'this Act' in Section 7 of the Amendment Act (Section 32-KK of the principal Act) in our opinion were intended to refer to the Amendment Act and not to the principal Act."

His Lordship made it clear beyond any doubt that it is true that ordinarily when a section is incorporated into the principal Act by means of an amendment reference in that section to "this Act" means the principal Act, and that it was only in view of the particular significance of subsection (2) of Section 1 of the Amendment Act of 1962 in the Pepsu Act that the construction placed on the particular expression in Arjan Singh's case, 1969 Cur. L. J. 1 (SC) had become permissible. The learned Judge further observed that every statute had to be construed as a whole and the construction given should be a harmonious one. After carefully considering the matter, I am firmly of the opinion that the meaning to be assigned to the expression "this Act" in Sec. 19-B (1) of the 1953 Act is the one which, according to the ratio of the judgment of the Supreme Court, has to be ordinarily resorted to, and that this is not an exceptional case where "this Act" can possibly mean any of the amending Acts. There are reasons, more than one, for taking this view. The first and foremost thing that has prevailed with me in this connection is that whereas it was permissible in the case of the Pepsu Act to construe "this Act" as the 1956 amending Act, it is not possible to do so in the present case for the simple reason that Section 19-B was for the first time introduced into the principal Act by the Governor's Ordinance of 1958, and even at that time the expression used in Section 19-B was "this Act". The use of the said expression in the section as introduced by the Ordinance is wholly inconsistent with the possibility of construing "this Act" in Section 19-B as having relation to the Governor's Ordinance by which it was introduced. If the expression in Section 19-B (1) as introduced by the Ordinance had been "this Ordinance", the thing would have been equally clear on the other side. The judgment of the Supreme Court in the case of Arjan Singh, 1967 Cur. L. J. 1 (SC), is, therefore, of no avail to the petitioners.

38. The only choice which is left to us to construe the expression "this Act" occurring in Section 19-B (1) is either to relate it to the 1953 Act or the 1959 Act, or the 1962 Act. The question of relating it to any of the amending Acts which came into existence after the Ordinance does not arise as the very same expression existed in the provision referred to in paragraph 4 of the Ordinance itself. The expression "this Act", must, therefore, in my opinion, relate to the principal Act of 1953, and cannot possibly be related to any other enactment.

39. What follows from the above conclusions is that Section 10-A applies to all acquisitions by transfer after April 15, 1953, and not only to those which were effected after July 30, 1958. Once it is held, as I have held above, that Section 19-B(1) is deemed to have been subject to Section 10-A from the very first day the provision came into existence, and at no time independent of Sec. 10-A, and further that the acquisitions after the coming into force of the Act have reference to acquisitions after April 15, 1953, the petitioners cannot possibly succeed on the argument with which I am dealing at the moment.

40. The validity of the four arguments of the learned counsel for the petitioners which appear to have appealed to my Lord Mahajan, J. may now be tested. The first refers to the importance of the date July 30, 1958, being specified in sub-section (2) of Section 1 of the 1962 Act as the date from which Section 19-B was deemed to have been in existence in its amended form. This argument was noticed in all the three forms in which it was pressed by Mr. Nehra in the judgment of my learned brother Mahajan, J. in the following words:—

(i) "The very fact, that the amended Section 19-B was made operative from the 30th of July, 1958, shows that the Legislature never intended to make this provision retrospective."

(ii) "If the intention of the Legislature was to take away the benefit conferred on the transferees by Bhalle Ram's case 1962-64 Pun LR 331 retrospectively, Section 19-B would have been given effect like Sections 10-A and 2 (5-a) with effect from the 15th of April, 1953. But that was not done and, in my opinion, advisedly. The Legislature did not want to unsettle the settled transactions."

(iii) "No explanation has been offered by the learned counsel for the State, why the Legislature made the amended Section 19-B operative with effect from the 30th of July, 1958."

41. It is indeed true and equally unfortunate that the learned counsel for the State could not offer any explanation as to why the Legislature had made amended Section 19-B operative with effect from the 30th of July, 1958, and not from April 15, 1953. But I have already given elaborate reasons for the Legislature having done so. So far as the intention of the Legislature to take away the benefit conferred on the transferees by Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun LR 331 retrospectively is concerned, it appears to me that the specified objects of enacting Section 6 of the 1962 Act as contained in the relevant extracts from the "Objects and Reasons" of the Bill which led to the passing of that Act (quoted verbatim in an earlier part of this judgment) furnish complete answer to the said argument of Mr. Nehra. The express object of enacting Section 6 of the 1962 Act whereby Section 19-B of the principal Act was made subject to Section 10-A was to neutralise completely the effect of the judgment of this Court in Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun LR 331 and no exception appears to have been made in leaving any category of cases which could be governed by the judgment in Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun LR 331 unaffected. Moreover, as already observed by me, the judgment of this Court in Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun LR 331 can no more be looked into for determining the controversy before us as the unamended Section 19-B in respect of which the judgment was given is deemed to have never been in existence. The following observations of Lord Asquith of Bishopstone in the judgment of the House of Lords in East End Dwellings Co. Ltd. v. Finsbury Borough Council, 1952 AC 109 (at page 132) are apt in this connection:—

"If you are bidden to treat an imaginary state of affairs as real, you must surely, unless prohibited from doing so, also imagine as real the consequences and incidents which, if the putative state of affairs had in fact existed, must inevitably have flowed from or accompanied it."

The above mentioned dictum of the House of Lords was approved by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in State of Bombay v. Pandurang Vinayak, AIR 1953 SC 244. Mehar Chand Mahajan, J., who wrote the judgment of the Supreme Court held in that case as below:—

"When a statute enacts that something shall be deemed to have been done, which in fact and truth was not done, the Court is entitled and bound to ascertain for what purposes and between what persons the statutory fiction is to be resorted to and full effect must be given to the statutory fiction and it should be carried to its logical conclusions."

Therefore, extending the deeming provision contained in the 1962 Amending Act to its logical conclusion and giving full effect thereto, we have to decide this case on the assumption that the unamended Section 19-B had never seen the light of the day and that Section 19-B had from its very inception been subject to the provisions of Section 10-A. In my opinion, the intention of the Legislature to unsettle the settled transactions like the one in Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun LR 331 is manifest from the scheme of the amending Act.

42. While allowing the appeal of the State against the decision of my Lord

As in the Act

"After the commencement of this Act and before the 30th July, 1958."

This exposes the fallacy in this argument of learned counsel. I am, therefore, of the opinion that each of the three arguments of Mr. Nehra on which my Lord Mahajan, J. has based his judgment is not free from one or the other infirmity.

43. There are certain additional considerations for holding that if Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun LR 331 were to be decided today, that is at any time after the original Section 19-B had been wiped out and replaced by the amended Section 19-B, the correct decision would have been the one which was arrived at by the Letters Patent Bench on May 7, 1963. Firstly, the amendment made by Section 2 (b) of the 1962 Act in Section 2 (5-a) of the principal Act contains a reference to Section 19-B and the said amendment has been enforced from July 30, 1958, by sub-section (2) of S. 1 of the 1962 Act. Though Sec. 6 and Section 2 (b) stand on the same footing, so far as retrospective effect given to them by Section 1 (2) is concerned, a clear

Mahajan, J. in Bhalle Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun LR 331, it was observed in 1963 Pun LJ 65, by Dulat, J. (who prepared the judgment of the Division Bench and with whom Grover, J. concurred):—

"It is clear now from the amendments that the surplus area in connection with any land-owner is to be determined on the basis of that land-owner's holding as it existed on the 15th April, 1953, and the land, which is in fact surplus at that time, will remain surplus irrespective of any transfer made by the land-owner subsequently. In these circumstances and in view of the express amendments of the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act, the decision arrived at by the learned Single Judge in this case cannot stand."

So far as the interpretation of the expression "this Act" in Section 19-B (1) is concerned, what appears to have appealed to Letters Patent Bench in Bhalle Ram's case, 1963 Pun LJ 65 was that the expression referred to the principal Act of 1953. It is in the same sense that this expression appears to have been impliedly construed in the cases of (1) Bhagat Gobind Singh, 1963-65 Pun LR 105 = (AIR 1963 Punj 319) (supra), (2) Shamsher Singh, 1966-68 Pun LR 41 (supra), and (3) Hans Raj, 1967 Cur. L. J. 304 (Supra). The meaning which counsel for the petitioner wants to assign to the expression "commencement of this Act" in Section 19-B (1) is July 30, 1958, that is, the date of the Ordinance. If this interpretation were to be correct, the relevant part of Section 19-B (1) would read as follows:—

As sought to be interpreted by counsel

"After July 30, 1958, and before the 30th July, 1958."

distinction about the date from which the relevant amendment introduced by those sections become effective has been brought about by Sec. 10-A of the 1962 which is in the following terms:—

"Section 10-A of the Principal Act, as amended by this Act, and CL (5-a) of Section 2 of the principal Act, shall always be deemed to have been inserted in the principal Act on the 15th day of April, 1953."

The language of the abovequoted provision leaves no doubt in my mind that the Legislature expressly made Section 10-A of the principal Act, as amended by the 1962 Act, effective from April 15, 1953, as it is stated in the said provision that the amended Section 10-A shall always be deemed to have been inserted in the principal Act on the date of its inception. Secondly sub-section (4) of S. 19-B which provides that excess land of the persons referred to in sub-section (1) shall be at the disposal of the State Government for utilisation as surplus area under CL (a) of Section 10-A, necessarily refers to all the categories of persons acquiring land to whom reference is made in sub-sec. (1) of Section 19-B, including persons who had acquired land after April 15, 1953, but before July 30, 1958. Thirdly, Cl. (b) of Section 19-F which provides, inter alia, that the land acquired by inheritance etc. after the coming into force of the Act shall be evaluated for converting into Standard Acres as if the evaluation was being made on the date of such commencement (April 15, 1953), would be meaningless if Section 19-B (1) were not to be subject to Section 10-A right from 15-4-1953. It is also significant that Sec. 19-F starts with the phrase, "for the removal of doubts it is hereby declared." Fourthly and lastly, I think that construing Section 19-B (1) in the manner in which Mr. Nehra wants us to construe it would be cutting at the very texture of the whole Act and interfering with the scheme of this branch of legislation. According to my reading of Section 19-B, it was never intended to impinge on the scope of Section 10-A, but was merely intended to enlarge the scope of the scheme and intention behind Section 10-A. Lands which had become the surplus area of any land-owner, would never cease to be surplus area except in the two contingencies specifically mentioned in the Act, i.e., in the case of acquisition by the State Government or in the case of acquisition by inheritance (subject to Section 10-B). The language of Section 19-B shows that the purpose of enacting it was to take over the surplus area of those who become big land-owners after April 15, 1953, by acquiring additional lands and not to reduce the surplus area of those who were big land-owners on April 15, 1953. Once Section 19-B is read in that light, it appears to become simpler to resolve the controversy which has been raging about its meaning for quite some time. It is apparent that a transferee of a surplus area after the enactment of Section 19-B, that is after July 30, 1958, cannot transform the same into his permissible area merely because his original holding, if any, plus the acquired area, would not exceed the permissible area. It is noteworthy that sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 19-A make the acquisition of any area exceeding one's permissible area after the coming into force of the 1953 Act, void, and of no effect. There is, therefore, no justification for taking out of the purview of Section 10-A, the acquisitions made between April 15, 1953, and July 30, 1958.

44. I would, therefore, hold:—

(i) that the retrospective amendment of Section 19-B with effect from July 30, 1958, makes the provisions of that section subject to Section 10-A of the Act right from the first day when Section 19-B was enacted;

(ii) that at no time was Section 19-B independent of and not subject to the provisions of Section 10-A;

(iii) that the expression "this Act" in Section 19-B (unamended as well as amended) has reference to the principal Act of 1953, and not to any subsequent amending legislation;

(iv) that the controversy about the decision of this Court in Bhalke Ram's case, 1962-64 Pun LR 331 being correct or not is wholly irrelevant in the changed legislative field because of the unamended Section 19-B being deemed to have never existed and the amended Section 19-B being treated as the only section which came into force and continues to apply to the category of acquisitions mentioned therein;

(v) that the law laid down by this Court in Bhagat Gobind Singh's case, 1963-65 Pun LR 105=(AIR 1963 Punj 319) (Supra) as well as in 1966-68 Pun LR 41 (Supra), and in the judgment of 1967 Cur LJ 804 (P & H) (Supra) and also in the Letters Patent judgment in 1963 Pun LJ 65 (Supra), is correct and unexceptionable;

(vi) that, with the greatest respect to my Lord Mahajan, J., the observations in the judgment of the learned Single Judge in 1967 Lah LT 155 (Supra) which go contrary to the decision of the earlier Division Bench in the case of 1963 Pun LJ 65 (Supra), were not quite correct. For the same reason my decision in 1969 Pun LJ 1 (Supra) on the point now in issue (which was based on the earlier Single Bench judgment in the case of 1967 Lah. L. T. 155 with which I was bound) was also not correct;

(vii) that the making of the amendment to Section 19-B retrospective with effect from July 30, 1958, only, has no effect on the material question, and that any land which is once included in the surplus area of a big land-owner never ceases to be surplus and is never taken out of the pale of the area which is liable to be utilised under Section 10-A (a) except in the cases of acquisition by the State or acquisition by inheritance referred to in the Act; and

(viii) that the purpose of enacting Section 19-B was to take over the surplus area of those who became big land-owners after April 15, 1953, by acquiring more lands from other land-owners (otherwise than by inheritance subject to Sec. 10-B) and not to reduce the surplus area of those who were big land-owners on April 15, 1953.

The only other point which was argued at some length by Mr. D. S. Nehra related to petitioner No. 1. His contention was that petitioner No. 1 being a co-operative society was exempt from the operation of the principal Act, and inasmuch as the disputed surplus area of respondent No. 5 was in the cultivation of petitioner No. 1 co-operative society, no part of it could be made available for utilisation under Section 10-A (a). This argument was, however, dropped by Mr. Nehra in the middle when he was faced with the amendment of the principal Act relating to the original exemption in favour of co-operative societies.

For the foregoing reasons, I agree with my Lord Shamsher Bahadur, J., that the petitioners cannot succeed. I would accordingly dismiss this writ petition with costs.

ORDER OF THE COURT

45. In accordance with the opinion of the majority this writ petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

AIR 1970 PUNJAB & HARYANA 176 (V 57 C 23)

P. C. PANDIT AND H. R. SODHI, JJ.

Kewal Krishan, Appellant v. Shiv Kumar and others, Respondents.

Civil Misc. No. 317-C of 1968, in First Appeal No. 296 of 1967, D/-25-3-1969.

Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 96 (3), 151, 152, O. 47, R. 1 — Consent decree — Setting aside of, on ground that consent is obtained by coercion — Proper remedy is to file separate suit — Appeal, application for review or application under S. 151 or S. 152 is not sustainable. AIR 1952 All 29 & AIR 1929 Oudh 385 (FB) & (1884) ILR 10 Cal 612 & AIR 1926 Cal 512 & (1903) ILR 30 Cal 613 & (1912) ILR 36 Bom 77 & AIR 1933 Bom 205, Dissented from.

In order to set aside a consent decree on the ground that the consent was obtained by coercion, the proper remedy is to file a separate suit and not an appeal or an application for review against that decree or an application under Section 151 or Section 152 of the Code. (1884) ILR 10 Cal 612 & AIR 1926 Cal 512 & (1903) ILR 30 Cal 613 & (1912) ILR 36 Bom 77 & AIR 1933 Bom 205, Dissented from.

The rule contained in Section 96 (3) of the Civil P. C. is based on the principle that a person who gives his consent to a decree being passed against him, is later on estopped from challenging the same. Therefore, once a decree is passed with the consent of parties and the decree ex facie shows that both the parties had consented to it, no appeal can lie against such decree on the ground that the consent to such decree was not free and was obtained by fraud, misrepresentation, coercion, undue influence etc. (Para 9)

If one of the parties to the litigation asserts before the appellate Court that his consent to the decree was not free and it was obtained under coercion, the appellate Court obviously cannot decide the dispute on the materials before it unless it allows both the parties to adduce additional evidence to prove that fact. Such a procedure is not covered by O. 41, R. 27 which is the only provision under which additional evidence is produced before the appellate Court. Such evidence can be adduced properly in a separate suit filed for that purpose. AIR 1952 All 29 & AIR 1929 Oudh 385 (FB), Dissented from. Case law discussed. (Para 9)

The aggrieved party cannot also avail of remedy of review under O. 47, R. 1. Though the rule states after discovery of new matter or mistake or error apparent on the face of the record "any other sufficient reason" also as a ground for seeking review, these words are taken to mean a reason which is sufficient on grounds analogous to the other grounds in the rule. The party, therefore, cannot employ the procedure of review for making out a contentious case of fraud on this ground. Section 152 also cannot be availed of for seeking the relief as it is confined to clerical or arithmetical mistakes and to an accidental slip or omission only. Further, as the relief can be obtained in a separate suit, there is no justification in invoking Section 151 at all. AIR 1922 PC 112, Rel. on. (Para 16)

 H. S. Gujral, for Appellant; H. L. Sarin Sr. Advocate with A. L. Bahl and H. S. Awasthy, for Respondent No. 1.

P. C. PANDIT, J.:— Mahant Shiv Kumar brought a suit against Mahant Kewal Krishan and Mahant Ram Sarup for partition of a house situate in Batala, District Gurdaspur. During the trial of the suit, a compromise was effected between the parties on 24th of October, 1967. Mahant Shiv Kumar plaintiff and his counsel made a statement to the effect that the case had been compromised. The plaintiff agreed to pay Rs. 500 to Mahant Kewal Krishan by 3rd of November, 1967, a preliminary decree to that effect might be passed in his favour and the parties be ordered to bear their own costs. On that very date, the statement of Mahant Kewal Krishan and his counsel was also recorded. The defendant stated that he had heard the statement made by the plaintiff and a preliminary decree be made in accordance therewith. The Subordinate Judge, who was trying the case, then at that very time passed the following order:

"In view of the terms of the compromise set out in the statements of the parties, recorded today, the plaintiff is granted a preliminary decree on the basis of compromise for the partition of the suit property according to the shares specified in the plaint on payment of a sum of Rs. 500 to Kewal Krishan defendant on or before 3-11-1967. In case, the plaintiff does not pay the stipulated amount to Kewal Krishan defendant or deposits the same in the Court for payment by the due date, the suit of the plaintiff shall stand dismissed." The above order was followed by a preliminary decree. Against this decree, Mahant Kewal Krishan has filed the present appeal in this Court.

2. On 28th of November, 1967, the following order was passed on this appeal:—

"Notice. D. B. Print record. Stay the passing of the final decree ad interim. Notice as to this also for a very early date."

3. On 5th of February, 1968, an application (Civil Miscellaneous No. 317/C of 1968) under Section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure was filed on behalf of Mahant Shiv Kumar respondent alleging that the appellant who had got only about 1/9th share in the property in dispute, had filed the appeal against the consent decree dated the 24th of October, 1967, mainly with the object of prolonging the proceedings pending in the trial Court for the passing of the final decree, so that he might retain his possession over a much larger portion of the house in dispute than the one that fell to his share. The appeal was liable to be dismissed on the sole ground that it was not competent in view of the provisions of Section 96 (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was prayed that the question of the maintainability of the appeal be decided in the first instance before the printing of the record of the case.

4. Notice of this application was given to the counsel for the appellant and this matter has now been placed before us.

5. Learned counsel for Mahant Shiv Kumar respondent has relied on the provisions of Section 96 (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure which lay down that no appeal shall lie from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties. From the statements made by the respondent Mahant Shiv Kumar and the appellant Mahant Kewal Krishan and the order passed by the Court below, it is apparent that the matter had been compromised between them and on the basis of the same, a preliminary decree was passed by the trial Judge. According to Section 96 (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure, no appeal would lie against a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties.

6. Learned counsel for the appellant, on the other hand, raised two submissions before us. In the first place, he contended that according to the statements made by the parties, it appeared that the plaintiff wanted a decree for an injunction to be passed in his favour, while he Court below granted a preliminary decree for the partition of the house in dispute. Consequently, according to the learned counsel, the decree and the judgment of the Court below were not in accordance with the statements of the parties as recorded.

7. There is no substance in this submission. Learned counsel is not quite correct when he says that the plaintiff mentioned in his statement that a decree for injunction might be passed in his favour. He desired that a preliminary decree be made in his favour. Naturally, when a co-owner files a suit for partition of some joint property, he would like a preliminary decree to be passed and not a decree for an injunction. This is precisely what happened in the instant case. The plaintiff prayed that a preliminary decree be made in his favour on the basis of the compromise arrived at between the parties. After recording their statements, the said prayer was granted by the Court below.

8. It was then submitted that the appellant never agreed to enter into any compromise with Mahant Shiv Kumar. The Court below, without obtaining the free consent of the appellant, proceeded to dispose of the suit by forcing the appellant to sign the proceedings, which he was not willing to do. He never consented to the passing of the decree on payment of Rs. 500 only to him, when he was claiming that he had spent Rs. 6,000 on the house in question.

9. Section 96 (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure says that no appeal shall lie from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties. The rule enunciated in this sub-section seems to have been based on the principle that a person, who gives his consent to a decree being passed against him, is later on estopped from challenging the same. Disputes between parties are either settled on the merits or on their consent. If the latter course is adopted then the parties are not allowed to challenge the decrees passed with their consent. In order to attract the provisions of this sub-section, it is, however, necessary that the decree ex facie must show that it was passed with the consent of both the parties to the suit. If that is not done, there is likelihood of a controversy arising before the appellate Court as to whether the decree passed by the Court below was with the consent of the parties or not, and for that purpose the appellant Court may have to either itself decide or ask the Court below to determine that matter after taking evidence. With a view to obviate this difficulty, it is, therefore, required that the decree under appeal itself must show that both the parties had agreed to it.

In a case like the present, when one of the parties to the litigation asserts before the appellate Court that his consent to the decree under appeal was not free, and it was obtained under coercion and he was not a willing party to the adjustment of the suit, the appellate Court obviously cannot decide the dispute raised by him on the material before it. For the disposal of that allegation, the appellate Court may have to permit the appellant to lead evidence in support thereof and, similarly, the respondent will also then have to be given an opportunity to rebut the evidence so produced. Such a procedure, in my opinion, will not be covered by Order 41 rule 27 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is the only provision under which additional evidence is produced before the appellate Court. In order to meet such a situation, the Legislature had, therefore, provided that no appeal would lie from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties. That, however, does not mean that the aggrieved party is left without a remedy. He can get rid of a consent decree on any of the grounds which renders an agreement ineffective, namely, fraud, misrepresentation, coercion, undue influence etc. This, in my opinion, can be done by bringing a regular suit where these matters would be thoroughly gone into after both the parties have led evidence thereon. The allegations made to raise issues which are entirely different from those in the main suit, and, being serious in nature, can be examined in a separate suit.

10. I am aware of the fact that certain authorities (see in this connection Aushootosh Chandra v. Tara Prasanna Roy, (1884) ILR 10 Cal 612, Rakhal Moni Dassi v. Adwyta Prosad Roy, (1903) ILR 30 Cal 613, Madhusudan Chakravarti v. Satishchandra Nag, AIR 1926 Cal 512; Fatmabai v. Sonabai, (1912) ILR 36 Bom 77, and Onkar Bhagwan v. Gamna Lak-haji & Co, AIR 1933 Bom 205, have also laid down that, apart from a separate suit, the aggrieved party can also file a review application or an application under Section 151 or 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the purpose before the Court that passed the decree.

11. In my opinion, the appellant cannot avail of those provisions. There is no ground for him for filing a review application, as the case would not be covered by the provisions of Order 47 rule 1, Code of Civil Procedure. He cannot say that he has discovered a new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed. He cannot also urge that there was some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record which calls for review of the decree. As regards the third ground mentioned in O. 47, R. 1, C. P. C. namely, "for any other sufficient reason", it has been held by the Privy Council in Chhajju Ram v. Neki, AIR 1922 PC 112, that this expression should be interpreted as meaning a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously. This ground also would, therefore, be not available to the aggrieved party. The case is not covered by the provisions of Section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure as well, because there was neither any clerical or arithmetical error nor any error arising from any accidental slip or omission in the decree. It would also not be proper to invoke the provisions of Section 151, Civil P. C., because the appellant could adequately get his grievances redressed by instituting a separate suit.

12. Coming to the decided cases on this subject, it is pointless to make a reference to a large number of them. I shall refer to a few.

13. First of all, there is the decision of the Privy Council in Zahirul-Said Alvi v. Lachhmi Narayan, AIR 1932 PC 251, where in the case of a consent decree, it refused to entertain an appeal or to consider the sufficiency or otherwise of the consent, as, according to it, the decree could only be set aside by substantive proceedings appropriate to that particular remedy. It may be mentioned that when this very case came before the Privy Council in the first instance, and that also is reported in AIR 1931 PC 107, it was urged before it that there had in fact been no consent to the decree, and, consequently, their Lordships of the Privy Council called for a report from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, being the Court which pronounced the decree in question, asking it to inform them whether or not the decree was in fact made by consent. Subsequently, when the requisite report was sent to the Privy Council to the effect that the decree appealed from was made with the consent of the parties, the appeal was held to be incompetent.

14. Learned counsel for the appellant submitted that since it was argued before the Privy Council that consent, as a matter of fact, had not been given, the Privy Council thereupon remitted the case to the Court below to verify that fact and then send its report. His argument was that in the instant case also, the appellant was contending that he had not given his free consent to the compromise in question and he was forced to do so by the Court below. For determining that matter, this Court should send the case back to the trial Court for giving a finding on this question, as was done by the Privy Council. In this connection, it could be pertinent to mention that the Privy Council had to call for a report from the Judicial Commissioner, because the decree in that case did not make reference to any consent of the parties. An application also was made before the Privy Council, supported by an affidavit, that there had in fact been no consent to the judgment under appeal. After referring to the judgment in some detail, their Lordships observed—

“Under ordinary circumstances, their Lordships would not hesitate to take the statements contained in this judgment as correct, and would refuse summarily such an application as is now made to them. But the circumstances in the present case are peculiar.”

After making reference to certain proceedings, they further observed—

“The record discloses nothing except the judgment set out above of 21st October. A formal decree of the same date was drawn up in the ordinary course which recites only the hearing of 5th October, makes no reference at all to the 13th or to any consent of parties, but proceeds to set aside the decree of the lower Court and in lieu thereof passes a decree in conformity with the effective terms of the judgment.”

Then again, they observed—

“Under these circumstances, which their Lordships have characterised not without reason as peculiar, it is impossible for them to accept without further question the affirmation by the judgment of the Judicial Commissioners that the decree they were about to pass was a decree by consent of parties. If it was so in fact, it clearly could not be challenged by way of appeal, and the certificate should have been refused.” Later on, in this very judgment, it was held:

“Their Lordships feel no doubt that where a decree, or any part of a decree, is passed by consent of parties, it should always so appear on the face of the decree when drawn up.”

15. In the instant case, however, the decree itself shows that it had been passed on the basis of a compromise, which was effective between the parties. That being so, according to the Privy Council decision, quoted above, no appeal is competent against such a decree. If the appellant says that his consent had been obtained by coercion and it was not a free consent, then the only remedy available to him is to get this decree set aside by means of a regular suit.

16. Then there is the decision of Rankin C. J. and Ghose J. in J. C. Galstaun v. Pramatha Nath Roy, AIR 1929 Cal 470. There, it was held—

“Now, it appears to me that if a party desires to have a consent decree amended or vacated upon the ground that it was fraudulently procured, his proper course and indeed his only course, is to proceed by separate suit for the purpose. The matter is certainly grave enough to deserve a separate suit. The questions which have to be decided are entirely different from those at issue in the original suit. The relief sought is a very well recognised form of relief appropriate to a suit. In English practice it is old law that a fresh action is necessary to set aside a consent decree upon the ground of fraud and that such relief is not properly sought in an action of review. It appears to me that Section 152 of the Code which is confined to clerical or arithmetical mistakes and to an accidental slip or omission, is based upon this general principle, and that Sec. 151 is in no way intended as a violation of that principle. If the relief can be properly obtained in a separate suit, it does not appear that there is any justification for invoking Section 151 at all.” Later on, in this very judgment, it was observed—

“Now, I desire to say that in my opinion, it is not competent under Order 47 to obtain a review of a consent decree on the ground that the consent decree was obtained by fraud. It appears to me that before such a doctrine can be taken as authorised by the Code, it is very necessary to lay one's finger upon some enactment which is clearly intended to make so large and inconvenient an exception to the general principles which govern this matter. Rule 1, Order 47, after speaking of a case where a party has discovered new and important matter which was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed and of mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, introduces the words "or for any other sufficient reason." In AIR 1922 P.C. 112, the Judicial Committee had occasion to point out that these words were not unlimited and must be taken to point to a reason which is sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those mentioned in the rule. It appears to me that if mistake or error is prima facie intended to be beyond the scope of the rule unless the mistake or error be apparent on the face of the record, it is curious to say the least of it, that a party should employ this procedure for the purpose of making out a contentious case of fraud."

17. In U Po Htu v. Ma Than Yin, AIR 1936 Rang. 389, it was held that a review of a consent decree on the ground that it was obtained by fraud, or by mistake, cannot be had, and the consent decree can be set aside only by means of a separate suit.

18. Learned counsel for the appellant, in the first instance, referred to a Bench decision of this Court in Amarnath Radha Ram v. Smt. Malan w/o. L. Ram Chand, AIR 1954 Punj. 259. In that case, a suit was compromised in the trial Court. At first, two counsel representing all the defendants made a statement and then, in the presence of the plaintiff, her counsel stated that he was in agreement with the statements of the two counsel for the defendants and prayed that orders might be passed accordingly. The plaintiff's thumb impression as well as the signature of her counsel were obtained on the statement. As one of the defendants was a minor, the sanction of the Court was obtained to the compromise as being in the interests of the minor. The Court then passed an order giving effect to the compromise based on the statements of the parties. Thereafter, the plaintiff filed an appeal under Order 43, Rule 1(m) of the Code of Civil Procedure in this Court, against the order recording the compromise saying inter alia that she had been tricked into the compromise, the terms of which had not been explained to her. This appeal came up for hearing before a Single Judge of this Court and one of the objections raised was that no appeal lay against the order of the lower Court. This objection was repelled by the learned Single Judge and against that decision, a Letters Patent Appeal was filed, which was being disposed of by the Division Bench in question. While accepting the appeal and holding that the learned Single Judge was in error in overruling that objection, Falshaw, J., with whom G. D. Khosla J. concurred, observed:

"Apart from any authorities it seems to me to be clearly implied by the provisions of Order 43, Rule 1(m) which gives the right of appeal against an order under Rule 3 of Order 23 recording or refusing to record an agreement, compromise or satisfaction, that an appealable order under Order 23, Rule 3, must be done in which there has been a contest between the parties in the trial Court regarding whether the parties had settled their differences, and if a compromise has been recorded without any such contest, the proper remedy of the aggrieved party is to approach the Court and allege, as for instance in the present case, that the compromise was consented to because its terms had not been properly explained or understood, and if the Court then refuses to take any action and maintains its order recording the compromise it seems to me that the only remedy to the party concerned is to challenge the compromise by means of a separate suit."

It is pertinent to mention that this was not a case of an appeal against a consent decree under Section 96(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was an appeal under Order 43, Rule 1(m) of the Code against an order recording a compromise under Rule 3 of Order 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Order 43, Rule 1(m) specifically says that an appeal would lie from an order under Rule 3 of Order 23, recording or refusing to record an agreement, compromise or satisfaction. On the other hand, Section 96(3) of the Code clearly bars an appeal against a consent decree.

19. During the course of this judgment, Falshaw J. observed that, in any case, he preferred the reasoning of Murphy and Nanavati JJ. in AIR 1933 Bom. 205, to that of Wadsworth J. in Ramanarayana Rao v. Ramkrishna Rao, AIR 1936 Mad. 385. Falshaw J. had also given the following observations of the Bombay Division Bench:—

"No appeal lay against an order recording a compromise where there was no contest at the time between the parties regarding the recording of the compromise, the proper remedy of the aggrieved party being either to appeal against the decree passed on the compromise or to reopen the matter in the trial Court either by way of review or otherwise."

20. On the strength of the remarks of Falshaw J. learned counsel for the appellant submitted that the Division Bench of this Court was of the view that an appeal was competent against a decree passed on the basis of a compromise even when there was no contest at the time between the parties regarding the recording of the compromise.

21. In the first place, the aforesaid Division Bench was not dealing with a case of an appeal against a decree based on the consent of the parties under Section 96(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Secondly, the Division Bench of the Bombay High Court, the reasoning of which was preferred by Falshaw J. to that of the learned Single Judge of the Madras High Court, had not held that an appeal was competent against a decree passed in terms of the compromise where there had been no contest in the Court below regarding the recording of the compromise. They had, as a matter of fact, followed an earlier decision of the Division Bench of that Court in Appeal No. 34 of 1923, D/- 29th July, 1925 (Punj. & Har.), by Macleod C. J. and Madgaykar J. With regard to that earlier decision, Murphy J. observed—

"The ratio decidendi of that case, which binds us, is that where there has been no contest in the Court below, but an application for compromise has been put in and recorded and a decree passed in its terms, no appeal lies, either against the decree itself, an appeal therefrom being barred under Section 96(3), or against the order under Order 43, Rule 1(m), since there are no materials for an adjudication. What the learned Chief Justice meant was that before there can be an appeal under Order 43, Rule 1(m), there must have been some contest in the original Court, a contest which might be brought about, conceivably by one party alleging that there was a compromise and the other not, or, where the circumstances are similar to those in the present case, where one of the parties is disowning the authority of his agent or pleaded to compromise for him, either by an application for a review, or under Section 151, Civil Procedure Code, which would open the whole matter and allow an adjudication from which an appeal might lie. A direct appeal was not possible on the facts in that case, and in the present one as there was and is no material before the Court on which a decision can be come to. The ruling is of a Division Bench and binds us."

22. So it would be seen that the earlier Division Bench had clearly laid down that an appeal against such a decree was barred under Section 96(3), Code of Civil Procedure. It is true that during the course of the judgment, Murphy J. did observe that the proper course in a case where the order for making a decree was passed practically simultaneously with the one recording the compromise, and where the compromise was challenged on the ground that none had really been arrived at, would be to challenge the decree, either by an appeal or by an application for review, or one under Section 151, Code of Civil Procedure in the original Court, when the matter could be gone into on the merits. But the learned Judge had also observed that it was not necessary to decide that point, because that appeal was concluded by the previous decision of the Division Bench of that Court. Following that ruling, they had held that no appeal was competent against the order recording the compromise.

23. Counsel then relied on a decision of A. N. Grover J. in Mohinder Singh v. Smt. Rajinder Kaur, 1966 Cur. L. J. 91 (Punj.). In that case, the learned Judge merely followed the Division Bench authority in Amarnath Radha Ram's case, by which he was bound.

24. Reference was then made by the learned counsel to a Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Jagdish Narain v. Rasul Ahmad, AIR 1952 All. 29, where it was held:—

"When the consent upon the basis of which a decree has been passed by the Court is itself challenged in the Court of appeal, it cannot be taken for granted that the decree was a consent decree. A consent decree must mean a decree validly consented to either by the party himself or by his duly authorised agent. If the question raised is that the agent who consented to the decree was not duly authorised, the question has to be decided and it cannot be prejudged by holding that because on the face of it there was a consent decree, no appeal lies to the appellate Court."

25. In this case, the counsel had entered into a compromise without any authority from his client and it was held that such a compromise was unlawful. The High Court of Allahabad has held in some cases that an appeal lies against a consent decree when the compromise on which it is based, is attacked as unlawful, as for example, when a compromise is entered into on behalf of a minor without leave of the Court under Order 32, R. 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure or without sanction of the Central Board, which is required under Section 51 of the U. P. Muslim Waqf Act, 1936, or when a compromise is entered into by a counsel without authority. If the learned Judges in Jagdish Narain's case, AIR 1952 All. 29, intended to hold that an appeal lay against a consent decree on the ground that the consent of the aggrieved party was obtained by fraud or coercion, then I am, I say so with great respect not inclined to agree with their view.

26. Counsel then relied on a Full Bench decision of the Oudh Chief Court in Mohammad Raza v. Ram Saroop, AIR 1929 Oudh 385 (FB). One of the two questions referred to the Full Bench for decision in that case was:

"Is it open to a party to a suit to appeal from the decree passed in the suit on the basis of a compromise purporting to be on his behalf when the person verifying or admitting the said compromise had no authority to enter into it on his behalf?"

27. Stuart C. J., with whom Raza J. concurred, answered that question in the affirmative, but, I say so with respect, without giving any reason therefor. Wazir Hasan J., however, observed as under:—

"On the first of these questions the argument of the learned counsel for the applicant is that having regard to the provisions of sub-section (3), Section 96, Civil Procedure Code, an appeal from the decree passed in this case being a decree with the consent of the parties was excluded by those provisions. The argument in answer is that having regard to the facts which exist behind the decree and the circumstances in which it came to be passed the decree in question in this case must be treated as a decree not passed with the consent of the parties. Speaking for myself I am inclined to accept the argument advanced on behalf of the applicant. It is admitted that the decree on the face of it is a decree passed with the consent of the parties. It is true that if we are to enter into the merits of the circumstances in which the decree in question came to be passed it might be found that the decree is a nullity; but I should think that the proper procedure for discovering the nullity or otherwise will be to initiate proceedings under Section 151 or by way of review of judgment. But if the decree ex facie is a consent decree it seems to me that an appeal is barred. It appears to me to be wholly immaterial as to whether the decree can be shown by proof of circumstances aliunde to be not a consent decree. But when it is shown, it is only then that it would cease to be a decree without consent. The present proceedings are clearly intended to bring about the last mentioned result. The proceedings may fail or may succeed. If they succeed the decree will only then cease to be a consent decree.

In the present case, however, it is not necessary for me to commit myself definitely to the view stated above. I will assume in answering the first question that an appeal could be preferred and would, therefore, answer that question in the affirmative."

28. It would, therefore, be seen that Wazir Hasan J. was of the view that if the decree ex facie was a consent decree, an appeal against it was barred. The other two Judges did not give any reasons for their decision.

29. In view of what I have said above, I would hold that the decree passed by the Court below in the instant case, being based on a compromise arrived at with the consent of the parties, is not appealable under Section 96(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appeal filed by Mahant Kewal Krishan was, therefore, not competent. The same is, accordingly, dismissed on that ground. The parties are, however, left to bear their own costs.

30. H. R. SODHI, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT:— Bishan Dass Chela
Kaul Dass and Brahm Parkash Chela

Tara Dass brought a suit under Sec. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure against Mahant Tara Dass and others for declaration that the alienation made by Tara Dass, defendant No. 1, by way of gift in favour of Arjan Muni, defendant No. 2, of the whole land in village Sibian through Mutation No. 3987 dated 22-5-1954 was illegal being beyond his powers and was against the purpose of the religious trust of which Tara Dass defendant was the trustee and was, therefore, void.
The plaintiffs also prayed for declaration that the alienation of 96 bighas & 9 biswas of land described in the heading of the plaint made by defendant No. 2, Arjan Muni, in favour of Gurbux Singh and others by a registered sale deed dated 22-5-1958 for Rs. 20,000/- was beyond the powers of defendant No. 2 and was without legal necessity and consideration and was, therefore, void.

The plaintiffs also prayed for the removal of Shri Tara Dass, defendant No. 1, from the Mahantship of the Dera Udasian Sibian on the ground that the alienations in dispute were acts of mismanagement.
The plaintiffs further prayed for possession of the property including the land sold to Gurbux Singh and others. This suit had been filed after obtaining the consent in writing of the Advocate General. On 7-8-1962, the suit was decreed by the trial Court in terms of the prayers made in the plaint except that the decree for possession was not granted. The defendants filed an appeal which was heard by Shri Surinder Singh, Additional District Judge, Bhatinda and was dismissed by his order dated 25-10-1963. This regular second appeal is directed against the decree passed by the learned Additional District Judge, Bhatinda.

2. The facts are that there is a Dera of Udasi Sadhus in village Sibian which was founded by Bawa Amar Dass, grand Guru of Bawa Hira Dass for a religious public purpose. Initially only 12 Ghamaons of land belonged to the Dera but later on Mahant Hira Dass acquired further land for the Dera and dedicated the entire property as a public trust property for religious purposes. There was also some land acquired in village Kotra and by his will dated Har 18, 1988 Bk. =Ist July, 1931
A.D. registered on the next day, he demised the property of the Dera situate at village Kotra in favour of his first Chela Roop Ram giving him all the rights of a proprietor without any restriction as to alienation etc. There is no dispute about this land in this suit. The land situate in village Sibian was given to Mahant Tara Dass who was the second Chela of Mahant Hira Dass for the purposes of management and carrying out the objects of the Dera. By this will, Mahant Tara Dass was appointed Mahant of the Dera after the testator on the basis of his ability and learning and because he was fully conversant with the customs and rituals of the Bhek (sect); he was directed to manage all the property for the benefit and improvement of the Dera and he was not entitled to sell the Dera property for personal use.

The property could be alienated only for the benefit of the Dera and any sale in contravention of this direction was to be void. In case Tara Dass became a person of bad character, the respectables of the Panchayat were given the right to remove him from Mahantship and to appoint Kaul Dass in his place. After the death of Hira Dass, Tara Dass came into possession of the property and through Mutation No. 3987 dated 22-5-1964 he gifted the whole of the land of the Dera Sibian measuring 244 bighas & 10 biswas to his Chela Arjan Muni, defendant No. 2, which was contrary to the directions given in the will of Hira Dass. Arjan Muni in turn sold 96 bighas and 6 biswas of land out of the above land to Gurbux Singh and Jang Singh, sons of Hardit Singh (one half) and Gurbachan Singh and Gurbux Singh, sons of Bhag Singh (the other half) for Rs. 20,000/- by means of a registered sale deed dated 22-5-1958. This sale by Arjan Muni, according to the plaintiffs, was void and did not affect the rights of the Dera.

3. The defendants resisted the suit and stated that no will had been executed by Mahant Hira Dass nor did Bawa Amar Dass found any Dera for religious or other purposes nor did Hira Dass create any religious trust by virtue of his will; Tara Dass had got the land from Hira Dass as a Chela and he had the right to make a gift thereof to Arjan Muni who in turn was within his rights to sell it to Gurbux Singh and others and, as such, the sale in favour of Gurbux Singh and others was valid.

4. On the pleadings of the parties, following issues were framed by the learned trial Court:—

(1) Whether Bishan Dass is the Chela of Kaul Dass and Brahm Parkash Chela of Tara Dass? O.P.

(2) Whether Dera Udasian in village Sibian was founded by Bawa Amar Dass, grand Guru of Hira Dass, for a religious purpose? O.P.

(3) Whether initially only 12 Ghamaons of land was the property of the said Dera? O.P.

(4) Whether Mahant Hira Dass, guru of defendant No. 1, acquired land in village Sibian, Kotra and in tehsil Qasur for the purpose of Dera as religious trust property? O.P.

(5) Whether property at village Bam-biha was allotted in lieu of property left in tehsil Qasur? O.P.

(6) Whether Bawa Hira Dass created a religious trust in respect of his entire property? O.P.

(7) Whether Hira Dass on 18-3-1988 Bk. made a will of his property except the property in village Kotra in favour of defendant No. 1 with a condition that the property would remain as a trust property and that Tara Dass would have no power to alienate the same? O.P.

(8) Whether Tara Dass was appointed trustee of the said property? O.P.

(9) Whether Tara Dass was the owner of land measuring 244 bighas and 10 biswas situated in the area of village Sibian and as such the gift of the same made by him in favour of Arjan Muni defendant was valid? O.D.

(10) Whether the alienation of land measuring 96 bighas and 6 biswas out of the said land made by Arjan Muni in favour of defendant No. 3 was void and as such is liable to be set aside? O.D.

(11) Whether Mahant Tara Dass was guilty of mismanagement and liable to be removed from the Mahantship of the said Dera? O.P.

(12) Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to get possession of the said land alienated in favour of defendant No. 3? O.P.

(13) Whether the plaintiffs are grand chelas of Mahant Hira Dass and members of the Bhek and as such are entitled to sue in a representative capacity? O.P.

(14) Whether the suit is within time? O.P.

(15) Whether the suit is properly valued for the purpose of court-fee? O. P.

(16) Whether the plaintiffs should have mentioned in their plaint the property of the said Dera from which Mahant Tara Dass is sought to be removed as a Mahant? If so, what is its effect? O.D.

(16-A) Whether the suit under Sec. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not maintainable against the alienees of the suit property? O.D. No. 3.

(17) Relief.

The learned trial Court decided all the issues except Nos. 5, 12 and 16-A in favour of the plaintiffs and as a consequence thereof, decreed the suit as prayed for except as regards the restoration of the possession of the suit land.

5. In appeal, before the learned Additional District Judge, the following three points were argued by the learned counsel for the defendants-appellants:—

(1) The copy of the will (P. 2) is not admissible in evidence without proper proof of the execution of the original will;

(2) Even if the execution of the will (P. 2) is proved, there is no public trust created by the said deed; and

(3) Tara Dass was fully competent to gift the property in dispute to Arjan Muni and hence the sale by the latter was valid.

The learned lower appellate Court after an exhaustive study of the case law held that the copy of the will Exhibit P. 2 being a copy obtained from the office of the Sub-Registrar was admissible in evidence without proving the execution of its original; that the trust in question was a public, religious and a charitable trust and not a private one and Mahant Tara Dass was not competent to gift the land of the Dera in favour of Arjan Muni. As a necessary corollary the sale of the land made by Arjan Muni in favour of Gurbux Singh and others was held to be void and ineffective.

6. In appeal before me, Shri Jagan Nath Kaushal, the learned counsel for the appellants, has argued the same three points. For point No. (1), the learned counsel has relied upon Sections 63, 65, 67, 68 and 72 of the Evidence Act and has emphasised that the secondary evidence can be given of the existence, condition or contents of a document in the cases mentioned in Section 65 of the Evidence Act and that the proof of the execution of the original document is not dispensed with. The counsel submits that the secondary evidence cannot be placed on a higher footing than primary evidence in which case the original document, if produced, has to be proved by evidence by calling the scribe, the executant or the attesting witnesses thereof or by any other mode prescribed by the law. According to the learned counsel, it is only under Section 90 of the Evidence Act that the proof of the execution of the original document purporting or proved to be 30 years old which is produced from any custody which the Court in the particular case considers proper, the due execution of the document is presumed and in no other case. The learned counsel has cited judgments of various High Courts which I proceed to notice.

7. The first judgment cited by the learned counsel is that of Shadi Lal, C. J. and Fforde, J. in Chuha Mal v. Rahim Bakhsh, AIR 1924 Lah. 303, in which it was observed as under:—

"There is, however, no evidence to prove the execution of the original sale deed of which P. 5 is a copy. It is urged that the plaintiff could not prove the execution of a document which was not produced before the Court, but we do not think that the difficulty, if any, should relieve the party from the duty which the law casts upon him. The scribe, to whose evidence our attention has been invited, only states that the original deed might have been executed by Matu, but that ambiguous statement cannot be treated as proof of the execution of the document."

The sale-deed in this case does not appear to have been a registered document.

8. Reference is then made to the judgment of Dalal, J., in Sheikh Karimullah v. Gudar Koeri, AIR 1925 All. 56, in which the learned Judge held that:—

"a certified copy is sufficient secondary evidence under Section 63 of the existence, conditions and contents of the deed but not of its execution, which must be proved as required under Section 68." The document in this case also appears to have been not registered.

9. The next case relied upon by the learned counsel is the judgment of Chaturvedi, J., in Brajraj Singh v. Yogendrapal Singh, AIR 1952 Madh. Bha. 146, in which it was held that:—

"a copy of a will is not a sufficient evidence of the fact of adoption recited in the will. It is necessary for a party to prove the execution of the original. A certified copy is sufficient secondary evidence under Section 63 of the existence, conditions and contents of the deed but not of its execution which must be proved as required under Section 68 of the Evidence Act and that the evidence of the scribe or of an attesting witness was necessary for proving the will and this evidence has been lacking in this case."

10. In Gulab Chand v. Sheo Karan Lal Seth, AIR 1964 Pat. 45, a Division Bench of the Patna High Court held that the secondary evidence should be given to prove the existence, condition or contents of a document and nothing more beyond that. If a document is alleged to have been signed by any person, the signature must be proved to be in the handwriting of that person.

11. These cases do not relate to copies of registered documents obtained from the office of the Sub-Registrar or Registrar under the Indian Registration Act and, therefore, are not of any help to the learned counsel for the appellants. He has, however, cited some judgments relating to registered documents, first of which is the judgment of Jai Lal, J., in Kartar Singh v. Didar Singh, AIR 1934 Lah. 282, in which the learned Judge observed as under:—

"The proviso (to Section 68 of the Indian Evidence Act) recently added makes it unnecessary to call an attesting witness in the case of such a document, except a will, if the document is registered unless its execution is expressly denied by the person by whom it purports to have been executed. From this the counsel asks me to infer that according to law as it now exists it is not necessary to prove by any evidence the execution of a registered document. I cannot accede to this suggestion. Section 68 merely provides a special rule relating to the proof of documents required to be attested. This proviso, therefore, is merely an exception to that special rule. It is not intended to override the general provisions of the law as to the proof of documents relied upon by the parties." This case related to the original sale-deed and does not take into consideration the provisions of Section 60(2) of the Indian Registration Act and is, therefore, of no help.

12. The next case relied upon by the learned counsel is a Division Bench judgment of Madras High Court (Subba Rao and Panchapakesa Ayyar JJ.) in Gadey Venkata Ratnam v. Gadey Sitaramayya, AIR 1950 Mad. 634 and he has drawn my attention to para 6 of the judgment in which it was held that in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Basant Singh v. Brijraj Saran Singh, AIR 1935 P.C. 132, "the view expressed by this Court in Subrahmanya Somayajulu v. Y. Seethayya, AIR 1923 Mad. 1 (FB), that the presumption under Section 90, Evidence Act, with regard to documents 30 years old arises in the case of copies as well as originals, and that if a copy is proved to be a true copy a presumption may be made of the genuineness of the original itself, is no longer good law, though Mr. Somasundaram argues that it is good law. It follows that the defendant must prove the execution of the original will by Venkataratnam in some way known to law, at least by approved circumstantial evidence". The learned counsel in that case had contended that the lower Court had erred in presuming the execution of the original will by Venkataratnam in a sound and disposing state of mind from the production of a copy Exhibit D. 8 more than 30 years old.

13. The next case relied upon by the learned counsel is Ketharaju Rajeshwari v. Kanthamraju Varalakshamma, AIR 1964 Andh. Pra. 284, the head-note of which is as under:—

"Mere production of a certified copy of a document more than thirty years old is not sufficient to raise a presumption under Section 90 of the Evidence Act regarding its genuineness or execution although the certified copy may be used to prove the contents of the document.

Where the document is registered then although its mere registration may not by itself constitute sufficient proof of the execution of the document, in view of Sections 57 and 60 of the Registration Act the certified copy and the certificate issued by the Registrar, would constitute sufficient evidence to prove the contents of the document 'and be also to some extent an evidence of the execution of the document'. It may be that proof of admission of execution before the Registrar may not satisfy completely the requirements of Section 67 of the Evidence Act which requires that the signature of the executant must be proved to be in his handwriting. But it cannot be argued that admission of signature before the Registrar cannot in any case form an evidence of the execution of the document'. If apart from the admission incorporated in the certificate of the Registrar under Section 60(2) of the Registration Act, there is other evidence to corroborate the admission, the execution of the document can be considered as proved."

The sentences underlined (here in ' ') by me clearly show that the certificate issued by the Registrar is to some extent an evidence of the execution of the document and that the admission of signature before the Registrar by the executant can form an evidence of the execution of the document. This judgment, therefore, does not help the learned counsel for the appellants.

14. The judgment of G. C. Das, J., in Subudhi Pachan v. Raghu Bhuvan, AIR 1962 Orissa 40, has then been referred to by the learned counsel in which the learned Judge observed as under in para 8 of the report:—

"By reason of the admission made by the first defendant of the genuineness of the certified copy within the meaning of Section 65(b) of the Evidence Act, the certified copy became admissible in evidence under Section 65. By reason of Section 57(5) of the Registration Act, the said copy becomes admissible for the purpose of proving the contents of the original document itself. The certified copy is also admissible under Sec. 65 (e) of the Evidence Act. Secondary evidence may be given if the original is a public document within the meaning of Section 74. The definition of a public document under Section 74 takes in public records kept in any State of private documents. The Registrar's office certainly keeps a public record of all sale-deeds registered in that office. Section 76 enables an officer having the custody of a public document to give a certified copy. The certified copy is therefore admissible under Section 65(e) and (f) of the Evidence Act. The certified copy is therefore secondary evidence of the public record of the mortgage deed kept in the Registrar's office.

Again by invoking Section 57(5) the said copy becomes admissible for the purpose of proving the contents of the original document. The certified copy of the suit mortgage deed is admissible in evidence. But this will not dispense with the proof of the execution of the same. Assuming this decision to be correct, which I have no doubt that it is so, the certified copy of the mortgage-bond dated March 26, 1907 may be admissible in evidence as secondary evidence but that does not dispense with the proof of actual execution."

Reliance in that case was placed on a judgment of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in the case of Padmanabhachari Annamraju Sitapathirao, (1954) 2 Mad. L. J. (Andhra) 75.

15. The learned counsel has then brought to my notice a Division Bench judgment of the Bombay High Court (Gajendragadkar and Shah, JJ.) in Kashi-bai Martand v. Vinayak Ganesh, AIR 1956 Bom. 65, in which it was held that a copy of a document of mortgage which has been admitted under Section 65 of the Evidence Act as secondary evidence and is produced from proper custody and is over thirty years old, the signatures authenticating the copy may be presumed to be genuine under Section 90. Even so, under Section 90, when a copy is produced, the presumption cannot be made that the signature, handwriting, execution or attestation of the original document were in order. This part of the decision of the learned Judges does not concern us but their Lordships in para 7 of the report held as under:—

"In the case of a certified copy of a registered document, however, the party would be justified in contending that under the provisions of Section 60, sub-section (2), Registration Act, it would be competent to the Court to hold that the execution of the document had been admitted by the executant before the Sub-Registrar. That is the endorsement, which the certified copy produced bears and the said endorsement must be given its due legal effect having regard to the provisions of S. 60, sub-section (2)."

This observation of the learned Judges goes against the contention of the learned counsel for the appellants and helps the other side.

16. The last authority relied upon by the learned counsel is Naresh Chandra Bose v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1955 Cal. 398, in which it was held that by simply producing the registers of the Registration Office without calling for the original documents from the custody of the persons in whose favour they are executed, the documents cannot be admitted in evidence and that the signatures of the executant of the document must be proved. Mere production of a document is not by itself sufficient proof of its execution and unless there is formal proof of its execution, its admission in evidence is improper and illegal.

17. It will be observed that in some of the judgments cited by the learned counsel for the appellants, it has been held that the certificate of the Registrar, on a registered deed is some proof of execution of the document and it cannot be said that by the certificate of the Registrar, the document cannot be said to have been proved at all. There are two Division Bench judgments of this Court which are directly against the contention of the learned counsel for the appellants. The first is the judgment of Bishan Narain and Chopra, JJ. in Mehtab Singh v. Amrik Singh, ILR (1957) Punj. 418= (AIR 1957 Punj. 146), and the relevant observations which are at pages 422-423 (of ILR Punj) = (at p. 148 of AIR) are as under:—

"I shall first deal with the point relating to the execution of the will of 1901. The original will has not been produced. The lower appellate Court has held that it was in possession of Mst. Bhagwani and is being withheld by the plaintiff, and that in any case it is lost and, therefore, secondary evidence is admissible. The learned counsel for the appellant has not contested the correctness of this finding. The defendants have produced a certified copy of the will which was obtained from the Registration Office. This will is more than 30 years old but production of a copy cannot be considered to be sufficient to justify the presumption of due execution of the original will under the provisions of Section 90, Indian Evidence Act (AIR 1935 PC 132). It is, therefore, necessary to see in the present case if there is any evidence on the record to justify the lower Courts' finding that the execution of the original will has been proved. The copy produced is a certified copy of the original will. It has been produced by the registration clerk from his office. It bears the endorsement of the Sub-Registrar which records that Jawahar Singh, whom he personally knew, admitted before him that he had written and completed the will and that the thumb marked it in his presence. This endorsement under Section 60 of the Registration Act is admissible for the purposes of proving that the executant admitted the execution of the will that was produced before him. The will was made about 50 years ago and I would consider this endorsement as sufficient evidence in support of the finding that Jawahar Singh in fact executed it. In this case, however, there is the statement of Bishan Das, Sub-Registrar who has deposed in Court that he had made the endorsement on the will, and that he knew Jawahar Singh previously who had admitted its execution before him. He has also stated on oath that Jawahar Singh was in a disposing mind and the will had been read out to him. This evidence to my mind conclusively proves execution of the will and disposing mind of the testator. The lower Courts have also come to the same conclusion. The will is a natural one and is attested by two witnesses. There is nothing suspicious about it. It has been acted upon and the widows took possession of the property in accordance with the directions given in the will. It was only in 1937 that Mst. Bhagwan Kaur decided to ignore it. I am, therefore, clear in my mind that Jawahar Singh did in fact execute the will and got it registered in 1901." It is true that in this case Bishan Das, Sub-Registrar had been produced as a witness and he deposed that the certificate made by him was correct.

18. The second judgment is by Daya Krishan Mahajan and Prem Chand Pandit, JJ., in Arya Pritinidhi Sabha, Punjab v. Dev Raj, ILR (1962) 2 Punj. 915=(AIR 1963 Punj. 208), in which after considering the case-law on the subject, the learned Judges held:—

"So far as the execution of the original will is concerned, it is proved by the endorsement of the Registrar. That endorsement leaves no manner of doubt that the will was executed by Girdhari Lal to whom it was read over and who admitted its contents to be correct. Therefore, a certified copy of that will would be admissible in evidence in view of the fact that the original is not forthcoming and is being withheld by the respondents".

19. The learned counsel for the respondents has also relied upon the following observations of the Privy Council in M. Ihtishan Ali v. Jamna Prasad, AIR 1922 PC 56 at page 58:—

"It is, no doubt, not very likely that such a deed would be lost, but in ordinary cases, if the witness in whose custody the deed should be, deposed to its loss, unless there is some motive suggested for his being untruthful, his evidence would be accepted as sufficient to let in secondary evidence of the deed. And if in addition he was not cross-examined, this result would follow all the more. There is no doubt that the deed was executed, for it was registered, and registered in a regular way, and it is the duty of the registrar, before registering, to examine the grantor, or some one who, he is satisfied, is the proper representative of the grantor, before he allows the deed to be registered."

From this observation of their Lordships of the Privy Council, the learned counsel submits that in the instant case, the will was duly registered by the Registrar and it should be held that it was duly registered by that officer after satisfying himself that the person presenting and admitting its execution was the person who had executed it.

20. The next case relied upon by the learned counsel for the respondents is the Division Bench judgment of Lahore High Court (Fforde and Bhide, JJ.) in Piara v. Fattu, AIR 1929 Lah. 711, the head-note of which states:—

"The registration of a document is a solemn act to be performed in the presence of a competent official appointed to act as Registrar, whose duty it is to attend to the parties during the registration and see that the proper persons are present, are competent to act, and are identified to his satisfaction; and all things done before him in his official capacity and verified by his signature will be presumed to be done duly and in order. Therefore the certificate endorsed on the sale deed by the Registering officer under Section 60 is a relevant piece of evidence for proving its execution."

In view of this decision, the learned counsel submits that the certificate by the Registering Officer is a relevant piece of evidence for proving the execution of the will in the instant case.

21. Lokur, J. in Pandappa Mahalingappa v. Shivalingappa Murteppa, AIR 1946 Bom. 193, held:—

"It is true that when a certified copy is allowed to be produced under Section 65, no presumption can be drawn under Section 90 as to the genuineness or execution of the original and the Court should not admit a document merely on the ground that it is a certified copy of a document more than thirty years old and should call for proof of the execution of the document. But when the document is registered, such proof is to be found in the certified copy itself. The deed being registered, the certified copy bears the necessary endorsements of the Sub-Registrar before whom the executant acknowledged the execution and was duly identified. Sections 58, 59 and 60, Registration Act, provide that the facts mentioned in the endorsements may be proved by those endorsements, provided the provisions of Section 60 have been complied with.

Hence, where a registered mortgage-deed more than thirty years old is lost, the certified copy produced under Section 65 is admissible in evidence."

22. A Division Bench of the Mysore High Court (Balakrishnaiya and Mallappa, JJ.) in Huthegowda v. Chennigowda, AIR 1953 Mys. 49, held after discussing the case-law that evidence that a document was duly registered is some evidence of its execution by the person by whom it purports to have been executed and that the lower appellate Court was right in regarding the copies of the two registered documents as some evidence of the genuineness of their originals.

23. The last judgment to be noticed is by Govinda Menon, J., in Karuppanna Gounder v. Kolandaswami Gounder, AIR 1954 Mad. 486, the head-note of which is in these words:—

"When once the case for the introduction of secondary evidence is made out, certified copy got from the Registrar's office can be admitted under Section 57, sub-section (5) of the Registration Act, without other proof than the Registrar's certificate of the correctness of the copy and shall be taken as a true copy. As the certified copy obtained from a Registrar's office is admissible under Section 57 (5), Registration Act, for the purpose of proving the contents of the original documents, the mere production of such copy, without any further oral evidence to support it, would be enough to show what the original document contained."

24. The judgments relied upon by the learned counsel for the respondents certainly support his contention that there was no necessity to produce any evidence to prove the execution of the will by Mahant Hira Dass and that the certificate of the Registering Officer on the will was sufficient proof of the execution of the will and its contents. The learned counsel for the respondents has then submitted that Bihan Dass, appellant, appeared as P.W. 6 and stated in his examination-in-chief that Mahant Hira Dass executed a will in favour of Tara Dass and through that will, Tara Dass had been made the Manager of the property. The witness stated that he was living in those days in the Dera. In cross-examination, he stated that Hira Dass had acquired all the property for the purposes of the Dera and the portion of the will (P. 2) marked 'A' to 'A' had been correctly recorded. This evidence of P.W. 6 proves the execution of the will, copy of which is Exhibit P. 2. Tara Dass, defendant, came in the witness-box as D. W. 8 and stated that he had got the land from his Guru, Hira Dass and that he did not know whether Hira Dass had executed any will in his favour. He then denied that Hira Dass had executed any will in his favour and stated that Hira Dass had given him this property in the capacity of a Chela. He had mortgaged a part of it because he needed money for the purposes of the Dera.

Apart from the evidence of Bihan Dass, there is circumstantial evidence to show that the will, copy of which is Exhibit P. 2, had been executed by Mahant Hira Dass. It had been held in AIR 1950 Mad. 634, that the execution of the original will can also be proved by approved circumstantial evidence. The strong circumstances leading to the conclusion in favour of the execution of the will are first that Roop Ram took possession of the land in village Kotra as a full owner without any restriction on his right to alienate which was only in accordance with the will. The second circumstance is that Tara Dass mortgaged a part of the land for the purposes of the Dera and the third circumstance is that his assertion that Hira Dass had given him land as a Chela is not proved by any evidence of mutation etc. If Hira Dass had given him the land as a Chela in his life-time, Tara Dass would certainly have completed his title by some deed or mutation recorded in the revenue records. No such evidence has been produced.

25. For the reasons given above, I hold that the copy of the will (Exhibit P. 2) has been properly admitted into evidence.

26. On the second point, the contents of the will make it abundantly clear that Hira Dass had created a public trust for religious purposes with regard to the property in dispute. The Dera had been founded by Bawa Amar Dass, and Tara Dass had been made the Manager of the Dera along with its properties for carrying out the objects of the Dera and effecting improvements therein. He had been selected because of his ability and learning and in addition because he was practising as a Hakim. The land which had been given to Roop Ram in village Kotra had been given in full ownership whereas the land in village Sibian was only put under management of Mahant Tara Dass and the Panchayat was given the right to remove him and appoint Kaul Dass in case he became a bad character. He could not alienate the property of the Dera except for the purposes of the Dera itself. It is thus clear that a public trust for religious purposes had been created by this will by Mahant Hira Dass. The second point is also decided against the defendants-appellants.

27. In view of the contents of the will, the third point has also to be decided against the defendants-appellants. According to the will, Tara Dass was not competent to alienate the property of the trust except for the purposes of the trust and he could certainly not make a gift thereof in favour of his Chela Arjan Muni.

28. For the reasons given above, this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

ORDER OF REFERENCE

R. S. NARULA & D. K. MAHAJAN, JJ.— The co-option of respondents Nos. 9 to 14 as members of the Panchayat Samiti Khuian Sarwar, has been questioned by the petitioners in this case. Petitioner No. 1 claims to have been elected as a primary member of the said Panchayat Samiti. Petitioner No. 2 was a Harijan and had contested the election, but was bracketed with respondents Nos. 10 and 11, each of which three candidates secured two votes. None of them was elected in the straight contest on the 22nd of January, 1965. Just after the result of the election of the primary members was declared, the Returning Officer proceeded to decide as to which of the three Harijan members who had contested the election, but had not been elected, were entitled to be co-opted under Section 5(2) (cc) of the Punjab Panchayat Samitis and Zilla Parishads Act (3 of 1961) (hereinafter called the Act). At the meeting of the Samiti convened under Section 16 of the Act for co-opting the other members on February 16, 1965, an objection was raised to the manner in which new ballot papers had been prepared by the Presiding Officer. The objection was turned down by the written order of the Presiding Officer (Annexure 'A'). This related to the co-option of respondents Nos. 9 and 12 to 14 only.

2. Mr. Harnam Singh Wasu, the learned counsel for the petitioners has contended that the Returning Officer had no jurisdiction to draw the lots between the three Harijan members, that is, petitioner No. 2 and respondents Nos. 10 and 11, so as to decide as to which two out of them were entitled to be co-opted. He has also argued that according to the law laid down by a Division Bench of this Court in Charan Dass Dogra v. Punjab State, (1965) 67 Pun. L. R. 1238 = (AIR 1966 Punj. 274), the co-option under clause (cc) of sub-section (2) of Section 5 of the Act is not automatic in any circumstances and has to be done in a meeting convened under Rule 3(1) read with Rule 4-A of the Panchayat Samitis (Co-option of Members) Rules, 1961. The learned Advocate General contests this proposition and has submitted that the earlier Division Bench judgment of this Court needs reconsideration. We are bound by the Division Bench judgment and since its correctness is doubted, it would be appropriate that the whole case is heard by a larger Bench. It is, therefore, directed that the papers of this case may be placed before my Lord, the Chief Justice for constituting a Full Bench to hear this petition, and to decide the matter. At the request of the learned counsel for the petitioners, it is directed that the case may be fixed before the Full Bench as early as possible.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

3. R. S. NARULA, J.— The facts leading to the filing of this writ petition have been narrated in requisite detail in the order of reference made by the Division Bench on February 14, 1967, which may be read as a part of this judgment. This reference was necessitated by vehement arguments addressed before the Division Bench by Mr. J. N. Kaushal, the then Advocate-General for the State of Punjab, asking the Bench to reconsider the decision of an earlier Division Bench of this Court (Dua, J. and myself) in (1965) 67 Pun. L. R. 1238 = (AIR 1966 Punj. 274). At the hearing of the writ petition before us today Mr. B. S. Dhillon, the learned Additional Advocate-General for the State of Punjab, as well as Mr. Harbans Lal Sarin, learned counsel for respondents Nos. 5, 10 and 11, have unequivocally stated that they cannot find any fault with the earlier Division Bench judgment of this Court in the case of Charan Dass Dogra, (1965) 67 Pun. L. R. 1238=(AIR 1966 Punj. 274) (supra) and conceded that the said case was correctly decided. We accordingly hold that Charan Dass Dogra's case, (1965) 67 Pun. L. R. 1238=(AIR 1966 Punj. 274) lays down correct law.

4. This petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution relates to the co-option of Harijan members to the Block Samiti in question. Sub-section (2) of Section 5 of the Punjab Panchayat Samitis and Zilla Parishads Act (3 of 1961) (hereinafter called the Act) provides that where a Panchayat Samiti is to be constituted for a block, it shall consist of primary members to be elected in the manner prescribed by the provisions contained in clause (a) of sub-section (2) of Section 5. Clause (a) states that sixteen members have to be elected by the Panches and Sarpanches, two members have to be elected as representatives of the Co-operative Societies, and one member has to be elected as representing the Market Committees in the block. Cl. (b) of sub-section (2) deals with Associate Members with whom we are not concerned in this case. Sub-clause (ii) of clause (c) states:—

"Co-opted Members, to be co-opted in accordance with the provisions of Section 16, comprising—

(i)

(ii) four persons belonging to Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes, if no such person is selected under clause (a):

Provided that if only one, two or three persons are elected under clause (a), then three, two or one such person respectively shall be co-opted."

By Section 2 of the Punjab Panchayat Samitis and Zila Parishads (Amendment) Act, 1964, the following was added as clause (cc):—

"After the first general election of primary members of Panchayat Samitis is held, Co-opted Members to be co-opted in the following manner, notwithstanding anything contained in clause (c) or Section 16, comprising—

(i)

(ii) four persons belonging to Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes securing in the election under sub-clause (i) of clause (a) the highest number of votes amongst candidates of those Castes and Tribes, where no such person is elected under clause (a):

Provided that if only one, two or three such persons are elected under clause (a), then three, two or one such person, respectively, securing in the election under sub-clause (i) of clause (a) the highest number of votes amongst candidates of those Castes and Tribes, shall be co-opted:

Provided further that where no such person or less than four such persons contested the election, then four such persons or the requisite number of such persons, as the case may be, shall be co-opted in accordance with the provisions of Section 16."

Section 16 of the Act states:—

"The Deputy Commissioner concerned, or any gazetted officer appointed by him in this behalf, not below the rank of an Extra Assistant Commissioner, shall, as soon as possible after notification of election of Primary Members, call a meeting of such Members in the manner prescribed for the purpose of co-opting Members required by clause (c) of sub-section (1) of Section 5 and clauses (c) and (cc) of sub-section (2) of that section. The aforesaid officer shall preside at such meeting." It is apparent from the provisions of Section 16:—

(i) that proceedings for co-option under that section cannot be taken in hand before the notification of the election of Primary Members;

(ii) that such co-option as is referred to in Section 16 has to be made only in a meeting of the Primary Members, and

(iii) the meeting in which Members have to be co-opted has to be called in the manner prescribed for the purpose of holding such a meeting, i.e., it has to be called by the Deputy Commissioner concerned or by any gazetted officer appointed by him in that behalf and as provided in the rules framed under the Act.

Rule 3 of the Panchayat Samitis (Co-option of Members) Rules, 1961 is in the following terms:—

"(1) After a notification of election of Primary Members of a Panchayat Samiti has been issued the Deputy Commissioner or any Gazetted Officer appointed by him in this behalf, not below the rank of Extra Assistant Commissioner (hereinafter referred to as 'Presiding Officer'), shall convene a meeting of these members at the office of the Panchayat Samiti or at such other place as he may determine in this behalf for the purpose of co-opting members as required by clauses (c) and (cc) of sub-section (2) of Section 5. Such meeting shall be convened after giving five days clear notice to the Members.

(2) The notice referred to in sub-rule (1) shall state—

(i) the date, time and place of meeting;

(ii) the number of women, elected as Primary Members, and the number, if any, of women to be co-opted; and

(iii) the number of persons belonging to Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes elected as Primary Members and the number, if any, of such persons to be co-opted."

The abovequoted rule adds to the three requirements of Section 16 already enumerated above a fourth one as a sub-requirement under item (iii). A valid meeting called by the competent authority for purposes of co-option has to be convened only after giving five days clear notice to the Members.

5. What happened in the instant case is not in dispute. The election of Primary Members was concluded on January 22, 1965. Immediately after the result of the election of Primary Members was declared, the Returning Officer there and then took up the matter of co-option without having been delegated the authority of the Deputy Commissioner to convene a meeting for that purpose and without giving any five days notice of the meeting to the Members and without even holding a formal meeting for that purpose drew lots between petitioner No. 2 on the one hand and respondents Nos. 10 and 11 on the other. All the said three parties to this case had contested the election for Primary membership, but had not been declared successful and had polled an equal number of votes. This was clearly in violation of all the mandatory requirements of Section 16 and R. 3. In the written statement of the Returning Officer (Shri Dhyan Singh respondent No. 2), it has been stated by him in this behalf as below:—

"It is admitted that at the time of counting votes on January 22, 1965, it was found that three Depressed Class candidates received equal number of votes while only two were to be co-opted. However, the co-option was not required to be done by me. I did this because all the candidates had approached me to draw out two names by lots which was done publicly. Two out of these three candidates received the benefit and all the three signed on a paper that they agreed with the lots drawn. However, all this was done on pressure from all sides which is regretted."

The legality and the manner in which the co-option was done in this case has, therefore, not been supported even by the Returning Officer. When this defect came to the notice of the Deputy Commissioner, he called a meeting of the Primary Members for February 3, 1965, but instead of drawing lots as required by Rule 4-A which is in the following terms, the Presiding Officer of the meeting merely approved of the lots that had already been drawn by the Returning Officer on January 22, 1965:—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in Rule 4, no quorum shall be necessary for the purpose of co-opting members under clause (cc) of sub-section (2) of Section 5 from amongst women or persons belonging to Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes, securing the highest number of votes, and their names shall be determined and declared by the Presiding Officer in the presence of Members, if any, attending the meeting convened under Rule 3:

Provided that if on account of equality of votes secured by women candidates or those belonging to Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes, as the case may be, it cannot be determined as to who amongst them is or are to be co-opted, the matter shall be decided by the Presiding Officer in the presence of Members, if any, by drawing lots and the candidate or candidates, whose name or names is or are drawn first shall be declared to have been duly co-opted."

Mr. Sarin contends that since respondent No. 2 drew the lots with the consent of petitioner No. 2, he cannot impugn the action of the Returning Officer and of the Deputy Commissioner though, he concedes that, it is impossible to support the same in law. It is settled law that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by mere consent where it does not exist in law. In these circumstances, the co-option of respondents Nos. 10 and 11 is patently illegal and has to be set aside.

6. Learned counsel for the petitioners next contended that as a necessary consequence of our decision on the first point, we should further hold that the elections of the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Block Samiti as well as the election of the representatives of the Samiti to the Zila Parishad were illegal as two persons not entitled to participate therein had voted in those elections. Petitioner No. 1 contends that he intended to stand for all those offices, but could not do so. There is no force in this contention. The fact remains that petitioner No. 1 never stood for the election to any of those offices. Even if he had been a candidate at one or more of those elections, he has to show in order to succeed that respondents Nos. 10 and 11 had voted against him in the relevant election and that if only one of them was there and petitioner No. 2 had been there in place of the other one of them, this would have made material difference in the result of the concerned election. No such allegation has been made in this petition. We are, therefore, unable to entertain the prayer for any further relief being granted in this case. Even otherwise, we are inclined to think that in view of the discretion vested in us by Article 226 of the Constitution, it would be improper to interfere with those elections at this stage after the expiry of more than four years. The co-option of respondents Nos. 10 and 11 being wholly illegal, we proceed to set it aside.

7. For the reasons already recorded, this writ petition is allowed with costs to the extent that co-option of respondents Nos. 10 and 11 made by the Returning secution to establish that a person who strikes another with a deadly weapon was incapable of knowing the nature of the act or of knowing that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law."

But in that very case their Lordships have pointed out that it is for the prosecution to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the accused had committed the offence with the requisite mens rea and that if upon the evidence adduced in the case whether by the prosecution or by the accused a reasonable doubt is created in the mind of the Court as regards one or more of the ingredients of the offence including mens rea of the accused, he would be entitled to be acquitted.

18. Learned Additional Government Advocate has further relied on the following observations in Director of Public Prosecutions v. Smith, 1961 AC 290 (331):

"Another criticism of the summing up and one which found favour in the Court of Criminal Appeal concerned the manner in which the trial Judge dealt with the presumption that a man intends the natural and probable consequences of his acts. I will cite the passage again: 'the intention with which a man did something can usually be determined by a jury only by inference from the surrounding circumstances including the presumption of law that a man intends the natural and probable consequences of his acts.' It is said that the reference to this being a presumption of law without explaining that it was rebuttable amounted to a misdirection. Whether the presumption is one of law or of fact or, as has been said, of common sense, matters not for this purpose. The real question is whether the jury should have been told that it was rebuttable. In truth, however, as I see it, this is merely another way of applying the test of the reasonable man. Provided that the presumption is applied, once the accused's knowledge of the circumstances and the nature of his acts has been ascertained, the only thing that could rebut the presumption would be proof of incapacity to form an intent, insanity or diminished responsibility. In the present case, therefore, there was no need to explain to the jury that the presumption was rebuttable."

19. This case has been the subject-matter of great controversy and so far as we are concerned, it may be stated that in this very passage it has been mentioned in unmistakable terms that the presumption arising that a man intends the natural and probable consequences of his act is rebuttable. In order to put the law beyond any controversy in England, the Parliament enacted section 8 Criminal Justice Act, 1967 which runs as follows:

"A Court or jury, in determining whether a person has committed an offence,—

(a) shall not be bound in law to infer that he intended or foresaw a result of his actions by reason only of its being a natural and probable consequence of those actions; but,

(b) shall decide whether he did intend or foresee that result by reference to all the evidence, drawing such inferences from the evidence as appears proper in the circumstances."

The effect of this new section is that there is no room for doubt to interpret Smith's case in the light that the presumption that a person intends the natural consequences of his act will be irrebuttable. Now, under the English Law, the subjective intent to cause grievous bodily harm must be proved though it may be inferred taking into account the totality of all the circumstances pertaining to the case.

20. Under the Indian law, it has been enacted in Section 300 that "culpable homicide is murder, if the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention of causing bodily injury to any person and the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death." In one way this provision makes the presumption that a person intends the natural and probable consequence of his act irrebuttable to the extent that if it is proved that the particular injury intended to be inflicted by the accused turned out objectively to be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the accused cannot plead that he had not the intention of causing a bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The subjective test is confined to proving that the accused intended to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death and it is not necessary that it must further be proved by the prosecution that the accused intended to inflict bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. It is sufficient if it is proved that the particular bodily injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death for holding the accused guilty for the offence of murder. This law has been clarified in Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, Anda v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1966 SC 148, and Harjinder Singh v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1968 SC 867. Apart from this, there is no difference between the Indian law and English law as clarified by the Criminal Justice Act, 1967, on this point.

21. It is, however, urged before us that at least in the case of gunfire it was for the accused to explain that he was acting without any intention to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death and that in the absence of any plea or explanation, the presumption has remained un rebutted. It is further pointed out that in this case Ram Kumar appellant took up the defence that he acted under intoxication of liquor which was forcibly administered to him, and that this defence has been rejected by the trial Court. We accept that the trial Court was right in rejecting this plea. But we are of the view that if the circumstances of the case otherwise show that the prosecution has failed to prove that the accused had the requisite intention required to be proved under Sections 299 and 300 I. P. C. we can rely on those circumstances in spite of the fact that he had not taken that plea or had not offered an explanation suggesting such defence. In this connection we may quote the following passage from the speech of Viscount Simon L. C. in Mancini v. Director of Public Prosecutions, 1942 AC 1 (7):

"Although the appellant's case at the trial was in substance that he had been compelled to use his weapon in necessary self-defence—a defence which, if it had been accepted by the jury, would have resulted in his complete acquittal—it was undoubtedly the duty of the Judge, in summing up to the jury, to deal adequately with any other view of the facts which might reasonably arise out of the evidence given, and which would reduce the crime from murder to manslaughter. The fact that a defending counsel does not stress an alternative case before the jury (which he may well feel it difficult to do without prejudicing the main defence) does not relieve the Judge from the duty of directing the jury to consider the alternative if there is material before the jury which would justify a direction that they should consider it. Thus, in Rex v. Hopper, (1915) 2 KB 431, at a trial for murder the prisoner's counsel relied substantially on the defence that the killing was accidental, but Lord Reading C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal, said: 'We do not assent to the suggestion that as the defence throughout the trial was accident, the Judge was justified in not putting the question as to manslaughter. Whatever the line of defence adopted by counsel at the trial of a prisoner, we are of opinion that it is for the Judge to put such questions as appear to him properly to arise upon the evidence, even although counsel may not have raised some question himself. In this case it may be that the difficulty of presenting the alternative defences of accident and manslaughter may have actuated counsel in saying very little about manslaughter, but if we come to the conclusion, as we do, that there was some evidence—we say no more than that—upon which a question ought to have been left to the jury as to the crime being manslaughter only, we think that this verdict of murder cannot stand.'"

22. Judged in the light of the aforesaid observations, we are of the view that in spite of the fact that the accused has not taken any definite plea of accident and that he has not explained why he fired the gun at the deceased, we may minutely examine all the circumstances on record and see whether the facts and circumstances pointed out that the appellant must have intended to cause the death of Yuvrajsingh or to cause such bodily injury to him as was likely to cause his death. The circumstances of the case appear to us not to impute such intention to the appellant for the following reasons:

(1) That the appellant Ramkumar and the deceased Yuvrajsingh had gone for a picnic party to the tank at Sakatpur and whatever they did there all shows that they were engaged in merry making. They drank liquor and took their meals.

(2) The appellant had not taken any weapon with him as it is the prosecution evidence that the gun belonged to Ramsingh who had taken it with him.

(3) It is in the evidence of Mst. Kishni that the gun was used by Ramsingh for shooting at sparrows before the incident.

(4) No motive or enmity has been proved by the prosecution which may have actuated the appellant to commit the crime.

(5) The shooting was performed in broad day light without any attempt to hide it and is consistent with the fact that the appellant may have tried to handle the loaded gun recklessly.

23. We are, therefore, not inclined to draw the inference that the appellant had either the intention of killing the deceased or that he had the intention of causing him such bodily injury as was likely to cause his death.

24. Even if we rule out any such intention on the part of the appellant, there is no room for doubt that the appellant must have had the knowledge that he was doing an act which was likely to cause the death. There can be no doubt that the gun when the appellant took it from Ramsingh was loaded and that he must have had the knowledge that if he pressed the trigger of such a gun aiming in the direction of the deceased, it was likely to cause his death. The distance from which the gun was fired was not more than 5 feet from the deceased according to the medical evidence and even if we do not impute to the appellant the knowledge that his act was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, yet we must impute to the accused the knowledge that he was doing an act with the knowledge that he was likely by such act to cause death. We are, therefore, of the view that the appellant's conviction under Section 302 of the Indian Penal Code be set aside and he be convicted under Section 304 Part 2 of the Indian Penal Code.

25. We therefore set aside his conviction under Section 302 I. P. C. as also the sentence of imprisonment for life and instead convict him under Section 304 Part 2 of the Indian Penal Code and sentence him to five years' rigorous imprisonment.

Order accordingly.

AIR 1970 RAJASTHAN 67 (V 57 C 12)

JAGAT NARAYAN, J.

Smt. Daya Bai, Petitioner v. Badri Narain, Respondent.

Civil Revn. No. 157 of 1968, D/- 17-1-1969, against order of Addl. Munsif No. 1, Jodhpur, D/- 16-10-1967.

Debt Laws — Rajasthan Relief of Agricultural Indebtedness Act (28 of 1957), Sections 5 (1) (i), 6, 16 and 21 — Applicability — Pending suit for recovery of money, application under Section 6 filed — Application not admitted — However, notices issued to creditors to decide question of its admission — Pending such application Civil Court ordering suit to abate holding that such application should be deemed to have been admitted — Order wrong — (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 4, R. 1 (i)).

Where an application under Section 6 of the Rajasthan Relief of Agricultural Indebtedness Act filed pending a suit for recovery of money is not admitted but notices are issued to creditors to decide the question of its admission, and pending such application, the Civil Court orders the suit to abate holding that such application should be deemed to have been admitted, that order is wrong. (Paras 3 and 4)

It is clear from Section 5 (1) (i) that before a suit can be abated, the application under Section 6 should not only have been made but should have been admitted and should be pending. There is a distinction between the making of the application and its admission. As soon as an application is made it has to be registered but its registration does not mean it has been admitted. Section 16 shows that the procedure to be followed in the case of an application to the Debt Relief Court is not exactly the same as the procedure followed by a Civil Court when a plaint is filed. In the case of a suit instituted on a plaint there is no question of not admitting the suit. When the Debt Relief Court expressly declines to admit the application under Section 6, and issues notices to creditors to decide the question of its admission, the order of the Civil Court abating the suit holding that that application should be deemed to have been admitted is erroneous. Further, under Section 21, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is barred in respect of any matter pending before the Debt Relief Court. When notices are issued to creditors to decide the admissibility of the application under Section 6, the matter pending before the Debt Relief Court is only whether that application should be admitted. The jurisdiction of the Civil Court in such a case therefore, is not barred. (Para 4)

It will however, be open to the defendant-applicant to apply for stay of the Civil Court proceedings till his application before the Debt Relief Court is admitted or dismissed. (Para 5)

CM/FM/B287/69/JRM/B

ORDER :— This is a revision application by the plaintiff against an order of Additional Munsif No. 1, Jodhpur, abating her suit for recovery of money pending before him.

2. During the pendency of the suit the defendant filed an application in the Debt Relief Court under Section 6 of the Rajasthan Relief of Agricultural Indebtedness Act, 1957. That application was not admitted, but notices were issued to the creditors to show cause why it should not be admitted. The question as to whether or not the defendant is a debtor within the meaning of the Act is pending investigation before the Debt Relief Court. During the pendency of that application the defendant filed an application before the Civil Court purporting to be under Section 21 of the Act in which a prayer was made that the plaintiff be asked to prosecute her remedy before the Debt Relief Court as the Civil Court had ceased to have any jurisdiction.

3. On this application the learned Additional Munsif abated the suit holding that because the application of the defendant under Section 6 has been registered and notices have been issued to the creditors, it should be deemed to have been admitted. This order is clearly erroneous. Section 5 (1) (i) lays down that the Court shall abate the suit if it is satisfied that an application to the Debt Relief Court under Section 6 has been made and admitted and is pending. It is clear from the wordings of this provision that before a suit can be abated the application should not only have been made but should have been admitted and should be pending. It is also clear that the Legislature has drawn a distinction between the making of application and admission of it. As soon as an application is made it has to be registered and the fact that it has been registered does not mean that it has been admitted. Section 16 of the Act runs as follows :—

“Application of Civil Court procedure to Debt Relief Court — The Debt Relief Court, in regard to proceedings under this Act shall so far as practicable, have the same powers and shall follow the same procedure as it would have and follows if it were a Court of original civil jurisdiction.”

(Underlining (here into ‘ ’) is mine.)

4. The underlined words go to show that the procedure to be followed in the case of an application under the Debt Relief Court is not exactly the same as the procedure to be followed by a Civil Court when a plaint is filed. In the case of a suit instituted on a plaint there is no question of not admitting the suit. In the present case the Debt Relief Court has expressly declined to admit the application, but has issued notices to the creditors to decide the question whether or not it should be admitted. The order abating the suit is therefore, erroneous. Section 21 lays down that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is barred in respect of any matter pending before the Debt Relief Court. At present the matter pending before the Debt Relief Court is only whether the application of the defendant should be admitted. The jurisdiction of the Civil Court is therefore, not barred.

5. It will however, be open to the defendant to make an application for staying proceedings in the Civil Court till his application before the Debt Relief Court is either admitted or dismissed.

6. The revision application is accordingly allowed and the order of the trial Court abating the suit is set aside. In the circumstances of the case, I leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Petition allowed.

AIR 1970 RAJASTHAN 68 (V 57 C 13)

JAGAT NARAYAN J.

Sita Ram and others, Appellants v. Govind, Respondent.

Civil Misc. Appeal No. 14 of 1967, D/- 21-1-1969, against order of Dist. J., Bharatpur, D/- 23-12-1966.

Limitation Act (1908), Article 139 — Applicability — Suit for arrears of rent and eviction — Suit more than 12 years after expiry of lease — Tenant holding over and asserting hostile title — No rent ever paid by tenant — Mere demand of rent by landlord is no renewal of lease within the meaning of Section 116 Transfer of Property Act — Suit is barred under Article 139. (Transfer of Property Act (1882), Section 116.)

Where a suit for arrears of rent and eviction is filed more than 12 years after the expiry of the lease and the tenant, holding over, asserts a hostile title and has not ever paid any rent, mere demand of rent by the landlord is no renewal of the lease within the meaning of Section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act. The suit is barred under Article 139 of the Limitation Act. (Paras 8 and 10)

From Section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act, it is clear that once a lease is determined a fresh tenancy can be created only by a bilateral agreement between the person in possession and the owner of the property. No fresh tenancy can be created merely by the tenant, whose lease is determined, continuing in possession. Such possession is wrongful and it becomes rightful by fresh contract of tenancy between the parties. This contract may be express or implied. In an express contract the parties settle all the terms, the rate of rent, the lease period and whether the tenancy is yearly or monthly or otherwise. Section 116 of Transfer of Property Act deals with cases of implied contract in which the tenant holding over makes an implied offer for renewal of the tenancy and the landlord accepts it impliedly. An instance of such implied contract, given in the section, is where the tenant holding over tenders the rent and the landlord accepts it.

(Para 7)

There can thus be no renewal of a tenancy under Section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act by the unilateral act of the landlord in demanding rent from the tenant holding over or where the person in possession does not pay the rent and asserts a title hostile to the landlord.

(Para 8)

As such, when a suit for arrears of rent and eviction is filed more than 12 years after the expiry of the lease and the tenant holding over, asserts a hostile title and has not ever paid any rent, the suit is barred under Article 139. It will be within limitation only when the rent had been recovered any time within the 12 years of the institution of the suit.

JUDGMENT: This is an appeal by the defendants against an order of the District Judge, Bharatpur, remanding the suit under Order 41, Rule 23, Civil P. C. after reversing the finding of the trial Court on the question of limitation.

2. Govind plaintiff filed the present suit on 8-4-63 against the 4 defendants for the recovery of arrears of rent and for eviction on the grounds of default and personal necessity in respect of a building containing two shops and an upper storey. The building was originally owned by Ram Gopal father of Sitaram and Radhey Shyam defendants and grand-father of Kishori Shyam and Ram Babu defendants. Ram Gopal executed a sale-deed of this property in favour of Ratanlal on 30-1-1938.

On the same date Ram Gopal executed a rent-note in favour of Ratanlal taking the property on lease for a period of 3 years. This rent-note was not registered. On 19-9-38 Ratanlal sold the building to Gyasi Ram father of the present plaintiff. The case in the plaint is that Ram Gopal used to pay rent to Ratanlal after he had sold the property to the latter and to Gyasi Ram after Ratanlal had sold it. It was alleged that rent was paid upto 30-11-60 regularly but that it was not paid from 1-12-60. The suit was brought for the recovery of arrears of rent from 1-12-60 to 31-3-63.

3. The suit was contested by the defendants who alleged that the sale-deed in favour of Ratanlal was fictitious and was executed to save the property from creditors, that Ratanlal was a friend of Ram Gopal, that no rent was ever paid to Ratanlal or to Gyasi Ram or to Gyasi Ram's sons and grand-sons. It was admitted that Ram Gopal executed a rent-note in favour of Ratanlal. But it was alleged that the rent-note was also fictitious and was executed in order to make it appear that the sale-deed was genuine. It was asserted that Ram Gopal continued to be in possession of the property as owner and whenever rent was demanded from Ram Gopal or his sons by Gyasi Ram the latter was told that Ram Gopal was the owner of the property and he had no right to recover any rent. The trial Court framed the following issues:

(1) Is the suit within limitation?
 (2) Whether the suit premises are with the defendants on lease on a monthly rent of Rs. 10?

(3) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover rent for 28 months from 1-12-60 to 31-3-63 at Rs. 10 per month from the defendants?

(4) Is the plaintiff entitled to evict the defendants from the suit premises?

Both parties produced evidence on the whole case pleaded by them in the plaint and the written statement respectively. All the pleas raised in the pleadings will be taken to be covered by the above issues and a decision shall have to be given under the above 4 issues of all the pleas.

4. The trial Court assumed that Ram Gopal became the tenant of Ratanlal by executing a rent-note in his favour. No decision was given by it on the plea that the sale-deed as well as the rent-note in favour of Ratanlal were fictitious. On the assumption that Ram Gopal had become the tenant of Ratanlal by executing the rent-note for a period of 3 years it held that the suit was barred by limitation under Article 139 of old Limitation Act on the expiry of the period of 12 years from the date of the expiry of the tenancy under the rent-note. It repelled the contention of the plaintiff that merely by a demand of rent on the part of the plaintiff there was a renewal of the lease within the meaning of Section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act on the expiry of the period of tenancy.

5. The appellate Court was under the impression that by admitting the execution of a rent-note the defendants had admitted that Ram Gopal was a tenant of Ratanlal and his successors. This was erroneous as the case of the defendants was that the rent-note as well as the sale-deed were both fictitious. They did not admit that Ram Gopal was ever the tenant of Ratanlal or Gyasi Ram.

6. Further the appellate Court held that as Ram Gopal and his sons remained in possession of the premises after the determination of the lease and rent was demanded from them there was a renewal of the tenancy under Section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act and the suit of the plaintiff could not be barred under Article 139 of the old Limitation Act. This finding is also erroneous. Section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act runs as follows:

"If a lessee or under-lessee of property remains in possession thereof after the determination of the lease granted to the lessee, and the lessor or his legal representative accepts rent from the lessee or under-lessee, or otherwise assents to his continuing in possession, the lease is, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, renewed from year to year, or from month to month, according to the purpose for which the property is leased, as specified in Section 106."

7. What the section contemplates is that from the side of the person in possession there should be an offer of continuing in possession as tenant and the landlord should assent to it by accepting rent from him or otherwise. Once the lease is determined a fresh tenancy can only be created by a bilateral agreement between the person in possession and the owner of the premises. No fresh tenancy can be created merely by the tenant, whose lease is determined, continuing in possession. Such possession is wrongful. It becomes rightful if there is a fresh contract of tenancy between the parties. This contract may be express or implied.

In an express contract of lease the parties settle all the terms of it—the rate of rent, the period of lease and whether the tenancy is yearly or monthly or otherwise. Sec. 116 deals with cases of an implied contract in which the tenant holding over makes an implied offer for the renewal of the tenancy and the landlord accepts it impliedly. It lays down that in such a case in the absence of an agreement to the contrary the lease will be renewed from year to year or from month to month according to the purpose for which the property is leased as specified in Section 106. One instance of how the implied contract may take place has been given in the section. That is a case where the tenant holding over tenders rent and the landlord accepts it.

8. It will thus be seen that there can be no renewal of the contract of tenancy under Section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act by the unilateral Act of the landlord in demanding rent from the tenant holding over. There can be no renewal under this section where the person in possession does not pay rent and asserts a title hostile to the landlord.

9. I would like to mention here that in a case governed by the Rajasthan Premises (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act a tenant becomes a statutory tenant on the determination of his contractual lease and this statutory tenancy is neither heritable nor transferable.

10. The trial Court disbelieved the evidence of the plaintiff and his witnesses that rent was ever paid by Ram Gopal or the defendants to Ratanlal or to plaintiff's father or to the plaintiff. On this finding the suit was rightly dismissed as being barred by limitation under Article 139.

11. The suit can only be held within limitation under Article 139 if there is a finding that rent was recovered from the defendants at any time within 12 years of the institution of the suit. No such finding was recorded by the learned District Judge.

12. The appeal is accordingly allowed and the order of remand is set aside. The appeal is remanded to the Court of the District Judge, Bharatpur, for decision of the question of limitation in the light of the observations made above.

13. As the entire evidence on all the issues had been recorded the learned District Judge should have decided all the issues himself instead of remanding the case to the trial Court.

14. The costs of this appeal shall abide the final result of the suit.

Appeal allowed.

AIR 1970 RAJASTHAN 70 (V 57 C 14)

D. M. BHANDARI, C. J. AND V. P. TYAGI, J.

Purshottamdas Bangur, Applicant v. Commissioner of Income-Tax, Rajasthan, Jaipur, Respondent.

Income-Tax Ref. No. 34 of 1966, D/-31-1-1969.

Finance Act (1957), S. 2 (3) (a) and (1) (a) — "Income-tax" — Meaning — Income-tax on dividend income for 1957-58 assessment year calculated under Section 2 (3) (a) — Special surcharge under Section 2 (1) (a) levied on that income-tax — Levy correct.

Where income-tax on dividend income for 1957-58 assessment year is calculated under Sec. 2 (3) (a) of the Finance Act, 1957 and a special surcharge under Sec. 2 (1) (a) is levied on that income-tax, the levy is correct. (Para 6)

Under the scheme of S. 2 (1), the income-tax on dividend income shall be charged in accordance with Section 2 (3) (a) because it is that sub-clause that is attracted. It is then that the amount of income-tax shall be increased by a surcharge and special surcharge in the manner provided in Sec. 2 (1). This scheme of Section 2 (1) and its language leave no room for doubt that the term "income-tax" as used in it and in Section 2 (3) (a) is used in a limited sense denoting the income-tax simpliciter and it does not include the surcharge or the special surcharge. Therefore it cannot be said that the special surcharge as prescribed by the Act cannot be added to the amount of income-tax determined under Section 2 (3) (a).

(Para 5)

Thus, when the income-tax on dividend income for 1957-58 assessment year is calculated under Sec. 2 (3) (a) and the special surcharge under Sec. 2 (1) (a) is imposed on that income-tax, the imposition is correct. (Para 6)

Dr. D. Pal and S. L. Chowdhari, for Applicant; S. C. Bhandari, for Respondent.

ORDER: This is a reference under Section 66 (1) of the Indian Income-Tax Act, 1922 (hereinafter called the Act) made by the Income-Tax Appellate Tribunal, Delhi Bench 'B' and it arises out of the following circumstances:

2. The assessee in this case has been assessed as an individual. The assessment year concerned is 1957-58 for which the relevant previous year is the financial year ending on 31st of March, 1957. The assessee had various sources of income out of which one source was the income from dividends. The Income-tax Officer, Special Investigation Circle, Jaipur, while assessing the income of the assessee increased the income-tax on dividend income which was undoubtedly included in the unearned income by 15 per cent to compute the amount of special surcharge as per the Finance Act, 1957. The assessee challenged the assessment order by filing an appeal before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-Tax, 'A' range, Jaipur, on various grounds, but this question that special surcharge at the rate of 15 per cent could not be imposed on his dividend income was not raised in that appeal by the assessee.

It was for the first time that an objection was taken by the assessee before the Income-Tax Appellate Tribunal, Delhi Bench 'B' that the special surcharge on unearned income at the rate of 15 per cent as provided by the Finance Act of 1957 could not be imposed on the dividend income of the assessee for that year because of the provisions of Section 2 (3) (a) of the Finance Act, 1957, which provides that the income-tax on dividend income could be calculated as per the rates under operation of the Finance Act, 1956. The Tribunal did not see any merit in the contention raised by the assessee and, therefore, it dismissed this ground. On an application filed by the assessee under Section 66 of the Act, the Income-Tax Appellate Tribunal came to the conclusion that a question of law arises from its order in Income-Tax Appeal No. 6347 of 1964-65 filed by the assessee against the assessment for the assessment year 1957-58 and referred the following question to this Court under Section 66 (1) of the Act:

"Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case surcharge was a separate item of taxation different from income-tax and therefore the special surcharge imposed as per Finance Act, 1957 was leviable on income from dividends in spite of the provisions contained in clause (a), sub-section (3) of Section 2 of this Finance Act to the effect that income-tax on income from dividends would be charged for 1957-58 assessment year at the rate prescribed by the Indian Finance Act, 1956?"

3. Dr. Pal appearing on behalf of the assessee urged that under the scheme of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, no other tax except the income-tax could be charged from the assessee and the surcharge or special surcharge as provided by the Finance Act of 1957 is included in the term "income-tax". He also urged that the mode for computing income-tax on dividend income is given in Section 2 (3) (a) of the Finance Act of 1957, according to which the income-tax on dividend income can be computed by applying the rate or rates applicable under the operation of the Finance Act of 1956, and, therefore, according to him, the assessing authority could not have charged special surcharge at the rate of 15 per cent as provided by the Finance Act No. 2 of 1957 as that rate could not be made applicable for computing income-tax on the dividend income of the assessee. He, therefore, urged that the income-tax authorities under the Act were not empowered to levy a special surcharge for which there was no provision made in the Finance Act of 1956.

4. Mr. Bhandari, appearing on behalf of the Department, on the other hand, argued that income-tax on the income accrued to the assessee in the accounting year 1956-57 could be calculated as per the provisions of the Finance Act of 1957 which provides under clause (a) of sub-section (3) of Section 2 that the income-tax on dividend income shall be computed by applying the rate or rates applicable under the operation of the Finance Act of 1956, but his contention is that the term "income-tax" as used in clause (a) of sub-section (3) does not include the amount of surcharge or special surcharge, and it simply requires that the tax on the dividend income shall be calculated at the rate or rates applicable under the operation of Finance Act, 1956 (No. 18 of 1956), and then that amount of tax on income shall be increased for the purposes of levying the special surcharge on unearned income by 15 per cent under the provisions of S. 2 (1) (a) of the Finance Act 1957 (Act No. 2 of 1957).

He urged that simply because the income-tax on the dividend income of the assessee is to be computed with reference to the rate or rates applicable under the operation of the Finance Act of 1956 it does not mean that the dividend income shall escape the levy of a special surcharge which is required to be imposed under Section 2 (1) (a) of the Finance Act, 1957 read with the First Schedule appended to that Act which prescribes the rate for the special surcharge on unearned income.

5. There is no controversy on this point between the parties that the amount of surcharge or special surcharge is the part of income-tax calculated under the provisions of the Finance Act No. 2 of 1957. Special surcharge has been for the first time levied by the Parliament in 1957 on unearned income at 15 per cent and the income derived from dividend undoubtedly falls within the term "unearned income". The controversy that has been raised before us centres round the interpretation of the words "income-tax" as used in clause (a) of sub-section (3) of Section 2. This controversy can be resolved by taking the scheme of the Finance Act into consideration as a whole.

Sub-section (1) of Section 2 of this Act provides that subject to the provisions of sub-sections (2), (3), (4) and (5) for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1957, income-tax shall be charged at the rates specified in Part I of the First Schedule, and, in the cases to which Paragraphs A, B and C of that Part apply, shall be increased by a surcharge for the purposes of the Union and a special surcharge on unearned income. This language of sub-section (1) makes it clear that the term "income-tax" as used in this sub-section does not include the amount of surcharge or special surcharge because the requirement of this sub-section (1) is that income-tax shall be charged at the rates specified in Part I and then if Paragraphs A, B and C of that Part apply to a case then that amount of income-tax shall be increased by a surcharge for the purposes of the Union and a special surcharge on unearned income.

In our opinion, the term "income-tax" has been used in sub-sec. (3) (a) of the Finance Act, 1957 in that limited sense in which it has been used in sub-section (1), and while computing the amount of income-tax on dividend income under clause (a) of sub-section (3) of Section 2 of the Finance Act of 1957 by applying the rate or rates applicable under the operation of the Finance Act, 1956 it is the amount of income-tax simpliciter which is determined and which does not include the amount either of surcharge or special surcharge. Under the scheme of Sub-section (1) of Section 2 of the Finance Act, 1957, the income-tax shall be charged on the dividend income in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (3) of that section because for calculating the income-tax on dividend income the provisions of sub-section (3) are attracted and it is then that the amount of income-tax so calculated shall be increased by a surcharge for the purposes of the Union and a special surcharge on unearned income calculated in either case in the manner provided therein.

This scheme of sub-section (1) of Sec. 2 of the Finance Act of 1957 leaves no room for doubt that while applying the provisions of clause (a) of sub-section (3) of Section 2 of that Act on dividend income which makes the rate or rates under the operation of the Finance Act, 1956, applicable to calculate the amount of income-tax on dividend income, the amount of income-tax so calculated would not include the amount of surcharge or special surcharge. In order to compute the aggregate income-tax which includes the surcharge or special surcharge, the amount of income-tax as found out under Section 2 (3) (a) on dividend income shall be increased by 5 per cent to determine the amount of surcharge and then by 15 per cent to calculate the special surcharge as per the requirements of Section 2 (1) (a) of 1957 Act.

In this view of the provisions of the Finance Act, 1957, it is difficult to accept this contention of Dr. Pal that the income-tax on the dividend income could be determined only under clause (a) of sub-sec. (3) of Section 2 of the Finance Act of 1957 by applying the rate or rates applicable under the Finance Act, 1956, and special surcharge as prescribed under 1957 Act could not be added to the amount of income-tax as the Finance Act of 1956 does not make any provision for the levy of special surcharge. As we are of opinion that the term "income-tax" as used in sub-sec. (3) (a) of Section 2 of the Finance Act, 1957, does not include the amount of surcharge for the Union and also the amount of special surcharge as prescribed under the head "surcharges on income-tax" in the First Schedule of the Finance Act of 1957, the argument of learned counsel for the assessee loses all its force. We are definitely of opinion that words "income-tax" as used in Section 2 (3) (a) of the Finance Act, 1957 simply connote that amount of tax on dividend income which does not include the surcharge or special surcharge.

6. It may also be observed that the levy of a special surcharge was for the first time provided by the Finance Act, 1957 and it is contended by Mr. Bhandari that the provision was made by Parliament to meet the financial exigencies of that particular year and it was laid down that special surcharge should be realised on all kinds of unearned income in that financial year. This argument of Mr. Bhandari cannot be said to be devoid of any force because we find in the scheme of sub-section (1) of Section 2 of 1957 Act that the Legislature while imposing a special surcharge for the year 1957-58 specifically provided that subject to the provisions of sub-sections (2), (3), (4) and (5) for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1957, income-tax shall be charged at the rates specified in Part I of the First Schedule of that Act and in the cases to which Paragraphs A, B and C of that Schedule apply, shall be increased by a surcharge for purposes of the Union and a special surcharge on unearned income calculated in either case in the manner provided in the Schedule.

It is not disputed that in the case of the assessee Paragraph A of the First Schedule of the Finance Act, 1957 applies. Under this provision of Sec. 2 (1) (a) of the Finance Act which is made subject to sub-section (3) of that section, the assessee is entitled to claim that the income-tax on his dividend income should be calculated by applying the rate or rates as prescribed in the Finance Act, 1956, but he cannot claim that the amount of income-tax so determined should not be increased by five per cent to add the surcharge and by fifteen per cent to add special surcharge calculated in the manner provided under the heading "surcharges on income-tax" in the First Schedule of the Finance Act, 1957. In our opinion, the assessing authority has rightly imposed special surcharge on the dividend income of the assessee in this case.

7. For the reasons given above, the question referred to us is replied in the affirmative.

AIR 1970 RAJASTHAN 72 (V 57 C 15)

P. N. SHINGHAL, J.

Maharaja Bhagwatsingh of Udaipur, Appellant v. Maharana Bhopal Electric Supply Co. Ltd. and another, Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 707 of 1960, D/-2-12-1968, against decree of Dist. J., Udaipur, D/-9-8-1960.

(A) Electricity (Supply) Act (1948), Sections 57, 23 and Sch. 6 — Object — Concessional supply made to consumer by electricity company under an agreement — Licence under Section 3 of Electricity Act, 1910 granted to that company — Such agreement made part of that licence — Under Electricity (Supply) Act, 1948, Government appointing Rating Committee — Committee recommending withdrawal of such concessional supply — Government accepting that recommendation — Discontinuance of such concessional supply correct — (Electricity Act (1910), S. 3).

Where an agreement for concessional supply to a consumer by an electricity company is made part of the licence granted to that company under Sec. 3 of the Electricity Act, 1910, but a Rating Committee, subsequently appointed by the Government under Sec. 57 of the Electricity (Supply) Act 1948, recommends the withdrawal of such concessional supply and the Government accepts the recommendation, the discontinuance of such concessional supply is correct. (Paras 16 and 17)

In such a case, it follows that S. 57 applies to the licensee-company. It is therefore the duty of the licensee to adjust the rates by periodical revision in accordance with the procedure under that section.

(Para 11)

Undue preference and discrimination are not permissible in fixing the tariff for supply of electricity. When the Rating Committee, takes notice of the fact that the Act does not contemplate any free supply of energy and in view of Section 23 bases its recommendations on new rates on the withdrawal of the concessional supply made to the consumer under the agreement, there can be no doubt that it is justified in taking such a view. (Para 13)

When in accepting the Rating Committee's report the Government clearly accepts the recommendation for the abolition of the concession, and makes its order in accordance with Section 57. (2) (c), such an order is final and binding on all concerned and no grievance can be made if the licensee-company refuses to continue the concessional supply. The object of the Act and its Schedule 6 is to statutorily rationalise and regulate the rates for the supply of energy, in the interests of the public and electrical development. Therefore it cannot be said that such licence providing for the concessional supply to that consumer should continue despite the order made in accordance with Section 57. Discontinuance of such concessional supply is thus correct. (1915) 1 Ch 124 and (1940) 1 Ch 180 and AIR 1966 SC 30, Foll. (Paras 14, 16 and 17)

(B) Electricity (Supply) Act (1948), S. 57 (2) (c) — New rates fixed on recommendations of Rating Committee — Retrospective effect for such rates not permissible.

New rates fixed on the recommendations of a Rating Committee cannot be made applicable with retrospective effect in view of Section 57. (2) (c) of the Electricity (Supply) Act. Thus when the report of the Rating Committee is published on 26-9-1953, the new rates cannot be made effective earlier than two months thereafter so that a customer will be liable to pay according to the revised rates after the expiry of two months from the date of publication of that report. That is such a report cannot be made applicable from 1-7-1953. (Para 17)

JUDGMENT: As both the Courts below have dismissed the suit of the plaintiff, he has preferred the present second appeal which arises from the appellate judgment and decree of the District Judge of Udaipur dated August 9, 1960, in the following circumstances.

2. The plaintiff is the ruler of the former Udaipur State. He raised the present suit on April 14, 1955, with the allegation that the Maharana Bhopal Electric Supply Company Limited, Udaipur, Defendant No 1 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Company') was constituted in 1950 to generate and supply electricity, which was the responsibility of the firm of Messrs. Bhandari Iron and Steel Company. The Company has been discharging that responsibility. It was pleaded in paragraph 6 that an agreement was made with the aforesaid firm of Messrs. Bhandari Iron and Steel Company on October 10/11, 1946 (Ex. 11) according to which electricity was to be supplied to the Maharana on the following condition:

"Free power to palaces up to a maximum of 2000 units per month. For power consumed above these units, concession rates will be charged which should not exceed fifty per cent of the general rates for lights, fans and power respectively."

According to the plaintiff, this agreement was accepted as binding by the Company when it was formed by the owners of Messrs. Bhandari Iron and Steel Company. Thereafter the former State of Mewar merged into the former United State of Rajasthan and that Government reiterated the aforesaid condition of the agreement dated October 10/11, 1946 in the document dated December 31, 1948. This was in fact notified in the form of a licence which was issued in favour of the Company by the successor State of Rajasthan on August 26, 1950. The plaintiff further pleaded that the Company supplied electricity to him from 1946 up to February 1954 in accordance with the above mentioned agreement, but that it wrote to the plaintiff's Master of Household on February 10, 1954 that if the plaintiff did not pay the bill which, according to the plaintiff, was not in conformity with the terms of the agreement, up to February 13, 1954, the Company would stop the supply of electricity.

The supply was in fact disconnected on March 4, 1954 and it was not resumed in spite of all efforts of the plaintiff. The Company however re-started the supply from April 2, 1955 on a temporary basis but as the plaintiff apprehended that it would be discontinued in a few days, he instituted the present suit alleging that as he himself had not committed a breach of the agreement with the Company and was always prepared to make the payment in accordance with it, a decree may be passed granting an injunction against the Company that it shall continue to make the supply of electricity in accordance with the agreements dated October 10/11, 1946 and December 31, 1948, and that the supply will not be disconnected as long as the plaintiff continued to pay for it in accordance with those agreements.

3. The Company filed a written statement and admitted that an agreement was made earlier, but pleaded that the plaintiff was not a party to it and was not entitled to the rights and the benefits thereof. Further, it pleaded that the agreement had become nugatory. The Company also pleaded that the Indian Electricity (Supply) Act came into force in Rajasthan with effect from April 1, 1951, so that Section 57 and Schedules VI and VII thereof became parts of the licence of the Company. On this basis it was stated that the Rajasthan Government appointed a Rating Committee to fix a proper rate for the supply of electricity for the consumers living in Udaipur city, and that the Government thereafter determined the new rates for the supply of electricity in accordance with the recommendations of that committee, and the concession received by the plaintiff earlier came to an end as it was illegal.

It was therefore pleaded that the bill which had been prepared for the period after July 1, 1953 was in accordance with the rates fixed by the State Government and that the plaintiff's electric supply connection was disconnected because it was not paid in full. It was also pleaded that any contract, or licence, or instrument which contravened the provisions of the Electricity (Supply) Act, was void. So also, it was pleaded that the Rajasthan State had terminated the earlier concession and made a new agreement with the Company and it was not open to the plaintiff to challenge it.

4. The State of Rajasthan filed a separate written statement in which the plaintiff's claim was denied and it was pleaded that he had no right to enforce the agreement. It was also pleaded that while an agreement was made on December 31, 1948, it made it quite clear that the expression "Government of United State of Rajasthan at Udaipur" and the word "Government" shall include their successors in office, administrators and assigns, and it was therefore, contended that the State of Rajasthan was entitled to all the rights and advantages then accruing to the Government of the United State of Rajasthan at Udaipur. In this connection it was also pleaded that on the date on which the agreement was made, the Maharana of Udaipur was the Rajpramukh of the United State of Rajasthan and that the agreement was made "for the benefit of its own Head."

It was therefore, contended that on account of the constitutional changes, the State of Rajasthan was entitled to demand 2,000 units of electric energy from the Company for the bona fide use of its public offices and officers, while the plaintiff was not entitled to any such advantage because he was no longer the Head of the State.

5. Issues were framed on the questions whether the plaintiff was entitled to enforce the above-mentioned terms for the supply of free and concessional electricity and whether the agreement which incorporated that term became void after the enforcement of Electricity (Supply) Act with effect from April 1, 1951. Issues were also framed on the questions whether the plaintiff was entitled to enforce the terms of the agreement even though he was not the "head of the State" and there was no privity of contract between him and the defendants.

6. The trial Court, as has been stated, dismissed the suit and as its judgment has been confirmed on appeal by the learned District Judge as aforesaid, the plaintiff has filed the present second appeal.

7. It may be mentioned here that when the case came up for hearing on April 27, 1967, it was reported that Parts 'B', 'C', and 'D' of the file of the trial Court had been weeded out, so that only part 'A' was available. An order was, therefore, made directing the parties to take steps for the reconstitution of the record. It is admitted that the record has been reconstituted with the consent of the learned counsel for the parties. As a result of the reconstitution, exhibits 1 to 8 and 11 to 15 have been placed on the record and the learned counsel are in agreement that all these documents may be read in evidence along with the following gazette notifications and that the case may be decided on their basis,—

1. Commerce & Industries Department notification No. F. 8 (201) C. I./M. P./50, dated August 21, 1950, appearing in the State gazette, Part I, dated August 26, 1950;

2. Public Works Department notification No. F. (149) P. W. E. M./51, dated September 14, 1953, appearing in Part I of the State gazette dated September 26, 1953;

3. Public Works Department notification No. F. 6 (149) P. W. E. M./51, dated October 24, 1953, appearing in Part I of the State gazette, dated October 31, 1953.

8. It is clear from the pleadings that one of the important points in controversy between the parties was whether the plaintiff was entitled to enforce the terms mentioned in the initial agreement dated October 10/11, 1946, in spite of the above-mentioned order dated October 24, 1953 of the State Government to the contrary, notified in Notification No. F. 6 (149) P. W. E. M./51, dated October 24, 1953. This was the subject matter of Issue No. 1. As I shall presently show, the fate of the case depends upon the finding on this issue.

9. It is admitted that the original agreement (Ex. 11) dated October 10/11, 1946 was re-iterated in the letter (Ex. 1) of the Director of Industries and Supplies of the former United State of Rajasthan, Udaipur, dated October 22, 1948 inasmuch as the Director took notice of the clause providing for the free and concessional supply of electricity to the palaces of His Highness the Maharana of Udaipur. It is also admitted that the State executed an agreement with the Company on December 31, 1948 on the lines of the original agreement Ex. 11, dated October 10/11, 1946. This agreement is on the record as Annexure 2 of the State Government's letter Ex. 3. Further, it is admitted that ultimately a licence was issued to the Company and it was notified under notification No. F. (201) C. I. M. P./50, dated August 26, 1950.

A perusal of the notification shows that the licence was issued on the lines of the agreement dated December 31, 1948 and this was specifically stated to be so while defining the term "agreement" in clause 2 (7) of the licence. It was further stated in clause 11 that the licence would be subject to the terms and conditions of the said agreement. It is therefore, quite apparent that clause 6 of agreement Ex. 11 which provided for the free and concessional supply of electricity to the Maharana, became a part of the licence issued to the Company. The plaintiff specifically pleaded in paragraph 8 of the plaint that this was so, and both the defendants took the same stand. There can therefore, be no doubt that the initial agreement Ex. 11 or the subsequent agreement Ex. 3 merged in the licence, and this is the case of the parties also.

10. The question then is whether the clause providing for free and concessional supply of electricity to the Maharana, continued to be in force on the date of the suit. It may be mentioned that it was clearly stated in the licence that it had been granted to the Company by the State Government under the Indian Electricity Act, 1910, as applied to the United State of Rajasthan by the United State of Rajasthan Electricity Ordinance, 1948. Further, it was stated in the interpretation clause of the licence that the expression "Act" in the licence shall mean "the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 as applied to the United State of Rajasthan." The licence of the Company was, therefore, for all practical purposes, a licence under Section 3 of the Indian Electricity Act, 1910. It could therefore, be revoked or amended only in accordance with the provisions of Section 4 of that Act as it was then in force.

It has however, been clearly admitted by all the learned counsel that the licence was not revoked or amended under that section. Besides, it is also admitted by the learned counsel that the Indian Electricity (Supply) Act, 1948 came into force in Rajasthan in the meantime and that it was under the provisions of that Act that the Government appointed a Rating Committee which gave its report Ex. 2 on which the Government made the order dated October 24, 1953 referred to above.

11. When these are the admitted facts, it would follow that Section 57 of the Indian Electricity (Supply) Act applied to the licence of the Company for sub-section (1) of that section made the following provision:—

"57. Licensees' charges to consumers.—

(1) The provisions of the Sixth Schedule and the Table appended to the Seventh Schedule shall be deemed to be incorporated in the licence of every licensee, not being a local authority, from the date of the commencement of the licensee's next succeeding year of account, and from such date the licensee shall comply therewith accordingly and any provisions of such licence or of the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 (IX of 1910), or any other law, agreement or instrument applicable to the licensee shall, in relation to the licensee, be void and of no effect in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of the section and the said Schedule and Table."

The Sixth Schedule of the Indian Electricity (Supply) Act provides the financial principles on which the rates of a licensee are to be adjusted for the sale of the electricity. According to it the rates have to be so adjusted by periodical revision so that the clear profit of the licensee in any year may not, as far as possible, exceed the amount of "reasonable return". The expression "reasonable return" has been defined in the Schedule which provided for its calculation and the determination of the rates for the sale of electricity by every licensee. It therefore, became the duty of the licensee to adjust the rates by periodical revision in accordance with the procedure laid down by Section 57 of the Indian Electricity (Supply) Act.

12. The Company actually applied for a revision of the rates. It is not in dispute that on May 12, 1953 the Company applied to the State Government for revision and removal of the concession in favour of the Maharana of Udaipur. The State Government accordingly appointed a Rating Committee under Section 57 of the Indian Electricity (Supply) Act by a notification published dated June 21, 1952 and the terms of reference of the committee were, as follows,—

"To examine the charges of the said company for the supply of electric energy and to recommend thereon to the said Government separately for the period commencing on the 1st February, 1951, and ending on the 30th June, 1952, and for the period commencing on the 1st July, 1952 onwards."

The Rating Committee went into the matter and its report has been published in notification No.F. (149) P. W. E. M./51, dated September 14, 1953, appearing in Part I of the State Gazette dated September 26, 1953. The Committee took into consideration the existing agreement with the Company and before recommending the rates for different classes of consumers, it considered it necessary to examine the concessional charges which were made by the Company in favour of the Maharana of Udaipur under the agreement dated December 31, 1948. It reached the conclusion, inter alia, that the Electricity Act did not contemplate any free supply of energy and recommended, as follows, —

"The Electricity Act does not contemplate any free supply of energy and now when the rates of supply of energy to the consumers are being revised in conformity with the Act it would be unfair to place the extra burden of this concession on the general body of consumers. We consider this concession as one of the causes of losses to the licensee and the concession, if continued, can only be made by proportional increase in the rates to be charged from the general body of consumers for which we find no justification. If there is any implied agreement between the Government and H. H. the Maharana in regard to the supply of free energy to the palaces, as part of their maintenance, it is for the Government to consider the way out of the difficulty but the consumers of the licensee cannot be unfairly burdened on that account. We would, therefore, recommend the concession should be cancelled and the general rates of supply to the consumers should be applicable to the palaces also."

On the basis of this recommendation, the Rating Committee went on to consider what would be the "reasonable return" to the Company in accordance with the considerations and the criteria laid down in the Indian Electricity (Supply) Act and made its recommendation for the revised charges for the sale of electricity by the Company.

13. It is therefore clear that the Rating Committee based its recommendation regarding the new rates on the withdrawal of the concessional rate in favour of the Maharana of Udaipur and, as has been stated, in reaching that conclusion the Rating Committee took notice of the fact that the Electricity Act did not contemplate any free supply of energy. It has not been disputed that the Committee formed this view on account of the provisions of Section 23 of the Indian Electricity Act which provides that a licensee shall not, in making any agreement for the supply of energy, "show undue preference to any person". It is in fact fairly well settled that undue preference and discrimination is not permissible in fixing the tariff for the supply of electricity so that those concerned cannot show undue preference to any person or exercise undue discrimination against any person.

A similar provision existed in the Electric Lighting Act, 1882 in England and it was held in Attorney-General v. Long Eaton Urban District Council, 1915-1 Ch 124, that any differentiation in the rates of supply was a breach of that provision. A similar view has been taken in Attorney-General v. Wimbledon Corporation, 1940-1 Ch 180. There can therefore be no doubt that the Rating Committee was justified in taking a similar view.

14. The report of the Rating Committee went to the State Government and, as has been stated, it was notified in the State Gazette dated September 26, 1953. The State Government thereupon made an order which was notified in notification No. F. 6 (149) P. W. E. M./51, dated October 24, 1953, which appeared in Part of the State gazette dated October 31, 1953. It was clearly stated in the notification that His Highness the Rajpramukh had approved the rates for the supply of electricity as recommended by the Rating Committee. The notification mentioned the rates, and it is significant that it did not provide for the supply of electricity to anyone free of charge, or at half the rate, so that the earlier provision regarding the supply of electricity free of charge and at concessional rate to the Maharana of Udaipur ceased to be applicable on the enforcement of the new rates under the orders of the State Government.

As has been stated, it was an intrinsic part of the report of the Rating Committee that the concession admissible to the Maharana of Udaipur should be cancelled and that the general rates of supply to the consumers should be applicable to his palaces because, in the opinion of the Rating Committee, it would be "unfair to place the extra burden of this concession on the general body of consumers." In accepting the Rating Committee's report the Government, therefore, undoubtedly accepted this recommendation for the abolition of the concession.

15. It appears however that the Maharana felt aggrieved by the decision of the State Government on the report of the Rating Committee and his Master of Household made a representation to the State Government that the concession regarding the supply of electricity to His Highness was a "privilege" granted in His Highness's favour, which was maintained in the covenant and safeguarded in the Constitution. As will appear from the State Government's order dated November 19, 1953 (Ex. 15), it consulted the Law Department and took the view that, under the law, His Highness could not "benefit under the licence" and that the concession was revocable. It was further stated in that document that in the private property settlement the concession of free electricity was not agreed upon in the case of the ruler of Udaipur. All concerned were therefore informed that the Government had ordered that the Company could not be compelled to continue the concession of free supply of 2,000 units of electricity per mensem to the ruler of Udaipur if the Company did not find it economical and that the Company was free to discontinue the concession or reduce it after negotiation with the ruler.

16. It therefore appears that the State Government adhered to its order which was notified under notification No. F. 6 (149) P. W. E. M./51, dated October 24, 1953, and saw no reason to revise it. The order of the State Government having been made in accordance with the provisions of Section 57 (2) (c) of the Electricity (Supply) Act, it was final and binding on all concerned and no grievance can be made if the Company has refused to continue the free or concessional supply of electricity to the disadvantage of the Maharana. It is well settled that the object of the Electricity (Supply) Act and of the Sixth Schedule thereto is to statutorily rationalise and regulate the rates chargeable for the energy supplied, in the interest of the public and for electrical development, as has been held by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in Poona Electric Supply Co. Ltd., Bombay v. Commissioner of Income Tax Bombay City I, Bombay, AIR 1966 SC 30, and there is no force in the argument that the licence which was published on August 26, 1950 providing for the free and a concessional rate of supply of electricity to the Maharana of Udaipur should continue to prevail in spite of the order made in accordance with Section 57 of the Electricity (Supply) Act.

17. In the view I have taken, there is no force in the claim of the plaintiff in the present suit, except that there is justification for the submission that the new rates fixed by the State Government on the recommendation of the Rating Committee could not be made applicable with retrospective effect from July 1, 1953 in view of the provisions of Section 57 (2) (c) of the Electricity (Supply) Act. The State Government made its order on the approved rates recommended by the Rating Committee on October 24, 1953 and, in accordance with the provisions of the section, the effective date could not be earlier than two months after the date of publication of the report. As the report was published on September 26, 1953, the new charges could not be effective earlier than two months thereafter so that the plaintiff will be liable to pay according to the revised rates after the expiry of the period of two months from the date of publication of the report. While therefore the appeal fails and is dismissed, it is clarified that the revised rates would be payable from the date mentioned above. In all the circumstances of the case, I do not think it is necessary to make any order as to the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1970 RAJASTHAN 77 (V 57 C 16)

JAGAT NARAYAN, J.

Rajeshwar Dayal and another, Petitioners v. Padam Kumar Kothari and others, Respondents.

Civil Revn. Nos. 469 of 1967 and 152 of 1968, D/-2-12-1968, against orders of Munsif, Jaipur City West, D/-4-8-1967 and Addl. Munsif No. 2, Jaipur, D/-15-1-1968, respectively.

Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 153, 151 and 115 (c) and O. 6, R. 17 — Amendment of plaint long after institution of suit to include cause of action not accrued on date of suit — Power of Court — Governing conditions —

Eviction suits instituted on ground of personal necessity — Default in payment of rent by tenant, thereafter — Application to amend plaint for inclusion of such ground made at belated stage — Amendment of plaint, if allowed, amounts to material irregularity — (Houses and Rents — Rajasthan Premises (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act (17 of 1950) (as amended by Act 12 of 1965), S. 13 (1) (a)).

It is clear from Section 153 and O. 6, Rule 17, that the power of the Court to allow an amendment is circumscribed by the words "as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in controversy between the parties". An amendment cannot be allowed if it is not necessary for such a purpose. (Para 6)

The plaintiff can be allowed to add a relief not claimed originally where it is shown that the original relief claimed has, by reason of subsequent change of circumstances, become inappropriate. (Para 7)

But the Court has no power either under Section 153 or under Order 6, Rule 17, to allow an amendment of the plaint to include a cause of action which had not accrued on the date of institution of the suit. (Para 9)

However, in exceptional circumstances the Court may allow such an amendment under Section 151 provided the four conditions, that there is no change of jurisdiction; that the application is not greatly belated; that no fresh enquiry on facts is necessary and that the opposite party will not be deprived of any defence which will be open to him if a fresh suit on the new cause of action were to be brought, are satisfied.

(Paras 14 and 10)

Where in an eviction suit filed on 24-1-1966 on ground of personal necessity, though the rent is alleged to have been defaulted on 24-5-1966, an application to amend the plaint on ground of such default is made on 3-4-1967 and in another similar suit, filed in 1960, such an amendment application is made in 1967 in respect of a default alleged to have been committed in 1962 and in both the cases the fact of such default is seriously disputed, there is no special circumstance justifying the exercise of the inherent power of the Court to allow those applications. Further, both those applications are belated. Therefore, the Court commits a material irregularity within the meaning of Section 115 (c) in such cases in allowing those applications. ORDER: In these two revision applications the question which arises for consideration is whether the Court committed a material irregularity within the meaning of Section 115 (c) in allowing an amendment of the plaint long after the institution of the suit so as to include a cause of action which had not accrued to the plaintiff on the date of the institution of the suits.

2. Civil Revision No. 469 of 1967 arises out of a suit for eviction filed by the plaintiff on 24-1-66 on the ground of sub-letting and personal necessity. On 3-4-67 the plaintiff moved an application for amendment of the plaint so as to include another ground for eviction which was not available to him when the suit was filed. The tenancy of the defendant is a monthly one commencing from the 25th of the English calendar month. In his amendment application the plaintiff alleged that the defendant had paid rent upto 24-11-65, but neither paid nor tendered it thereafter so that on 25-5-66 i.e. after the institution of the present suit he has become entitled to evict the defendant on the ground set forth in Section 13 (1) (a) of the Rajasthan Premises (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act 1950 as amended by Act No. 12 of 1965 published in the Rajasthan Gazette dated 9-6-65. This application was opposed by the defendant on various grounds. It was asserted that the defendant had tendered rent to the plaintiff, but he had refused to accept it. On 3-5-67 he made a deposit of the rent due upto 24-4-67 under Section 19-A. It was contended that a cause of action which had not accrued to the plaintiff on the date of the institution of the suit could not be added by way of amendment. The trial Court however allowed the amendment by the following order:

"After careful consideration of legal implication I allow this application for amending the plaint. If the plaintiff cannot succeed on account of subsequent defaults, that will be seen only during the trial of the said case and not in this application for amendment."

3. In Civil Revision No. 152 of 1968 the present suit was instituted on 8-7-60 for the eviction of the defendant from a shop on the ground of personal necessity. Issues were framed on 9-2-61 and the entire evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff was recorded by 7-2-62. On 13-4-67 the statement of the defendant was recorded and his evidence was going on when an application for amendment of the plaint was made on 19-12-67. It was alleged in this application that the defendant had paid rent upto 30-9-62 but had not paid rent thereafter and on account of his failure to pay the rent after 30-9-62 he had become liable to ejectment on the ground mentioned in Section 13 (1) (a). A prayer was made to allow an amendment of the plaint so as to add this ground of eviction which had accrued to the plaintiff after the institution of the suit. The plaintiff instituted a separate suit for the recovery of arrears of rent from the defendant from 1-10-62 to 31-12-65 which is pending, but in that suit no prayer for eviction on the ground of default was made.

4. The application for amendment was opposed on the ground that the plaint could not be amended so as to include a cause of action which had not accrued to the plaintiff on the date of the suit. It was asserted that the General Watch Company was the tenant and not the defendant and that rent had been tendered in the name of General Watch Company but the plaintiff had refused to accept it. The learned Additional Munsif No. 2 Jaipur allowed the amendment without giving any reasons.

5. The contention on behalf of the applicants in these two revision applications is that the Court has no power either under Section 153 or Order 6, Rule 17, Civil P. C. to allow an amendment of the plaint so as to include a cause of action which had not accrued on the date of the suit. These two provisions of law are reproduced below :

"Section 153. The Court may at any time, and on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it may think fit, amend any defect or error in any proceeding in a suit, and all necessary amendments shall be made for the purpose of determining the real question or issue raised by or depending on such proceeding."

"O. 6, R. 17. The Court may at any stage of the proceedings allow either party to alter or amend his pleadings in such manner and on such terms as may be just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties."

6. It will thus be seen that the power of the Court to allow amendment is circumscribed by the words "as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in controversy between the parties." An amendment cannot be allowed if it is not necessary for such a purpose.

7. There is no reported case of the Privy Council or the Supreme Court in which an amendment was allowed so as to enable the plaintiff to include a cause of action which had not accrued to him on the date of the suit. I may mention here that the plaintiff can be allowed to claim a relief not claimed originally where it is shown that the original relief claimed has, by reason of subsequent change of circumstances, become inappropriate.

8. The following decisions of the Privy Council are helpful in determining the limits of the power of the Court to allow amendment of the pleadings:

9. In Ma Shwe Mya v. Maung Mo Hnaung, AIR 1922 PC 249, the plaintiff sued in 1913 for specific performance of the verbal agreement made in 1912 by the defendant with him for transfer of certain land for oil wells in place of the first agreement of 1903 and when the Court found the verbal agreement not proved, the plaintiff applied to amend the plaint by claiming damages for breach of the contract of 1903. It was held that the amendment could not be allowed as it was not open to the Court to permit a new case to be made out. After quoting Section 153 and Order 6, Rule 17, their Lordships observed :

"The real question in controversy between the parties in these proceedings was the existence and the character of an agreement alleged to have been made in 1912 for the delivery of certain sites of oil wells specified and identified by the numbers stated in the plaint, which could only have been delivered in respect of that subsequent bargain. When once that contract has been negatived, to permit the plaintiff to set up and establish another and an independent contract altogether would, in their Lordships' opinion, be to go outside the provisions established by the Code of Civil Procedure, to which reference has been made. It would be a regrettable thing if, when in fact the whole of a controversy between two parties was properly open, rigid rules prevent its determination, but in this case their Lordships think that the rules do have that operation and that it was not open to the Court to permit a new case to be made."

In Doorga Prosad v. Secretary of State, AIR 1945 PC 62, the suit was filed on 17th February, 1934 and the relief claimed was (1) a declaration that the certificate lodged by the defendant before the Certificate Officer, Howrah, on 1st April 1933, was illegal and void and inoperative; (2) an injunction restraining the defendant from enforcing or attempting to enforce the said illegal certificate; (3) an account of all monies realised by the defendant under the said illegal certificate and refund thereof to the plaintiff and (4) release from civil prison. No claim was made for the modification of the amount alleged to be due on the certificate if valid. Such a claim was however made before their Lordships of the Privy Council in appeal. Their Lordships however declined to entertain it. It was observed :

"The only question which arises in the appeal is whether a certificate dated 1st April, 1933, issued under the provisions of the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, is a valid certificate. The appellant in his case claims further that the certificate, if originally valid, became unenforceable by reason of matters which occurred after the filing of the suit; but their Lordships are of opinion that the relief claimed in this suit must be confined to matters existing at the date when the suit was instituted."

In Kanda v. Wagh, AIR 1950 PC 68, the plaintiff brought a suit challenging the validity of a deed of gift relating to land executed on 17th December, 1938 by defendant No. 1, widow of one Amira, in favour of her daughter's son, defendant No. 2, on the ground that the land was ancestral and the gift was contrary to custom. The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit held that the plaintiff had failed to prove the custom alleged by which a widow could not give her deceased husband's property to her daughter's son and that the land was not ancestral. In accordance with these conclusions he dismissed the suit with costs. The appellants appealed to the District Judge who agreed with the findings that the land was not ancestral, but he held that the parties were governed by custom in the matter of alienation and he sent the case back to the trial Court for decision of a further issue which he framed in these words :

"The land in suit having been found to be non-ancestral, do the collaterals exclude the daughter's son according to the custom of the parties and is the gift, therefore, invalid?"

This issue did not arise on the pleadings. Both sides appealed to the High Court which held that the District Judge had erred in framing a new case for the appellants. In their appeal to the Privy Council the plaintiffs asked for leave to amend the plaint in order to cover the new issue. This was refused with the following observations:

"As already indicated the question embodied in the additional issue was not raised in the pleadings. The appellants founded their claim on the ground that the land was ancestral and it was on that ground that they challenged the right of the widow to make the gift. Not once during the proceedings in the trial Court did they suggest that even if the land was found to be non-ancestral, the widow would still be incompetent to dispose of it. In Eshenchunder Singh v. Shamachurn Bhutto, (1866-67) 11 Moo Ind App 7 at p. 20 (PC), Lord Westbury described it as an absolute necessity that the determination in a cause should be founded upon a case to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made. The course decided upon by the learned District Judge offended against this principle, and their Lordships consider that he was rightly overruled.

In asking the Board to allow the plaint to be amended at this stage attention has been drawn to the provisions of Section 153 and O. 6, Rule 17, Civil P. C. The powers of amendment conferred by the Code are very wide, but they must be exercised in accordance with legal principles, and their Lordships cannot allow an amendment which would involve the setting up of a new case. The judgment of Lord Buckmaster in AIR 1922 PC 249, is directly in point. It was there held that it was not open to a Court under Section 153 and O. 6, R. 17, to allow an amendment which altered the real matter in controversy between the parties."

In P. H. Patil v. K. S. Patil, AIR 1957 SC 363, their Lordships of the Supreme Court quoted with approval the following passage from the judgment of Batchelor J. in Kisandas Rupchand v. Rachappa Vithoba, (1909) ILR 33 Bom 644 at pp. 649-650.

"All amendments ought to be allowed which satisfy the two conditions (1) of not working injustice to the other side and (2) of being necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties.....but I refrain from citing further authorities as, in my opinion, they all lay down precisely the same doctrine. That doctrine, as I understand it, is that amendment should be refused only where the other party cannot be placed in the same position as if the pleading had been originally correct, but the amendment would cause him an injury which could not be compensated in costs. It is merely a particular case of this general rule that where a plaintiff seeks to amend by setting up a fresh claim in respect of a cause of action which since the institution of the suit had become barred by limitation, the amendment must be refused; to allow it would be to cause the defendant an injury which could not be compensated in costs by depriving him of a good defence to the claim. The ultimate test therefore still remains the same; can the amendment be allowed without injustice to the other side, or can it not?" and observed in paragraph 11 of the A.I.R. report (1957 SC 363)—

"The same principles, we hold, should apply in the present case. The amendments do not really introduce a new case, and the application filed by the applicant himself showed that he was not taken by surprise; nor did he have to meet a new claim set up for the first time after the expiry of the period of limitation."

Section 153 and Order 6, R. 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure are based on O. 28, Rules 1 and 12 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of England are as follows:

R. 1 "The Court or a Judge may, at any stage of the proceedings, allow either party to alter or amend his indorsement or pleadings, in such manner and on such terms as may be just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties."

R. 12. "The Court or a Judge may at any time, and on such terms as to costs or otherwise as the Court or Judge may think just, amend any defect or error in any proceedings, and all necessary amendments shall be made for the purpose of determining the real question or issue raised by or depending on the proceeding."

In Eshelby v. Federated European Bank Ltd., 1932-1 KB 254, Swift J., explained as to what was meant by the words "for the purpose of determining the real question or issue raised by or depending on the proceedings" as follows:—

"In some cases neither party has very clear and definite view of the real position until the witnesses have been examined and cross-examined, and documents have been criticized in open Court. If the true points at issue are to be determined, and real justice to be done, the pleadings should not be too rigidly adhered to and the Court should make such amendments as are necessary in the proceedings for the real rights of the parties to be determined."

In the above case a sum of £1500 was payable in 4 instalments £375 on Oct. 22, 1930 and £375 on January 15, 1931 and the other two instalments at subsequent dates. The plaintiff issued the writ on 28-11-30. The action came on for trial before an official referee on March 16, 1931. After

West Bengal, while the remaining Assistants stand on a par with Lower Division Assistants in West Bengal. As already pointed out, due to paucity of chances for promotion, the Tripura Administration Pay Committee suggested that 25% of the posts of the Assistants should be reserved for selection grade with higher pay and that the selection grade might be given to the Assistants on the basis of seniority-cum-merit. Vide page 20 of the report. Accordingly, the Administration of Tripura issued certain instructions regarding the manner in which the 25% of the posts of the Assistants should be selected for the selection grade. Vide Exts. B-5 and B-6. According to the respondents, the respondents 4 to 20 and some others were appointed in the selection grade after they passed the tests and after the departmental promotion committee selected them. The rulings relied on by the respondents' counsel are more to the point in question whether such a reservation could be made and whether recruitment to the selection grade could be made under executive instructions on the basis of merit-cum-seniority. No employee has any right to promotion as a matter of right and the Government can determine the suitability of a person for promotion. Vide Rudraradhya v. State of Mysore, AIR 1961 Mys 247. The High Court, Calcutta v. Amal Kumar, AIR 1962 SC 1704, M. A. Moqem v. State of Mysore, AIR 1963 Mys 219 and Arun Kumar Bhattacharjee v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1968 Cal 35. Also, it is clear that the Government can appoint a Committee like the departmental promotion committee as in the present case for obtaining its views about the candidates who are eligible to be promoted. Vide K. N. Thankam v. State of Kerala, AIR 1965 Ker 233. It was held in that case that it was open to the Government to seek the advice of an expert body in the matter of selection to a post, that the said power is inherent in the executive power of the Government and that it is not necessary that there should be any statutory provision or rules under Article 309 of the Constitution to enable the Government to declare a post a selection post.

In two rulings the Supreme Court held that in the matters of appointment and promotion no rules regarding the same need be shown before the Government exercises its executive powers. In B. N. Nagarajan v. State of Mysore, AIR 1966 SC 1942, rule 3 of the Mysore State Civil Services (General Recruitment) Rules of 1957 contained the words "shall be as set forth in the rules of recruitment of such service specially made in that behalf". It was held that rule 3 did not imply that, till the rules were made in that behalf, no recruitment could be made to any service, that it was not obligatory under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution to make rules of recruitment before a service could be constituted or a post created or filled up, that the State Government had executive power in relation to all matters, with respect to which the Legislature of the State had power to make laws and that, therefore, there is nothing in the terms of Article 309 of the Constitution which abridges the power of the executive to act under Article 162 of the Constitution without a law. It was further held that the rules usually take a long time to make, that various authorities have to be consulted and that it could not have been the intention of Rule 3 to halt the working of the public departments till the rules were framed. It was also pointed out that if the Government advertised the appointments and the conditions of service of the appointments and made a selection, after advertisement, there would be no breach of Article 15 or Article 16 of the Constitution, because everybody, who was eligible in view of the conditions of service would be entitled to be considered by the State.

Sant Ram Sharma v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1967 SC 1910 is more to the point. The Supreme Court held that promotion to selection grade posts (in Indian Police Service) was not automatic on the basis of ranking in gradation list, that promotion was primarily based on merit and not on seniority alone and that it could not be said that till the statutory rules governing promotion to the selection grade posts were framed the Government could not issue administrative instructions regarding the principles to be followed and that, if the cases of all the eligible candidates were considered before appointment to such posts, there would be no violation of Articles 14 and 16 of the Constitution.

17. It is also clear from the rulings of the Supreme Court that persons doing the same kind of work are not bound to get the same scales of pay and that in one cadre there can be different scales of pay. In Kishori Mohanlal v. Union of India, AIR 1962 SC 1139 it was held that the abstract doctrine of equal pay for equal work has nothing to do with Article 14 of the Constitution and that it could not be said to be violated where the pay scales of Class I and Class II Income-tax officers are different, though they do the same kind of work.

In State of Punjab v. Joginder Singh, AIR 1963 SC 913 it was held that it cannot be contended that the State cannot constitute two services consisting of employees doing the same work but with different scales of pay or subject to different conditions of service and that constitution of such services is not violative of Article 14 of the Constitution. It was also held that the proposition Article 14 requires that equal work must receive equal pay or that if there is equality in pay and work there have to be equal conditions of service is untenable and that the Government which is carrying on the administration has necessarily to have a choice in the constitution of the services to man the administration and that the limitations imposed by the Constitution are not such as to preclude the creation of such services.

The latest decision of the Supreme Court in State of Mysore v. Narasinga Rao, AIR 1968 SC 349 has very material bearing on the question at issue. The Mysore State created two separate pay scales for matriculates and non-matriculates in the same category of tracers. It was held that Article 14 does not forbid reasonable classification for the purposes of legislation. When any impugned rule or statutory provision is assailed on the ground that it contravenes Article 14, its validity can be sustained if two tests are satisfied. The first test is that the classification on which it is founded must be based on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things grouped together from others left out of the group; and the second test is that the differentia in question must have a reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved by the rule or statutory provision in question. Article 16 is only an instance of the application of the general rule of equality laid down in Article 14 and it should be construed as such. Hence, there is no denial of equality of opportunity unless the person, who complains of discrimination, is equally situated with the person or persons who are alleged to have been favoured. Article 16 (1) does not bar a reasonable classification of employees or reasonable tests for their selection. The provisions of Article 14 or Article 16 do not exclude the laying down of selective tests, nor do they preclude the Government from laying down qualifications for the post in question. Such qualifications need not be only technical, but they can also be general qualifications relating to the suitability of the candidate for public service as such. It was, therefore, held that the classification of two grades of tracers—one for Matriculate tracers with higher pay scale and the other for non-Matriculate tracers with a lower pay scale was not violative of Article 14 or Article 16 of the Constitution.

18. In the present case, therefore, creation of 25% of "selection grade" posts out of the Assistants amounted to creation of "Upper Division Assistants" corresponding to West Bengal Secretariat and the remaining 75% of the Assistants would correspond to Lower Division Assistants in West Bengal. So, in effect the order of the Government of India as per Ext. A-1 was brought into force by creating two separate divisions among the Assistants. The Government would have been well advised if they separated 25% posts out of 101 posts of the Assistants and designated them as "Upper Division Assistants" carrying higher scale of pay. The Government should have made a separate classification in serial no. 7 in schedule I of Tripura Employees' (Revision of Pay and Allowances) Rules of 1963 by separating Upper Division Assistants from Lower Division Assistants and mentioning the number of their posts and their separate scales of pay instead of creating a confusion by adding "25% of the posts" with a separate scale of pay. But, this is not violative of the provisions of Articles 14 and 15 of the Constitution of India. As already pointed out, the Government of the Union Territory has the executive power to lay down separately the principles for the selection of the Assistants for the selection grade posts and these instructions are found in Exts. B-5 and B-6. So, that portion of classification as "25% of the posts" in serial no. 7 in schedule I of the Tripura Employees' (Revision of Pay and Allowances) Rules of 1963 cannot be struck down on the ground that the said rules themselves do not indicate the method in which the "25% of the posts" should be filled up.

19. The further contention of the learned counsel for the petitioners that either all the Assistants should be given the same scale of pay namely, Rs. 150-250/- or, preferably, the selection grade scale of pay of Rs. 225-475/- by deleting the expression "for 25% of posts" from Col. 4 of serial No. 7 in schedule I of Tripura Employees Revision of Pay & Allowances Rules of 1963 does not arise. No doubt, under the doctrine of severability a rule, which is invalid, can be separated and the rule which is valid can be upheld. Vide M/s. Jalan Trading Co. Private Ltd. v. Mill Mazdoor Sabha, AIR 1967 SC 691, Gulabbhai Vallabbhai v. Union of India, AIR 1967 SC 1110, and State of Madhya Pradesh v. Ranojirao Shinde, AIR 1968 SC 1053. But, this question does not arise in view of my finding that the separation of 25% of the posts towards the selection grade with higher scale of pay is not invalid.

20. It may be noted that Ext. A-5, copy of the petition dated 15-3-1967 sent by the petitioners by way of demand for justice, shows that their grievance was that the revision of pay scales of the Assistants was not made on par with that in West Bengal. So, they demanded that their pay scales should be revised in accordance with the pay scales obtaining for the same cadre in West Bengal. But, in the course of the arguments it transpired that in making the selection of the Assistants for the selection grade some irregularities were committed. The petitioners and the remaining Assistants in the Civil Secretariat were informed about the test, which was arranged to be held in the Umakanta Academy Campus Hall from 9-30 A. M. to 5 P. M. on 17-9-1961. Vide Ext. B-7. Ext. B-8 contains a list of 84 Assistants who were eligible to sit for the test. The five petitioners bearing serial Nos. 51 to 53, 59 and 74 as per Ext. B-8 did not sit for the examination. Some other Assistants also did not sit for the examination. After the remaining Assistants appeared for the examination, their marks were listed out. Then there was correspondence between the Chief Commissioner and the Chief Secretary, who suggested that no further oral interview was necessary and that a panel of Assistants eligible for promotion as selection grade Assistants might be prepared on the basis of seniority-cum-merit. Vide Ext. B10. Ext. B11 shows that three Assistants were absent and that the special test for them might be conducted on 15-10-1961, that in the meanwhile the others who stood in the test should be promoted as mentioned in Para 4 of Ext. B-11 and that two posts should be left vacant to be filled up after the remaining three Assistants sat for the examination. Ext. B-12 shows that 18 Assistants were selected and promoted to the selection grade on 7-10-1961 and that they were given higher scale of pay. Ext. B-14 shows that the test for the absentee Assistants was held on 6-6-1965 and not on 15-10-1961 as proposed and that they were selected and appointed to the selection grade on 11-6-1965. The said two Assistants Shri Birendra Kishore Roy and Shri Usha Ranjan Das Gupta, who were selected in 1965, were not made parties to the Writ petition. It further appears that three more Assistants serial Nos. 8, 15 and 35 in Ext. B-8 were also subsequently promoted in 1968 as selection grade Assistants. They too were not made parties to this Writ petition. After the respondents filed documents showing the instructions issued by the Government for selecting the Assistants and the lists of candidates etc., the petitioners filed counter affidavit refuting the documents. The respondents filed a rejoinder to the petitioners' counter. It is not necessary to examine the further question whether the respondents 4 to 20 and some others, who are not parties to this Writ petition, were validly appointed in the selection grade or not. For, the petitioners never challenged their appointments in the Writ petition. This matter is outside the scope of the present Writ petition. As already stated the Writ petitioners want only that all the Assistants should have one uniform scale of pay and grade—either the lower scale or the increased scale given to the selection grade. The petitioners never prayed that the appointments of the respondents 4 to 20 to the selection grade should be set aside. So, it is not necessary to decide a question, which is not pleaded in the Writ petition. Vide Vidya Sagar v. Board of Revenue, U. P. Lucknow, AIR 1964 All. 356, Pratap Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1964 SC 72, though according to Sri Subramania Desika Gnanasambanda Pandarasannidi v. State of Madras, AIR 1965 SC 1578 a plea raised in the affidavit-in-rejoinder for the first time may also be considered. The faint contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioners that the appointments to the selection grade are invalid because the executive instructions contained in Exts. B-4 and B-5 were not correctly followed is not tenable. For, the respondents 4 to 20 were taken by surprise. They did not file any counter, because no relief was asked for by the petitioners against them. Besides, this Court cannot issue any Writ against the other Assistants, who were promoted to the selection grade, in their absence as parties to the Writ petition. In fact, the learned Counsel for the petitioners did not seriously press this aspect of the case. He concentrated his argument only on the question of the alleged discrimination in the pay scale—lower scale for 75% of the Assistants and a higher scale for 25% of them.

21. Before concluding the judgment, it is necessary to point out that it is desirable that the respondents 1 to 3 should separate 25% posts out of the Assistants and designate them as posts of upper division Assistants carrying the revised scale of pay of Rs. 225-475/- and frame rules for filling up the said posts.

22. Thus, there are no grounds for making the rule absolute and the rule is accordingly discharged. In the circumstances of the case, I direct the parties to bear their respective costs.

Rule discharged.

Writ Petn. No. 12 of 1964, D/- 1-9-1969.
Civil Services — Revised Leave Rules, 1933, R. 14 (c) — Removal from service for over-staying leave other than extraordinary leave — R. 14 (c) does not apply — Compliance with Art. 311 necessary.

Rule 14 (c) and Regulation 13 of the Jodhpur Service Regulations are almost identical in nature and effect though they are differently worded. A plain reading of R. 14 (c) would bring out that it applies to a Government servant who overstays the extraordinary leave granted to him and to one who absents himself from duty without taking any leave or who overstays leave other than extraordinary. Therefore where a Government servant remains absent from duty without earned leave applied for being sanctioned, he is guilty of misconduct but for such misconduct he could be removed from service only on compliance with the constitutional requirements enshrined in Art. 311. In such case removal or discharge from service of the servant under R. 14 (c) is clearly unsustainable. AIR 1966 SC 492 Applied. (Para 9)

B. C. Dev Barma and Shri R. L. Chakraborty, for Petitioner; H. C. Nath, Government Advocate, for Respondents.

ORDER: In this writ petition, filed under Article 226 of the Constitution, the petitioner Manmatha Bhattacharjee, who was employed as Lower Division clerk in the Education Directorate of the Tripura Administration, challenges the validity of his removal from service.

2. Manmatha Bhattacharjee was recruited on 30th of December, 1952, as primary teacher and joined on 1-1-1953 under the Tripura Administration in the Education Department, Relief and Rehabilitation, and from there he was transferred to the Education Department, Tripura, wherein he was absorbed as Lower Division clerk. In the year 1958 his services were placed at the disposal of the Territorial Council. He was upgraded in course of time as Upper Division clerk and transferred to the office of the Inspector of Schools, Sadar. By an order dated 14-3-1962, he was transferred from there to the office of the Inspector of Schools at Dharmanagar, where he took over on 1-5-1962 after having been released on 24-4-1962 by the Inspector of Schools at Sadar. On 2-5-1962, he applied for 6 days' casual leave for bringing his family from Agartala to Dharmanagar. On reaching Agartala on 3-5-1962, he found his wife gravely ill. Consequently, he applied for 2 months' earned leave, with effect from 2-5-1962, to the Inspector of Schools at Dharmanagar. The relevant application was accompanied by a medical certificate respecting his wife's illness. However, that application fetched no reply. He then submitted an application on 22-6-1962 for payment of his salary. Thereafter, he submitted another application praying for extension by one month of the earned leave effective from 2-7-1962. That too remained unresponded. Faced with critical situation arising out of his wife's continued illness and non-response to his applications for leave and payment of salary already earned, in sheer frustration the petitioner tendered his resignation on 6-7-1962 per registered cover addressed to the Inspector of Schools, Dharmanagar.

By a letter dated 11-7-1962, he was informed by the Inspector of Schools that his resignation may not be accepted as he had not resumed duty in compliance with the direction contained in letter dated 29th of June/3rd of July, 1962, sent to him. The petitioner wrote back stating that he had not received any such letter. Some more correspondence was exchanged between him and the Inspector of Schools until 30th of November, 1962, when the petitioner addressed a communication to the Chief Executive Officer of the Tripura Territorial Council, praying for acceptance of his resignation earlier submitted and claiming leave salary due to him. Some dispute was also pending between the petitioner and the Department respecting his T. A. bill in connection with his transfer to Dharmanagar. He had drawn Rs. 175/- in advance before proceeding to that station. The Principal Officer of the Tripura Territorial Council directed the petitioner, by a communication dated 8-2-1963, that unless "the final T. A. bill" was submitted, his representation dated 30th of November, 1962, addressed to the Chief Executive Officer shall not be considered. The petitioner sent a reminder on 17-5-1963 for acceptance of his resignation and payment of arrears of salary, and also submitted a duplicate T. A. bill on 6-3-1963. Having received no further communication from any quarter, he was forced to make a representation on 22-8-1963 to the Director of Education Department. That Director communicated to him, by a letter dated 3rd/9th September, 1963, that the order regarding his service had been communicated to the Inspector of Schools, Dharmanagar. A copy of that order was also sent to the petitioner. That order was to the effect that Manmatha Bhattacharjee having remained absent from duty for a period exceeding 90 days with effect from 2-5-1965, his services stood automatically terminated from the forenoon of 21-7-1963 in terms of Rule 14 (c) of the Revised Leave Rules of 1933.

3. The petitioner filed an appeal with the Chief Commissioner of Tripura on 16-9-1963 against the order terminating his services. It is alleged that no reply was received by him from the Chief Commissioner.

4. It was claimed in the writ petition that the termination of the petitioner's service is in violation of Article 311 of the Constitution for it is obviously in the nature of penalty. It was also emphasised that though the petitioner had submitted his resignation, on 6-7-1962, no attention was paid to it and he was discharged from service on a different ground.

5. The respondents traversed in their written statement the contention of the petitioner that his removal from service offends the constitutional provisions. It was pleaded that it is a case of automatic termination of service in accordance with Rule 14 (c) of the Revised Leave Rules, 1933, and not a case of dismissal, removal or reduction in rank by way of punishment, and that, as such, the applicability of Article 311 is not attracted. Another point urged was that since the petitioner had resigned from his post on 5-7-1962 with one month's notice, his service came to an end on 5-8-1962.

6. Shri Dev Barma, appearing for the petitioner, submitted on the authority of AIR 1966 SC 492, Jai Shanker v. State of Rajasthan, that the removal of a Government servant from service for over-staying his leave is illegal even though the Service Regulations by which he is governed contain a provision to that effect. Jai Shanker (of the cited authority) had challenged the validity of termination of his service, which termination, it was claimed on behalf of the Government, had come about in terms of Regulation 13 of Jodhpur Service Regulations. The Regulation runs as under:

"An individual who absents himself without permission or who remains absent without permission for one month or longer after the end of his leave should be considered to have sacrificed his appointment and may only be reinstated with the sanction of the competent authority.

Note:- The submission of an application for extension of leave already granted does not entitle an individual to absent himself without permission".

Rule 14 (c) of the Revised Leave Rules of 1933 relied upon by the respondents in our case is in the following terms:—

"Where a Government servant, who is not in permanent employ or quasi-permanent employ, fails to resume duty on the expiry of the maximum period of extraordinary leave granted to him, or where such a Government servant who is granted a lesser amount of extraordinary leave than the maximum amount admissible, remains absent from duty for any period which together with the extraordinary leave granted exceeds the limit upto which he could have been granted such leave under sub-rule (b), he shall, unless the President in view of the exceptional circumstances of the case otherwise determine, be deemed to have resigned his appointment and shall, accordingly, cease to be in Government employ".

This Rule and Regulation No. 13 appear to be almost identical in nature and effect though they are differently worded.

7. The Supreme Court posed the question, in Jai Shanker's case, AIR 1966 SC 492, whether Regulation 13 is sufficient to enable the Government to remove a person from service without giving him an opportunity of showing cause against that punishment. It was represented before the Supreme Court by the counsel for the Government that the Government does not order removal of the employee under Regulation no. 13 because the incumbent himself gives up the employment. Repelling the contention, the Supreme Court held:

"We do not think that the constitutional protection can be taken away in this manner by a side wind. While, on the one hand, there is no compulsion on the part of the Government to retain a person in service if he is unfit and deserves dismissal or removal, on the other, a person is entitled to continue in service if he wants until his service is terminated in accordance with law. One circumstance deserving removal may be over-staying one's leave. This is a fault which may entitle Government, in a suitable case, to consider a man as unfit to continue in service. But even if a regulation is made, it is necessary that Government should give the person an opportunity of showing cause why he should not be removed."

At another place in the judgment the Supreme Court observed:

"Whichever way one looks at the matter, the order of the Government involves a termination of the service when the incumbent is willing to serve. The Regulation involves a punishment for over-staying one's leave and the burden is thrown on the incumbent to secure reinstatement by showing cause. It is true that the Government may visit the punishment of discharge or removal from service on a person who has absented himself by over-staying his leave, but we do not think that Government can order a person to be discharged from service without at least telling him that they propose to remove him and giving him an opportunity of showing cause why he should not be removed. If this is done the incumbent will be entitled to move against the punishment for, if his plea succeeds, he will not be removed and no question of reinstatement will arise". Yet another relevant observation made by the Supreme Court was:

"A removal is removal and if it is punishment for overstaying one's leave an opportunity must be given to the person against whom such an order is proposed, no matter how the Regulation describes it. To give no opportunity is to go against Art. 311 and this is what has happened here".

8. I think these observations of the Supreme Court are decisive of the matter debated before this Court. Admittedly the petitioner was never called upon to show cause against his proposed termination of service on account of his absence from duty for a period exceeding 90 days from 2-5-1962. It is really tragic that the Director of Education should make an order on 26th of August, 1963, to the effect that the service of the petitioner stood automatically terminated with effect from 31-7-1962 forenoon, when the petitioner had submitted his resignation as long ago as 6th of July, 1962. It is obvious that the Department was out to smite the petitioner for having enjoyed leave without getting the same first sanctioned. In fairness to the petitioner, the Department should have referred the matter to the President of India in terms of Rule 14 (c) asking instructions whether the resignation of the petitioner should be accepted or his service considered terminated. In face of the peculiar situation created by the resignation of the petitioner, the Education Department would have been well advised to place the relevant papers before the President for his necessary directions. It reflects on the efficiency of the Department that an application for earned leave should remain unattended for a period of more than two months. According to para 7 of the written statement of the respondents, the petitioner was addressed a letter on 3rd of July, 1962, communicating rejection of his leave and directing him to resume duty by 5th of July, 1962. The petitioner has denied the receipt of that letter and his denial is supported by affidavit. There is no counter-affidavit that such a letter had actually been posted to the address of the petitioner. A copy of that letter was supplied to the petitioner at his request on or about 31st of July, 1962 vide para 8 of the written statement. It follows that the petitioner did not receive any official communication earlier than 31st of July, 1962, that his leave application had been rejected. Anyway, in view of the Supreme Court authority cited above it is not open to the respondents to contend that the petitioner's discharge from service does not offend the provisions of Article 311 inasmuch as admittedly he was not afforded an opportunity of showing cause against his proposed removal or discharge from service.

9. I am also not satisfied that the case of the petitioner is covered by R. 14 (c). A plain reading of the rule would bring out that it applies to a Government servant who overstays the extraordinary leave granted to him, and not to one who absents himself from duty without taking any leave or who overstays leave other than extraordinary. Rule 14 (a) provides that the extraordinary leave may be granted to an officer in special circumstances—

(i) where no other leave is by rule admissible, or

(ii) when other leave is admissible, but the officer concerned applies in writing for the grant of extraordinary leave. It is not the contention of the respondents that no variety of leave was due to the petitioner when on 3rd of May, 1962, he applied for two months' earned leave. Nor it can be urged that the petitioner had ever moved the authority concerned in writing for grant of extraordinary leave to him. The entire correspondence exchanged between the parties has been placed on the record by the petitioner. That correspondence shows that he had applied only for earned leave and not for extraordinary leave. Therefore, I fail to see how could the Government dispense with petitioner's services under rule 14 (c). If the petitioner had remained absent from duty without earned leave applied for having been sanctioned, he was guilty, none may seriously dispute, of misconduct but for such misconduct he could be removed from service only on compliance with the constitutional requirements enshrined in Art. 311. That, of course, never happened. The removal or discharge from service under Rule 14 (c) is clearly unsustainable because in terms that rule does not apply to the instant case. The petitioner had remained absent without earned leave having been granted to him, and it cannot be the charge against him that he had overstayed extraordinary leave.

10. Shri H. C. Nath, the learned Government Advocate appearing for the respondents, submitted, towards the close of his arguments, that in view of the resignation tendered by the petitioner on 6-7-1962, his service terminated on the expiry of period of one month mentioned in the letter of resignation, and that as such he is not entitled to claim the declaration that he is still in service. Shri Dev Barma, on the other hand, urged that since the Government has never accepted the resignation of the petitioner, though the latter had requested repeatedly for its acceptance, the submission made by Shri H. C. Nath has no foundation to rest upon. He, therefore, prayed that the petitioner is entitled to the declaration that he is still in service. The matter at issue does not appear to be free from difficulty. It can be looked at from three angles. Firstly, it can be said that the resignation became effective from 6-8-1962 on the expiry of one month's notice given per letter of resignation itself. In the second place, it may be legitimately contended that the resignation having not been accepted thus far, despite petitioner's repeated requests to accept it, the Government may not see its way in accepting it even at present. Lastly, the resignation having admittedly not been accepted so far the petitioner may have the right to withdraw it and he may withdraw it. It is also conceivable that the Government may accept the resignation before it is withdrawn by the petitioner. All these matters require serious scrutiny and consideration. I have decided not to adjudicate on that aspect of the dispute between the parties in the present writ petition. I may now set out in a few words what has weighed with me in reaching that conclusion.

11. The petitioner came to the Court to challenge his discharge or removal from service, which the Director of Education, Tripura, declared on 26-8-1963 to have come about on the basis of R. 14 (c), as being unconstitutional. That relief, as held above, he is clearly entitled to claim. Another two reliefs asked for by him were the declaration that he still continues to be in service and that he is entitled to all benefits of pay and allowances from 1-5-62 to date. It is these reliefs that I am not inclined to grant in this petition because of the complication created by the resignation submitted by the petitioner on 6-7-1962. The petitioner did not solicit this Court to determine his rights in the context of his resignation; he only prayed that his removal from service on the footing of Rule 14 (c) be quashed and his consequential rights determined. It were the respondents who pleaded, alternatively, that the petitioner's service had terminated on the basis of resignation submitted by him. The respondents did not aver, however, in their written statement, nor did their counsel say so during the course of arguments in this Court, that the petitioner's resignation had been accepted. The only plea adopted by the respondents in the written statement was that the resignation had become operative by its own force on the expiry of one month's notice given by the petitioner. If such were the factual and legal consequence of the language in which the resignation was couched, the Principal Officer of the Tripura Territorial Council would not have mentioned in the letter dated 8th February, 1963, (copy marked "T"), that unless the final T. A. bill were adjusted no action on the representation dated 30th of November, 1962, made by the petitioner could be taken. A copy of that representation of the petitioner is marked "S". Therein he had prayed that his resignation dated 6th of July, 1962, should be accepted and its acceptance communicated to him.

After the petitioner had submitted the final T. A. bill in duplicate along with his letter dated 6-3-1963 (marked "U"), and that had fetched no reply, he addressed the application dated 17-5-1963 (Marked "U-1") to the Principal Officer of the Education Department, Tripura Territorial Council, repeating the request for acceptance of his resignation at an early date with the remark "this is long overdue". It was on 26th of August, 1963, that the curtain was drawn on the extensive correspondence between the parties when the Directorate of Education, Tripura, addressed a letter to Education Inspectorate, Dharmanagar, that since the petitioner had absented himself from duty for a period exceeding 90 days from 2-5-1962, his service stood automatically terminated with effect from 21-7-1963 (forenoon) in terms of Rule 14 (c). The correspondence exchanged between the parties, thus brings out clearly that even until 26th of August, 1963, the Department had not taken into consideration the resignation of the petitioner. Nor was it evidently of the view that the resignation had become effective from 6-8-1962.

12. As against the petitioner, it can be urged quite plausibly that since he had submitted his resignation on 6-7-1962 with one month's notice and since he had not thereafter offered to work in his post, he cannot contend that he is still in service or that he is entitled to his salary right upto this date. All through his correspondence he insisted on his resignation being accepted and never prayed in the alternative that he should be permitted to resume duty. In such circumstances, it passes comprehension how can he claim salary etc. right upto this day.

13. Further, the salary of the petitioner will depend on the nature of the leave due to him from 2-5-1962. There is no data on the present record to enable the Court to give a finding on that point. Obviously, some evidence is required for determination of that dispute between the parties.

14. Taking all these factors into consideration, I have come to the conclusion that I should grant the petitioner only this declaration against the respondents that his removal from service on the basis of Rule 14 (c) is illegal and inoperative, being violative of Article 311 of the Constitution, and that declaration is hereby made. The other disputes between the parties, namely, (i) whether he still continues in service, (ii) what is the effect of the resignation tendered by him, and (iii) to what salary, if any, the petitioner is entitled, are left open between them. They should better be resolved amicably, else the aggrieved party may seek relief in the Civil Court. I feel clear that those disputes can best be settled after a regular trial in a Civil Court and not in a writ Court.

15. I direct that the respondents shall pay one-half costs of this petition to Manmatha Bhattacharjee, the petitioner. Advocate's fee Rs. 50/-.

Order accordingly.

Nilambar Roy, Petitioner v. Durga Charan Saha Roy, Respondent.

Civil Revn. No. 40 of 1966, D/- 30-8-1969, against order of Munsiff, Belonia, D/- 22-8-1966.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 26, Rr. 7 and 8 — Examination of witness on commission — Statement shall form part of record of suit subject to R. 8.

The statement taken on commission does not ipso facto form part of the record and be read as evidence in the case. It shall form part of the record of the suit subject to the provisions contained in R. 8 of O. 26. The intention of the legislature is that unless some one of the disabilities or peculiar circumstances, which govern the issuing of a commission for examination of a witness continues to obtain until the stage for reading of his evidence is reached in the suit, or the witness whose statement had been recorded on commission has died by that stage, the witness must be brought to the Court for personal statement to enable the Presiding Officer to judge his veracity in the back-ground of his conduct and demeanour while in the witness-box. It should, therefore, be only in exceptional cases that the Court exercise its discretion under clause (b) of Rule 8 if only because every conscientious and devoted-to-the-job presiding officer of the Court would be anxious to have a look at the witness whose statement may influence his judgment one way or the other. (Para 6)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115 and O. 26, R. 8 — Statement of plaintiff taken on Commission — Trial Court rejecting the objection of defendant regarding reading the statement as evidence without considering provisions of R. 8 of O. 26 — Held the Court acted in exercise of its jurisdiction both illegally and with material irregularity. (Para 7)

M. R. Choudhury, for Petitioner; B. B. Gupta, for Respondent.

ORDER: In the suit, filed by Durga Charan Saha Roy, against Nilambar Roy in the Court of Munsiff at Belonia, an application was made, on 9-6-1966, for examination of the plaintiff on commission since he was much too ill to make statement by personal appearance in Court. That application was granted and the commission issued. The commissioner recorded the statement of the plaintiff on 21-8-1966. When the case was taken up in the Court on the next day, 22-8-1966, for examination of plaintiff's other witnesses, the defendant moved an application praying that the evidence of the plaintiff recorded on commission should not be read as evidence in the case because the plaintiff was in good health and so could appear in Court for making his deposition. The defendant also objected to the examination of the plaintiff's two witnesses, who were in attendance, on the ground that list of the witnesses whom the plaintiff wanted to examine had not been filed in the Court in time.

2. The plaintiff vigorously opposed both the objections raised by the defendant.

3. The trial Court rejected the first objection with the observation that the evidence recorded on commission could not be "rejected" only for the reasons that "the plaintiff may have stated that he has now recovered from his illness". The other objection of the defendant was also disallowed on the score that the plaintiff is not bound in law to furnish the list of witnesses to the Court earlier than the date fixed for recording evidence on his behalf.

4. The defendant having felt aggrieved with that order of the Munsiff has come up in revision to this Court under Section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

5. Shri M. R. Choudhury, appearing for the defendant-petitioner, has not pressed the ground pertaining to the non-submission of list of witnesses by the plaintiff. I think he has adopted the right course. The relevant provision of law is contained in Rule IA of Or. XVI of the Civil Procedure Code. That rule enacts that where any party to the suit has, at any time on or before the day fixed for the hearing of evidence, filed in the Court a list of persons either for giving evidence or for producing documents, the party may, without applying for summons under Rule 1, bring any such person, whose name appears in the list, to give evidence or to produce documents. It is apparent that the rule gives option to the party to submit the list of witnesses either on or before the day fixed for the hearing of his evidence. Since the hearing of evidence of the plaintiff of the case in hand had to begin on 22-8-1966, he could well submit the list of witnesses on that day. There was no obligation on him to put in that list earlier. Therefore, the trial Court was justified in rejecting the contention of the defendant that the plaintiff should not be permitted to examine the two witnesses who had put in appearance in the Court on 22-8-1966.

6. Shri Choudhury was very vehement in canvassing the proposition that the defendant's objection against the evidence of the plaintiff recorded on commission being read in the suit had been unjustifiably turned down. I think his stand is sustainable in law. Rule 7 of Or. XXVI of the Code prescribes that the commission and the return thereto, as also the evidence taken under it, shall form part of the record of the suit, but subject to the provisions contained in Rule 8. Rule 8 may usefully be reproduced here. It runs as under:

"Evidence taken under a commission shall not be read as evidence in the suit without the consent of the party against whom the same is offered, unless—

(a) the person who gave the evidence is beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, or dead or unable from sickness or infirmity to attend to be personally examined, or exempted from personal appearance in Court, or is a person in the service of Government who cannot, in the opinion of the Court, attend without detriment to the public service, or

(b) the Court in its discretion dispenses with the proof of any of the circumstances mentioned in clause (a), and authorises the evidence of any person being read as evidence in the suit, notwithstanding proof that the cause for taking such evidence by commission has ceased at the time of reading the same."

The substance of the rule is that evidence taken on commission shall not be read as evidence in the suit without the consent of the party against whom it is meant to be utilised, unless some one of the circumstances mentioned in clause (a) is proved to exist, or the Court in exercise of its discretion vested in it by clause (b) authorises the evidence being read in the suit on dispensing with the proof of any such circumstance despite the fact that the cause for taking such evidence by commission has ceased to exist at the time of reading the same. If the Court, however, exercises the discretion under clause (b), that fact must appear on the record in the shape of a specific order, which should preferably contain the reasons which have weighed with the Court. If all these essential precautions are observed, the superior Court shall not be confronted with any problem if the aggrieved party happens to challenge the discretion exercised by the trial Court.

The point that requires emphasis is that the statement taken on commission does not ipso facto form part of the record and be read as evidence in the case, as appears to have been assumed by the Munsiff in the present case, and this point is clearly brought out by the specific words "subject to the provisions of the next following rule" put in parenthesis in Rule 7 of Or. XXVI. It appears to be the anxiety of the legislature that unless some one of the disabilities or peculiar circumstances, which govern the issuing of a commission for examination of a witness continues to obtain until the stage for reading of his evidence is reached in the suit, or the witness whose statement had been recorded on commission has died by that stage, the witness must be brought to the Court for personal statement to enable the Presiding Officer to judge his veracity in the back-ground of his conduct and demeanour while in the witness-box. Therein lies the philosophy behind and the reason or justification for enacting Rule 8. It should, therefore, be only in exceptional cases that the Court exercise its discretion under clause (b) of Rule 8 if only because every conscientious and devoted-to-the-job presiding officer of the Court would be anxious to have a look at the witness whose statement may influence his judgment one way or the other.

7. Coming now to the case in hand it looks abundantly clear that while rejecting the prayer of the defendant the Court did not have the provisions of Rule 8 before its mind, and that it laboured under the impression that the evidence recorded on commission can form part of the record and be read in the case without anything more. This conclusion can be easily spelled out from the observation of the Court,

"I do not think that although the plaintiff may have stated that he has now recovered from his illness, the deposition (recorded on commission) can be rejected on that ground only."

If the attention of the Court had been directed to R. 8 (b) it must have expressed itself quite differently while overruling the objection raised by the defendant. Shri B. B. Gupta, appearing for the plaintiff-respondent, wanted this Court to assume that the trial Court had dismissed the objection of the defendant in exercise of its discretion vested in it by Rule 8 (b). However, there is nothing on the record to lend weight to that contention. Hence, the inescapable conclusion that I am driven to is that the trial Court had rejected the objection on wrong assumption and so a case for interference in revision is made out. The Court appears to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction both illegally and with material irregularity, to use the words of Section 115 of the Code under which the revision petition has been filed, since it failed to take into consideration the provisions of Rule 8 (b) while making the impugned order.

8. As a result, I allow the revision petition to the extent that the order, overruling the objection of the defendant in regard to the evidence of the plaintiff recorded on commission, is quashed. I remit the case to the trial Court for redecision of that objection of the defendant in the light of the provisions of Rules 7 and 8 of Or. XXVI and of the observations made above.

9. In view of partial success of the parties, I leave them to bear their own costs in this Court. Advocates fee Rs. 32/-
Revision partly allowed.

AIR 1970 TRIPURA 26 (V 57 C 5)

R. S. BINDRA, J. C.

Shri Hem Chandra Sarkar, Appellant v. Smt. Jyoti Bala Chakraborty, Respondent.
Civil Misc. Petn. No. 138 of 1969, in First Appeal No. 1 of 1969, D/- 11-9-1969.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 149, 107, O. 7 R. 11 (b) and (c) — Discretion under S. 149 — Exercise of — Privilege of making up deficiency in Court-fee — Can be claimed as of right under O. 7, R. 11 (b) and (c) read with S. 107 though not under S. 149.

The appellant cannot claim as of right while moving the Court under Section 149, the payment of the additional Court-fee for it is plain from the language used therein that the matter rests in the discretion of the Court. However, the appellant can claim as of right the privilege of making up the deficiency in Court-fee in view of clauses (b) and (c) of Order 7, Rule 11, read with Section 107. The provisions of clause (c) of Rule 11 apply to appeals because the phraseology of sub-section (2) of Section 107 leaves no room for doubt on the point. Therefore the appellate Court is bound to grant time to the appellant for making up the deficiency in the Court-fee if the memorandum of appeal is insufficiently stamped. That Court cannot in the latter circumstance adjudge the fate of appeal merely on the basis of the provisions of Section 149 in exercise of its discretion without complying with the command given by clauses (b) and (c) of Rule 11 of Order 7 and giving time to the appellant to do the needful. If the appellant fails to make up the deficiency in the Court-fee within the time allowed to him by the appellate Court, then alone the Court may reject the memorandum of appeal as insufficiently stamped and not otherwise. Case law discussed. (Paras 8, 11)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 149—Memorandum of appeal insufficiently stamped due to wrong advice of counsel — Mistake is bona fide — Appellant can be allowed to pay deficient Court-fee — (Court Fees and Suits Valuations — Court-fees Act (1870), S. 28.)

Where the mistake in filing insufficiently stamped memorandum of appeal on the part of the appellant is attributable to wrong advice given by a highly senior counsel engaged by him and the memorandum of appeal was admitted without objection by the Registrar of High Court it is a case of bona fide mistake and the discretion under Section 149 can be exercised so as to allow the appellant to make up the deficiency in Court-fee. (Para 8)

That an appellant can make up the deficiency in the Court-fee in such manner can also be supported on basis of S. 28 of the Court-fees Act. (Para 12)

ORDER: The prayer made in this application, dated 8-9-69 filed under Section 149 of the Civil Procedure Code by the appellant Hem Chandra Sarkar, is for condonation of the delay that occurred in paying the deficient Court-fee required for the memorandum of appeal presented in this Court on 29-1-1969.

2. The relevant facts are that the respondent Jyoti Bala Chakraborty instituted a suit against the appellant Hem Chandra Sarkar for the latter's ejection from a house and for the recovery of arrears of rent, compensation, and mesne profits. The reliefs granted in the decree made by the trial Court were for the eviction of Hem Chandra from the house in dispute and for payment by him of Rs. 1750/- on account of rent, Rs. 300/- by way of compensation, and Rs. 50/- P. M. as mesne profits until the delivery of possession of the house by him to Jyoti Bala. Hem Chandra went in appeal against that decree and the Additional District Judge, Tripura, set aside the decree for his eviction and for mesne profits but affirmed the rest of it. Jyoti Bala filed second appeal in this Court against the decree of the Additional District Judge and that appeal was accepted and the decree of the trial Court was restored in full. This Court made the following order respecting mesne profits:—

"The appellant will be entitled to recover possession of the house and also damages @ Rs. 50/- per mensem for the subsequent period from 1-10-57 until the date on which she obtains possession of the suit house. They should be ascertained under Order 20, Rule 12 C. P. C. separately on a petition. The appellant will have to pay Court fee on the ascertained amount before she executes the decree for arrears of rents or for damages."

3. Pursuant to the direction given by this Court, Jyoti Bala moved a petition in the trial Court for ascertaining the damages. Hem Chandra filed objections pleading non-maintainability of the petition and bar of limitation. The trial Court held, by its order dated 16th of December, 1968, that Jyoti Bala was entitled to a decree for mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 50/- per mensem from 1-10-1957 until 4-11-1968, the date preceding the one on which she had secured possession of the demised house. A final decree in accordance with this finding was consequently passed. It is against that decree that Hem Chandra filed an appeal in this Court on 29-1-1969.

4. The appeal was filed on a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10/- and the nature of the appeal was mentioned as miscellaneous. The appeal was admitted by this Court and notice issued to the respondent. When the appeal came up for hearing before me on 29-7-1969, none put in appearance on behalf of the respondent Jyoti Bala. However, I raised the following two objections suo motu:—

(i) Whether the memorandum of appeal has been properly and adequately stamped and

(ii) Whether this Court has jurisdiction to entertain and try this appeal.

5. I adjourned the case on that day to 23-8-1969 to enable the appellant's counsel to prepare himself for addressing the Court respecting those two points. On that date the appellant put in an additional Court-fee of Rs. 538.25 to make up the deficiency.

6. The appeal was put up before me on 8-9-1969 in the presence of the counsel for both the parties. It was urged on behalf of the appellant that the deficiency in the Court-fee having been made up, arguments on point no. (ii) raised by the Court on 29-7-1969 be heard. However, since there was no application for condoning the delay in making up the deficiency in Court-fee, an adjournment was granted until 9th of September for presenting such an application. The application was filed on 8th of September, 1969, itself and since it was opposed by the respondent on the 9th, parties' counsel addressed arguments on its merits.

7. Shri P. K. Sarkar urged on the authority of AIR 1966 Punj 332, State of Punjab v. Nand Kishore, that the appellant should be permitted to make up the deficiency in terms of Section 149 of the Code. Shri M. K. Dutta, representing the decree-holder, contended, on the other hand, that the prayer made by the appellant should be rejected for the reasons that it was not proved that it was on account of some bona fide mistake that the full Court-fee had not been paid when the appeal was filed on 29-1-1969, and that no application under Section 149 had been made at the time the appeal was presented in this Court. He cited the case of Jai Bhagwan v. Om Prakash, AIR 1969 Punj and Har 308 to shore up this stand. After examining the two authorities, I have come to the conclusion that the one relied upon by Shri M. K. Dutta is distinguishable and that the facts of the case in hand are more analogous to that of the authority cited by Shri P. K. Sarkar.

8. Section 149 of the Code reads as under:

"Where the whole or any part of any fee prescribed for any document by the law for the time being in force relating to Court-fees has not been paid, the Court may, in its discretion, at any stage, allow the person, by whom such fee is payable, to pay the whole or part, as the case may be, of such Court-fee; and upon such payment the document, in respect of which such fee is payable, shall have the same force and effect as if such fee had been paid in the first instance."

The appellant can surely avail of this statutory provision for praying to the Court to make up the deficiency in Court-fee. It is correct that the appellant cannot claim as of right, while moving the Court under this section, the payment of the additional Court-fee for it is plainly deducible from the language used that the matter rests in the discretion of the Court. In the present case, however, I am inclined to exercise the discretion in favour of the appellant for it appears, as is mentioned in the application made under Section 149, that his counsel did not give him the proper advice. The appeal was headed as a 'Miscellaneous Appeal' by the counsel, although actually it was an appeal against the final decree. The Registrar of this Court also laboured under the impression that it was a Miscellaneous Appeal and adequately stamped as is apparent from his report dated 25-2-1969. It is not in dispute that a Court-fee of Rs. 10/- was sufficient if it were in fact a Miscellaneous Appeal. It would indeed be hard if the appeal were thrown out on a technical point for no apparent fault of the appellant himself, especially when he lost no time in making up the deficiency after the objection was raised by this Court suo motu. Hence, if the matter rested only on the exercise of discretion in favour of the appellant I would do so in context of the circumstances narrated for I feel satisfied that it is a case of bona fide mistake on part of the appellant and that mistake is attributable to wrong advice given by a highly senior counsel engaged by him. However, I find that the appellant can claim as of right the privilege of making up the deficiency in Court-fee in view of clauses (b) and (c) of Order VII Rule 11, read with Section 107 of the Code.

9. Clauses (b) and (c) of O. VII, R. 11, of the Code run as under:—

"The plaint shall be rejected in the following cases:—

(a)

(b) Where the relief claimed is undervalued, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to correct the valuation within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so:

(c) Where the relief claimed is properly valued, but the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp-paper within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so:

(d)"

It appears appropriate that Section 107 of the Code be reproduced here. It is in the following terms:—

"(1) Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, an Appellate Court shall have power—

- (a) to determine a case finally;
- (b) to remand a case;
- (c) to frame issues and refer them for trial;
- (d) to take additional evidence or to require such evidence to be taken.

(2) Subject as aforesaid, the Appellate Court shall have the same powers and shall perform as nearly as may be the same duties as are conferred and imposed by this Code on Courts of original jurisdiction in respect of suits instituted therein."

Sub-section (2) of Section 107 gives the appellate Court the same powers and assigns to it the same duties as are conferred and imposed on the Court of original jurisdiction in respect of suits instituted therein. Indisputably, a Court of original jurisdiction has to give time to a plaintiff for correcting the valuation of a suit if the relief claimed is undervalued, and to make up the deficiency in the Court-fee if the plaint is insufficiently stamped, as enjoined by clauses (b) and (c) of O. VII, Rule 11. In the memorandum of appeal submitted to this Court by Hem Chandra, the relief claimed has been undervalued and in consequence it had been also insufficiently stamped. Therefore, in terms of clauses (b) and (c) of O. VII, Rule 11, read with Section 107 of the Code this Court was bound to give time to him for correcting the valuation and making up the deficiency in Court-fee. That was admittedly never done until the deficiency was noted by me on 29-7-1969. Thereafter as well, the Court did not call upon the appellant to correct the valuation and make up the deficiency in Court-fee. Instead, he was asked to satisfy this Court that the memorandum of appeal had been adequately stamped. The appellant then felt, it appears, that the plaint had not been properly stamped and so he voluntarily put in the additional Court-fee stamps to make up the deficiency. Under the circumstances, no fault can be found with the appeal as at present in the matter of its valuation and the Court-fee stamp required for it. Section 149 states unambiguously that when the document has been properly stamped after it had been filed in the Court the document shall have the same force and effect as if such fee had been paid in the first instance.

11. I must state here that there is a sharp conflict of opinion amongst the various High Courts in India on the point whether the provisions of clause (c) of Rule 11 apply to appeals. I am inclined to follow the view that they do apply to the appeals because the phraseology of sub-section (2) of Section 107 leaves no room for doubt on the point. Therefore, the appellate Court is bound to grant time to the appellant for making up the deficiency in the Court-fee if the memorandum of appeal is insufficiently stamped. That Court cannot in the latter circumstance adjudge the fate of appeal merely on the basis of the provisions of Section 149 in exercise of its discretion without complying with the command given by clauses (b) and (c) of Rule 11 of Order VII and giving time to the appellant to do the needful. If the appellant fails to make up the deficiency in the court-fee within the time allowed to him by the appellate Court, then alone the latter may reject the memorandum of appeal as insufficiently stamped and not otherwise.

12. That an appellant can make up the deficiency in the court-fee in the manner Hem Chandra of this case has done can also be supported on the basis of section 28 of the Court-fees Act. That section enacts, in its first part, that no document which ought to bear a stamp under this Act shall be of any validity unless and until it is properly stamped. It is mentioned in the second part of the section that if such document is through mistake or inadvertence received, filed or used in any court or office without being properly stamped, the Presiding Judge or the head of the office, as the case may be, or, in the case of a High Court, any Judge of such court, may, if he thinks fit, order that such document be stamped as he may direct; and on such document being stamped accordingly, the same and every proceeding relative thereto shall be as valid as if it had been properly stamped in the first instance. I have stated above that the Registrar of this Court made a report on 25-2-1969 that the memorandum of appeal had been properly stamped. It is apparent that he had admitted the memorandum of appeal and then acted upon it by sheer inadvertence. He was, I believe, chiefly influenced in acting in that manner by the fact that the memorandum had been described as a Miscellaneous Appeal. Nevertheless, its admission without objection indicates inadvertence and as such I have the statutory authority to call upon the appellant to make the deficiency in court-fee, and once that deficiency is made up in compliance with the order given, the appeal shall be considered as having been properly stamped as in the first instance.

13. In fairness to Shri H. N. Kar a brief reference must be made to the case of Jai Bhagwan, AIR 1969 Punj. & Har. 308 cited by him. In that case the certified copies of judgments of the first appellate and trial courts had been insufficiently stamped when filed along with the memorandum of second appeal. The High Court held that the appeal must be dismissed as barred by time because the deficiency in the court-fee stamp on the two documents had been made good after the period of limitation for the appeal had run out. The High Court evidently refused to exercise the discretion vesting in it under section 149 of the Code in favour of the appellant. The distinguishing feature between the facts of that case and the case in hand is that in the latter case it was the memorandum of appeal which had not been adequately stamped. Clause (c) of rule 11 of O. VII read with section 107 of the Code applies only to the memorandum of appeal and not to the certified copies of the judgments subjoined to the memorandum of appeal. Hence, the High Court could not have given time to the appellant of the reported case for making up the deficiency of stamp respecting the certified copies under clause (c) of rule 11. The High Court failed to exercise its discretion in favour of the appellant under section 149 on the basis that it had not been proved that the documents could not be fully stamped despite the exercise of due care and attention. The High Court followed the view taken by a single Judge of the Lahore High Court in the case of Shahadat v. Hukam Singh, AIR 1924 Lah 401, in preference to a Full Bench decision of that Court in Jagat Ram v. Misar Kharaiti Ram, AIR 1938 Lah 361 (FB) and a decision of the Delhi High Court in AIR 1968 Delhi 183, Custodian of Evacuee Property v. Rameswar Dayal. It appears that an earlier Division Bench authority of the Punjab High Court in the case of AIR 1966 Punj 332, in which the aforementioned Full Bench decision of the Lahore High Court in the case of Jagat Ram, AIR 1938 Lah 361 (FB) was cited with approval, was not brought to the notice of P. C. Pandit, J., who gave the judgment in the case of Jai Bhagwan, AIR 1969 Punj & Har. 308. It was held by the Lahore High Court in Jagat Ram's case, AIR 1938 Lah 361 (FB) that the discretion conferred on the Court by section 149 is normally expected to be exercised in favour of the litigant except in cases of contumacy or positive mala fides or reasons of a similar kind. The question of bona fides in this connection, it was observed further, should be construed in the sense that word is used in the General Clauses Act and not as used in the Limitation Act. I may point out that the expression "good faith" is defined in the General Clauses Act as : "A thing shall be deemed to be done in good faith where it is in fact done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not". Following these observations made by the Lahore High Court, and which observations were cited with approval by the Punjab High Court and the Delhi High Court as stated above, I feel satisfied that it would be proper exercise of discretion under section 149 of the Code if Hem Chandra, the appellant in this case, were permitted to make up the deficiency in court-fee.

14. As a result, I allow the application made under section 149 but make no order as to costs. The appeal shall be considered to have been filed within the period of limitation. The parties' counsel shall now address arguments on the second point raised by me on 29th of July, 1969.

Application allowed.

AIR 1970 TRIPURA 30 (V 57 C 6)

R. S. BINDRA, J. C.

Rabindra Kumar Bhattacharjee, Petitioner v. Smt. Prativa Bhattacharjee, Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 5 of 1964, D/- 29-8-1969, against order of S. J., Tripura D/- 18-3-1964.

Penal Code (1860), S. 494 — Hindu Marriage Act (1955), Ss. 7 and 17 — Charge under S. 494 — Marriage alleged to have been celebrated according to Hindu rites — Proof of ceremonies — Nature of evidence required.

To hold a person guilty of the charge under S. 494 it has to be proved that the second marriage was solemnised in accordance with the customary rites and ceremonies of the party. Under S. 7 (2) of the Hindu Marriage Act where such rites and ceremonies include the sapta-padi (that is the taking of seven steps by the bridegroom and the bride jointly before the sacred fire), the marriage becomes complete and binding when the seventh step is taken. Section 17 of the Hindu Marriage Act is to the effect that any marriage between two Hindus solemnized after the commencement of the Act is void if at the date of such marriage either party had a husband or wife living, and that the provisions of Ss. 494 and 495 of the Penal Code shall apply accordingly. (Para 6)

The definition of the expression "proved" in S. 3 of the Evidence Act permits the Court to take into consideration all varieties of admissible and relevant pieces of evidence while adjudicating upon whether a particular fact is proved or not. The expression "after considering the matters before it" employed in the definition is of such wide amplitude as to justify the Court taking into consideration, besides the direct and the circumstantial evidence, the opinion evidence made relevant by section 50 of the Evidence Act, the pre-trial admissions of the accused, and the statement made by the accused, during the trial, under section 342, Cr. P. C. (Para 17)

The proviso to S. 50 of the Evidence Act enacts only this much that the opinion evidence of the nature mentioned, which is otherwise made relevant by the main body of Section 50 of the Act for the purpose of proving existence of relationship, shall not be sufficient to prove a marriage in a prosecution under S. 494 I. P. C. The Proviso does not make the opinion evidence relating to the marriage either irrelevant or inadmissible. Therefore, the only effect of the Proviso is that on the basis of the opinion evidence alone, the Court cannot hold in a prosecution under section 494 I. P. C. that the factum of the marriage has been proved. Hence the contention that the opinion of persons who testify to the marriage, the factum of which is in issue, cannot be taken into consideration at all has to be rejected. Such testimony being relevant can be availed of along with other evidence to reach the conclusion that the factum of marriage had been proved. AIR 1965 SC 1564, Explained.

M. C. Chakraborty, for Petitioner; N. L. Choudhury, for Respondent.

ORDER: Shorn of verbiage, the facts relevant to the present revision petition filed by the convict Shri Rabindra Bhattacharjee are that he was married to the complainant Prativa Bhattacharjee, M. A. B.T., in July 1954 at Hoogly, that they could not pull on smoothly as husband and wife despite the fact that they were blessed with a son, Rantu by name, on 23-8-1955 which was soon after the marriage, and that, as alleged by the complainant, her husband entered into second marriage with Anjali Bhattacharjee, a daughter of Gopal Chakraborty of Agartala. On 6-11-1961, Prativa filed a complaint in the Court of Sub-divisional Magistrate at Agartala. Rabindra, the husband of the complainant, was charged in course of time by that Magistrate under section 494 I. P. C., while Anjali and her father Gopal Chakraborty were both charged under Section 494 read with Section 109 I. P. C. By its judgment dated 20th of May, 1963, the trial Court acquitted Anjali and her father but convicted Rabindra under Section 494 I. P. C. and sentenced him to 1½ years' simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500/-, or, in default, 6 months' additional simple imprisonment. Having felt aggrieved Rabindra went in appeal to the Sessions Court. The learned Sessions Judge upheld the conviction of the accused by his judgment dated 18-3-1964, but reduced the sentence to 6 months' simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500/-, or, in default, 6 months' further simple imprisonment. In the instant revision petition, Rabindra challenges the correctness of his conviction and sentence.

2. Though in the trial court and before the Sessions Judge the accused Rabindra had vehemently asserted that he laboured under bona fide mistake that his first wife Prativa was not living when he married Anjali on 28-10-1959, but in this Court Shri M. C. Chakraborty, appearing for him, did not raise that point. Hence, as at present, that is no longer an issue between the parties. Shri M. C. Chakraborty also did not contest the proposition that his client and Prativa were validly married in July, 1954, and that Prativa bore a male child to Rabindra in August 1955. The only point urged by Shri Chakraborty was that the complainant Prativa had miserably failed in her attempt to establish that Rabindra had been validly married to Anjali on 28-10-1959. In this connection, he invited the Court's attention to section 7 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, and also placed reliance on section 50 of the Indian Evidence Act, besides relying heavily on the evidence led in the case and the propositions of law enunciated in the authorities AIR 1965 SC 1564, Bhaurao Shankar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1966 SC 614, Kanwal Ram v. Himachal Pradesh Administration and AIR 1965 J & K 105, Phankari v. State. Shri N. L. Choudhury, representing the complainant, submitted, on the other hand, that the factum and validity of marriage between Anjali and Rabindra were never raised in either of the two courts below and so it is not open to the convict to raise a new issue in revision petition. Shri Choudhury vigorously contended that apart from that legal objection raised by him there is abundant evidence on the record to establish the factum as also the validity of the marriage between Rabindra and Anjali. The rejoinder of Shri Chakraborty was that Rabindra had raised, as a matter of fact, the question of the validity of his marriage with Anjali in the trial court. However, he was unable to take the stand that that point was also emphasised before the Sessions Judge.

3. After going through the judgments of the Sub-divisional Magistrate and the Sessions Judge, as also the statement made by the accused under section 342 Cr. P. C., I have reached the conclusion that neither factum nor validity of the marriage between Rabindra and Anjali was an issue, active or mute, between the parties in the court of Sessions Judge and that the validity, but not the factum, of that marriage was challenged at the stage of arguments but never before in the trial Court.

4. On page 24 of its judgment the learned trial court happened to observe that the prosecution had proved both the marriages, that the accused had raised no objection respecting those marriages, that he (the accused) had actually admitted those marriages, and that the only defence to the charge, in fact, was that he had married for the second time believing in good faith that his first wife was not amongst the living. Then, on page 25, it is stated that the defence counsel had raised the issue that the prosecution must prove both the marriages to bring the case within the purview of section 494 I. P. C., that he had cited a Privy Council authority in support of that proposition, and that that ruling was unavailing to him as there was no dispute regarding "the facts of the marriage". On the same page the court stated further, while dealing with the argument of the defence counsel based on the authority reported in AIR 1960 Bom 393, Malan v. State of Bombay, that that ruling also did not advance the defence case "as no challenge on the point of marriage, by putting any kind of suggestion, was made by the defence". It was stated further that, in fact, the accused had admitted both the marriages apart from the evidence led by the complainant to establish the factum of those marriages. In the penultimate para on that page, the trial court once again observed that the prosecution had proved both the marriages and that "no challenge was made on the point of marriage".

5. I have gone through the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge twice over but I have not been able to find therefrom any support for the contention that the factum or validity of the second marriage was disputed. In that Court, as in the trial Court, the only point canvassed was that the accused believed honestly at the time of his second marriage that his first wife had died. I think the entire attention of the defence was directed in the two Courts below in proving the bona fide belief of the accused that his first wife Prativa had died on 22nd of September, 1959. This conclusion gathers support from the stand taken by the accused while making statement under section 342 Cr. P. C. One of the questions put to the accused was: "There is evidence that knowing that your married wife Smti. Prativa Bhattacharjee was alive, you have again married accused Smt. Anjali Debi in October 1959.

What is your reply to this?" The reply returned was: "It is not a fact. At the time I married for the 2nd time there were reasons for my belief and I believed that my first wife Smt. Prativa was not alive then." The last but one question put to him by the trial court was if he had anything else to state. The accused came out with the following averment:

"I have not committed any offence. After the receipt of the telegram though I did not venture to go to my father-in-law's place still I wrote a letter to her father—Satish Chakraborty—for performing the "Sradh Ceremony" of Prativa by my son. The first letter was sent under certificate of posting and thereafter I wrote many letters but they did not reply to any."

It would be evident from this averment of the accused that his only defence to the charge on which he stood the trial was that he had learnt from a telegram sent by his father-in-law that his first wife had died. In reply to the other question, as reproduced above, bearing on his marriage with Anjali, the accused had unequivocally admitted the factum of his marriage with Anjali and had not even cared to assert that that marriage was legally invalid. Hence, Shri N. L. Choudhury was justified in urging that an entirely new case is being put up before this Court. However, despite that stand in the Courts below I do not want to rest the present judgment on the foundation that the accused had challenged neither the factum nor the validity of his marriage with Anjali. It is for the reason that the Supreme Court has held in the case of Kanwal Ram, AIR 1966 SC 614 (Supra) that in an adultery or bigamy case an admission of marriage by the accused is not evidence of the fact that the marriage had taken place. It was held further that in such cases, the ceremonies constituting the marriage must be proved.

6. Section 7 (1) of the Hindu Marriage Act states that a Hindu marriage may be solemnized in accordance with the customary rites and ceremonies of either party thereto, while sub-section (2) of section 7 enacts that where such rites and ceremonies include the Saptapadi (that is the taking of seven steps by the bridegroom and the bride jointly before the sacred fire), the marriage becomes complete and binding when the seventh step is taken. The parties' counsel were at one on the point that their clients being high caste Brahmins the marriages amongst their class include the ceremony of Saptapadi before the sacred fire. Section 17 of the same Act is to the effect that any marriage between two Hindus solemnized after the commencement of the Act is void if at the date of such marriage either party had a husband or wife living, and that the provisions of sections 494 and 495 of the Indian Penal Code shall apply accordingly. The main contention of Shri Chakraborty, based on these two sections of the Hindu Marriage Act, was that it was obligatory for the complainant to prove by convincing evidence that the ceremony of Saptapadi was gone through between Rabindra and Anjali at the time of their wedding before she (the complainant) could legitimately urge that Rabindra was guilty of the charge under section 494 I. P. C. On the authority of the proviso to section 50 of the Indian Evidence Act, it was emphasised by Shri Chakraborty that the opinion evidence, expressed by conduct, is not admissible to prove a marriage in a case under section 494 I. P. C. For the time being, I deem it enough to point out that this proviso enacts only this much that the opinion evidence of the nature mentioned which is otherwise made relevant by the main body of section 50 for the purpose of proving existence of relationship, 'shall not be sufficient to prove a marriage' in a prosecution under section 494 I. P. C. The proviso does not make the opinion evidence relating to the marriage either irrelevant or inadmissible, as is evident from the underlined (here into ' ') words, in such prosecutions. Therefore, the only effect of the proviso is that on the basis of the opinion evidence alone, the Court cannot hold in a prosecution under section 494 I. P. C. that the factum of the marriage has been proved. Hence, I reject the contention of Shri Chakraborty that the opinion of persons who testify to the marriage, the factum of which is in issue, cannot be taken into consideration at all. Such testimony being relevant, as held above, can be availed of along with other evidence to reach the conclusion that the factum of marriage had been proved.

7. On the authority of the Supreme Court decision in the case of Bhaurao Shankar, AIR 1965 SC 1564 (supra) it was urged by Shri Chakraborty that unless it is proved by direct evidence that the ceremony of Saptapadi was gone through between a man and a woman, it cannot be said for the purpose of a case under section 494 I. P. C. that marriage between them had been solemnized. Shri Chakraborty urged further that no evidence except direct evidence bearing on the point of Saptapadi can be looked into, or relied upon, in proof of the marriage. After going through the report with the care it deserves, I have not been able to spell out any support for the propositions canvassed by Shri Chakraborty. The Supreme Court held in Bhaurao's
